1912. Bonds issued by US Inc. came due but US Inc. did not have the resources for paying their creditors (the seven families that founded the Federal Reserve Bank), so US Inc.’s owner (the actual government) was required to pay the balance. The national government was also without sufficient funds to meet US Inc.’s obligations, so the creditors settled for all of the assets of both US Inc. and the national government instead of foreclosure on and liquidation of the entire country. By so doing they expropriated the nation—both USA and US Inc. Sic transit America.

1912. US Inc. forms an agreement with the Federal Reserve Bank (It is important to note that both of these entities are private corporations which removes the general allegations of treason or fraud from this relationship). Through this agreement US Inc. must function in debt, even though they have neither funds nor resources for financing their operation.

1912. The first corporate only Senators are seated in the next election year by popular vote of the US Inc. registered voters. The original-jurisdiction national Senators of the States did not assume office that year and at least one third of the nation’s Senators seats were lawfully and voluntarily vacant.

February 3rd, 1913. US Inc. passes its 16th Amendment and Congress orders the Secretary of State to enter it as ratified even though the States had not ratified it according to Law. The Secretary complied. It should be noted that this would not have been lawful if it were a national Constitution amendment, however it was perfectly legal within the colorable, de facto corporation. It should also be noted that where the national Constitution already had a 16th amendment and where the Supreme Court says that the new 16th Amendment did not do anything, this corporate amendment must simply be a space filler entered such that US Inc.’s Constitution (1871) would have the same number of amendments as that of the national Constitution (1787).

April 8th, 1913. US Inc. passes its 17th amendment and Congress orders it to be entered as ratified in the exact same manner as they did with US Inc.’s 16th Amendment. This amendment changes where US Inc.’s Senators are elected. This amendment is not even lawfully possible as a national Constitution amendment for several reasons, not the least of which is that the amendment would have required that Congress first pass an amendment that stated that they had the power to say where Senators are elected before they could even deliberate on such a subject matter, after which they would then have to have competent ratifications performed on such amendments in accord with constitutional limits, not as was done with US Inc.’s 16th Amendment.

December 23, 1913. The Congress, late at night with only a small cadre of supporters present, passed the Federal Reserve Act, surrendering the creation and management of the nation's currency into the hands of a cartel of private—and mostly foreign—bankers. Currency is the single most essential and critical commodity in the world, embodying more law and principles of commerce than any other. Since all interactions are "commerce," and the medium of doing business in commerce is currency, money is in a very significant sense the measure of all things. By abandoning control and management of the money supply the nation surrendered all capacity for claiming sovereignty. The government lost its independent treasury (one of the requirements in law for national sovereignty). The United States Government became a mere fiefdom, or administrative arm, of the bankers, who now owned the store.

Passage of the Federal Reserve Act was a major milestone on the "road to serfdom" that this entire progression outlines. The conspiratorial nature of matters is exemplified in comments by one of the major actors in the triumph of the Federal Reserve, Edward Mandell House, who had this to say in a private meeting with President Woodrow Wilson:

"[Very] soon, every American will be required to register their biological property in a national system designed to keep track of the people and that will operate under the ancient system of pledging. By such methodology, we can compel people to submit to our agenda, which will effect our security as a chargeback for our fiat paper currency. Every American will be forced to register or suffer being unable to work and earn a living. They will be our chattel, and we will hold the security interest over them forever, by operation of the law merchant under the scheme of secured transactions. Americans, by unknowingly or unwittingly delivering the bills of lading to us (BIRTH CERTIFICATES) will be rendered bankrupt and insolvent, forever to remain economic slaves through taxation, secured by their pledges. They will be stripped of their rights and given a commercial value (VALUE OF THE SECURITIES, HELD IN TRUST AT INSTITUTIONS LIKE DTC – DEPOSITORY TRUST COMPANY. WHERE LEGAL TITLE REGISTRIES ARE MAINTAINED IN SUB-BASEMENT 5, LOT # 666, REQUIRING THE HOST OF SEC REGULATIONS ABOUT THE TRADING OF THESE FUNGIBLE RESOURCES, ALL MENS LABOR, AND THE RESULTING COMMODITIES TRADING ON THE COMMODITIES MARKETS AND WALL STREET AS THE SLAVE AND PRODUCE MARKETS) designed to make us a profit and they will be none the wiser, for not one man in a million could ever figure our plans and, if by accident one or two should figure it out, we have in our arsenal plausible deniability. After all, this is the only logical way to fund government, by floating liens and debt to the registrants in the form of benefits and privileges. This will inevitably reap to us huge profits beyond our wildest expectations and leave every American a contributor to this fraud which we will call "Social Insurance." Without realizing it, every American will insure us for any loss we may incur and in this manner, every American will unknowingly be our servant, however begrudgingly. The people will become helpless and without any hope for their redemption and, we will employ the high office of the President of our dummy corporation to foment this plot against America."

1914. World war 1 – genocide against the world for the financial gain of the bankers.

1917. Corporate-only Senators begin participating in all matters with those Senators who still had original jurisdiction government capacity, as a result of which all activities of the government were performed in corporate capacity only.

1917. President Wilson was re-elected by the Electoral College, but only US Inc.'s Senate performed the Senate confirmation necessary for seating the national President. There was no national government Senate confirmation; no national seats were seated and all remained vacant. Note: the national President is also the Military's Commander in Chief, and under the nation's status of being ruled by the private, commercial, martial-law rule of the Bankers and English Crown, the business needs of the nation have remained under US Inc. control since 1871, i.e. ever since US Inc. was incorporated and made operational over such matters.

1917-1944. All national government seats are and remain vacant, and US Inc. continues maintaining the business needs of the government under martial-law rule.

June 5, 1933. US Inc. declares bankruptcy under House Joint Resolution, “HJR,” 192.

1935. The Social Security Act is passed.

On application, the new Social Security Administration (hereinafter “SSA”) creates a private Trust with a trust name that sounds like the name of the applicant except the Trust’s name is spelled with all capital letters. SSA makes the applicant a co-trustee of the namesake Trust, designates the SSA General Trust Fund as the Beneficiary of the namesake trust, and assigns the Trust a Social Security General Trust Fund Account number re the applicant for accounting and identification purposes.

1938. In Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 1938, 304 U.S. 64-92, the U.S. Supreme Court sets the presumption re the status and capacity of an individual as that of General Capacity/General Partnership relationship with the namesake Trust, as if the two (2) entities—individual and namesake Trust—were one-in-the-same person.

1940 Buck Act, an overlay of federal territory without geographical boundaries is over-layed upon the republics being the two letter designation of federal zones example PA for Pennsylvania. Extending military law over these zones with zip codes (zone improvement programs)

Also; WORLD WAR 2, WORLD DISTRACTED WITH WAR WHILE GENOCIDAL MANIACS AGAIN GAIN FINANCIALLY- THE MOST PROFITABLE INDUSTRY EVER DEVISED, WHICH IS WHY WAR IS NEARLY CONTINOUS SINCE THE CIVIL WAR

1944. In the Bretton Woods Agreement US Inc. is quit-claimed into the newly formed International Monetary Fund (hereinafter “IMF”) in exchange for the power allowing US Inc.’s President the right of naming (seating and controlling) the governors and general managers of the International Monetary Fund, The World Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the Inter-American Bank also formed in that agreement (codified at United States Code Title 22 § 286). It must be noted that this act created an unlawful conflict of interest between US Inc. (with its new foreign owner) and its purpose of carrying out the business needs of the national government. This is the cause of our use of the term “original-jurisdiction” government. With the new foreign owner of US Inc. a conflict of interest is created between the national government and US Inc., even though the contracted purpose of US Inc. has not changed on its face.

1962. At the National Governor’s Conference in Lexington, Kentucky, US Inc. informs the governors, under the guise of “public necessity”, that they must all form, or reform existing, private corporations under US Inc. (in their state’s interest), so that the people will not discover what the state governments are doing with the people’s money (dabbling in foreign notes, i.e. Federal Reserve Notes (FRNs), bonds, and evidences of debt), which activity is forbidden from State governments by their own State Constitutions, which information would likely cause a people’s revolt ending in the State official’s being at worst killed and at least replaced. The proposed incorporation deadline was 1968.

1960 – VIET NAM WAR CONTINUES IN BACKGROUND, COLD WAR ESCALATION, CUBAN MISSLE CRISIS, ETC AD NAUSEUM.

1970. By this time each State revised its constitution and statutes and formed private corporate entities of the name “STATE OF (X)” (where “(X)” is representative of the common State name), and then vacated their original jurisdiction government seats in favor of foreign ownership and control under the mandate of US Inc.

It appears that this was all done so a General Partnership could be presumed as existing between “The State” (of the national Union of States) and “STATE OF (X)”, a private corporation. Said STATE OF (X), as General Partner, then assumes the role of governmental operator/controller. This scenario is further proven by the fact that these corporate entities cannot handle gold and silver coin of the United States of America in commercial transactions without violating the Par Value Modifications Act and the Foreign Currency Exchange Act.

April 19th, 1994. Waco Texas; Federal agents attack, burn, and raze the compound, killing approximately 100 of the members of the sect, without any lawful cause for the action.

50 USC 1520 et seq. demonstrates that there exists an agenda for using Americans (Sovereign and otherwise) as biological test subjects. This is a fundamental breach of an alleged Constitutional contract.

President Clinton pushes for a mandatory health care bill for the purpose of placing the physical bodies of all Americans under control of US Inc., with international identification attached, for the purpose of tagging the populace, as per the Biblical prophesy of the Mark of the Beast. The computer that would handle the tracking is even identified with the acronym: B.E.A.S.T. with the world computer system named 666 giving an 18 digit identifier beginning with 666- country of origin ex 123; then area code example 412; then ss number example 123456789 so 666-123; -412-123; -456-789 would connect all data bases on 1 unique human resource – chattel (cattle) property. This sytem is located in Brussells, Belgium. This would then be tagged with an RFID chip, electronically readable and all commercial transcations tracked, to fulfill biblical prophecies so that no man could buy or sell without the name and the number of the BEAST

What the above progression depicts is the systematic growth of the power, scope, and pervasive control of Government exercised against the American people by foreign, criminal, and hostile powers. This same dreary gestalt constitutes the nature of man's history on this planet as far back as the eye can see. Civilizations rise, fall, and disappear, replaced by new ones that—based upon being founded on, and functioning in accordance with, wrong principles—are foredoomed for extinction, as were all of their predecessors and as all future civilizations will be until mankind finally learns and ceases "beating a dead horse" by structuring law, commerce, religion, and social organization in general on principles that are existentially impossible.

The above progression has proceeded in America by implementing such strategy as:

1. Relentlessly instilling in people the foundational idea that governments in general are absolutely essential in the society of man and that the Government in America is the people's friend and servant, i.e. a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people." These premises are untrue—self-serving cons by those who want the power.

2. Creating governmentally owned corporate franchises, such as a "citizen of the United States" and one's all-capital-letter name, with which people are deceived into identifying.

3. Regarding every citizen of the United States as contractually being:

a. A corporate citizen, i.e. a corporate franchise;

b. A co-trustee (with duties) and co-beneficiary (with privileges) of the 14th Amendment Public Charitable cestui que Trust;

c. Pledged as an asset in the bankruptcy of US Inc., and therefore a co-surety for the debts of US Inc.;

d. An enemy of the Creditors;

e. Chattel property of the Bankers and Power Elite;

f. A slave with no capacity for asserting any rights, no standing in law, and no capacity for contracting.

4. Functioning on the presumption that the individual being, with autonomy and free will, knowingly, intentionally, and voluntarily contracted into the situation of being united—like heads and tails of a coin—with a corporate entity created and owned by the Government.

As per the established maxim of law, "As a thing is bound, so it is unbound," the way out of the problem is within and through the problem. This is accomplished by understanding what the problem is, i.e. its structure and character, just as solving the problem of a plugged drain is accomplished by realizing that the problem is the plugged drain, whereby the solution consists of unplugging the drain. “Know the truth and the truth shall make you free.”

The United States Library of Congress now has between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 books on law. Any law library is a daunting place, possessing row after row of shelves with books full of fine print. Making knowledge of such “law” even more unattainable is not only that what passes for law today perpetually changes, altered by every new court case/opinion, legislative enactment, and all of the ever-changing policies, rules, and regulations of administrative agencies, but an immense amount of the world’s law today, as actually implemented, is unwritten and inaccessible.

This is not only because judges operate in general equity in which the ultimate arbiter of a matter is the “conscience of the court” (i.e. how the judge feels about something that day), but because almost all of the world’s law is the private Law Merchant of the Creditors in bankruptcy of the world’s nations, essentially all of which are insolvent and in receivership to the Bankers. This private Law Merchant is of ancient origin, and is implemented today by men whose identities are unknown to the mass of mankind.

In the face of this undependability of law we may ask some fundamental and ingenuous questions:

1. Is there such a thing as genuine law that is timeless, stable, and dependable?

2. If so, can such universal law be effectively invoked and utilized in practice today? How can I use it to ensure my inalienable sovereign birth rights to life and happiness?

3. If genuine law exists, why is it not taught and uniformly utilized instead of the chaotic and colorable charade that dominates the legal field today?

4. Can we integrate said universal law with the ephemeral, desultory “law” that now enslaves the overwhelming majority of people on this planet?

Fortunately, affirmative answers all of the above questions. Answering them, and obtaining a clear understanding and effective, practical ways for utilizing genuine law, is found through individual study and contemplation, and enforcement of true law, by the peoples grand juries, guided by the creators laws.

THIS IS OF COURSE NOT EXHAUSTIVE, IT WOULD FILL THOUSANDS OF VOLUMES, BUT 1 CONCLUSION IS UN-ESCAPABLE, GOVERMENTS ARE TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS! THEIR PURPOSE IS TO TRANSFER HUMAN LABOR – WEALTH, THE BLESSINGS LABOR PRODUCES TO THOSE WHO WOULD MURDER, RAPE, PILLAGE, ETC. TO CONTROL AND SUBJECATE OTHER PEOPLE.THEY ARE NOT RESTARINED IN THEIR ACTS BY LAW…….BUT IT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED PRIMARILY THROUGH FEAR, IGNORANCE, AND PSYCHLOGICAL TRAINING, THE BABYLONIAN SYSTEM USING POLITICAL IDEAS TO CONTROL SOME, RELIGIOUS IDEAS TO CONTROL OTHERS AND FOR THOSE WHO CAN SEE PAST THESE DELUSIONS, MILITARY FORCE TO ELIMINATE, MURDER THOSE WHO WOULD BE SELF GOVERNING UNDER THE CREATORS LAWS, AND BE FREE. THE THREE SIDES OF THE TRIANGLE

craig-oxley - August 8, 2010 06:40 PM (GMT)

This man is absolutely correctly the person (mask/phersu) is not him, he's a sovereign being. Notice how they decide to try and force the issue hoping for compliance. These courts are gangsters. Regardless of arrests this does not make the being a person. -Craig

Barking JPs issue arrest warrant for man 'with no name'

06 August 2010
http://www.bdpost.co.uk/content/barkingand...3A02%3A53%3A767

A WARRANT was issued for the arrest of a man who apparently turned up at court but refused to accept his own name because he belongs to the ancient Kush religion.

In a bizarre incident Delsio Almeda told Barking Court he did not recognise the person on the charge sheet as they were "a figment of the government's imagination".

He told puzzled magistrates he was "a human being of flesh and blood" and even offered the bench a dictionary to look up the difference between a person and a human being.

The man in court, who exactly matched the police description of Almeda, kept pointing to his passport saying: "This is the person you are looking for."

But the man would not confirm that he was Almeda so magistrates had no choice but to issue a warrant for his arrest.

Almeda, of Odecia Court, Stratford, apparently failed to appear at Barking Court on July 28 to answer charges of driving without insurance and without his seatbelt on.

Read extensive coverage in this week's POST.

craig-oxley - August 13, 2010 03:10 PM (GMT)

FEDERAL JUDGE STATES IN COURT THAT HE GETS HIS ORDERS FROM ENGLAND

717-567-7675. 5/98: [quoting]

During the trial of James and Sharon Patterson, (Case 6:97-CR-51) William Wayne Justice, Judge of the United States District Court Texas-Eastern Division when presented with law stated: "I take my orders from England. This is not a law this court goes by."

For all of those who did not believe that the United States was under Great Britain here it is straight from the mouth of a Federal Judge. How much more evidence 'do you need?' America has never been Free. The Revolutionary war was a fraud perpetrated on the American people. The war's purpose was to centralize power and make the people easier to control. All Federal Judges, Congressmen, U.S. Attorneys, State Judges, Legislators and most Attorneys know this and are in fact British Agents. Their job is to keep the people in line and to be productive slaves which they (The British Agents) are greatly compensated for. The police do not know that they work for Great Britain they too have been decieved so don't attack them.

It is time for everyone in America to know the Truth. Let us all work together in exposing the British Empire. Please re-fax and e-mail this release to every Attorney, Judge, and Legislator in your area to let them know they have been unmasked. Please get out your Yellow Pages and start faxing everyone in your area and also read this release over every radio show possible. We have printed thousands of evidence packages and mailed them across America that prove that the United States is a British Colony. It is time to send the British back to England. We must work together because if, we do not. we are all doomed.

Your Friend.

Stephen Kinbol Ames Jr.

For More Information: Stephen Kinbol Ames, c/o P.O. Box 5373. Harrisburg. Pennsylvania 17110

Phone: 717-567-7675; Fax-717-567-2564

(And if one needs any further information, see August 22, 1997issue of Intelligence Review article "Britain's 'Invisible' Empire Unleashes The Dogs of War") [End quoting]

Here is very good verification or what Hatonn has been telling us all along - "from the horse's mouth"

QUOTE

Queen Elizabeth controls and has amended U.S. Social Security

THE ULTIMATE DELUSION

Subject: THE ULTIMATE DELUSION
Date: Mon, 9 Apr 2001 17:40:27 EDT
From: Noslavery@aol.com

To the people,

I found this paper while going through Stephen Ames' files.I am hoping that you will put it out on your E-mail and fax networks. This paper explains and documents very much. It is absolutely mind blowing !!!!!!

If you place this paper on your E-mail and fax networks I will be more than happy to respond to people's questions. I have all of the documents cited in this paper and they are available. This paper will shock even those who think that they know what has happened and what is now taking place. The deception is incredible. If the people do not respond to this information we can then truly say that it is over and that we will never be free. This paper is not opinion, but it is fact and is all documented.

Now, what people have to realize is there are remedies for the problems that not just America faces, but the World. There are people all over the World that know what is going on and they are doing something about it. People all over America are emerging victorious over the images in their minds. Let us not forget the absolute astonishing amount of debt discharges that have taken place over the last few months. What is happening in America is unbelievable. People are coming out of the delusions, they have figured and realized that the United States is a fiction and that it only exists in our minds. Tens of thousands of people now know that the "United States" does not exist and that it never has. There is no such thing as the National debt or a loan from the bank. Has any one ever seen "current credit money ?" The entire governmental system only exists in your mind.

Nicole Terry - noslavery@aol.com
==========

By: Stephen Kimbol Ames

Queen Elizabeth controls and has amended U.S. Social Security, as follows:

S.I. 1997 NO.1778 The Social Security (United States of America) Order 1997 Made 22nd of July 1997 coming into force 1st September 1997. At the Court at Buckingham Palace the 22nd day of July 1997. Now, therefore Her Majesty an pursuance of section 179 (1) (a) and (2) of the Social Security Administration Act of 1992 and all other powers enabling Her in that behalf, is please, by and with advise of Her privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:

"This Order may be cited as the Social Security (United States of America) Order 1997 and shall come into force on 1st September 1997."

Does this give a new meaning to Federal Judge William Wayne Justice stating in court that he takes his orders from England? This order goes on to redefine words in the Social Security Act and makes some changes in United States Law.

Remember, King George was the "Arch-Treasurer and Prince Elector of the Holy Roman Empire and c, and of the United States of America." See: Treaty of Peace (1738) 8 U.S. Statutes at Large. Great Britain which is the agent for the Pope, is in charge of the USA 'plantation.'

What people do not know is that the so called Founding Fathers and King George were working hand-n-hand to bring the people of America to there knees, to install a Central Government over them and to bind them to a debt that could not be paid. First off you have to understand that the UNITED STATES is a corporation and that it existed before the Revolutionary war. See Respublica v. Sweers 1 Dallas 43. 28 U.S.C. 3002 (15)

Now, you also have to realize that King George was not just the King of England, he was also the King of France. Treaty of Peace * U.S. 8 Statutes at Large 80.

On January 22, 1783 Congress ratified a contract for the repayment of 21 loans that the UNITED STATES had already received dating from February 28, 1778 to July 5, 1782. Now the UNITED STATES Inc. owes the King money which is due January 1, 1788 from King George via France. Is this not incredible the King funded both sides of the War. But there was more work that needed to be done. Now the Articles of Confederation which was declared in force March 1, 1781 States in Article 12 " All bills of credit emitted, monies borrowed,and debts contracted by, or under the authority of Congress, before the assembling of the United States, in pursuance of the present confederation, shall be deemed and considered a charge against the United States, for payment and satisfaction whereof the said United States, and the public faith are hereby solemnly pledged."

Now after losing the Revolutionary War, even though the War was nothing more than a move to turn the people into debtors for the King, they were not done yet.

Now the loans were coming due and so a meeting was convened in Annapolis, Maryland, to discuss the economic instability of the country under the Articles of Confederation. Only five States come to the meeting, but there is a call for another meeting to take place in Philadelphia the following year with the express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation

On February 21, 1787 Congress gave approval of the meeting to take place in Philadelphia on May 14, 1787, to revise the Articles of confederation. Something had to be done about the mounting debt. Little did the people know that the so called founding fathers were acutely going to reorganize the United States because it was Bankrupt.

On September 17, 1787 twelve State delegates approve the Constitution. The States have now become Constitutors. Constitutor: In the civil law, one who, by simple agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt. Blacks Law Dictionary 6th Ed. The States were now liable for the debt owed to the King, but the people of America were not because they were not a party to the Constitution because it was never put to them for a vote On August 4th, 1790 an Act was passed which was Titled.-An Act making provision for the payment of the Debt of the United States. This can be found at 1 U.S. Statutes at Large pages 138-178. This Act for all intents and purposes abolished the States and Created the Districts. If you don't believe it look it up. The Act set up Federal Districts, here in Pennsylvania we got two. In this Act each District was assigned a portion of the debt. The next step was for the states to reorganize their governments which most did in 1790. This had to be done because the States needed to legally bind the people to the debt. The original State Constitutions were never submitted to the people for a vote. So the governments wrote new constitutions and submitted them to people for a vote thereby binding the people to the debts owed to Great Britain. The people became citizens of the State where they resided and ipso facto a citizen of the United States. A citizen is a member of a fictional entity and it is synonymous with subject.

What you think is a state is in reality a corporation, in other words, a Person.

"Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is Person." 9 F. Supp 272
"Word "person" does not include state. 12 Op Atty Gen 176.

There are no states, just corporations. Every body politic on this planet is a corporation. A corporation is an artificial entity, a fiction at law. They only exist in your mind. They are images in your mind, that speak to you. We labor, pledge our property and give our children to a fiction.

Now before we go any further let us examine a few things in the Constitution.

Article six section one keeps the loans from the King valid it states; All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

Another interesting tidbit can be found at Article One Section Eight clause Two which states that Congress has the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States. This was needed so the United States (Which went into Bankruptcy on January 1, 1788) could borrow money and then because the States were a party to the Constitution they would also be liable for it.

The next underhanded move was the creation of The United States Bank in 1791. This was a private Bank of which there were 25,000 shares issued of which 18,000 were held by those in England. The Bank loaned the United States money in exchange for Securities of the United States

Now the creditors of the United States which included the King wanted paid the Interest on the loans that were given to the United States. So Alexander Hamilton came up with the great idea of taxing alcohol. The people resisted so George Washington sent out the militia to collect the tax which they did. This has become known as the Whiskey rebellion. It is the Militia's duty to collect taxes. How did the United States collect taxes off of the people if the people are not a party to the Constitution? I'll tell you how. The people are slaves! The United States belongs to the floundering fathers and their posterity and Great Britain. America is nothing more than a Plantation. It always has been. How many times have you seen someone in court attempt to use the Constitution and then the Judge tells him he can't. It is because you are not a party to it. We are SLAVES!!!!!!! If you don't believe read Padelford, Fay & Co. vs. The Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Savannah. 14 Georgia 438, 520 which states " But, indeed, no private person has a right to complain, by suit in court, on the ground of a breach of the Constitution, the Constitution, it is true, is a compact but he is not a party to it."

Now back to the Militia. Just read Article One Section Eight clause (15) which states that it is the militia's job to execute the laws of the Union. Now read Clause (16) Which states that Congress has the power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the Militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States.... the Militia is not there to protect you and me, it is their to collect our substance.

As you can plainly see all the Constitution did is set up a Military Government to guard the King's commerce and make us slaves.

If one goes to 8 U.S. statutes at large 116-132 you will find "The Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation. This Treaty was signed on November 19th, 1794 which was twelve years after the War. Article 2 of the Treaty states that the King's Troops were still occupying the United States. Being the nice King that he was , he decided that the troops would return to England by June 1st, 1796. The troops were still on American soil because, quite frankly the King wanted them here.

Here is the key to were this started:

Many people tend to blame the Jews for our problems. Jewish Law governs the entire world, as found in Jewish Law by MENACHEM ELON, DEPUTY PRESIDENT SUPREME COURT OF ISRAEL, to wit:

"Everything in the Babylonian Talmud is binding on all Israel. Every town and country must follow all customs, give effect to the decrees, and carry out the enactment's of the Talmudic sages, because the entire Jewish people accepted everything contained in Talmud. The sages who adopted the enactment's and decrees, instituted the practices, rendered the decisions, and derived the laws, constituted all or most of the Sages of Israel. It is they who received the tradition of the fundamentals of the entire Torah in unbroken succession going back to Moses, our teacher."

We are living under what the Bible calls Mammon. As written in the subject Index, Mammon is defined as ("Civil law and procedure").

Now turn to the "The Shetars Effect on English Law" -- A Law of the Jews Becomes the Law of the Land, found in "The George Town Law Journal, Vol 71: pages 1179-1200." It is clearly stated in the Law Review that the Jews are the property of the Norman and Anglo-Saxon Kings. It also explains that the Talmud is the law of the land. It explains how the Babylonian Talmud became the law of the land, which is now known as the Uniform Commercial Code. The written credit agreement -- the Jewish shetar is a lien on all property (realty) and today it's called the mortgage! The treatise also explains that the Jews are owned by Great Britain and the Jews are in charge of the Baking system.

We are living under the Babylonian Talmud, it is were all of our problems come from. It was brought into England in 1066 and has been enforced by the Pope, Kings and the Christian churches ever since. It is total and relentless mind control, people are taught to believe in things that do not exist.

Now before you scream that the UCC is unconstitutional I'm sorry people, you are not a party to any constitution. Read the case cite below.

"But, indeed, no private person has a right to complain, by suit in court, on the ground of a breach of the Constitution. The Constitution it is true, is a compact, but he is not a party to it." Padelford, Fay & Co., vs. Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Savannah 14 Ga. 438, 520

You have to understand that Great Britain,(Article six Section one) the United States and the States are the parties to the Constitution not you. Let me try to explain. If I buy an automobile from a man and that automobile has a warranty and the engine blows up the first day I have it. Then I tell the man just forget about it. Then you come along and tell the man to pay me and he says no. So you take him to court for not holding up the contract. The court then says case dismissed. Why ? Because you are not a party to the contract. You cannot sue a government official for not adhering to a contract (Constitution) that you are not a party too. You better accept the fact that you are a Slave. When you try to use the Constitution you are committing a CRIME known as CRIMINAL TRESPASS. Why ? Because you are attempting to infringe on a private contract that you are not a party to. Then to make matters worse you are a debt slave who owns no property or has any rights. You are a mere user of your Masters property! Here are just a couple of examples:

"The primary control and custody of infant is with the government" Tillman V. Roberts. 108 So. 62

" Marriage is a civil contract to which there are three parties-the husband, the wife and the state." Van Koten v. Van Koten. 154 N.E. 146.

"The ultimate ownership of all property is in the State: individual so-called "ownership" is only by virtue of Government, i.e. law amounting to mere user; and use must be in accordance with law and subordinate to the necessities of the State. Senate Document No. 43 73rd Congress 1st Session. (Brown v. Welch supra) You own no Property because you are a slave. Really you are worse off than a slave because you are also a debtor.

"The right of traffic or the transmission of property, as an absolute inalienable right, is one which has never existed since governments were instituted, and never can exist under government." Wynehamer v. The People. 13 N.Y. Rep.378, 481

Great Britain to this day collects taxes from the American people. The IRS is not an Agency of the United States Government.

All taxpayers have an Individual Master File which is in code. By using IRS Publication 6209, which is over 400 pages, there is a blocking series which shows the taxpayer the type of tax that is being paid. Most taxpayers fall under a 300-399 blocking series, which 6209 states is reserved, but by going to BMF 300-399 which is the Business Master File in 6209 prior to 1991, this was U.S.-U.K. Tax Claims, meaning taxpayers are considered a business and involved in commerce and are held liable for taxes via a treaty between the U.S. and the U.K., payable to the U.K. The form that is supposed to be used for this is form 8288, FIRPTA-Foreign Investment Real Property Tax Account. The 8288 form is in the Law Enforcement Manual of the IRS, chapter 3. The OMB's-paper-Office of Management and Budget, in the Department of Treasury, List of Active Information collections, Approved Under Paperwork Reduction Act is where form 8288 is found under OMB number 1545-0902, which says U.S. with holding tax return for dispositions by foreign persons, of U.S. Form #8288, #8288a.

These codes have since been changed to read as follows: IMF 300-309, Barred Assessment, CP 55 generated valid for MFT-30, which is the code for the 1040 form. IMF 310-399 reads the same as IMF 300-309, BMF 390-399 reads U.S.-U.K. Tax Treaty Claims. Isn't it INCREDIBLE that a 1040 form is a payment of a tax to the U.K. Everybody is always looking to 26 U.S.C. for the law that makes one liable for the so called Income Tax but, it is not in there because it is not a Tax, it is debt collection through a private contract called the Constitution of the United States Article Six, Section One. and various agreements. Is a cow paying an income tax when the machine gets connected to it's udders ? The answer is no. I have never known a cow that owns property or has been compensated for its labor. You own nothing that your labor has ever produced. You don't even own your labor or yourself. Your labor is measured in current credit money. You are allowed to retain a small portion of your labor so that you can have food, clothing shelter and most of all breed more slaves. Did you ever notice how many of the other slaves get upset if you try to retain your labor. You are called an extremist, terrorist and sometimes even a freeman. They say that you are anti-government. When the truth of the matter is you just don;t want to be a slave. But, you do not have the right to force others to be free if they want to be a slave that is entirely up to them. If they want bow down and worship corporations, let them. The United States, Great Britain and the Pope are not the problem, it is the other slaves. We would be free if the want-to-be-slaves were gone. The United States, Great Britain and the Pope would not even exist, because no one would acknowledge them. I for a matter of fact, think that those who are in power are also tired of the slaves. All the slaves do is stand around and MOO!!! For free healthcare, free education, free housing and they beg those who are in power to disarm them I do agree that a slave should not have access to a firearm. How can you disagree with the government passing out birth control ? I hope the breeding of slaves stops or at the very least slows down.

You see we are cows, the IRS is company who milks the cows and the United States Inc. is the veterinarian who takes care of the herd and Great Britain is the Owner of the farm in fee simple. The farm is held in allodium by the Pope.

Now to Rome.

"Convinced that the principles of religion contribute most powerfully to keep nations in the state of passive obedience which they owe to their princes, the high contracting parties declare it to be their intention to sustain in their respective states, those measures which the clergy may adopt with the aim of ameliorating their interests, so intimately connected with the preservation of the authority of the princes; and the contracting powers join in offering their thanks to the Pope for what he has already done for them, and solicit his constant cooperation in their views of submitting the nations." Article (3) Treaty of Varona (1822)

If the Sovereign Pontiff should nevertheless, insist on his law being observed he must be obeyed. Bened. XIV., De Syn. Dioec, lib, ix., c. vii., n. 4. Prati, 1844. Pontifical laws moreover become obligatory without being accepted or confirmed by secular rulers. Syllabus, prop. 28, 29, 44. Hence the jus nationale,(Federal Law) or the exceptional ecclesiastical laws prevalent in the United States, may be abolished at any time by the Sovereign Pontiff. Elements of Ecclesiastical Law. Vol. I 53-54. So could this be shown that the Pope rules the world?

The Pope is the ultimate owner of everything in the World. See Treaty of 1213, Papal Bull of 1455 and 1492.

I could go on and on, this is just the tip of the iceberg. Don't let this information scare you because without it you cannot be free, You have to understand that all slavery and freedom originates in the mind. When your mind allows you to accept and understand that the United States, Great Britain and the Vatican are corporations which are nothing but fictional entities which have been placed into your mind, you will understand that your slavery was because you believed a lie.

For more information: Nicole Terry
630K, Willow Street
Highspire, Pennsylvania 17034
717-986-0239
noslavery@aol.com

==========

W.J. Perry
Mexican Government's Official Plan for a Takeover of Americ
Thu Dec 19 18:34:54 2002
208.152.73.38

The Mexican Government's Official Plan for a Takeover of America
By W.J. Perry
FrontPageMagazine.com | December 12, 2002

There are approximately 18 million Mexican immigrants living in the United States today. Out of that 18 million, it is estimated that 3 million, or nearly 20 percent, are illegal aliens. Those 18 million Mexicans present a growing threat to America's self-determination because many play a dual citizenship role officially encouraged by the Mexican government. This is no secret; it's all in Mexico's official "National Plan of Development 2001-2006." This shocking document is a five-year plan full of political rhetoric emphasizing planned improvements for every aspect of Mexico's infrastructure, but it also lays out specific strategies for expanding the nation's political reach far beyond the US-Mexico border. In other words, Mexico is systematically trying to cultivate dual loyalties, i.e. disloyalty, among its ethnic compatriots in America. This is a naked expansion of Mexico's national interest at the expense of ours; the mystery is why we are tolerating it.

"Globalization" is the buzzword that appears numerous times throughout Mexico's plan. To achieve that goal, the Mexican government is counting on its citizens living abroad to strengthen Mexico's influence throughout North America. The Mexican government is demanding that we give all Mexican illegals a free pass, and also support them with numerous social services paid for by American taxpayers. Some of these – like free medical care -- we do not even provide to our own citizens. Mexico's plan specifically outlines its intent concerning Mexican citizens who have entered the United States illegally in a subsection titled "Defense Of Mexicans Abroad." The plan states:

"It is important to note that even if Mexico has achieved a number of agreements and mechanisms to ensure better treatment of our countrymen abroad, the issue of migration, especially in the United States, needs a new focus over the long term to permit the movement and residence of Mexican nationals to be safe, comfortable, legal and orderly, and the attitude of police persecution of this phenomenon must be abandoned and it must be perceived as a labor and social phenomenon."

In other words, nothing is illegal and we are not a nation of laws any more, only markets.

In a television interview in 2000, Mexico's President Vincente Fox made his country's intentions clear concerning the balance of power in the Western Hemisphere:

"I'm talking about a community of North America, an integrated agreement of Canada, the United States, and Mexico in the long term, 20, 30, 40 years from now. And this means that some of the steps we can take are, for instance, to agree that in five years we will make this convergence on economic variables. That may mean in 10 years we can open up that border when we have reduced the gap in salaries and income."

In other words, his stated long-term goal is the abolition of the border between the US and Mexico. This is a polite way of saying an end to America's distinct nationhood, i.e. to our nationhood, period. We are to be dragged down to the level of the corrupt, impoverished, backward, crony-capitalist disaster – a nation whose citizens evaluate quite honestly by fleeing at the rate of millions per decade – on our southern border.

On the surface, Mexico's globalist vision for economic unity seems innocent, but it's likely to create a very dangerous situation for America. Unlike our nation of mixed nationalities with various loyalties, Mexicans are extremely nationalistic, and they usually side with their homeland first on all issues. Considering that Hispanics are now the largest minority group in America at 12.6 percent, and Mexicans make up half of that population, the Mexican government is well on its way to wielding significant influence over U.S. policy by relying on the loyalties of their 18 million dual citizens.

Another disturbing section of Mexico's National Plan concerns the government's effort to set up illegal immigrants with special identification cards, allowing them to open bank accounts and acquire driver's licenses anywhere in the United States. Basically, any Mexican illegal alien can walk into the nearest Mexican consulate with $29 and walk out with a "consulate card". These cards are officially recognized in Mexico allowing illegal immigrants to operate on both sides of the border. Although the cards have been available for many years, they have not been officially recognized in America as proper identification until recently.

In 2001, the reliably-ultraliberal San Francisco combined city and county government unanimously passed a resolution to accept the consulate card as official personal identification. Since that first resolution, law enforcement agencies and municipalities throughout California and other parts of the United States, have also gone on to make exceptions for illegal Mexicans by accepting the cards. This is the first step toward making Mexican border jumpers legal by giving them blanket amnesty, something Vincente Fox has openly called for during immigration talks with the United States.

With a sagging economy and many unrealized campaign promises, Mexico's leader is fighting for his political life inside what is essentially a third world country. Now, with his old friend and "Border Buddy" President Bush firmly in tow, Vincente Fox is pushing for the eventual abolishment of the US-Mexico border. Such easing of border restrictions would serve as a release valve for the most desperate unemployed Mexicans, thus relieving Mexico's financial obligation to support its' poorest citizens. Moreover, free movement across the border would allow Mexican workers to earn their money in the U.S. and spend it back in Mexico.

Just as their national plan dictates, the Fox administration is also encouraging Mexican immigrants to officially participate in Mexican politics from within the United States. In 2001, Mexico passed a law allowing dual citizenship for any Mexican national living abroad, legal or otherwise. In addition, Fox visited California several times this year to campaign for stronger absentee ballot turnouts on behalf of all the Mexican nationals living in the United States. Their dual citizenship law is a major weapon in Mexico's battle for a piece of the American political pie, but it's only part of an infiltration campaign that started many years ago.

During the past fifty years, Mexico's dual loyalists have entered every facet of American society, including many public offices now held by the sons and daughters of Mexicans who originally entered the United States illegally, just to be redeemed by past amnesty programs. For decades they have slowly but relentlessly been taking control of local and state governments throughout the American Southwest. Although these Mexican-Americans were born and raised in the United States, many of them openly put their loyalty to Mexico before their loyalty to America. What other ethnic group in America would we tolerate this from? (When some German-Americans flirted with Hitler in their Bund organization in the 30's, this so shamed their reputation as an ethnic group that they are now – despite being the largest ethnic group in America – also one of the most silent in terms of explicit ethnic self-expression.)

Today, the Mexican loyalists have become a dominating force in American society, influencing the culture, the language and most importantly, the political process. Thanks to Mexican-American lobbying efforts, California state representatives now officially recognize illegal aliens as "undocumented workers" treating them with a laundry list of special aid programs including free college tuition. Repeat: there are native Americans who can't afford to go to college, and we are spending taxpayer money to send criminal migrants. In Texas, the state legislature recently conducted an entire legislative session in Spanish, and the story barely made the "B. Block" of local newscasts.

Furthermore, the 2000 presidential campaign proved just how important the Hispanic vote is to politicians on the national front. From day one of the campaign, then Texas Governor, George W. Bush, dragged his half Hispanic nephew, George P. Bush to every media event that might garner a sizable Hispanic audience. The plan worked so well that today George W. Bush is described in many Latin American circles as "America's first Hispanic president" a strange title for a guy who once referred to Mexico's national language as "Mexican" instead of Spanish.

Indeed, Bush's relationship with Mexico and Vincente Fox goes back long before his bid for the presidency. The two were Governors at the same time, and they met regularly over the years concerning various issues including border security, energy production, and trade policy. Then during Bush's first year as president, he and Fox met four times to discuss US - Mexican relations. In the fall of 2001, Bush publicly mentioned the possibility of a new amnesty program for Mexican illegals, but things cooled dramatically after the 911 attacks. Today however, Bush and Fox are back on the fast track to negotiating Mexico's plans for economic and political expansion.

After the latest meeting of the US-Mexico Binational Commission (BNC) on November 26, the U.S. State Department confirmed that cabinet members from both sides signed a number of important agreements. One agreement that stands out is the "Bilateral Income Tax Treaty" that amends an existing bilateral income tax treaty between the two nations, thus allowing significant reductions in taxes on dividends, which officials say "will further facilitate cross-border trade and investment." If fully ratified by both nations, this treaty will allow major corporations to invest in either country without being taxed at home on profits earned from across the border, thus merging our economies one step beyond NAFTA.

There is no doubt the Latinization of America is well underway, and Mexico is slyly laying the groundwork that could eventually destroy the security of our southern border. Furthermore, it's no big secret that many Mexicans dream of reclaiming the land lost to America as a result of the Mexican-American War. Ever since that agreement took effect in 1845, numerous Mexican government officials have openly called for "Reconquista," a political plan to recover the land they believe was unjustly stolen by the American government. Although Mexico has never officially encouraged the Reconquista movement, they have also never discouraged Mexican citizens (on and off American soil) from proclaiming its inevitability.

Frankly, the official plan of Mexico is closer to a plan of colonization than it is to a plan of development. Just as their national plan clearly dictates, the Mexican government is preparing for an attack on America -- an attack perpetrated through ideology and assimilation rather than with bullets and blood. The self-hating political correctness of mainstream Americans, combined with their history-blind confidence that the United States is a nation invulnerable to territorial loss, continues to aid and abet this aggression.

==========
"The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil - is for good men to do nothing."
- Edmund Burke
==========

The Social Security Number
http://www.apfn.org/apfn/ssn.htm

THE SECRET SHADOW GOVERNMENT
http://www.apfn.org/apfn/shadow.htm

THE NATURE OF GOVERNMENT - Report #TL07B
http://www.apfn.org/apfn/nature_gov.htm

Is Your Mind At Fahrenheit -459
http://www.apfn.org/apfn/459.htm

craig-oxley - October 17, 2010 11:40 PM (GMT)

1. The income/excise/privilege tax enacted via the 16th Amendment in 1913 began to be applied to the individual in the private sector in 1939. This was because of two terrible Supreme Court decisions handed down on April 25, 1938. Those cases were Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 and United States v. Caroline Products, 304 U.S. 144. The Erie decision overturned American Common Law championed by a host of federal decisions, Erie stating there is no more federal general common law. If we have no common law on a federal level, then we have no ability to plead the common law right to work in a federal courtroom—which your Editor learned the hard way! Further, Caroline Products overturned the Lochner Era (1905-1938) during which wonderful epic of time the Supreme Court made a series of pro-common law right-to-work decisions protecting the individual citizen's common law right to work and thus no "income," as defined in Eisner v. Macomber, 252 US 189 (1920), could be derived from that right, it being a right and not a federal or state privilege. But once the common law right to work in the private sector was converted into a privilege granted from the state or federal government, that conferred privilege produces "income" and every single person working in the private sector owes that socialist-communist, heavy and progressive income/excise/privilege tax when he goes to "confession" on every April 15th—the day the Order sunk the Titanic in 1912 with the collusion of J. P. Morgan!

TheUnhivedMind - November 1, 2010 01:51 AM (GMT)

Council Tax and Lawful Rebellion

John Hurst
http://www.ukcolumn.org/articles/council-t...awful-rebellion

For those who wonder what they can do as individuals to resist encroachment on their common law rights, withholding Council Tax (CT) is a lawful option. It is also, as I will show below, a legal obligation. I would not wish to encourage anyone to cause problems for the state without justification. The Powers That Be, for reasons which we can only speculate about, repealed the statutory offence of sedition early in 2010 so perhaps I can speak freely.

A bit of background first. For those of us who are old enough to remember Mrs Thatcher (who was Prime Minister in the late 1980's) will know that she had a bit of a problem with a Poll Tax which was levied on all adults to fund local authorities. This did not go down well and resulted in one of the biggest incidents of disorder in central London for many years. It was not officially a riot. The Metropolitan Police never admit that a riot has occurred because they will be financially liable, by the way.

Why withhold Council Tax? Because it is one of the few taxes which an individual is required to pay in person and is not deducted by his, or her, employer. It is a Poll Tax because it applies to everyone's residence, even if they do not own it.

What will happen if you refuse to pay? If the outstanding sum is less that £750, not very much. After two or three months your local Council will withdraw the option of paying in instalments. After another two or three months they will threaten to take you to Magistrates Court to obtain a "liability order" which will add £90.00, (£50.00 for the issue of the summons, and £40.00 for the issue of the liability order) and give the Council the power to take money directly from your earnings, Income Support or Job Seekers Allowance. That will take at least a month.

More serious methods of obtaining the money, such as threatening bankruptcy, are not available to them if the outstanding sum is less that £750.

Let's do the sums. I understand that the average Council Tax bill is £1200 over 10 months. That is £100 per month. A person could withhold payments from the 5th month into the financial year and then pay up at month 10 before any sanctions are applied except the £90 costs. If a few people do that, the tyranny will not be inconvenienced. If a million people do it will be.

For the more adventurous members of the resistance, there may be ways to starve the beast of tyranny of its taxes altogether. They are the Freeman concept, Chapter 61 of Magna Carta and duress of circumstances.

John Harris has explored the Freeman concept at length elsewhere and most readers of this publication will be aware of it.

Chapter 61 of Magna Carta covers the subject's right to appeal to a committee of 25 Barons for redress against a tyrant. After several hundred thousand individuals sent postcards to The Queen in 1999 urging her not to agree to the Nice Treaty, 65 Peers selected a quorum of 25 of their number to form such a committee. They were satisfied that the conditions required to justify the use of the procedure specified in Ch. 61 of Magna Carta 1215 were established.

Four of their number served the petition on Her Majesty on 7th February 2001 insisting that she should:
withhold the Royal Assent from any Parliamentary Bill which attempts to ratify the Treaty of Nice unless and until the people of the UK have given clear and specific approval;
uphold and preserve the rights, freedoms and customs of your loyal subjects as set out in Magna Carta and the Declaration of Right, which you, our Sovereign, swore before the nation to uphold and preserve in your Coronation Oath of June 1953

These things she has conspicuously failed to do. The service of the Barons Petition was reported in the Daily Telegraph on the 7th February 2001. As a consequence of her failure to comply, all loyal subjects are required to " together with the community of the whole realm, distrain and distress us in all possible ways, namely, by seizing our castles, lands, possessions, and in any other way they can, until redress has been obtained as they deem fit,...".

Magna Carta was, of course, a peace treaty not a statute. Breaches of a treaty give the aggrieved party the right of redress. That means us, the people.

Seizing castles has always been a bit tricky. As noted above, holding back Council Tax is a lot easier and that is the meaning of the word “distraint”, the seizure and holding of property as security for payment of a debt or satisfaction of a claim.

The fact that “the whole community of The Realm” is expected to support the Barons Committee means that individual officials have no authority to issue tax demands in the name of The Queen and commit the statutory offence of “fraud by misrepresentation” if they try.

The Courts have no authority to deny the subjects rights either. Representatives of The Crown may not breach the common law maxim that “no man may sit in judgment of his own cause”.

It is for the Barons Committee to let us know when they are satisfied that redress has been obtained.

The Barons Committee procedure is based on the subject’s Common Law right to claim the protection of “duress of circumstances”. He, or she, may commit a minor crime to prevent a worse one happening. The only limitations on this defence are that it does not justify treason or murder and it does not protect the individual who voluntarily placed himself under duress or continues to commit minor offences when it is no longer necessary. Transferring allegiance is not treason because oaths of allegiance are sworn to the office, not its holder.

There we have it. All the lawful rebel has to do is say no to Council Tax for about five months. If you make sure not to spend the instalments on other things, and you are prepared to stump up the £90 costs, they can’t touch you for it.

At the time of publication, Chapter 61 and the defence of duress are before the Courts as a test case.

--

John's first appearance in court on this issue was on the 8th October, at Brecon Magistrates Court. John issued the following statement after the hearing:

So much for the events at Court. The significance of this case to us all is the reason why a local authority, or any other revenue gathering body, no longer has lawful authority to tax us. It is because The Crown, and all officials who act in the name of the Crown, have breached the contract with the people of these islands to rule us according to our laws and customs.

That contract was acknowledged in the peace treaties know as Magna Carta and the Declaration of Rights. The present Queen publicly swore to uphold those laws and customs at her Coronation in 1953. In 2009 she gave Royal Assent to the unlawful pretended statute which gave effect to the Lisbon treaty and allowed foreign potentates of the European Union to issue directives and regulations which her officials then impose as if they had the authority of Parliament.

From that moment the UK changed from a constitutional monarchy to a tyranny, and we were subjected to the abuse of the state’s coercive force in the absence of the rule of law.

This is not the first time this has happened in history and our ancestors successfully resisted using our common law right to the protection of duress of circumstances confirmed in Chapter 61 of Magna Carta.

The “Skeleton Argument” that is before the Court explains what is at stake:

i. The respondent resides in a rented cottage in Powys and the Claimant has presented him with a bill for Council Tax for £900 in the name of The Queen.

ii. The Respondent has made a conditional offer to pay if the claimant can produce evidence that the claim is made lawfully. In the absence of such evidence, he is asserting that breaches of treaty obligations between The Crown and the people and the activation of the procedure specified by Ch. 61 of Magna Carta 1215 and, alternatively, the Common Law defence of duress of circumstances justify his withholding of the payment.

iii. The first matter at issue is the authority of The Queen (and Her officials) to issue demands for taxes at a time when she is under the supervision of a Barons Committee lawfully constituted under Ch. 61 of Magna Carta 1215. If the demand was made in the name of a Corporation and not The Queen then the Respondent has no contract with them and therefore no liability.

iv. The second matter at issue, which the Respondent alternatively and independently relies on, is the Common Law right of the subject to invoke the defence of duress of circumstances because The Queen has breached her Common Law treaty obligations with the people that were confirmed in Magna Carta 1215 and the Declaration of Rights 1688 and as a consequence the Respondents life, liberties and property are threatened.

i. The respondent has been a legal researcher for the Magna Carta Society (the MCS) since 1998 and helped produce the research paper on the possibility of raising a Barons Committee in 1999.

ii. Michael Burke, also a member of the society, petitioned the Courts to uphold the Declaration and Bill of Rights in 1998 and 1999 without success. The Judgments were referred to in the research paper and were part of the material relied upon in its arguments.

iii. Members of the public were invited to send postcards to The Queen urging her not to give Royal Assent to any statute which purported to give effect to the Nice Treaty in the UK. Several hundred thousand did so.

iv. The Queen failed to respond to public petitioning and there was no evidence that the then Prime Minister intended to change his counsels.

v. Members of the society petitioned each member of the Houses of Lords and Commons not to give their support to any statute relating to the Nice Treaty.

vi. 65 Peers selected a quorum of 25 of their number to address the petitions from the MCS and members of the public. They were satisfied that the conditions required to justify the use of the procedure specified in Ch. 61 of Magna Carta 1215 were established. Four of their number served the petition on Her Majesty on 7th February 2001.

vii. No response was made to the Barons Petition within the specified 40 days or has been to date. The conditions for Lawful Rebellion came into effect.

viii. The then Government used a purported statute (the House of Lords Act 1999) and the Rules of Parliament to deny a majority of the Hereditary Peers access to the House which prevented them exercising their Common Law right to be consulted about and vote on statutes. Officials took possession of their Letters Patent. They were replaced by hereditary Peers, many in dubious circumstances (the cash for Peerages scandal).

ix. The Queen gave Royal Assent to a purported statute giving effect to the Nice Treaty on 26/2/2002.

x. The Queen gave Royal Assent to a purported statute giving effect to the Lisbon Treaty on 19/06/2008. Direct rule from the European Union commenced in late 2009.

xi. Displaced hereditary Peers challenged the validity of the House of Lords Act and obtained an admission that it was invalid from a Government Minister, Baroness Ashton, on 20th September 2008. To date, no remedial action has been taken. This is described in the submission listed at Para 4. i. Above.

1. The Respondents Submissions Opposing a Liability Order.

i. I am a British subject of good character and have twice sworn the Oath of Allegiance, as a soldier and as a police officer. Both of those oaths require allegiance to the law, not an office holder, and require the individual concerned to make judgments about the lawfulness of his, or her, actions. So does the Judicial Oath.

ii. Regarding Ch. 61 of Magna Carta, I submit that a Baron's Committee was lawfully raised, that their Petition was served on The Queen on 7th February 2001 and that the provisions of Ch. 61 of Magna Carta 1215 apply until the Committee or a duly constituted Constitutional Convention decides otherwise. I have sworn allegiance to that Committee. In these circumstances I submit that Powys Council has no authority to issue a tax demand to me.

iii. Regarding the defence of "duress of circumstances", I have an honestly held belief that my life, liberty and property are at risk because laws that are repugnant to the Common Law are being applied within the UK. I did not place myself voluntarily in this position. Refusing to pay taxes to The Queen, who, together with certain evil counsellors, is responsible for this situation and is in breach of the Common Law and her Coronation Oath is an act of self defence on my part. Any refusal by Crown Officials to acknowledge the restraints that they are subject to will be further evidence that my beliefs are well founded.

iv. The Judicial Studies Board document referred to at Para. 3. iv. above confirms that it is for The Crown to prove beyond reasonable doubt the defence of duress does not apply.

2. Remedies Sought by the Respondent.

i. For the reasons given above I respectfully submit that no properly directed Court has authority to try me for refusing to pay Council Tax. If the Brecon Magistrates are unable to make a ruling on this I claim my right to have the issues that I have raised put before a lawfully constituted (complete with all hereditary Peers and without post 1999 Life Peers) House of Lords in order for a case to be stated. That is because the defects in the House of Lords Act 1999 noted above call into doubt the validity of the new "Supreme Court".

ii. If the Brecon Magistrates are unable to do that I ask for these matters to be put before the Supreme Court for a case to be stated. I reserve the right to challenge the validity of that Court for the reasons given.

Respectfully submitted,

John Hurst.

John's next court appearance is on the 5th November at Llandrindod Wells Magistrates Court. Everyone is encouraged to attend.
Mon, 25/10/2010

TheUnhivedMind - November 1, 2010 02:04 AM (GMT)

Paying Income Tax in America is Voluntary

Friday, 29 October 2010 10:14

'When you can't dazzle them with brilliance, baffle them with bullshit. Idiot Harry Reid maintains that paying income tax is voluntary in the U.S.. Harry Reid is the Majority Leader in the U.S. Senate. He's obviously not very bright. But then again... he is a politician. Interviewer Jan Helfeld does a great job of trying to nail him down but... well, you'll see.'

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/R7mRSI8yWwg&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/

R7mRSI8yWwg&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - November 7, 2010 07:00 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/9_xCjrSg-C8&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/9_xCjrSg-C8&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - November 7, 2010 07:09 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/hj7yaqBFCh0?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/hj7yaqBFCh0?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Fkn6itUI4yA?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Fkn6itUI4yA?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE WORK OF RIK CLAY

Title: THE WORK OF RIK CLAY
Description: Rik Clay RIP 1982-2008

Mark - July 16, 2011 05:46 AM (GMT)

London Olympics 2012 : Zion (The New Jerusalem)

When the logo for the London Olympics was unveiled in June 2007 at the cost of £400,000 there was significant public uproar due to both the cost and how terrible it looked.

user posted image

Despite public pressure, the International Olympic Committee stood fast on keeping the logo, with no flexibility. In other words, this particular logo was very important. Why?

There are many interpretations spread about the net, all intended to dissolve the true symbolic meaning behind the logo. It has been claimed to look like a swastika, a runner and even Lisa Simpson but these are all ridiculous diversions. On first glance you can easily make out the numbers 2012, but why the random 'dot'?

Here's why...

user posted image

Are we to believe that the London 2012 Olympics are going to facilitate the implementation of Zion - the 'New Jerusalem'? To recite William Blake's poem 'Jerusalem':

And did those feet in ancient time
Walk upon England's mountains green?
And was the holy Lamb of God
On England's pleasant pastures seen?
And did the Countenance Divine
Shine forth upon our clouded hills?

And was Jerusalem builded here

Among these dark Satanic mills?
Bring me my bow of burning gold:
Bring me my arrows of desire:
Bring me my spear: O clouds unfold!
Bring me my chariot of fire.
I will not cease from mental fight,
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand
Till we have built Jerusalem
In England's green and pleasant land.

An 18th century writer, artist and esotericist, William Blake had connections with Freemasonry. Was this early work a declaration of the esoteric agenda, for all to see? After all he was 'involved'.

London Olympics 2012 : Zion : Street Plan

I shall start by stating my intentions. With my research, I do not intend to cause panic or fear, or to create a platform for prejudice and hate. I publish these views in order to simply raise awareness. To raise awareness on the grounds, that if indeed something does transpire during the London Olympics 2012, you can observe the event with a critical eye.

It is my intention to ensure we shall not be duped! Following my two previous articles concerning the Olympics 2012, I decided to cast my eyes into the air and look down again. You guessed it, out came Google Maps. Here's a map and satellite view of the Olympics 2012 Site. Zoom in and take a look:

user posted image

Stratford in London, is to become host to the Olympic village, which is undergoing massive regeneration due to the project. The site was claimed to be the last area of suitable waste land in London. Pretty lucky eh? Or maybe it was left alone for years for this very reason! I choose the latter.

And so... to the point. Take a look at the Olympic site with the Google Maps road view. On a first glance it looks like any other map view, but persevere... take a closer look at the road names:

user posted image

You will find that the entire site of the Olympic Village is surrounded by somewhat biblical and mystical road names. The New Jerusalem you ask?

The Roads

1. East Cross Route (actually the A12 or A'20'12) : ref. "The Eastern Cross"

The Eastern Orthodox cross (also known as Crux Orthodoxa, the Byzantine cross, the Eastern cross, and the "Russian" cross) can be considered a modified version of the Patriarchal cross, having two smaller crossbeams, one at the top and one near the bottom, in addition to the longer crossbeam. Notice how the East Cross Route is also an A road - numbered A12. Given the UK has hundreds of A roads, what's the likelihood that of all roads, the A'20'12 intersects the Olympic site?

Pause for a second and think about the shape of the letter A... yes it's a pyramid with a capstone. So symbolically the only major road which 'crosses' the Olympic site, is the A (Pyramid) (20)12

2. Carpenter's Road : ref. "Joseph"

Joseph's profession is described in the Gospels as a τεκτων, a Greek word for a variety of skilled craftsmen, but Christian tradition has him as a "carpenter".

3. Great Eastern Road : ref. Eastern Star

The Order of the Eastern Star is the largest fraternal organization in the world that both men and women can join. It was established in 1850 by Rob Morris, a lawyer and educator who had been an official with the Freemasons.

user posted image

As you can see the emblem for the "Order Of The Eastern Star" is a pentagram - similar to that found on the UK Passport. An acknowledgement of the pagan deity Satan / Saturn.

4. Angel Lane : ref. Angel Gabriel / The Holy Spirit

Angels visit Joseph and Mary. Angels announced Christ's birth to Mary and Joseph. The angel Gabriel visited Mary in Nazareth. She was engaged to Joseph. Gabriel told Mary she would give birth to the Son of God. Mary was a virgin. Gabriel told her God's power would make the conception possible. Gabriel said, "Nothing will be impossible with God".

5. Temple Mills Lane

Temple Mills were water mills belonging to the Knights Templar - "The Poor Fellow-Soldiers of Christ and of the Temple of Solomon".

6. Church Road (Update)

Although not shown on the above map (but please do look in Google), the road on the north east perimeter of the complex takes it's name from the Christian place of worship, a church

The Location - Ley Lines

The Olympics 2012 site is situated between Leyton and Leytonestone. The "Ley" found in their names originates from the term 'Ley lines'.

For those who are in the dark: Ley lines, or Leys, are alignments of ancient sites stretching across the landscape. Ancient sites or holy places may be situated in a straight line ranging from one or two to several miles in length. A ley may be identified simply by an aligned placing of marker sites, or it might be visible on the ground for all or part of its length by the remnants of an old straight track.

Our ancestors knew that ley lines, earth grids and vortexes were energy sources and centers that were to be considered holy. A "Ley Line" is one a number of lines which form part of an energy grid which cross the Earth. The energy - metaphysical in nature. So is there any documentary proof that 'Ley lines' cross near Leyton and Leytonestone? You bet there is...

The bender site, and the old yew tree in it, were the short-lived heart of Leytonstonia, decorated with a kerb-henge, a replica of Stonehenge made with kerbstones. (Some talked of the significance of the names Leyton and Leytonstone, of their relation to ley lines more generally, as though this might explain the energy of the protest sites. A brickhenge was made at Clarement Road, halfway between Leyton and Leytonstone.) The Olympics site lies in an area synonymous with mystical - metaphysical - earth energy.

Is this yet another coincidence or part of a plan for the 2012 Olympics which was put into motion way before the event was officially finalised?

Conclusions

It seems the Olympics 2012 site was picked for reasons which go far beyond that of 'spare waste land'.

The roads which encompass the site, contain biblical and Masonic references, lying dormant for years, as if to become part of some majestic ritual.

And if that wasn't enough, a new construction intersecting 'Angel Lane' looks to be forming a grand procession. In the BBC interview "It will be a lasting legacy" with Jean Pickering, the former Olympic bronze medallist was quoted as saying: I remember running along Angel Lane to get the train to work and hearing all the market stall holders cheering me on.

That's true East End spirit.

References to 'lasting legacy', 'Angel Lane', and 'true spirit' sound ominous to me, given our 'Zion' street map. Britain's spiritual landmarks - Stonehenge, Glastonbury Tor and Avebury, all rest upon 'ley lines' (areas of intense earth energy). Could it be any more bewildering that they have chosen such a site for our Olympic games? And that it just so happened to be vacant for the occasion? To close I would like to end with a reference from the Bible. Note the chapter and verse numbers.

Mark 11:11

Then Jesus went into Jerusalem and into the temple and looked around at everything. Since it was already late, he went out with his twelve disciples to Bethany.

At 11:11, Jesus enters Jerusalem, or should that be the New Jerusalem - Zion!

Beijing Olympics 2008 : Zion & The Fifth World

On 5th May 2005, Tony Blair held a UK general election, which secured him another 3 years in power. (555)

On 6th June 2006, everyone expected a day of the devil. Nothing happened. (666)

On 7th July 2007, Al Gore organised a series of concerts around the world, initiating a 3 year campaign to combat climate change. (777)

At Live Earth, not only did the audience take part in a 'sun worship' ritual during the opening number to 'Genesis' (credits to Matthew Delooze for his brilliant work on 'Breaking The Serpent Spell'):

user posted image

We were also treated to a fantastic finale by our lady 'Madonna' (unfortunately she didn't perform her crucifixion act):

user posted image

The Beijing Olympics commenced at 8.08pm CST on 8th August 2008. (888)

user posted image

Are you starting to see a pattern here? It appears that numerologically significant days of the year entertain events controlled by 'the governing powers'.

With all the commotion surrounding the Beijing Olympics, it's hard to remember why we actually do these events... maybe it's because of what they symbolically represent.

"There are many myths surrounding the origin of the ancient Olympic Games. The most popular legend describes that Heracles was the creator of the Olympic Games, and built the Olympic stadium and surrounding buildings as an honor to his father Zeus, after completing his 12 labours. The Olympics were of fundamental religious importance, contests alternating with sacrifices and ceremonies honouring both Zeus (whose colossal statue stood at Olympia), and Pelops, divine hero and mythical king of Olympia."

So you could say that the Olympic Games, at the very least, are a pagan event honouring Zeus 'King Of The Gods' or the 'creator' if you like. Makes you wonder what his '20'12 labours were?

Moving swiftly on to Beijing 2008, let's take a look at the logo:

user posted image

With a little 'cut and paste' (taking elements from the suprisingly 'unathletic' figure for an Olympic logo), this can be written as:

user posted image

Isn't that what the 2012 London Olympics logo says too?

user posted image

You bet it is! What are the chances? Two Olympic games in succession where the logo contains the word 'Zion'. Is it me or is this something that just doesn't happen by chance? Here lies every insinuation that, between the years of 2008 and 2012, there is a 4-year plan for the creation of 'Zion', a 'New Jerusalem'.

Let's delve deeper... You may recall that sometime last year the Beijing Olympic Committee unveiled the 5 mascots for the Olympics. The date for this was, are you ready?

11th November 2007. Yes... 11th of the 11th, or 11:11.

"A set of five doll mascots for the 2008 Olympic Games were unveiled in Beijing on November 11, exactly 1,000 days before the event's opening ceremony."

user posted image

Here's the little critters... all 5 of them, coloured just like the Olympic rings. Ignore their pyramidal hats for a moment because there's something much weirder going on here...

You may recall my interpretation of the Olympic rings a month or two back, but to repeat - symbolically each of the rings represents one of the 5 cycles of time which the Mayan calendar comprises. Each ring connects to one other... giving the impression that a new cycle starts before the end of an old... a transition period so to speak - a bit like the one we're in now (1992-2012), the 'time of no-time', according to the Mayans.

Without further ado, here's the official stance on the Beijing 2008 mascots:

Nini (green) : Wind. Every spring and summer, the children of Beijing have flown beautiful kites on the currents of wind that blow through the capital.

YingYing (orange) : Animal. Like all antelopes, Yingying is fast and agile and can swiftly cover great stretches of land as he races across the earth.

Huanhuan (red) : Fire. He is the "big brother". He is a child of fire, symbolizing the Olympic Flame.

Jingjing (black) : Nature. Symbolizing the lush forest and the harmonious relationship between man and nature.

BeiBei (blue) : Water. Strong in water sports, she reflects the blue Olympic ring.

Take note of BeiBei, the blue mascot representing water:

user posted image

What's that on BeiBei's forehead? A 'spiritual' third eye?

If you order the mascots, just like the Olympic rings - red (fire), green (wind), black (nature), orange (animal), blue (spirit), a pattern emerges describing what could be seen as the evolution of consciousness as taught in esoteric circles.

Mineral / Element > Plant > Animal > Human > ... (into spirit?)

Coma > Deep Sleep > Dreaming > Waking > ...

If the Olympic mascots and official logo do indeed correlate with the five 5125 year cycles of the Mayan Calendar and the evolution of consciousness, does the arrival of 2012 bring about the transition into the spiritual consciousness of the 'blue' Olympic ring, leaving the 'orange' ring of animal consciousness behind?

To further correlate the significance behind the 'blue' ring, and to draw a link to the London Olympics 2012:

"In the past few weeks an 11-mile blue fence has sprung up around the 2012 Olympics site in east London. Is it a necessary security measure - or a reminder of how divisive the games are?"

Please read to see how significant the 'blue' fence is!

With the ritual use of the number 11, and the colour blue... it appears the Olympic Games is the perfect demonstration of how our governments can get things right if they really want to!

How does this all tie in?

As Rik Clay and Justin Stephens have announced, it is their belief that come the Olympics 2012, we are going to see one of the largest hoaxes ever perpetrated on man. With the rife symbolism in the promotional material, it can be assumed that people at the very top have an acute understanding of what is about to happen to our planet. The Beijing Olympics slogan:

"ONE WORLD ONE DREAM"

The premise of spiritual ascension, the opening of our third eyes and telepathic powers all sound exhilarating and beyond belief, but what if this is real and our impending reality is everything we've dreamed of?

Do you suppose that the ruling powers who have domineered over us for eternity are likely to let that one slip, or is it more than likely they are going to try and hijack it and dupe the public into believing that it is they who are responsible? A biblical, angelic event powered by a 'Project Blue Beam' anyone? The scene is set... it just depends on what their dream is.

The 2008 Beijing Olympics Torch Relay

The Dalai Lama's recent actions, involving China and the Olympic Games, are all part of an intended plan to bring 'sun worship' and 'spirituality' to the forefront of everyone's mind.

There are numbers and dates surrounding the Olympic Torch relay and the foreign relations between the Dalai Lama and China, which insinuate a much greater plan is taking place! But first, the Olympic flame...

The Origins Of The Olympic Flame

The Olympic Torch today is ignited several months before the opening celebration of the Olympic Games at the site of the ancient Olympics in Olympia, Greece. Eleven women, representing the roles of priestesses, perform a ceremony in which the torch is kindled by the light of the Sun, its rays concentrated by a parabolic mirror.

The Modern Day Torch Relay

The 1936 Games were the first to employ the torch run. This was the 11th modern day Olympiad. The games were opened by Adolf Hitler in Berlin, Nazi Germany. Incidentally, Adolf Hitler came to power in 1933 (33 degrees of Freemasonry anyone?).

The Flame Passes Through Lhasa, Tibet 2008

"The Olympic torch is set to pass through the Tibetan capital, Lhasa, on June 20-21. Chinese government officials have confirmed their plans to continue despite the ongoing protests and crackdown across ethnic Tibetan areas."

Yes that's right, the Olympic Flame which is lit by the 'sun' passes through Lhasa in Tibet on the Summer Solstice - the sun of most high!

The Dalai Lama's Visit To The UK in 2008

The Dalai Lama began an 11-day visit to Britain Tuesday, including talks with Prime Minister Gordon Brown who faces a delicate balancing act of supporting Tibetan rights while not offending China. Source

So as you can see here, the history of the Olympic Torch relay and the Dalai Lama's recent actions are compounded with number 11 - sun worshipping symbolism...

Oh and we mustn't forget that the Olympic Torch symbolises our 'veiled' moon Goddess - Isis (as seen here, 'starring' as the Statue Of Liberty in Escape From New York and holding the flame which represents the Sun God 'Nimrod' also known as 'Baal'

user posted image

This also relates to the origins of the Christian/Pagan celebration of 'Easter'- (info here) which derrives from Babylonian/Sumerian times, thousands of years before the so called birth of Christ!

Mark - July 16, 2011 05:57 AM (GMT)

'XXX' Explained - Olympics, Porn and The Proof

Today a new realisation hit me, with regard to the significance and true meaning behind the sequence of letters 'XXX'.

As most will be aware, 'XXX' permeates our lives in a multitude of ways:

* The London 2012 Olympic Games (XXX Olympiad)

* Pornography

* Kisses on a letter, e-mail or greetings card

* 'Britain's Got Talent' or 'America's Got Talent' TV Show (for the few who still watch TV!)

* In the cinema (xXx with Vin Diesel)

* A certain someone's birthday in 2012

Imagine for a moment, that when you've been showing respect, releasing emotion and energy to any of the above 'XXX' sequences, you have been feeding the biggest occult agenda known to man. An agenda which will bring about the spiritual ascen'sion' of the world under a 'false messiah' known as the 'Son Of God'.

Now imagine for a moment, it's all true...

The 'X' Olympics

It is my belief that the 2012 London Olympic Games (XXX Olympiad) are going to witness a pre-planned 'alien visitation' alongside the anointment of an 'end times' messiah.
Our focus here is the letter 'X', so let's take a look at two previous Olympic games:

XX Olympiad - The Munich Summer Olympics of 1972

To quote an earlier article of mine:

The 1972 Munich Olympics were host to the first 'official' global terrorist attack, in which 11 Israelis were killed by Black September (the 9th month - 9/11), a group with ties to Yasser Arafat’s Fatah organization. The Olympics were host to 121 countries:

1234321 = 11:11 x 11:11
121 countries = 11:11
11 fatalities

The emblem of the games was a blue solar logo (the "Bright Sun"). I will be covering the significance of the colour blue shortly.

X Olympiad - The Los Angeles (The Angels) Summer Olympics of 1932

The 1932 Summer Olympics, officially known as the Games of the X Olympiad, were celebrated in 1932 in Los Angeles, California, United States. No other cities made a bid to host these Olympics. Held during the worldwide Great Depression, many nations and athletes were unable to pay for the trip to Los Angeles. Fewer than half the number of participants from the 1928 Summer Olympics in Amsterdam competed in 1932.

The Games of the X Olympiad were also the first to use the victory podium (that's right, a pyramid):

What does all of this mean?

As you can see, the X and XX Olympiads both witnessed remarkable world events, unrivalled by any other Olympic Games.

The 1932 games were held in the midst of the worldwide 'Great Depression', whilst the 1972 games gave a stage for the world's first dose of 'global terror'.

Does it seem so unrealistic, that the XXX Olympiad may have a surprise in store?

XXX - Unveiled

The letter X is more significant than you think.

First of all, you need to understand that the characters of the English alphabet are more than just letters. They are symbols with meaning, sometimes multiple meanings - much like the Egyptian hieroglyphs.

They are talismans. X is the 24th letter of the English alphabet. 2+4/2+4/2+4 = 666. XXX can be seen to represent the number of the beast.

The letter X originated from a letter in the Greek alphabet known as 'Chi'

'Chi' is the 22nd letter of the Greek alphabet - that's 11:11 for any of you who've been following.

The Spirit Of X or 'Chi'

'Chi' or 'X' were the origins of the Chinese word 'Qi' meaning 'life force' or 'energy flow'.

'Chi' was also the origins of the Japanese word 'Ki', as in 'Reiki'. 'Chi' also features in 'Tai Chi'.

As you can see, the letter X or 'Chi' is very much about 'spirit'.

X - The Mother Goddess, Isis

"In Plato's Timaeus, it is explained that the two bands which form the soul of the world cross each other like the letter X."

Plato, an ancient Greek esoteric philosopher (important to remember, considering who we're dealing with) associates the letter X with the 'soul of the world'. 'Soul of the world' in Latin becomes 'Anima mundi'. Both of these terms are identified with 'Gaia'.

Gaia can be defined as:

"A complex entity involving the Earth's biosphere, atmosphere, oceans, and soil; the totality constituting a feedback or cybernetic system which seeks an optimal physical and chemical environment for life on this planet."

Gaia is the 'Mother Goddess', who can be identified as Isis - the mother figure of the Egyptian trinity.

X - The 'Son Of God', Horus

"Chi or X is often used to abbreviate the name Christ, as in the holiday Christmas (Xmas)."

Jesus Christ, the 'Son Of God' can be attributed to the sun, much like Horus - the son figure of the Egyptian trinity.

X - The Father

"A person normally has one pair of sex chromosomes in each cell. Females have two X chromosomes, while males have one X and one Y chromosome."

A father has one X chromosome. The father can be identified with 'Our father who art in heaven' or Osiris - the father figure in the Egyptian trinity.

XXX - The Trinity

As you may have realised, this becomes all too easy now. XXX simply means the father, the son and the mother or should we say the trinity!

If you've listened to Rik Clays recent Red Ice Creations Radio interview, you'll already know that he believes the 2012 Olympic Games are going to witness the implementation of the 'trinity for a new age', and here you have it - encoded in the very letters of the games themselves.

To reiterate, X is far more than just a letter.

XXX and the occult

Imagine your body is a biological computer, and that your 5 senses are filters. If you were to remove these filters, you would be bombarded by an all engrossing white light - a whole array of different energies, which you cannot perceive under normal conditions.

When you show emotion to a symbol, an object, a person, your lover - you are generating frequencies of energy which cannot be perceived through your 5 senses.

Now imagine, that an 'intelligence' which resides outside of your 5 senses, in another dimension of reality perhaps, is capturing that energy for itself - for its own personal gain. The occult operates in co-ordinance with this 'intelligence'.

The letters 'XXX' have been empowered as an occult symbol representing the trinity.
If you have no awareness of the occult meaning behind 'XXX', and you go on to show it emotion, you are feeding this symbol with the energy (from outside of your 5 sense reality) that it desires.

You are feeding the trinity, or even closer - a trinity event, at the 2012 London Olympics.

'The truth is always hidden in plain sight'

XXX pornography (single men around the world, giving away their every energy to the computer screen, the most potent energy of all!)
Here's Amsterdam's Coat Of Arms (a city founded upon its red light district) for good measure:

XXX the movie (shown in cinemas around the globe, designed to excite the audience.)

Britain's (America's) Got Talent - 3 judges (2 men, 1 woman - father, son and mother - the trinity) sat in front of a live TV audience, beaming into homes around the world via the televi'sion' set. Laughter, tears, panic, applause... a range of emotions feeding yet more energy unto the symbol 'XXX'.

And finally... something that we're all guilty of doing. We don't even know why we do it, only that it's drilled into us from a young age:

We all sign our greetings cards and emails with 'kiss kiss kiss' - 'XXX'. As previously mentioned, X originates from the Greek letter, 'Chi' which in Japanese is 'Ki'. The word 'Ki'ss can be broken down into 'Ki' or 'spirit' accompanied by SS. You could view this as two snakes, much like the structure of our DNA.

4 More Years And Counting...

'XXX' symbolises the trinity, much like the early Egyptian creation trinity of Osiris, Isis and Horus.

We, the world, 'consciousness', have been feeding a 'trinity event', blissfully unaware for over a hundred years. I believe that this event is going to take place at the 2012 London Olympics, the XXX Olympiad.

So this leads to the question... who are the members of this 'new trinity'? Who plays Osiris, the role of 'Father'? Who plays Isis, the role of 'Mother'? Who plays Horus, the 'Son', the 'end game' messiah for a 'New World Order Of The Ages'? His birthday is on the 21st June, the summer solstice - the sun of the most high.

In the year 2012, he will be 30 years old = 'XXX'.

His name is Prince William.... (PITP does not hold the view of Prince William Being the Antichrist)

The 2012 Olympic Games Without doubt there is imagery and word play at work connecting a significant event to the 2012 Olympics:

* The 2012 logo which spells 'Zion'
* A movie which could insinuate an alien visitation (here)
* A 1984 Olympics ceremony which stages an alien visitation (here)
* A slogan which spells out the plans for a 'New World Order'
* The Olympic Rings and their connotations of cyclical time

The rabbit hole deepens.....

Please Download Rik Clay's PDF here to read furthur! or read it below

London Zion 2012

London 2012 Olympic Stadium Insight Promo

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: PRISON PROFITS,FINANCIAL WORLD,MONEY LAUNDERING, Title: PRISON PROFITS,FINANCIAL WORLD,MONEY LAUNDERING, Description: DRUG TRAFFICKING, RIGGED STOCKS

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:18 PM (GMT)

PRISON PROFITS,FINANCIAL WORLD,MONEY LAUNDERING, DRUG TRAFFICKING, RIGGED STOCKS
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=7505

craig-oxley - July 26, 2009 05:18 PM (GMT)

Private Prisons Turn a Handsome Profit

Published on 07-26-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
http://www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?context=va&aid=14530

While the nation's economy flounders, business is booming for The GEO Group Inc., a private prison firm that is paid millions by the U.S. government to detain undocumented immigrants and other federal inmates. In the last year and a half, GEO announced plans to add a total of at least 3,925 new beds to immigration lockups in five locations. The Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agency and the U.S. Marshals Service, which hire the company, will fill the beds with inmates awaiting court and deportation proceedings. GEO reported impressive quarterly earnings of $20 million on February 12, 2009, along with an annual income of $61 million for 2008—up from $38 million the year before. But the company's share value is not the only thing that's growing. Behind the financial success and expansion of the for-profit prison firm, there are increasing charges of negligence, civil rights violations, abuse and even death.

Detaining immigrants has become a profitable business, and the niche industry is showing no signs of slowing down. The number of undocumented immigrants the U.S. federal government jails has grown by at least 65 percent in the last six years. In 2002, the average daily population of immigration detainees was 20,838 people, according to ICE records. By 2008, the average daily population had grown to 31,345.

Since 2003, more than a million people have been processed through federal immigration lockups, which are part of a network of at least 300 local, state and federal lockups, including seven contracted detention facilities. GEO operates four of those seven for-profit prisons.

Numerous investigations and reports have documented problems at GEOs immigration detention facilities.

At the company's Northwest Detention Center in Tacoma, Washington, federal prosecutors charged a GEO prison administrator in September 2008 with "knowingly and willfully making materially false, fictitious, and fraudulent statements to senior special agents" with ICE, according to court filings. A February 2008 audit found that over a period of more than two years ending in November 2005, GEO hired nearly 100 guards without performing the required criminal background checks. The GEO employee responsible, Sylvia Wong, pleaded guilty. In the plea agreement the federal government stated that Wong falsified documents "because of the pressure she felt" while working at the GEO lockup to get security personnel hired at the detention center "as quickly as possible."

Two months before the fraud charges, a study by the Seattle University School of Law and the nonprofit group OneAmerica reported that conditions at the Tacoma facility violated both international and domestic laws that grant detained immigrants the right to food, due process and humane treatment.

Federal immigration officials have the authority to incarcerate undocumented immigrants, asylum-seekers, and even lawful permanent residents while they await hearings with immigration judges or appeal decisions. ICE reports the average length of stay is 30 days, but detentions can last years, according to a November 2008 ICE fact sheet.

Pramila Jayapal, executive director with OneAmerica, took part in interviewing a random sample of more than 40 immigrants detained at the Northwest Detention Center, which holds approximately 1,000 immigrants at any given time.

"It's a very giant concrete box. It's just like a jail," said Jayapal. "You're only supposed to meet in the client area, which is only a few rooms."

One inmate from Mexico, Hector Pena-Ortiz, told interviewers that guards had interrogated and handcuffed him twice, demanding that he sign immediate deportation papers despite the fact that he had a pending appeal. Under federal law, immigrants cannot be deported from the United States if their immigration legal cases are still pending. During one of the incidents, guards admitted to having a file on the wrong inmate, Pena-Ortiz said.

In addition to violations of legal rights, inmates cited food as a major concern. The vast majority of the 40 prisoners interviewed at the facility said rations were inadequate and sometimes rotten. Inmates with financial resources depended on food bought from the lockup's commissary. Others went hungry. A man identified in the study as "Ricardo" said he had lost 50 pounds of his original 190-pound weight since arriving at the detention center.

ICE officially denied the claims in the report, but in 2005, annual agency inspections at the Northwest Detention Center documented problems with the quality and quantity of food and found that some meals were so poor, guards had to collect and replace them.

Looking for opportunities

The Tacoma lockup, site of the most recent GEO controversy, is located on top of a former toxic waste dump that borders coastal wetlands near the Port of Tacoma, Washington. In August 2008, the firm announced plans to expand its 1,030-bed Northwest Detention Center to 1,575 beds, "to help meet the increased demand for detention bed space by federal, state, and local government agencies around the country."

Just four months after GEOs announcement, ICE notified government contractors that the agency was looking for a contractor-owned and -operated detention facility. According to federal procurement data, the new facility should be capable of providing 1,575 beds—the same number GEO was set to build—to be completed no later than September 2009—the same date GEO had set for the completion of its own construction project.

Lorie Dankers, ICE spokeswoman in Washington State, implied that the similarity in numbers and date was a coincidence. "I would never comment, nor have I in the past, on what GEO is doing and why they're doing it. That's a business decision that GEO made," said Dankers. "To insinuate that there was some kind of connection, or that they has some inside information as to the request, that would be incorrect."

Dankers added that ICEs request for more space is still in the "pre-solicitation" phase, meaning that there is no guarantee a contract will be offered, and the agency is simply requesting information from contractors to "gauge interest."

"I don't have any information one way or the other as to what would happen," Dankers said. "I think often times, if I had to speculate, they see where there's a need. I think they're always looking for opportunities."

Canceled contracts

And opportunities, like prisoners, abound. GEO owns more than 62,000 prison beds in the United States, with approximately 3,000 beds used for detained immigrants. The company also claims a global market share of 25 percent of the private corrections industry. Currently, the Northwest Detention Center incarcerates immigrants mainly from Oregon, Washington and Alaska, according to Dankers.

In the last five years, criminal immigration prosecutions have surged by 388 percent according to federal court data obtained by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse at Syracuse University in New York. The most recently available court information shows that there were 11,454 prosecutions in September 2008 alone. Adding to GEOs profitability and prospects are immigration laws introduced in the 1990s, the expanding use of immigration detention without bond, and a greater emphasis on prosecutions after 9/11.

The company's relationship with government officials has also proven valuable in winning corrections contracts.

In 2006, while on the state payroll as director of prisons at the Colorado Department of Corrections, Nolin Renfrow helped GEO obtain a $14 million-per-year contract to detain 1,500 inmates in a proposed state prison project in the northern part of the state. Renfrow was moonlighting for GEO—with an expected compensation of $1 million—when a 2007 state audit and news reports uncovered the public servant's business deal.

The audit found that Renfrow's actions could "arguably present a conflict of interest and result in a breach of ... the public trust," because state law prohibited an "employee from assisting any person for a fee or other compensation in obtaining any contract."

The county district attorney with jurisdiction over Renfrow declined to press criminal charges, but in the wake of the scandal, officials with the state's corrections department rescinded the contract.

Prisons as money makers

Immigrant facilities are not the only GEO lockups that have sparked claims of negligence and abuse.

In 2007, the firm settled a lawsuit with the family of an inmate for $200,000. LeTisha Tapia, a 23-year-old woman incarcerated at the GE0-owned Val Verde Correction Facility in southern Texas, told her family in July 2004 that she had been raped and beaten after being locked in the same cell-block with male inmates. Shortly after, she had hung herself in her cell. The nonprofit Texas Civil Rights Project sued GEO on behalf of Tapia's family.

"The jail drove this young woman to kill herself," charged the family's attorney, Scott Medlock, in a February 15, 2006 press release from the Texas Civil Rights Project. "GEO cuts corners by hiring poorly trained guards, providing inmates with cut rate medical care, and running their facility in a grossly unprofessional manner." Citing confidentiality provisions in the settlement, Medlock refused further comment.

More recently, in 2008, civil liberties attorneys sued the company for failing to provide adequate medical attention to inmates outsourced from Washington, DC, to the Rivers Correctional Institute, located in North Carolina and overseen by GEO through a contract with the federal Bureau of Prisons. That same year, Idaho state authorities removed 125 inmates from a GEO prison after an investigation—spurred by the suicide of a detainee at the facility—revealed poor staff training and healthcare.

"Pretty immediately when people started going to Rivers we started to get letters about how bad the healthcare was, and just how people were really scared of dying there," said Deborah Golden, an attorney with the DC Prisoners Project, a group that is representing inmates in the legal case against GEO. One inmate named in the report, Keith Mathis, claims he was denied medical treatment for a cavity until the tooth became infected and caused an open ulcer on his face that eventually "burst open," requiring surgery and three days hospitalization.

"The more we looked into the situation the more we realized it was a systemic problem," said Golden. "I suspect that it's a pattern all over. When you try to run prisons as money makers what you do is cut back on the most expensive thing you can, which is medication and medical care."

GEO has said it will not publicly comment on pending legal cases or abuse claims by third parties, including nonprofit groups. Company spokesman Pablo Paez says that on the subject of business plans, "we have no comment beyond what's in our public disclosures."

Despite a wide array of grievances and tragedies, GEO has accrued contracts worth more than $588 million in federal tax dollars since 1997, according to available federal procurement data. And as long as federal officials continue to remand a growing number of inmates and immigrants over to private businesses, without imposing strict oversight, GEO will likely remain profitable.

craig-oxley - November 25, 2009 04:47 PM (GMT)

Prison Factories: Slave Labor for the New World Order?

Published on 11-23-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
http://www.parascope.com/articles/0197/prison.htm

The Justice Department reported in August that there are nearly 1.6 million men and women incarcerated in the United States -- currently the highest incarceration rate in the entire world. This startling figure tops off a decade of rapid expansion of America's prison population, fueled by a "war on drugs" that is steadily undermining the rights so succinctly expressed in the Bill of Rights more than 200 years ago.

As 1995 drew to a close, one out of every 167 Americans was in prison or jail, compared to one out of 320 in 1985, when the crack cocaine trade began to proliferate. The total number of inmates has more than doubled in the past decade, and we just can't seem to build enough prisons to keep them all in.

Add the trend towards private prison facility management and corporate use of prison labor, and you have an extremely unsettling social situation. Are we witnessing the creation of a slave labor force for the corporate New World Order?

Quite possibly, if the Oakhill Correctional Institute in Dane County, Wisconsin serves as a model. Seventeen inmates crowded in a makeshift basement factory in that facility crank out over a million dollars' worth of office chairs per year, in exchange for wages ranging from twenty cents to $1.50 per hour.

The operation is run by Badger State Industries, the Wisconsin prison industries program, which employs 600 inmates and which raked in a $1.2 million profit in 1995. In the past, to protect manufacturers from unfair competition, Wisconsin allowed sale of prison-made goods only to state and local government agencies. But Governor Tommy Thompson's new state budget allows commercial entities to use prison facilities and labor for manufacturing purposes. The money will be used to pay for the costs of incarcerating the prisoners -- including the ones who work in the factories.

Wisconsin is following the lead of other states, such as California, Tennessee, Kansas, Ohio, Oregon, Texas, Nevada and Iowa, which have incorporated prisoners into the labor force, placing artificial downward pressure on wages. Thousands of state and federal prisoners are currently generating more than $1 billion per year in sales for private businesses, often competing directly with the private sector labor force. The Correctional Industries Association predicts that by the year 2000, 30 percent of America's inmate population will labor to create nearly $9 billion in sales for private business interests.

Oregon has even started advertising its prison labor force and factories, claiming that businesses who utilize incarcerated workers would otherwise go overseas for cheap labor (thanks, GATT and NAFTA!). In 1995, an overwhelming majority of Oregon voters passed a constitutional amendment that will put 100 percent of its state inmates to work.

And they'll be making a lot more than license plates and road signs. One product of Oregon's inmate factories are uniforms for McDonald's. Tennessee inmates stitch together jeans for Kmart and JC Penney, as well as $80 wooden rocking ponies for Eddie Bauer. Mattresses and furniture are perennial favorites in prison factories, and Ohio inmates even produced car parts for Honda, until the United Auto Workers intervened. Prisoners have been employed doing data entry, assembling computer circuit boards and even taking credit card ticket orders for TWA.

But private industry isn't the only sector eager to exploit cheap prison labor. On June 14, 1995, the U.S. House of Representatives narrowly rejected an amendment to the 1996 Defense Authorization bill which would have permitted the Defense Department to use nonviolent offender inmates provided by state or local corrections facilities to do construction and maintenance services at military installations.

Although prison manufacturing facilities do offer short-term benefits at a time when budgets are strained to the breaking point, the system is ripe for exploitation and abuse by government and corporate entities seeking to cut financial corners. Proponents of prison labor say it is "good" for inmates, providing income and on-the-job training they would have never received otherwise.

But due to a lack of restrictions to prevent abuse of the prison labor force, many inmates view the situation very differently. At Soledad near Monterey, California, prisoners earn 45 cents per hour making blue work shirts, which, once deductions are taken out, adds up to $60 for a month of 40-hour work weeks. "They put you on a machine and expect you to put out for them," Soledad inmate Dino Navarrete told Arm the Spirit. "Nobody wants to do that. These jobs are jokes to most inmates here."

So why do they do it? In California, prisoners who refuse to work are moved to discliplinary housing and lose canteen priveleges, as well as "good time" credit that slices hard time off their sentences. Corporatization of prison labor abuses inmates, exploits their labor and inevitably reduces the value of the private sector work force. What is a troubling trend today may become a social and economic disaster in the future. ParaScope will be keeping a close eye on the trend towards prison labor; stay tuned for future updates on the situation.

For more information, see the sources below, or consult the Prison Activist Resource Center.

Sources:

Sniffen, Michael J., "One out of 167 Americans Incarcerated," Associated Press, 18 August 1996.

Elbow, Steven, "Doing Time, 9 to 5," Isthmus, 1995.

"Prison Labor, Prison Blues," AFL-CIO Labor Letter.

Erlich, Reese, "Prison Labor: Workin' For The Man," Arm the Spirit, 30 November 1995.

craig-oxley - January 8, 2010 05:52 PM (GMT)

United kingdom : Innovation key for [pounds sterling]1.8bn prisons work.

Byline: shiv03
http://www.thefreelibrary.com/United+kingd.....-a0206371335

Some innovative joint ventures are expected to emerge in the battle for places on the [pounds sterling]1.8 billion framework to build five large prisons in England and Wales.

Several contractors are understood to be interested in the framework but challenged by its requirements. Consortia will need to be able to design, build and operate the 1,500 place prisons on 20 to 40-year PFI contracts.

Only four contractors Carillion, Costain, Skanska and Interserve have built PFI prisons in the past. They have established partnerships with the major prisons operators needed for a serious tilt at the work.

But several other contractors including Wates, Kier, Balfour Beatty , Willmott Dixon and John Laing
are thought to be looking at the framework.

One source said: If it is a lifeline then you will find a way to make it work. We could see some innovative ideas.

It is currently planned that the framework will be used to procure up to five new 1,500-place prisons and associated accommodation.

It is anticipated that the first two facilities will be at Beam Park West, in the London Borough of Barking and Dagenham , and Runwell in Chelmsford, Essex. Both are subject to obtaining the sites and outline planning consent.

The framework is intended to increase the prison system s capacity to 96,000 places by 2014. Contractors have until 17 September to submit pre-qualification questionnaires.

Previous partnerships that have built prisons on a PFI basis:

Carillion and G4S

Altcourse prison, Liverpool; Rye Hill prison, east Yorkshire.

Skanska and Serco

Lowdham Grange prison, Nottinghamshire; Ashfield prison, Gloucestershire; Dovegate prison, Staffordshire; Parc prison, South Wales (with Costain).

Interserve and Kaylx

Forest Bank prison, Salford; Bronzefield prison, Middlesex; Peterborough, Cambridgeshire.

Copyright : Euclid Infotech Pvt. Ltd.

Provided by Syndigate.info an Albawaba.com company

craig-oxley - January 8, 2010 05:53 PM (GMT)

Merseyrail operator to run town's new prison; Serco secures deals worth pounds 600m

http://www.thefreelibrary.com/Merseyrail+o.....-a0206639985

Byline: ALEX TURNER

THE new 600-capacity prison in Maghull will be run by a consortium that includes Merseyrail joint operator Serco.

The deal, along with another to run Belmarsh West prison in London, will be worth pounds 600m to Serco over 26 years. The contracts are due to be signed early next year.

The Maghull prison will be built close to Ashworth Hospital and will be next door to 350-place

HMP Kennet which opened in 2008.

Construction work by Skanska is expected to begin in the first half of next year and completed by the end of 2011.

Serco chief executive Christopher Hyman said: "We are committed to providing safe, secure and cost-effective regimes and offender accommodation that reduce reoffending and which support offenders in leading more fulfilling lives once they have been released.

"Governments around the world are facing increasing justice and homeland security challenges, and we are seeing significant opportunities to use our skills to support them."

In the UK, Serco already manages four adult prisons, a Young Offenders Institution, and a Secure Training Centre for young people, as well as providing electronic monitoring and court escort services.

The group yesterday reported strong first-half trading, as a record level of contract wins lifted pre-tax profits 33% to pounds 83.4m in the first half of 2009.

Revenues in the six months to June 30 rose 30.8% to pounds 1.95bn, pretax profits jumped 32.8% to pounds 83.4m and the interim dividend will grow by 25% to 1.85p per share.

It achieved record contract awards with pounds 2.1bn of deals signed and preferred bidder status achieved on pounds 1.4bn of contracts. The order book stands at pounds 16.7bn.

Mr Hyman said: "This has been a strong first half.

"These opportunities, across all our markets, and our growing capabilities, underpin our confidence in the future."

Serco, which employs more than 70,000 people, provides outsourcing for a range of clients, but mainly governments.

It also reported a good start to the second half of the year following an additional pounds 500m of contracts as customers look to outsource work to help reduce costs.

Panmure Gordon stockbrokers said yesterday's figures were better than expected and added that an order book worth almost pounds 17bn provided "excellent" nearterm visibility.

Shares in the FTSE

100 Indexlisted company closed 6% at 482p after it said it expected to meet its guidance for 2009 results.

CAPTION(S):

Serco was awarded the 25-year Merseyrail concession along with joint partner Dutch Railways in July 2003 Picture: ANDREW

craig-oxley - August 8, 2010 05:26 PM (GMT)

Obama's "Green Jobs" Go To Prison Slaves

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1e8bJPpW7Nk

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/1e8bJPpW7Nk&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/1e8bJPpW7Nk&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 5, 2010 11:47 PM (GMT)

The Prison Industrial Complex: Crisis and Control

by Christian Parenti, Special to CorpWatch
September 1st, 1999
http://www.corpwatch.org/article.php?id=852

In 1964 a tsunami swept over Crescent City, California completely destroying the downtown. Only nine people died, but the town - nestled just below the Oregon border -- never recovered.

In 1989 another tsunami hit -- this time the tidal wave was political. The California Department of Corrections rolled in, and with little opposition built the sprawling $277 million Pelican Bay State Prison, one of the newest, meanest super-max lockups in the system. The prison is also Crescent City and Del Norte County's largest employer.

The new prison's political and economic clout is exaggerated by Crescent City's extreme isolation and poverty. Only four of the area's seventeen saw mills are still in operation, commercial salmon fishing is dead, and during the mid-eighties 164 businesses went under. By the time the California Department of Corrections came scouting for a new prison site, unemployment had breached twenty percent.

Today, Pelican Bay provides 1,500 jobs, an annual payroll of $50 million. Indirectly, the prison has created work in everything from construction to domestic violence counseling. Also cashing in on the action is a huge Ace Hardware, a private hospital and a 90,000 square foot K-mart, selling everything from toothpaste to Spice Girl paraphernalia.
The Prison Industrial ComplexThe little town and the big prison is a marriage of convenience replicated in scores of communities.

The little town and the big prison: it is a marriage of convenience replicated in scores of communities in recent years. From Bowling Green, Missouri, to rural Florida, economically battered towns are rolling over for new prisons. Nationally the tab for building penitentiaries averaged about $7 billion a year over the last decade. One report has more than 523,000 full-time employees working in American corrections -- more than in any Fortune 500 company except General Motors.

Is prison building the jobs program and vehicle for government economic stimulus in a post- cold-war, demilitarized America? Is the emerging prison industry replacing the web of civilian, government, military interests and private capital that Eisenhower dubbed the "military industrial complex"? This is the position held by a few on the left and, to some extent, by writers in the Wall Street Journal and Atlantic Monthly.

But this perspective raises several questions. First, is the military industrial complex withering and being transformed piece by piece into a domestic war machine? A glance at the facts suggests not. The 1999 Pentagon budget topped $297 billion, the greatest in real terms ever. That's six to ten times the total annual tab for incarceration. So while Hekler and Koch and other arms dealers may be pushing their wares on America's cops and Wackenhut Corrections sinks more capital into private prisons, these expansions are not forced by a peace-driven pentagon downswing.

Nonetheless, are specific corporate interests driving criminal justice policy, as is often the case with military policy? This "prison as pentagon" argument generally cites three ways in which incarceration bolsters capitalism: government economic stimulus for stagnant communities (like Crescent City), the privatization of prisons and prison-related services, and the exploitation of prison labor by private firms. All of these facets of the prison industrial complex are important, but none of them -- alone or together -- explains why we are headed for what Jerome Miller, co-founder of the National Center on Institutions and Alternatives, calls a "gulag state."

This article explores each of the crucial points on the prison-business nexus, and then offers a different explanation for the lockdown economy: one based not on specific corporate interests, but rather on an analysis of criminal punishment as a class struggle from above.
Prison Labor

Critics of the prison industrial complex focus a great deal of attention on prison labor. Many say that incarceration is increasingly driven by big corporations looking for profits. They point the finger at Microsoft, Starbucks, Victoria's Secret and TWA for using cheap, well disciplined prison labor. In reality, most corporations use subcontractors who on occasion use prison labor, but more often use cheaper, more productive overseas workers. Nationwide, only 2,600 convicts work for private firms.

Corporations don't like the invasive, controlled environment of prisons, where guards often interrupt production to strip search the employees. Nor are many big firms willing to risk the bad press associated with exploiting convicts. Montgomery Ward, for example, has a charter pledging that the company will not use child, slave, or convict labor.Microsoft, Starbucks, Victoria's Secret and TWA use cheap prison labor.

Then there are state owned "prison industries." The federal government's Unicor employs 20,000 convict workers manufacturing everything from wire to office furniture. These are impressive numbers, and it might seem that there's a lot of money being made. In fact, Unicor - like other ventures owned by the state prison system - is heavily subsidized and would collapse in a few months if forced to compete with the private sector. Navy officials say that compared to the open market Unicor's "product is inferior, costs more and takes longer to procure."

This is not to suggest that prison labor is unimportant. Politically and ideologically it is very important. And for the inmates who do the work, issues of fairness and safety are paramount. But in terms of explaining why policy makers are so eager to lock people up, prison labor is a sideshow.
Private Prisons

Another player in the prison industrial complex is the fast growing and powerful private prison industry. For-profit lockups currently control some five percent of all U.S. prison beds. They make huge profits and spend amply to sway politicians and public opinion. The current round of private incarceration began with a Reagan sponsored experiment to house INS detainees at private detention centers in Houston and Laredo, Texas.

In response to the federal government's broad invitation to capital, a pair of Tennessee entrepreneurs using money from Kentucky Fried Chicken and the know-how of several public sector corrections veterans set up the first private prison company, Corrections Corporation of America (CCA). For most of the eighties and early nineties CCA, like its competitors, concerned itself with cherry picking -- seeking easy to handle contracts for minimum-security prisons.

But CCA and the others soon set out after bigger prizes. Corporate jailers now control roughly 100,000 prison beds nationwide, in 27 different states. CCA's market share is approximately half of all privatized America prison beds. Globally, its barely regulated empire includes 78 prisons in 25 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Australia and the United Kingdom. CCA's record of inmate escapes and hiring untrained guards who brutalize prisoners is notorious.

Yet, financially CCA has performed handsomely. One investment firm dubbed it "a theme stock for the nineties." To maintain market dominance CCA does things the old fashioned way: giving generously to politicians and buttering up the press. In recent years CCA's CEO has distributed more campaign money to Tennessee politicians than any other individual. The company also operates a robust lobbying operation in DC and in several states where it has operations.While private prisons are profitable, they don't lower the cost of incarceration for state governments.

The second largest private jailer is Wackenhut Corrections, with about 17,000 beds at 24 facilities. Named after its founder, former FBI agent George Wackenhut, the firm is a subsidiary of Wackenhut's private security service, which made it big more than forty years ago by scooping up contracts to guard America's nuclear waste dumps and testing installations. Wackenhut also did some freelance spooking. By the late sixties the corporation had dossiers on three million American "potential subversives." This was the largest collection of private surveillance files in American history and was later handed over to the FBI. By the 1970s and 1980s the company had expanded into strikebreaking and guarding US embassies. George Wackenhut still runs the business from his castle-like mansion in Florida and from the deck of his yacht, Top Secret.

Behind CCA and Wackenhut is a hungry pack of some sixteen other firms that run local jails, private prisons, and INS detention centers. Underwriting the growth of both public and private prisons are a battery of mainstream financial houses. Giant Wall St. firms such as Goldman Sachs, and Merrill Lynch write between two and three billion dollars in prison construction bonds every year. Swimming along side the big fish of incarceration are schools of for-profit caterers, prison HMOs, private transport companies, architecture firms and other subcontractors that feed at the margins of the prison industrial complex.

While private prisons are profitable, they don't lower the cost of incarceration for state governments. They merely gouge at the other side by taking all amenities and services from prisoners and by hiring often incompetent, unqualified guards. The private jailers are bad but they only control 5 percent of all prison beds and they have not hijacked national corrections policy the way military contractors have. Besides they are increasingly unpopular -- even with many Republicans. Therefore it seems that private prisons are not pushing criminal justice policy in the way that arms manufactures do with defense policy.
Class Warfare From AboveCapitalism needs and creates poverty, yet corporate America is threatened by the poor.

So what is driving the lockdown? At the heart of the matter lies a basic contradiction: capitalism needs and creates poverty, intentionally through policy and organically through economic crisis. Yet corporate America is also threatened by the poor. These so called "surplus populations" help scare working people into obedience, and keep wages low. Yet at the same time the poor (who in the United Sates are disproportionately people of color) make the upper middle class (who are mostly white) uneasy. At times they rebel and burn down the ghetto, or even more threatening to the status quo, they organize and demand economic redistribution.

In the past the poor were managed through a mix of social amelioration and repression. From the New Deal of 1930's through the 1970's an increasing portion of the system's cast off population were absorbed through a social safety net. People of color, particularly in the rural South, were largely excluded and managed the old fashion way: via brut force. But America's incipient social welfare state began to cause trouble in the late sixties, that's when profits began to shrink and the economy slid into recession.

Crucial to that crisis was rising labor agitation. By the early seventies wildcat strikes had shut the nation's postal system, coal fields, truck industry and railways. During one nationwide strike in which 12 unions whooped General Electric's ass, strikers reportedly collected $25 million in welfare. Despite recession in the early seventies the ratio of quits to lay-offs was rising. Workers were no longer afraid of unemployment because there was a social welfare system supporting them. The war on poverty was subsidizing the war against corporations.

Reagan put an end to all that. A severe recession in the early eighties, conservative courts, and a mass assault on all forms of government subsidies to poor and working people -- from low-income housing programs, to job training to welfare -- helped to tip the scales back to capital's favor. So now profits are in recovery while the working public, particularly people of color, bleeds. But how to regulate the poor?Criminal justice regulates, terrorizes and disorganizes the poor.

The answer in the 1990's is clear: racialize poverty via criminal codes, such as drug laws and mandatory minimum sentences that disproportionately affect poor people of color. Then lock up as many people as possible for as long as possible. In this way criminal justice regulates, absorbs, terrorizes and disorganizes the poor. It also bolsters institutionalized racism by disenfranchising and marginalizing large numbers of brown people. But unlike social welfare programs, the war on crime doesn't have the side effect of empowering, or at least cushioning, the poor and subsidizing their struggles. Nor does the new model of control set loose dangerous notions of racial equality or social inclusion, as did some War on Poverty programs of the 1960's. The prison industrial complex is containment the old fashioned way, via segregation, fear mongering, race-baiting, and naked force.

As for solutions: we need less. Less policing, less incarceration, shorter sentences, fewer laws governing individual behaviors, and less obsessive discussion of every lurid crime in the news media. Two-thirds of all people entering prison are sentenced for non-violent offenses, which means there are literally hundreds of thousands of people in prison who pose no major threat to public safety.

There is already an over abundance of good ideas on how to handle troubled youth, drug addicts, impoverished sex workers, and spousal abusers. Many are quite inexpensive and effective. And since the need for work is at the heart of any real war on crime, we should create jobs that pay a living wage and meet human needs. All over the country there are small pockets of dedicated activists fighting against tremendous odds and the deafening silence of the mainstream press, from Latino youth demanding more schools and fewer prisons, to inmates filing joint grievances against abusive staff, to Families Against Mandatory Minimums. These are the people pointing the way out from the waste, terror, and abuse of America's criminal justice lockdown.

Christian Parenti is author of Lockdown America: Police and Prisons in the Age of Crisis, Verso, 1999. He teaches at New College of California in San Francisco. His writing has appeared in The Nation, The Progressive and the Christian Science Monitor.

craig-oxley - October 5, 2010 11:48 PM (GMT)

Ken Clarke: Prisoners to work a 40-hour week

05.10.10
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...aces-of-work.do

Prisoners will be forced to get "out of bed" and work full-time to earn money to compensate victims of crime and help pay for keeping themselves behind bars, Justice Secretary Ken Clarke will pledge today.

Mr Clarke, who has been under fire from some parts of the Tory party for plans to send fewer offenders to jail, will use his party conference speech to unveil the crowd-pleasing plans.

He wants private firms to create jobs for criminals and is even looking at the possibility of creating purpose-built workplace prisons where higher wages could generate even more cash.

Around one pound in five would be put in a fund for victims, with the rest used to cover the cost of keeping people behind bars, pay the benefits of prisoners' families or kept in trust for when they are released.

The Ministry of Justice is looking for around £2 billion of savings from its budget as part of the drastic Whitehall-wide spending review ordered by Chancellor George Osborne to tackle the UK's deficit.

Mr Clarke's push for greater emphasis on rehabilitation and community sentences in place of short sentences in an attempt to cut the record prison population is not popular with many Tory activists.

In an effort to win back support, he will tell those gathered in Birmingham that he will end the "life of enforced, bored idleness, where getting out of bed is optional" of most prisoners.

"In order to raise those funds, we need to instil in our jails a regime of hard work," he will say.

"If we want to reduce the crimes these people will commit when they get out, whilst boosting the amount that can be provided for victim support, we need as many prisoners as possible to work hard for regular working hours.

"We have to try to get those people who have the backbone, to go straight. To handle a life without crime when they have finished their punishment.

"So we will make it easier for prison governors to bring more private companies into their jails to create well-run businesses, employing prisoners in regular 9-to-5 jobs."

The policy is a revival of powers introduced by the last Tory government under John Major in 1996 but never implemented by Labour, which allow money from work outside prison to be used to help victims.

That would raise only £1 million a year from those held in open prisons, so the Government is to extend the scope of the Prisoners' Earnings Act to cover money earned behind bars.

TheUnhivedMind - November 2, 2010 02:10 AM (GMT)

Lock Up Profits — in Prison Stocks: Analyst

Published: Monday, 1 Nov 2010 | 6:02 PM ET
By: JeeYeon Park
http://www.cnbc.com/id/39949086

Privatized prison stocks have seen a modest gain in the past three months, so is there room to run from here?

T.C. Robillard, analyst at Signal Hill, discussed his insights.

“You’ve seen prison populations pretty consistently over the last three decades move up a couple percent a year…and from a business model perspective, it’s clearly good news,” Robillard told CNBC.

Robillard has a “buy” rating on The Geo Group [GEO 25.71 0.06 (+0.23%)] and a “hold” rating on Corrections Corporation of America [CXW 26.03 0.36 (+1.4%)].

“What you see in a recession is that states end up overcrowding their own prisons in an effort to save money,” he explained.

“And as budgets start to flatten out and improve, the first things you’re going to see them turn to is the private sector to help alleviate some of that overcrowding, because the states [still] will not have the funding necessary to build new prison beds.”

TheUnhivedMind - June 17, 2011 12:58 AM (GMT)

The Pentagon and slave labor in U.S. prisons

June 14, 2011
By Sara Flounders - Worker's World
http://www.workers.org/2011/us/pentagon_0609/

Prisoners earning 23 cents an hour in U.S. federal prisons are manufacturing high-tech electronic components for Patriot Advanced Capability 3 missiles, launchers for TOW (Tube-launched, Optically tracked, Wire-guided) anti-tank missiles, and other guided missile systems. A March article by journalist and financial researcher Justin Rohrlich of World in Review is worth a closer look at the full implications of this ominous development. (minyanville.com)

The expanding use of prison industries, which pay slave wages, as a way to increase profits for giant military corporations is a frontal attack on the rights of all workers.

Prison labor — with no union protection, overtime pay, vacation days, pensions, benefits, health and safety protection, or Social Security withholding — also makes complex components for McDonnell Douglas/Boeing’s F-15 fighter aircraft, the General Dynamics/Lockheed Martin F-16, and Bell/Textron’s Cobra helicopter. Prison labor produces night-vision goggles, body armor, camouflage uniforms, radio and communication devices, and lighting systems and components for 30-mm to 300-mm battleship anti-aircraft guns, along with land mine sweepers and electro-optical equipment for the BAE Systems Bradley Fighting Vehicle’s laser rangefinder. Prisoners recycle toxic electronic equipment and overhaul military vehicles.

Labor in federal prisons is contracted out by UNICOR, previously known as Federal Prison Industries, a quasi-public, for-profit corporation run by the Bureau of Prisons. In 14 prison factories, more than 3,000 prisoners manufacture electronic equipment for land, sea and airborne communication. UNICOR is now the U.S. government’s 39th largest contractor, with 110 factories at 79 federal penitentiaries.

The majority of UNICOR’s products and services are on contract to orders from the Department of Defense. Giant multinational corporations purchase parts assembled at some of the lowest labor rates in the world, then resell the finished weapons components at the highest rates of profit. For example, Lockheed Martin and Raytheon Corporation subcontract components, then assemble and sell advanced weapons systems to the Pentagon.

Increased profits, unhealthy workplaces

However, the Pentagon is not the only buyer. U.S. corporations are the world's largest arms dealers, while weapons and aircraft are the largest U.S. export. The U.S. State Department, Department of Defense and diplomats pressure NATO members and dependent countries around the world into multibillion-dollar weapons purchases that generate further corporate profits, often leaving many countries mired in enormous debt.

But the fact that the capitalist state has found yet another way to drastically undercut union workers' wages and ensure still higher profits to military corporations — whose weapons wreak such havoc around the world — is an ominous development.

According to CNN Money, the U.S. highly skilled and well-paid "aerospace workforce has shrunk by 40 percent in the past 20 years. Like many other industries, the defense sector has been quietly outsourcing production (and jobs) to cheaper labor markets overseas." (Feb. 24) It seems that with prison labor, these jobs are also being outsourced domestically.

Meanwhile, dividends and options to a handful of top stockholders and CEO compensation packages at top military corporations exceed the total payment of wages to the more than 23,000 imprisoned workers who produce UNICOR parts.

The prison work is often dangerous, toxic and unprotected. At FCC Victorville, a federal prison located at an old U.S. airbase, prisoners clean, overhaul and reassemble tanks and military vehicles returned from combat and coated in toxic spent ammunition, depleted uranium dust and chemicals.

A federal lawsuit by prisoners, food service workers and family members at FCI Marianna, a minimum security women's prison in Florida, cited that toxic dust containing lead, cadmium, mercury and arsenic poisoned those who worked at UNICOR's computer and electronic recycling factory.

Prisoners there worked covered in dust, without safety equipment, protective gear, air filtration or masks. The suit explained that the toxic dust caused severe damage to nervous and reproductive systems, lung damage, bone disease, kidney failure, blood clots, cancers, anxiety, headaches, fatigue, memory lapses, skin lesions, and circulatory and respiratory problems. This is one of eight federal prison recycling facilities — employing 1,200 prisoners — run by UNICOR.

After years of complaints the Justice Department's Office of the Inspector General and the Federal Occupational Health Service concurred in October 2008 that UNICOR has jeopardized the lives and safety of untold numbers of prisoners and staff. (Prison Legal News, Feb. 17, 2009)

Racism & U.S. prisons

The U.S. imprisons more people per capita than any country in the world. With less than 5 percent of the world population, the U.S. imprisons more than 25 percent of all people imprisoned in the world.

There are more than 2.3 million prisoners in federal, state and local prisons in the U.S. Twice as many people are under probation and parole. Many tens of thousands of other prisoners include undocumented immigrants facing deportation, prisoners awaiting sentencing and youthful offenders in categories considered reform or detention.

The racism that pervades every aspect of life in capitalist society — from jobs, income and housing to education and opportunity — is most brutally reflected by who is caught up in the U.S. prison system.

More than 60 percent of U.S. prisoners are people of color. Seventy percent of those being sentenced under the three strikes law in California — which requires mandatory sentences of 25 years to life after three felony convictions — are people of color. Nationally, 39 percent of African-American men in their 20s are in prison, on probation or on parole. The U.S. imprisons more people than South Africa did under apartheid. (Linn Washington, “Incarceration Nation”)

The U.S. prison population is not only the largest in the world — it is relentlessly growing. The U.S. prison population is more than five times what it was 30 years ago.

In 1980, when Ronald Reagan became president, there were 400,000 prisoners in the U.S. Today the number exceeds 2.3 million. In California the prison population soared from 23,264 in 1980 to 170,000 in 2010. The Pennsylvania prison population climbed from 8,243 to 51,487 in those same years. There are now more African-American men in prison, on probation or on parole than were enslaved in 1850, before the Civil War began, according to Law Professor Michelle Alexander in the book “The New Jim Crow: Mass Incarceration in the Age of Colorblindness.”

Today a staggering 1-in-100 adults in the U.S. are living behind bars. But this crime, which breaks families and destroys lives, is not evenly distributed. In major urban areas one-half of Black men have criminal records. This means life-long, legalized discrimination in student loans, financial assistance, access to public housing, mortgages, the right to vote and, of course, the possibility of being hired for a job.

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 02:02 AM (GMT)

CA spends more on prisons than schools

Tue Jun 21, 2011 10:44AM
http://presstv.com/detail/185641.html

California is spending more on execution than education as budget problems have forced the state's schools to cut back or cancel summer programs, a new report says.

A comprehensive report on the death penalty costs shows that California taxpayers have spent more than $4 billion on capital punishment since it was reinstated in 1978, a Press TV correspondent reported on Tuesday.

In other words, California paid about $308 million for each of the 13 executions carried out since then, the report added.

Meanwhile, state funding cuts are forcing schools to slash summer programs to save money for the fall and spring. The countless cuts to education have little to do with how large the state is.

“It's partly a function of the size of our population so the dollar amounts and the cuts that are necessary to balance the budget or just that much larger, but if you adjust for that, if you put things on a per capita basis, California is suffering," Economist Gerry Kominski said.

Experts say it shows the disparity between the state's commitments toward prisons versus education.

Each prisoner gets about 300,000 dollars per year and that doesn't include the amount going toward executions, while the state spends only an estimated 9,000 dollars on each student.

Experts acknowledge the troubling link between California's high incarceration rate and it's low graduation rate. That's why they are pushing the state to focus more money toward education, which they say is the best way to keep students away from jail.

State lawmakers remain deadlocked with California governor Jerry Brown over a new budget, which was supposed to be passed June 15th. It remains unclear how much California will cut from education this year.

California has witnessed massive protests, as 40,000 teachers and school employees have lost their jobs over the past three years.

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:58 AM (GMT)

Prisons expect influx of war veterans

By Terri Judd
Thursday, 23 June 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/uk/crime...ns-2301233.html

War veterans make up the largest group of people in prisons and the problem is likely to get worse after a decade of conflict, an inquiry warns.

The Howard League for Penal Reform said most of the prisoners were older than the average criminal when they first offended – which was about 10 years after leaving the forces. This is when mental health problems are thought most likely to surface.

Sir John Nutting QC, chairman of the inquiry, said he expected the problem to peak because it was now 10 years since British forces were first committed to Afghanistan, followed by Iraq.

The inquiry found there were about 3,000 former service personnel in jail, or 3.5 per cent of the prison population in England and Wales.

Sir John called for those leaving military service to be screened for post-traumatic stress disorder. Police should be made more aware of the problem and the Veterans in Custody scheme should be expanded.

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 01:59 AM (GMT)

Private Prisons Love Mass Incarceration, And Want Politicians To Love It Too

June 24, 2011

http://tpmmuckraker.talkingpointsmemo.com/..._to_as_well.php

Private prison companies have helped fuel government policies which lead to an increase in prison population and boost their profits, according to a recent report.

The private prison population has grown 353.7 percent in the past 15 years, according to a study by the Justice Policy Institute. Major private prison companies have an incentive to encourage policies which keep that number on the rise.

"Steady increases in the number of people in private prisons, especially those coming from federally contracted beds, translate into increased revenues for private prison companies," the report says.

"Since private prison companies are in the business to make money, policies that maintain or increase incarceration boost their revenues; from a business perspective, the economic and social costs of mass incarceration are 'externalities' that aren't figured into their corporate bottom line," it says.

Some of the biggest names in the private prison industry have given $835,514 to federal candidates since 2000 and a stunning $6,092,331 to state politicians in the last five elections cycles, according to data in the report.

"A lot of it is focused on the state level because a lot of the people in prison are in state facilities," Paul Ashton, an author of the report, told TPM.

"With most states and the federal government operating under record deficits and decreasing budgets, private prison companies have a growing desire to establish influential connections with policymakers, with two goals: pitching private prisons as a lower cost alternative to building or maintaining state facilities; and fighting policies that might reduce the use of incarceration," the report states.

The report also points to the revolving door between the private prison companies and the government agencies that have a say in their spending.

One recent example: Harley Lappin, who retired as head of the Bureau of Prisons after he was arrested for drunk driving, was recently named the chief corrections officer at the Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the largest provider of private prisons to federal, state and local government. Lappin said in a press release announcing his new position that the company "has an outstanding track record of working well with its government partners as they strive to set the highest standards in the administration of a correctional system."

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 09:59 PM (GMT)

Prison industrial complex

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/mZ3oJGqr6ls&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mZ3oJGqr6ls&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwaveflash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:35 AM (GMT)

The New Slavery: Prison Labor in Wisconsin

By Ronald Horvath | Jul 06, 2011 Share
http://knox.villagesoup.com/discussions/vi...isconsin/419150

Well, slave labor is probably the only thing better than sending the jobs to China.

Union Workers Replaced With Prison Labor Under Scott Walker's Collective Bargaining Law

By Alex Seitz-Wald on Jul 6, 2011

While Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker's ® law dismantling collective bargaining rights has harmed teachers, nurses, and other civil servants, it's helping a different group in Wisconsinites — inmates. Prisoners are now taking up jobs that used to be held by unionized workers in some parts of the state.

As the Madison Capital Times reports, "Besides losing their right to negotiate over the percentage of their paycheck that will go toward health care and retirement, unions also lost the ability to claim work as a 'union-only' job, opening the door for private workers and evidently even inmates to step in and take their place." Inmates are not paid for their work, but may receive time off of their sentences.

The law went into effect last week, and Racine County is already using inmates to do landscaping, painting, and another basic maintenance around the county that was previously done by county workers. The union had successfully sued to stop the country from using prison labor for these jobs last year, but with Walker's new law, they have no recourse.

The Washington Examiner called Racine's move "another success story" and "all great news for Wisconsin taxpayers. Hopefully, we'll see more of it." So far, it appears no other jurisdiction has followed Racine's example — for now. It may just be a matter of time to allow existing union contracts to expire. The spokesperson for the Sheriff's Office of Dane County, which includes Milwaukee, said, "Nobody in our jail will be benefiting…at this time" from the new law, but the left the door open for future changes.

While giving prisoners more work and activity options is generally positive, using free inmate labor to replace public sector workers is a disturbing trend.

http://thinkprogress.org/politics/2011/07/...r-prison-labor/

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 05:47 PM (GMT)

Nine prisons put up for tender in mass privatisation programme

Another two jails will be closed, saving £11.4m a year for Kenneth Clarke's justice department, which faces a 23% cut

Alan Travis
guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 13 July 2011 16.34 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/society/2011/jul...ation-programme

Two prisons will be closed and nine more put out to competition in a mass privatisation programme, the justice secretary, Kenneth Clarke, has announced.

The prison closures include the much-praised resettlement jail, Latchmere House, in Richmond, west London, and Brockhill prison near Redditch, a 1960s prison building now in a poor state, which first opened as a remand centre and has at different times been both a women's and a men's prison.

Their closure will save £4.9m this year and produce an ongoing saving of £11.4m a year for Clarke's justice department, which faces a 23% budget cut.

The decision to put nine prisons up for competition – including the Wolds, which is already run by the private security company G4S – is potentially the largest single privatisation programme in the history of the prison service in England and Wales.

It is possible that some jails may remain in the public sector after bids are invited later this autumn. The last round of competition in March saw four prisons put up for tender and one, Buckley Hall, stayed in the public sector. The largest, Birmingham prison, is to be taken over by G4S.

The muted response to that decision by the Prison Officers' Association is likely to have been a factor in Wednesday's announcement that a further nine jails are to be market-tested.

The list includes HMP Lindholme, HMP Moorland and HMP Hatfield, all in Doncaster; HMP Wolds in East Yorkshire, which was the first private prison in Britain; HMP Acklington and HMP Castington, both near Morpeth in Northumberland; HMP Durham; HMP Onley near Rugby; and HMP Coldingley near Bisley, Surrey, which is a purpose-built training prison.

Already 12 of the existing 138 jails are run by the private sector. A further four new prisons are already earmarked to be built and run by the private sector.

If the private security sector succeeds in taking over eight of the nine prisons now being put for tender – and that is not a foregone conclusion – they will have 15% of the prisons "market" in England and Wales. Private security companies have long campaigned to create a viable private prison sector in England and Wales and this competition round could prove the tipping point they have craved.

The justice ministry says decisions about which prisons were selected for competition or closure were based on a wide range of criteria, including potential for improvement and innovation, and not just on the basis of the poorest performers.

The closure of Latchmere House and Brockhill will mean a reduction of 377 places in prison capacity in England and Wales. The capacity is to be replaced by new jails providing 2,500 extra places this year. Two other small prisons, Lancaster Castle and Ashwell, were closed earlier this year.

Latchmere House has a long history, which includes a period when it was called Camp 020 and was MI5's secret wartime interrogation centre where German agents were "broken" and some turned into double agents. More than 500 spies are thought to have passed through Latchmere House during the war.

Clarke said: "The public have a right to expect continuing improvement in the quality and efficiency of public services, without compromising public safety. The competition strategy and adjustments to the prison estate will help ensure that this is the case."

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:12 PM (GMT)

Two prisons to shut in efficiency bid, MoJ says

The MoJ says the privatisation of prisons will increase efficiency

13 July 2011 Last updated at 16:00
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-14141708

Two prisons are to be closed, and eight more privatised, under plans announced by the Ministry of Justice.

Justice Secretary Kenneth Clarke said Latchmere House prison, in west London, and HMP Brockhill, in Worcestershire, will close in September.

HMPs Lindholme, Moorland, Hatfield, Acklington, Castington, Durham, Onley and Coldingley will also be put out to tender in the autumn.

The decision is "to balance the need to increase efficiency", the MoJ said.

The Wolds prison in Yorkshire, currently run by security firm G4S, will also be put out to competition in the autumn when it comes to the end of its current contract.

The MoJ has to make savings of almost 25% in its budget as part of the government's public spending plans.

In a statement, the MoJ said the closure of HMP Latchmere House and HMP Brockhill would see a reduction of 377 prison spaces - and provide cost savings of £4.9m this year, with an on-going annual saving of £11.4m.

It said all the prisons - which were selected by the National Offender Management Service - were chosen "on a wide range of criteria including the potential for efficiency improvements, service reform and innovation, not on the basis of poor performance".
'Continuing improvement'

Changes resulting from the "competition and capacity announcements" will not compromise public safety or reduce the quality of services, it added.

Mr Clarke said: "The public have a right to expect continuing improvement in the quality and efficiency of public services, without compromising public safety.

"The competition strategy and adjustments to the prison estate will help ensure that this is the case."

The MoJ said it hoped staff displaced by the two prison closures would be absorbed elsewhere in the system.

The closures are part of an overall programme, which will expect to see 2,500 new prison places become available over the next 12 months, the statement went on to say.

HMPs Lindholme, Moorland and Hatfield are in Yorkshire, HMPs Acklington and Castington are in Northumberland, HMP Onley is in Warwickshire, HMP Durham is in County Durham and HMP Coldingley is in Surrey.

In January, Mr Clarke announced the closure of Ashwell prison in Rutland and Lancaster Castle in Lancashire, and the change of use of HMP Morton Hall to an Immigration Removal Centre.

Birmingham prison will be the first jail to be transferred from the public to the private sector in the UK in October, with the loss of more than 100 jobs.

In December 2010, Mr Clarke set out proposals to reduce the then 85,000-strong prison population in England and Wales by about 3,000 over four years.

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 02:11 AM (GMT)

Venezuela's Chavez to boost prison construction

12 Jul 2011]
http://news.yahoo.com/venezuelas-chavez-bo...-123254823.html

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez on Friday said he is instructing officials to boost prison construction after a 27-day uprising by inmates highlighted problems of overcrowding and violence.

Chavez likened the problems in Venezuela's prisons to cancer, saying dealing with them requires "deep treatment."

Days before Chavez underwent a cancer operation last month in Cuba, troops stormed a prison near Caracas in a search for weapons, and armed inmates began an uprising in response. The nearly monthlong crisis ended on Wednesday when hundreds of prisoners emerged from the adjacent Rodeo II prison after negotiations with authorities. Officials have said that several inmates also escaped, including four who were killed by troops.

"New facilities must be built," Chavez said in an interview with state television, adding that he has also decided to create a new Cabinet ministry to oversee prison issues.

"Those old jails must be transformed," Chavez said. "Thanks to God that this case was resolved."

He condemned corruption among prison guards and administrators that has allowed a flourishing trade in guns and drugs in the prisons. "It's like a cancer. We must fight against that," Chavez said.

Chavez announced on Friday that Peruvian President-elect Ollanta Humala had just arrived for a visit. Chavez called him a brother in a message on Twitter, saying "Let's give him the most patriotic of welcomes!"

Humala, a populist leftist and, like Chavez, a former military man, had delayed his visit because of the Venezuelan leader's health.

Chavez told state television that he has been waking up at sunrise and reading German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche. He said he also has taken up painting again and has been creating a landscape from one of the windows of the presidential palace.

"I know there are people who are happy because they believe I'm dying, that I'm going to die soon," Chavez said, "but those evil wishes are part of that hatred ... That is erased like a tsunami of love by the blessings and prayers of a nation, of millions."

(This version CORRECTS that prison uprising began before Chavez's cancer operation.)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE UNION OF NORTH AMERICA THREAD

Title: THE UNION OF NORTH AMERICA THREAD

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:19 PM (GMT)

THE UNION OF NORTH AMERICA THREAD
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=31069

craig-oxley - October 20, 2008 04:12 PM (GMT)

Manitoba & the North American Union Treason

Proofs and Facts! Province of manitoba throne speech nov.20, 2007 and the SPP/NAU

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/3kBjVAAFziM&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/3kBjVAAFziM&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3kBjVAAFziM

Project for a New American Century(PNAC) and the North American Union(NAU) under the Corporatism of Security & Prosperity Partnership(SPP)
http://www.spp.gov/prosperity_agenda/

http://www.newamericancentury.org/

craig-oxley - November 30, 2008 02:11 AM (GMT)

DISEMBOWELING AMERICA

By Jon Christian Ryter
November 21, 2008
http://www.newswithviews.com/Ryter/jon260.htm

Canada and Mexico have long been tied to the US economy. In 1994, the North American Free Trade Agreement was crafted at the hands of the Democratically-controlled 104th Congress—and the newly-elected Clinton Administration as their quid pro quo to the international money mafia who financed their victory. Both Canada and Mexico thought NAFTA would make them as prosperous as the United States. Mexico, at least, should have known better.

While Canada has always prospered from its proximity to the United States, Mexico—which has traditionally been viewed as America's "subprime neighbor"—has not. Mexico was invited to play an important role in the globalization of the western hemisphere only because it has an easily-corrupted government and an abundance of cheap labor. It was a second-world power sitting at the gateway of the greatest economic power in the world. It was also a second-world power that provided the merchant princes of the United States with an unnoticed gateway, through the tariff-free provisions of NAFTA, that would allow US industrialists to export their factories to the People's Republic of China and then import products made in joint ventures between US corporations and the Chinese government through the tariff-free Mexican Port of Lazaro Cardenas. Chinese goods, masquerading as NAFTA goods from Mexico, traveled up the Trans-Texas Corridor to anxious, bargain-hunting, stupid American consumers who still fail to realize that the more Chinese or other third world products they buy the faster their job will be exported to the human capital-rich third world countries which are raising up a new generation of consumers. The discretionary income of these new consumers will come at the expense of US jobs.

Mexico, which doesn't realize it yet, has suffered rather than prospered from its proximity to the United States. NAFTA originally appeared to be a godsend to the Mexicans who needed the jobs that relocated US factories promised. With those jobs would come all of the other economic benefits enjoyed by Americans. (Until the transnational industrialists and their friends in the liberal media began to refer to everyone in the western hemisphere as "Americans" simply because they lived in North America, Central America or South America, only US citizens were referred to as "Americans"—even by those who lived in the other 20 countries in the western hemisphere. Canadians refer to themselves as Canadians, Mexicans as Mexicans, Brazilians as Brazilians, and so on.) Those economic benefits included the ability to buy a home and all of the amenities that go with it.

Those amenities for the new Mexican consumers who are making your new Ford, GM or Chrysler cars and extended cab pickup trucks include department store revolving charge accounts and, of course, your typical bank card—Visa™ or MasterCard™. Only, bank cards issued to Mexican factory workers are not exactly "typical." Mexicans workers who qualify for credit are paying an average 41.78% interest on their bank cards in order to share an illusion of the great American dream of prosperity. Store credit cards in Mexico carry interest rates as high as 69.6%.

Credit has always been fairly expensive in Mexico. Few members of the Mexico's growing moderate working class use credit simply because it's too expensive and too hard to get. Fewer banks in Mexico mean less competition. On top of that, since bank credit is relatively new, most Mexican consumers—even those who have used store credit in the past—are viewed as new, high risk subprime borrowers.

Bernardo Garza, marketing manager for GE Money Mexico (a division of General Electric, the company that owns NBC) said that credit is high in Mexico because "...banks are covering a little bit for a higher risk than in the US. But, on the other hand, I also believe...that banks and also financial institutions who offer cards see an opportunity there and are trying to get the most out of it."

In reality, lending institutions in the United States are quietly grooming tomorrow's credit markets for the time, very soon, when a jobless United States loses it Visa, MasterCard or Discover credit card privileges, and American Express once again becomes the credit card of the elite.

The disemboweling of the Economic Titan—the United States of America—has been a deliberate plan, well-conceived by the transnationalist money barons, the kings of industry and the merchant princes since the end of World War II. The overlords of the world's wealth believed that when economic parity existed throughout the world, nations would not rush to war with one another. But those who are not ideologically-driven fail to understand the passions of those who are. Money doesn't drive them. Theology does.

What made the United States the unique, dominant nation in the world for over a century was not the strength of our military, it was our industrial strength. The United States was economically self-sustaining. Not only did we have the factories to produce all of consumer goods we needed, we had the factories to build the tools of war whenever this nation faced a military threat. In fact, in both World War I and World War II, not only did we produce all of the war machines, weapons and munitions we needed to fight a two-front war, we also supplied our allies with the war machines, weapons and munitions they needed to fight two-front wars as well. It was this fact about the United States that frightened then Soviet dictator Josef Stalin—and it was this fact about the United States that frightened the globalists behind the plan to create world government.

The United States has 22% of the world's work force and 80% of its wealth. In the minds of the money barons for whom greed is life, all men are motivated by money first, and that they are driven by personal ideology only when they are not economically equal. Islam has proven this adage to be false, but those who are determined to erase all national borders in order to create a tariff-free global state controlled by politicians who are indebted to them, are blind to the realities of human nature. When they eventually wake up and discover their wealth is irrelevant, it will be too late. The nation which guaranteed the freedom of all men will have become a debtor nation that can no longer pay its own way in the world. America will become a pauper state, waiting in line with the debtor nations of Europe for its chance to get slave labor factory jobs from China, Mexico and India.

Today, the emerging nations that possess 85% of all the world's human capital are witnessing the birth of the free enterprise system—albeit an expensive counterfeit version of it. Walmart of Mexico now offers its customers a credit card (which is administered by the Spanish-owned bank, BBVA Bancomer). Walmart of Mexico spokesman Antonio Ocaranza refused to reveal how much the interest rate is, but the Mexican Walmart credit card is a variable-interest credit card with rates that can be 65% higher than Mexico's prime rate, or 70%. Credit cards to Mexican customers issued by Walmart's own internal bank offers a line of credit to is customers at 59% interest. Mexican Woolworth stores credit cards carry an interest rate of 61%. Costco's interest rate in Mexico is 53.31%.

Those marketing credit to Mexico's growing working class claim that the interest rates are hefty only because Mexico has a much smaller derivatives market (the investment instruments used to finance credit). However, Mexico, like most of the western hemisphere second world powers, has defaulted on World Bank and the International Monetary Fund loans. For that reason, Mexico is viewed as a subprime nation. It's viewed as a credit risk. So are its people. The fad—buying on credit—is not just a novelty in Mexico. It's a novelty in all of the emerging industrial nations whose factories came from your city and my town. China. Mexico. India. Pakistan. Indonesia. And, of course, the former Soviet Union (and I say "former" with tongue-in-cheek.) In a country where its people have not discovered the "personal check," and where people purchase apartments or cars with suitcases of cash, Russian consumers whose jobs create products sold all over Europe and Asia, are discovering credit. Up until now, Russian workers paid for everything with cash. If they lacked the cash to buy their car outright, they didn't have a car. That's why home ownership in Soviet Russia was virtually nonexistent.

The Russian economy, like the economies of China, India, Indonesia, Pakistan and even war torn Afghanistan are now flush with an infusion of transnational cash as the industrialists of the west meet the 21st century's consumers from the east. Interest rates in those nations range from about 15% for a 10-year mortgage to double that for buyers of cars, household appliances, computers or other electronic devises. With the whole world as their oyster, the US-born industrialists no longer need the replacement market in the United States and western Europe where consumers have two-of-everything and virtually need nothing until one breaks. Instead, the wealth of the world has found the third world where consumers have virtually nothing and need everything—especially our jobs.

Thankfully the money barons, the kings of industry and the merchant princes were thoughtful enough to create the North American Union so when the US consumers—who are financing the economic globalization of the free enterprise system with their jobs—go bankrupt, the job-flush Mexicans and Canadians will be available to pick up the tab and keep our economy afloat for the globalists who fear another financial meltdown and a domino-affect global bank crash will destroy the artificial affluence of a cyber-world economy financed with virtual money.

craig-oxley - November 30, 2008 03:45 AM (GMT)

Wash Post Re-Floats Possibility of Lame-Duck NAFTA Expansion

David Sirota / Campaign for America's Future | Nov. 20th, 2008
http://www.ourfuture.org/blog-entry/200811...nafta-expansion

Glenn Greenwald long ago taught us why we should always look skeptically at the fact-free prognostications of the Washington Post's Steve Pearlstein. That said, this line in Pearlstein's column today caught my eye today (h/t lutton):

"The haggling now [about the automaker bailout] is over the appropriate mechanism. My guess is that the whole thing will be wrapped up shortly after Thanksgiving, perhaps in a holiday package that will include congressional approval (but delayed implementation) of the free-trade agreement with Colombia." (emphasis added)

My last newspaper column explored how the Colombia Free Trade Agreement is about nothing other than serving corporate interests; how poll after poll after poll has shown Americans intensely oppose such NAFTA expansions; how in 2006 and 2008, a total of 69 new congressional lawmakers - mostly Democrats - won on an explicit promise to stop NAFTA expansions; and how therefore, the Republican push for this trade deal is a political ploy designed to fracture Democrats much like NAFTA fractured them in 1993.

Pearlstein admits that his prediction is a "guess" - which, in journalism speak, usually means it is the reporter's wish, but the reporter knows most of the facts align against that wish. That's probably especially true in this instance, considering even NAFTA proponent Rahm Emanuel has said Democrats are not going to support tying any economic stimulus or automaker bailout package to the Colombia Free Trade Agreement. Emanuel may support corporate-written trade policies - but he's a political operator first and foremost, and likely understands what I was getting at in my column.

That said, the fact that the Washington Post's top business columnist feels the need to longingly push out this possibility shows us that the fight to reform our trade policy is far from over. The corporate media Establishment has long been one of the most powerful forces pushing mindless free-trade fundamentalism - and that Establishment is not about to let up.

UPDATE: For more on the Colombia Free Trade Agreement, check out the Economic Policy Institute's recent backgrounder

craig-oxley - December 1, 2008 04:04 AM (GMT)

Grassroots Group Fights NAFTA Superhighway

New documentary highlights grassroots movement to kill the NAFTA superhighway.

By Mark Anderson
http://www.americanfreepress.net/html/naft...way_111908.html

SAN ANTONIO, Texas—The focus of the new edition of the film documentary “Truth Be Tolled” is the Texas Department of Transportation’s (TxDOT) blatant bias and extralegal actions in its highly publicized Keep Texas Moving campaign—designed to sell the public on expensive tolls roads as the wave of the future of state transportation, while relentlessly pushing the Trans Texas Corridor (TTC).

WATCH AFP'S INTERVIEW BELOW

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/KK8v3gLALhM&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/KK8v3gLALhM&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Videotaped depositions of TxDOT officials included in the film show them admitting a number of things, while hedging on other points, all indicating that the neutrality expected and required from an executive agency is, by and large, not evident. Furthermore, TxDOT documents obtained by toll road opponents show that TxDOT officials view the citizenry with an uncomfortable degree of hostility. “Keep calm,” states a Keep Texas Moving training document shown in the film, referring to toll road-TTC opponents. “Leave the wrestling to the pigs. They always end up looking like pigs.”

American Free Press attended the film’s debut screening Oct. 30 at the Palladium Theater, where this writer interviewed producer-director Bill Molina, as well as Texans Uniting for Reform and Freedom (TURF) leader Terri Hall, both of whom spoke on camera for AFP news videos.

Molina cast Ms. Hall as the main spokesperson in the film to shine a light on TxDOT’s apparent corruption and clarify the troubling issues involved. She is perhaps the most visible TTC-toll road opponent in Texas; he is an award-winning filmmaker whose earlier editions of Truth Be Tolled laid out the truth about the much-despised TTC, which is Texas’s portion of the NAFTA Superhighway.

The TTC could gobble up at least 584,000 acres of land and 4,000 new miles of right-of-way for an expressway designed for legions of trucks to pass through Texas with minimal on-off ramps and interchanges. Railroad and utility lines would follow the right-of-way, which could be 1,200 feet (a quarter-mile) wide in some areas—three times the width of a typical interstate. The median likely would have hotels, eateries and fueling stations, which would deny such business to providers off the TTC.

The TTC is mainly for delivering Asian-made products shipped across the Pacific on a route that would bypass secure U.S. ports at Long Beach and Los Angeles, Calif. Instead, the shoddy products would be shipped to Pacific Ocean ports in Mexico, especially the Lazaro Cardenas port that’s controlled by shady Chinese shipping companies. From there, everything is hauled north by truck and rail. Kansas City, smack dab in the middle of the U.S., is seen as a major customs “port,” as AFP learned in earlier travels.

Molina’s new film centers on TxDOT’s hiring of registered lobbyists against state law and its improper use of taxpayer money for marketing the TTC and toll roads, instead of giving impartial information on all transportation options, including mass transit and the normal use of gas taxes for freeway upkeep and new construction. But, as the film shows, TxDOT’s Keep Texas Moving “campaign” (TxDOT itself uses the word campaign) is a full-court press to promote tolls roads in general—which could squeeze out freeways altogether—and the TTC in particular.

Numerous points in the film chronicle TxDOT’s conduct and related matters. The following are among the most signficant:

* On U.S. 281, a north-south route that connects southernmost Texas with the San Antonio area, there is a seemingly relentless TxDOT effort to “toll” this freeway. Ms. Hall noted that the money from gas taxes is definitely there to maintain, repair and, if necessary, expand the freeway. “They’ve hijacked that road for five years—they’ve had the money for five years,” she stressed. She noted in past AFP interviews that the apparent tactic is to toll as many freeways as possible so there is no free competition if and when the planned mega-tollway, the TTC, is built.

* The tolls under consideration, said Ms. Hall, could be 25 cents a mile, based on “what the market will bear.” This stems from the idea that American roads are now seen as a profitable asset for the Wall Street crowd, rather than being a public investment/service where tolls only need to be high enough to reflect construction and maintenance costs and to retire related debts. Even 25 cents per mile is like adding another $5 to a gallon of gasoline, she explained. Comparatively, the combined federal-state gas tax comes out to only a few cents per mile in Texas.

* As TxDOT gathered public input across Texas in latter 2007 and into 2008, it held two types of meetings: “Town halls” and official public hearings. Hall, taking into account 12 town halls versus 46 public hearings, said that perhaps 200-300 people attended each hearing where their comments were actually recorded for the public record. But up to 1,000 people were apparently baited to attend each of the town halls so TxDOT could “take public input” on TTC 69, a part of the TTC charted to run north-northeast, first shadowing highways 281 and 77 (that run parallel from the Rio Grande Valley up to the greater Corpus Christi area). From there, TTC 69 would head toward Houston and way beyond along the highway 59 route. Ms. Hall estimated that TxDOT diverted 10,000 people, overall, into attending these phony town halls just so they could vent steam. “None of these [Town Hall] comments were actually part of the legal record,” she said.

* The SB 792 bill passed by the Texas Legislature that seemed to stop the TTC and other toll roads (as AFP initially assumed last year) did no such thing. This “counterfeit moratorium” imposed the “market valuation” method that paves the way for levying high tolls that far exceed actual road costs and debt retirement, according to Ms. Hall.

* TxDOT’s documents released for ongoing lawsuits filed by TURF—to argue that tax dollars are being illegally used to actually market and lobby for toll roads and the TTC—show evidence of manipulative “push-poll” methods being used to survey the populace about transportation issues. Push-poll questions are slyly worded to bring the reader to favored conclusions.

The film also stresses that the infamous 2005 Kelo vs. New London (Connecticut) U.S. Supreme Court decision that set the stage for “eminent domain” government land takings on behalf of private interests (instead of genuine public works) also set a major legal precedent for the Texas state government to engage in such takings, especially for the TTC. A special state panel would offer Texans money for their land, but takings are the next logical step toward those who refuse to sell, as officials hint on the film. On a more positive note, Waller County, Texas went on record against the TTC, not wanting to be in the path of this monster tollway that would gobble up huge tracts of prime ranch land that has been in the same families for generations.

Perhaps most damning of all, though, is the Texas Ethics Commission’s listing of Gary Bushell as a registered lobbyist. It turns out TxDOT hired him in an advisory/consultative function, although the Texas Government Code (556.005) fordids state agencies from hiring registered lobbyists regardless of the reason or function. Texas highway commissioner Jim Houghton, a master of doublespeak, did admit to the hiring of Bushell but, strangely, answered “no” when asked if he was concerned when he found out Bushell was a registered lobbyist.

Notably, state legislative committees have investigated TxDOT’s conduct. The legislature reconvenes early next year. AFP plans to attend key hearings whenever possible.

So much more could be said of the film’s latest edition, which gets into more TxDOT details than the previous edition which covered the “big picture” of the TTC. Check it out at the website www.truthbetolled.com. Other sites include www.Texasturf.org

craig-oxley - December 3, 2008 02:16 AM (GMT)

Gov't Tells Youtube to shut me off over AMERO

I found out this morning that my account at YouTube has been permanently shut off at the request of the United States government!

According to Keith in YouTube/Google client services, officials from the United States Treasury Department visited YouTube/Google yesterday evening and allegedly told YouTube/Google that my video exposing plans to exhaust the U.S. Dollar and replace it with the AMERO (seen by over 600,000 people) "was destabilizing the U.S. Dollar."

They asked YouTube/Google to pull the video and permanently prevent me from uploading other videos to their system because "my material is subverting the federal government and is thus a threat to national security."

YouTube/Google pulled the video and shut off my account.

Even though the video did not violate YouTube/Google terms of service, did not violate their acceptable use policy and did not break any law, my account is shut off.

I just thought all of you should know because if they can do this with my YouTube account, they may try to do it with this free blogspot account.

If this blog suddenly disappears, I will resurrect my old web site domain www.HalTurnerShow.com and be back within a few days.
Posted by HalTurnerShow.com at 12/02/2008 03:28:00 PM 8

craig-oxley - December 3, 2008 06:20 AM (GMT)

Amero to become USA's new currency when dollar collapses

Published on 02-12-2008 Email To Friend Print Version
http://english.pravda.ru/world/americas/02.../106779-amero-0

Pictures of the new currency that will supposedly replace the US dollar have appeared on the Russian Internet. The United States is reportedly working on the new currency, the amero, which will be common for the USA, Mexico and Canada. The unstable financial situation in the world, the collapsing oil prices and the growing foreign debt of the United States may eventually crush the US dollar as the world's major currency. Needless to say that the US authorities reject the rumors and promise to keep the dollar afloat.

Amero notes have no portraits of US presidents on them and resemble the Belarussian rubles. For example, there is an image of a deer depicted on a 50-amero note, whereas a picture of a pyramid of Mexican Indians can be seen on a 100-amero note.

The amero follows the model of the European Union and its euro. It brings up the idea that the new currency can be adopted by the USA, Canada and Mexico within the scope of the North American Union, which the Bush administration established in 2005 under the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America (SPP).

On April 6, 2005, the US Treasury announced the formation of the Financial Services Working Group to assist in the SPP's 'prosperity' plans. According to its own press release, the US Treasury's Financial Services Working Group said it "will play a critical role in the SPP."

Conspiracy theorists contend that the governments of the United States, Canada, and Mexico are already taking steps to implement such a currency, as part of a "North American Union (NAU)" No current members of any country's government have officially stated a desire to create such a body, nor introduce a common currency.

The idea for a North American currency union was first proposed in 1999 by Canadian economist Herbert G. Grubel. A senior fellow of the conservative Fraser Institute think-tank, he published a book titled The Case for the Amero in September 1999, the year that the euro became a virtual currency. Another Canadian think-tank, the C.D. Howe Institute, advocates the creation of a shared currency between Canada and the United States .

After the report came out, center-left nationalist groups in Canada expressed their opposition to any currency union because they view it as an attempt by American businesses to gain access to Canada 's extensive natural resources while dismantling the nation's social services. The 100,000 member strong Council of Canadians, a progressive advocacy group, has declared one of its central issues to be the threat of "deep integration".

Dr. Robert Pastor, in a 2001 book, suggested a common currency should be a foundation of "macro economic cooperation" among the three NAFTA countries. However, the 2005 Independent Task Force on North America, which he chaired, did not recommend a common currency, nor does Pastor in the section for additional and dissenting views suggest a common currency should be a goal.

craig-oxley - December 4, 2008 04:00 AM (GMT)

 URGENT ***
NEW "AMERO" PAPER CURRENCY EXPOSED!

December 3, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

North Bergen, NJ -- To the chagrin of the government, I have now new "AMERO" paper currency notes! Here's what a 50 Amero note looks like:

In September, 2007 - over a full year ago - I first broke the story about AMERO coins being minted secretly at the Denver Mint. After that story ran, the Denver Mint announced on its web site that they were closing public tours of the Mint for 10 - 14 days in order to make renovations to the tourist area of the mint.

My sources inside the Mint, however, reported Treasury officials were outraged that someone had leaked info about the AMERO to me and they closed the Denver Mint to the public so as to secretly move the AMEROS out of the Mint to prevent further leaks.

In October, 2008, I received word that the U.S. government shipped 800 Billion AMEROS to the China development bank. I did a story on that (here) and obtained an actual AMERO coin from that shipment!

I placed a video of the coin on YouTube, showing the coin and explaining that there is a deliberate effort underway at the highest levels of our government to intentionally exhaust the dollar as a currency. Over 600,000 people worldwide watched that video.

Two days ago, YouTube/Google notified me that my video had been deleted and my account permanently closed at the request of the United States Treasury Department. The Treasury department told YouTube/Google that my video was "destabilizing the U.S. Dollar and was thus a threat to national security."

Here we are, just two days later and my sources have once again come through; this time with proof the government is secretly printing new AMERO paper currency.

Not only do I have the 50 AMERO note, give look at the 20 and 100 AMERO notes below!

Not a single American citizen has been officially asked if they want a new currency. Not a single member of Congress has voted on authorizing a new currency. Yet a new currency is already being printed and quietly distributed around the world. This is being done without the consent of the American people, without a vote by Congress and has been intentionally covered up by every official who has been questioned about it.

I believe the people perpetrating this secret currency change are in for personal visits of a violent nature. I think there are folks out here in real America who will not take kindly to having been deliberately lied-to.

I believe my fellow Americans might -- just might -- decide it is time to . . . . . "discipline". . . . . the public officials who have undertaken this outrage without our consent.

It's a tough thing to have to physically discipline a mis-behaving adult, but I say now, I'm up for doing just that.

There are officials in this country who deserve to get the shit kicked out of them and I really look forward to having the chance to do it. If they think their puny little Federal Reserve Police force can do anything about it, they're sadly mistaken.

PLEASE SPREAD THE WORD ABOUT THIS IMMEDIATELY. If they are already printing paper currency, the destruction of the US dollar cannot be far away. We are ALL in grave danger of losing our life savings to this currency scam.

More details as they become available.

craig-oxley - January 2, 2009 06:16 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

[dohtml] [/dohtml]

Are You Prepared For This?

You'd Better Be!

[dohtml] [/dohtml]

This map you are viewing was prepared by the Wall Street Journal based upon the dire predictions of what is going to happen to the United States this coming year of Russian academic and former KGB analyst, and present dean of the Russian Foreign Ministry's academy for future diplomats, Professor Igor Panarin.

Professor Panarin predicted the collapse of the Soviet Union 13 years ahead of time and is now warning any American citizen who will listen:

"Based upon forecasts on classified data supplied to him by FAPSI analysts, he predicts that economic, financial and demographic trends will provoke a political and social crisis in the U.S*. When the going gets tough, he says, wealthier states will withhold funds from the federal government and effectively secede from the union.* Social unrest up to and including a civil war will follow*. The U.S. will then split along ethnic lines, and* foreign powers will move in*."*

After reading these predictions of Professor Panarin of what is soon to occur in the United States don't be deluded into thinking that he is the only expert warning the American people of what is to come, read now the words of one of America's top experts on gold, Bob Moriarty:

"We are to the point where we are about 14 feet from going over the edge of Niagara Falls. We haven't gone over the edge yet*; we haven't gone to a total collapse.* We don't have riots in the streets; we don't have a revolution. That's coming; that's about two to three months off*.*

Here's what we've got: the Fed has committed to $8.5 trillion of taxpayers' money to bail out the worst run companies and banks. It hasn't worked. Now, they're at a 0% to .25% on the Fed Funds rate for funds for banks, which means if you go down and you pay $100,000 for a T-bill for 90 days, your return is zero, which is to imply that there is zero risk to investing with the government. Anybody who actually believes that is going to be in for a real shock in the first quarter of next year.

What we have done is guaranteed hyperinflation in the United States. We have guaranteed the destruction of the United States. We will have riots starting in the first quarter of next year*; we will* default by the summer of 2009*."*
[dohtml]
[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - January 8, 2009 03:14 AM (GMT)

Trans Texas Corridor Not Dead - Just Renamed

TURF Supporters Demand ACTION, Not Rhetoric

From Terry Hall
1-7-9

TURF reaction to TxDOT announcement:

The announcement by TxDOT Executive Director Amadeo Saenz at the Texas Transportation Forum that the "Trans Texas Corridor, as it was originally envisioned, is no more," is just another in a series of comments to lead opponents into believing the Trans Texas Corridor is indeed dead. TURF believes this is a deliberate move to dupe opponents into complacency, and we expect iron-clad action before we begin celebrating victory.

It's clear from the TxDOT Director's speech, that it's only a name change and the Trans Texas Corridor is, in reality, going underground.

This fact is evident in just about every news source across the state:

"'Amadeo told folks at the forum that the Trans-Texas Corridor, as it was originally envisioned, is no more,' Amacker said. 'Instead, what we've got is a series of smaller projects.'

Those 'smaller projects' will apparently include the 300-plus miles of what has been called TTC-35 from San Antonio to the Oklahoma border and the I-69 project from the Rio Grande Valley to Texarkana. But they will not be called the Trans-Texas Corridor." -- Austin American Statesman

_____

"Other than backpedaling from the Trans-Texas Corridor brand, and the goals and priorities set over the years, the Trans-Texas Corridor remains intact.

TxDOT still plans to partner with private corporations to build and lease projects. Toll roads, truck-only lanes and rail lanes are also still on the table.

Environmental studies for the I-35 and East Texas corridor segments still chug through the pipeline. And a development contract with Cintra of Spain and Zachry Construction Co. of San Antonio, for projects paralleling I-35, is still valid". -- San Antonio Express-News

_____

"The renewed effort now will operate under the name 'Innovative Connectivity Plan.'" -- Houston Chronicle
_____

No law has been changed, no minute order rescinded, no environmental document re-done (as is required by federal law), and there are still two contracts signed giving two Spanish companies the right of first refusal on segments of the corridor previously known as TTC-35 & TTC-69. So by every real measure, the Trans Texas Corridor goes on full steam ahead. What today's hype was about is a political ploy to make the public go back to sleep while it gets built under a different name. While we welcome genuine responsiveness from TxDOT and a true repeal of the Trans Texas Corridor, this hardly qualifies.

Lets just say, we agree with Senator Robert Nichols' statement in the Dallas Morning News:

"If it is just a name change, and nothing more, I don't think that is going to do much to appease lawmakers," said Nichols, R-Jacksonville.

Contact: Terri Hall, Founder / Director,
Texans Uniting for Reform & Freedom (TURF)
(210) 275-0640
terri@texasturf.org
www.TexasTURF.org

craig-oxley - February 2, 2009 10:15 AM (GMT)

Amero Could Result from Crisis:
'The New World Order Is Upon Us'

http://cryptogon.com/?p=6518

I don't know about you, but when I see the phrase, "New World Order" bandied about on the mainstream sites like it's a new flavor of TicTac, I have to wonder if people know what this actually means.

The New World Order used to be something that people like me would read about in books that were never in stock in the local book store. We had to special order them. (Unless you happened to live near a book store that focused on unusual stuff.) The New World Order was talked about on radio shows that broadcast in the dead of night, after the alien guy went off the air. The New World Order was the butt of jokes: "Are you a conspiracy theorist who believes in the New World Order? HAHAHA. And Black helicopters? HAHAHA." etc.

When I went to college, and majored in International Relations, I wasn't expecting to hear much about this stuff. On the contrary, I encountered heaps of what ignorant people refer to as conspiracy theory as part of my coursework. Is it conspiracy theory if you have to write papers and take exams on things like the World Order Models Project, the Club of Rome, global federalism, multilateralism, economic interdependence, system transformation, the United Nations and its failed predecessor, the League of Nations? Many of the professors were members of the Council on Foreign Relations. Go to see a guest speaker and it was Such-and-Another from the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The next week's speaker, General Bob, was Assistant Deputy Director of Death and Mayhem at the Legion of Doom before becoming an adviser to the Trilateral Commission. Oh, and Kevin, by the way, can you help out at the World Economic Forum next month? The elite don't hire people to do work there, they just ask students to do it for free. There might be some free food in it for ya', so what do you think? It'll look great on your CV.

Sorry, I have to joke about it now because the whole thing was incalculably dumb and such an incredible waste of time and money… Near The End (graduation), I thought, "Maybe I'll try to get a job stamping shit in passports." (That means working for the U.S. Foreign Service.) I went to register for the exam and the only thought in my head was, “Oh eff this.” How was I going to be able to bend my conscience enough to maintain appearances in that show if I damn near broke my liver getting the degree???

So, I saw both sides of it. I was one of the greasy “conspiracy theorist” slobs who read comic books and William Cooper. Then, I took a couple of steps down the path to a career in Elite Enabling by getting that silly degree. But looking back on my brush with the New World Order, the thing that sticks out is just how blah and bland it was at that level.

Indeed, you can be looking right at a factory for globalist zombies and not even know it. Look no further than your closest large university with an International Relations program. What you’ll see there are a bunch of people wearing sensible shoes and reading the New York Times and Foreign Affairs. Many of them will drive Volvos and have subscriptions to National Public Radio. There will be an occasional person in a military uniform. The scene will not look too weird at all. But spend a few years in that environment and then tell me that there’s no such thing as a New World Order.

Actually, never mind, tell it to MarketWatch (Part of the Wall Street Journal Digital Network).

Via: MarketWatch:

Thomas Jefferson once said: “When you reach the end of your rope, tie a knot in it and hang on.” As the global financial system pushes on a string, investors are desperately trying to hold tight.

The New World Order is upon us, full of hope, promise and a fair amount of fear. In our recent discussion regarding the direction of our country, we noted the risks of catering to conventional wisdom and the implications for the U.S. dollar.

The Minyanville mantra is to provide financial news you need to know before you know you need it. That’s a fine line to walk, as foresight often flies in the face of mainstream acceptance.

In 2006, it seemed counterintuitive to forecast a “prolonged socioeconomic malaise entirely more depressing than a recession.”

For years, the notion of an “invisible hand” was conspiracy theory until we learned that the Working Group on Financial Markets was a central policy tool. And now, as we gaze across our historically significant horizon, we must open our minds to thoughts and ideas that may seem foreign to folks conditioned by the past and stunned by the present.

Currency crossroads

As governments take on more risk — as they price assets on behalf of the market and transfer debt from private to public — the common denominator, or release valve, becomes the currency.

If our economic condition is allowed to take medicine in the form of debt destruction, the greenback will appreciate, and asset classes as a whole will deflate. If we continue to inject drugs that mask symptoms rather than address the disease, the likelihood of a seismic readjustment increases in kind.

The deflationary forces in the marketplace are pervasive, and the “other side” of our current equation, hyperinflation, may be years away. Given the magnitude, breadth and pace of the global financial epidemic, however, we must explore each side of the twisted ride.

Years ago, the Federal Reserve wrote a “solution paper” regarding the need to combat zero-bound interest rates. The concern was the flight of capital from the U.S. and an option discussed was a two-tiered currency, one for U.S citizens and one for foreigners.

Canadian economist Herbert Grubel first introduced a potential manifestation of this concept in 1999. The North American Currency — called the “Amero” in select circles — would effectively comingle the Canadian dollar, U.S. dollar and Mexican peso.

Cold - February 18, 2009 03:35 PM (GMT)

Obama tells Calderón he wants to 'upgrade' NAFTA

http://www.dallasnews.com/sharedcontent/dw...ico.72a6be.html

10:47 PM CST on Monday, January 12, 2009

By TODD J. GILLMAN / The Dallas Morning News
tgillman@dallasnews.com

WASHINGTON – Barack Obama told Mexican President Felipe Calderón on Monday that he wants to "upgrade" NAFTA, serving notice that he hasn't abandoned a campaign pledge that irritated Mexico while appeasing union voters.

It was Obama's first meeting with a foreign leader since his election, and he used it to pledge more help in Mexico's violent drug war, and to keep pushing for an overhaul in U.S. immigration policy that would both secure the border and make it easier for workers to come north for jobs.

"We have such an extraordinary relationship between our two countries, one that my intention is to make stronger," Obama said after the lunch meeting at the Mexican Cultural Institute in Washington.

"The more secure Mexico is, the more secure the U.S. will be," said Calderón, who met later with congressional leaders and meets today for a final session with President George W. Bush.

Obama aides and Mexican officials described the 90-minute meeting as friendly and productive, with security, immigration, the drug war and trade topping the agenda.

Obama himself made no public mention of a push to renegotiate NAFTA. But spokesman Robert Gibbs said later that the president-elect "expressed his continued commitment to upgrading NAFTA to strengthen labor and environmental provisions to reflect the values that are widely shared in both of our countries."

The stance made Mexican officials wary.

Calderón has strongly urged against any effort to renegotiate the deal, warning that anything that curtails trade would hurt his economy and push even more workers to cross the border illegally in search of jobs.

"We don't know what the upgrade means. ... We want to listen and set the tone for a great relationship," said a Mexican official familiar with Monday's talks who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Obama and Calderón shared a lunch of tortilla soup, fish and steak with cilantro, and coconut cream custard.

Although his trade stance might have rankled his host, Obama offered other pledges sure to please: heightened efforts to stem the southbound flow of weapons and cash that drug traffickers depend on to ply their trade.

He also vowed to find new ways to jointly crack down on drug violence and "expressed his ongoing support for the valuable work being done under the Mérida Initiative," Gibbs said.

Mexican officials called that encouraging, noting that it was by far the most explicit public commitment Obama has made to the 2007 initiative hammered out by Bush and Calderón to help Mexico fight drug trafficking and the corruption it has wrought.

Only a quarter of the funds have been committed, and analysts expect that Congress will be reluctant to fully fund it this year.

Both U.S. and Mexican officials consider the fight against cartels critical. More than 5,700 deaths last year were blamed on drug violence in Mexico.

With violence at epidemic levels in Mexico and spilling north, Calderón emphasized the need for a cooperative fight. Obama expressed admiration for Calderón's "extraordinary courage and leadership" in dealing with the cartels.

They also discussed immigration, "and how we can have a comprehensive and thoughtful strategy that ultimately strengthens both countries."

Bush and others spent years in an unsuccessful effort to enact "comprehensive" reform, combining tighter border security and workplace enforcement with a guest-worker program. Obama told Calderón he wants to "fix the broken U.S. immigration system" and end the "flow of illegal immigration," Gibbs said.

Alluding to tensions with Latin American nations such as Venezuela, Obama referred to Mexico as "a very important ally" in efforts to expand democracy and human rights in the hemisphere.

"The friendship between the United States and Mexico has been strong; I believe it can be even stronger," Obama said.

Gibbs said that in the meeting with Calderón, Obama proposed creation of a "consultative group" to work on NAFTA, energy, infrastructure and other issues of mutual importance. He noted that Obama's plan to stimulate the economy by investing billions in roads, bridges and other projects includes "substantial investments" to modernize ports of entry and improve border crossings. That would ease congestion along the border and facilitate trade.

Obama has little experience with Mexico and – with the economic crisis commanding his attention – isn't expected to make it a top priority.

But, said Andrew Selee, director of the Mexico Institute at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, "he's a pragmatist. My sense is he cares."

craig-oxley - February 21, 2009 04:16 AM (GMT)

Amero Could Result from Crisis

‘The New World Order Is Upon Us’

By BR on February 14, 2009

I don’t know about you, but when I see the phrase, “New World Order” bandied about on the mainstream sites like it’s a new flavor of TicTac, I have to wonder if people know what this actually means.

The New World Order used to be something that people like me would read about in books that were never in stock in the local book store. We had to special order them. (Unless you happened to live near a book store that focused on unusual stuff.) The New World Order was talked about on radio shows that broadcast in the dead of night, after the alien guy went off the air. The New World Order was the butt of jokes: “Are you a conspiracy theorist who believes in the New World Order? HAHAHA. And Black helicopters? HAHAHA.” etc.

When I went to college, and majored in International Relations, I wasn’t expecting to hear much about this stuff. On the contrary, I encountered heaps of what ignorant people refer to as conspiracy theory as part of my coursework. Is it conspiracy theory if you have to write papers and take exams on things like the World Order Models Project, the Club of Rome, global federalism, multilateralism, economic interdependence, system transformation, the United Nations and its failed predecessor, the League of Nations? Many of the professors were members of the Council on Foreign Relations. Go to see a guest speaker and it was Such-and-Another from the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The next week’s speaker, General Bob, was Assistant Deputy Director of Death and Mayhem at the Legion of Doom before becoming an adviser to the Trilateral Commission. Oh, and Kevin, by the way, can you help out at the World Economic Forum next month? The elite don’t hire people to do work there, they just ask students to do it for free. There might be some free food in it for ya’, so what do you think? It’ll look great on your CV.

Sorry, I have to joke about it now because the whole thing was incalculably dumb and such an incredible waste of time and money… Near The End (graduation), I thought, “Maybe I’ll try to get a job stamping shit in passports.” (That means working for the U.S. Foreign Service.) I went to register for the exam and the only thought in my head was, “Oh eff this.” How was I going to be able to bend my conscience enough to maintain appearances in that show if I damn near broke my liver getting the degree???

So, I saw both sides of it. I was one of the greasy “conspiracy theorist” slobs who read comic books and William Cooper. Then, I took a couple of steps down the path to a career in Elite Enabling by getting that silly degree. But looking back on my brush with the New World Order, the thing that sticks out is just how blah and bland it was at that level.

Indeed, you can be looking right at a factory for globalist zombies and not even know it. Look no further than your closest large university with an International Relations program. What you’ll see there are a bunch of people wearing sensible shoes and reading the New York Times and Foreign Affairs. Many of them will drive Volvos and have subscriptions to National Public Radio. There will be an occasional person in a military uniform. The scene will not look too weird at all. But spend a few years in that environment and then tell me that there’s no such thing as a New World Order.

Actually, never mind, tell it to MarketWatch (Part of the Wall Street Journal Digital Network).

Via: MarketWatch:

Thomas Jefferson once said: “When you reach the end of your rope, tie a knot in it and hang on.” As the global financial system pushes on a string, investors are desperately trying to hold tight.

The New World Order is upon us, full of hope, promise and a fair amount of fear. In our recent discussion regarding the direction of our country, we noted the risks of catering to conventional wisdom and the implications for the U.S. dollar.

The Minyanville mantra is to provide financial news you need to know before you know you need it. That’s a fine line to walk, as foresight often flies in the face of mainstream acceptance.

In 2006, it seemed counterintuitive to forecast a “prolonged socioeconomic malaise entirely more depressing than a recession.”

For years, the notion of an “invisible hand” was conspiracy theory until we learned that the Working Group on Financial Markets was a central policy tool. And now, as we gaze across our historically significant horizon, we must open our minds to thoughts and ideas that may seem foreign to folks conditioned by the past and stunned by the present.

Currency crossroads

As governments take on more risk — as they price assets on behalf of the market and transfer debt from private to public — the common denominator, or release valve, becomes the currency.

If our economic condition is allowed to take medicine in the form of debt destruction, the greenback will appreciate, and asset classes as a whole will deflate. If we continue to inject drugs that mask symptoms rather than address the disease, the likelihood of a seismic readjustment increases in kind.

The deflationary forces in the marketplace are pervasive, and the “other side” of our current equation, hyperinflation, may be years away. Given the magnitude, breadth and pace of the global financial epidemic, however, we must explore each side of the twisted ride.

Years ago, the Federal Reserve wrote a “solution paper” regarding the need to combat zero-bound interest rates. The concern was the flight of capital from the U.S. and an option discussed was a two-tiered currency, one for U.S citizens and one for foreigners.

Canadian economist Herbert Grubel first introduced a potential manifestation of this concept in 1999. The North American Currency — called the “Amero” in select circles — would effectively comingle the Canadian dollar, U.S. dollar and Mexican peso.

Source: http://cryptogon.com/?p=6518

craig-oxley - February 23, 2009 02:06 AM (GMT)

Deeper North American Integration Still in the Cards

Published on 02-20-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel

Many Canadians view a Barack Obama presidency as an opportunity to further renew Canada-U.S. relations. This includes a more North American approach in dealing with challenges that face not only the continent, but the world as well. The Security and Prosperity and Partnership (SPP), a trilateral initiative between Canada, the U.S. and Mexico, has stalled and in some cases, Canada-U.S. bilateralism has also been hampered. Many policy papers and reports are still calling for deeper North American integration.

The policy paper entitled “From Correct to Inspired: A Blueprint for Canada-U.S. Engagement” was released to the public in January of this year. It was prepared by Carleton University’s Centre for Trade Policy and Law and outlines how the Canada-U.S. partnership can be rejuvenated. It details how Canada can help Obama further reshape America’s role in the world. At almost every turn, the report promotes stronger U.S. relations and emphasizes how Canada must present itself as a valued partner on broader global issues. The report recommends more Canada-U.S. bilateralism in areas of security, trade, energy, and the environment. It also proposes an annual bilateral summit between the two countries to foster more cooperation. It suggests that Canada’s influence and visibility with the new administration might be reduced, if its mission in Afghanistan is not extended beyond 2011.

In addition, the Carleton University Canada-U.S. Project calls for deeper integration and recommends moving beyond NAFTA through separate North American bilateral initiatives. This would still be within the trade agreements framework. On Obama’s pledge to fix NAFTA’s labour and environmental provisions, the report notes that Canada should not worry, as any such move is directed more towards Mexico. It does caution against Canada using its energy resources as a weapon and bargaining tool. The report acknowledges the failures of the SPP and calls for wholesale changes. It blames the sometimes unnecessary inclusion of Mexico from preventing more meaningful Canada-U.S. bilateralism. According to the report, Canada should pursue a NAFTA policy of trilateralism when necessary, but on certain matters, Canada-U.S. bilateralism should be a priority.

A recent trilateral effort put forward by the Arizona State University's North American Center for Transborder Studies, also calls for deeper integration. In the policy paper entitled "North America Next: A Report to President Obama on Building Sustainable Security and Competitiveness," it urges the new administration to further improve relations with its NAFTA partners. The goal is to build a more North American strategy and it suggests that this could be achieved through further energizing and expanding the current Trilateral Leaders Summit. The report calls for developing an effective North American trade and transportation plan, which would include an integrated multimodal transportation system. This sure sounds like the NAFTA Superhighway! According to the report, this could be partly paid for by a joint, revolving fund for infrastructure investment. The report also calls for harmonizing freight transportation standards, a special trucker visa, along with complete NAFTA truck access inside all three countries. There has been an ongoing battle to prevent Mexican long-haul trucks access to U.S. roadways beyond the current 25 mile commercial zone restriction.

In advance of Obama's visit to Canada, a coalition of organizations was stressing the importance of Prime Minister Stephen Harper to commit to a transparent and thorough renegotiation of NAFTA. The Canadian coalition included the Council of Canadians, the Sierra Club of Canada, the Canadian Auto Workers and the Canadian Federation of Students, as well as other organizations. In the letter addressed to Harper, they call for the elimination of the energy clause in NAFTA, which requires Canada to export oil and gas to the U.S., even in time of shortages. They also recommend that the prime minister place a moratorium on the negotiation and ratification of all Canadian bilateral free trade agreements, as well as an end to the SPP. There are other concerns in regards to NAFTA as many Canadians would like to see water excluded from the agreement. This includes a ban on bulk water transfers, along with safeguards against NAFTA Chapter 11 challenges.

There are fears that under an Obama presidency that many on the left will go to sleep, now that Bush is out of office. This includes in Canada, where the left have been instrumental in exposing the SPP and fighting deeper integration into a North American Union. In most instances, North American integration is still very unpopular, but this is a very deep-rooted agenda. Even with a new president, it will likely carry on in some form or another. It is imperative that concerned citizens in Canada, the U.S. and Mexico continue to resist any move towards a North American Union.

Dana Gabriel writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, and other issues.
Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com

craig-oxley - February 23, 2009 03:08 AM (GMT)

Obama wants to reopen NAFTA but keep trade flowing

Wed Feb 18, 2009
By Randall Palmer
http://uk.reuters.com/article/oilRpt/idUKN...0090218?sp=true

OTTAWA, Feb 17 (Reuters) - U.S. President Barack Obama said on Tuesday he still wants to reopen the North American Free Trade Agreement, despite a warning from Canada that this would be a mistake, but he said he did not want to end up curbing trade.

In an interview with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp, shortly before his visit to Ottawa on Thursday, Obama also declined to characterize oil from Canada's vast oil sands region as "dirty oil" which should somehow be curtailed.

Obama had alarmed Canada during the Democratic primaries last year when he advocated renegotiating NAFTA, and he reiterated this goal on Tuesday while recognizing these were sensitive economic times.

"As I've said before, NAFTA, the basic framework of the agreement, has environmental and labor protections as side agreements. My argument has always been that we might as well incorporate them into the full agreement so that they're fully enforceable," he said in the interview with CBC television.

However, he also said: "I think there are a lot of sensitivities right now because of the huge decline in world trade."

Obama noted there was $1.5 billion in trade between Canada and the United States every day, adding: "It is not in anybody's interest to see that trade diminish."

When Obama raised the issue of toughening up NAFTA on the campaign trail a year ago, Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper said if Washington "made the mistake" of opening the agreement, Ottawa would bring other issues to the table for renegotiation.

Later in the year Harper said Canada's energy exports to the United States would enable it to negotiate from a position of strength.

The energy industry and environmentalists are watching Obama carefully for any moves that might damage Canada's oil sands sector, which offers huge reserves of secure crude but produces high emissions of greenhouse gases.

Obama acknowledged that oil sands create "a big carbon footprint" but he said the United States and Canada should collaborate on ways to sequester carbon, preventing it from being emitted into the atmosphere.

"Ultimately, I think this can be solved by technology. I think that it is possible for us to create a set of clean energy mechanisms that allow us to use things not just like oil sands, but also coal," he said.

"The United States is the Saudi Arabia of coal, but we have our own home-grown problems in terms of dealing with a cheap energy source that creates a big carbon footprint."

A Canadian official indicated to Reuters that it was possible that an agreement between Harper and Obama to present a common front on pursuing clean energy could emerge from Thursday's meeting.

A U.S. environmentalist, reacting on Tuesday to Obama's comparison of coal and the oil sands, said a key difference was that development of the oil sands was growing.

"It's really that expansion that's of great concern," said Susan Casey-Lefkowitz of Natural Resources Defense Council.

"Any kind of special exemption or protection that would be given under greenhouse gas regulations for especially the expanding tar sands industry just seems to be totally at odds with the commitment that both of our countries have made to fight global warming."

In his interview, Obama also praised Canada's management of its financial system in contrast to the United States.

"I think that's important for us to take note of, that it's possible for us to have a vibrant banking sector, for example, without taking some of the wild risks that have resulted in so much trouble on Wall Street," he said.

And he said Canadians should not be too concerned by the "buy American" clause in the stimulus bill he just signed. (Additional reporting by Jeffrey Jones in Calgary; editing by Rob Wilson)

craig-oxley - March 15, 2009 06:24 PM (GMT)

Ending NAFTA Inspired Trucking Program Could Spark Retaliation

Published on 03-12-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel
http://www.borderfirereport.net/dana-gabri...retaliation.php

Allowing Mexican long-haul trucks full access inside the U.S. is a component of NAFTA. Safety and security issues have proven to be a huge stumbling block in achieving this objective of the agreement. Under the Bush administration, a cross-border trucking program was established, giving a limited number of Mexican trucks full access beyond the commercial zone restrictions. Several past attempts to shut down the program have failed, but it appears as if the House Democrat fiscal 2009 spending bill, could finally put a stop to it. Ending the program could strain relations with Mexico and spark some sort of trade retaliation. There are reports that the Obama administration may try to implement their own program in order to better respect NAFTA obligations.

The pilot trucking program began in September 2007, as a result of a successful challenge which found the U.S. in violation of NAFTA. Under the program, a limited number of Mexican carriers are permitted full access to U.S roads. It also allows for an equal number of U.S. trucks to operate in the same capacity in Mexico. Despite previous efforts to cut funding, the Bush administration was able to continue the program by using funds from other parts of the transportation budget. As part of the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Bill, all funding would be terminated, using very clear and strong language which could not be misinterpreted. The U.S. Department of Transportation has stated that they would not make any attempts to save the program.

There is speculation that canceling the cross-border trucking program could set the tables for a showdown between the Obama administration and the Mexican government. Allowing Mexican long-haul trucks full access inside the U.S. is a NAFTA commitment and the pilot program is seen as a step in fulfilling this provision of the agreement. If the U.S. fails to comply, it is possible that Mexico could retaliate by placing or raising tariffs on some U.S. goods. Mexico’s ambassador to the U.S., Arturo Sarukhan, has stated that if the program is defeated by congress, that all options would be open, including possible retaliation. He stressed that ending the program has nothing to do with safety and security, but is rather a protectionist move. He also warned that keeping Mexican trucks off U.S. roads would raise the cost of goods for consumers and producers. Ending the pilot trucking program could hurt U.S.-Mexico relations and affect NAFTA.

Since its inception, there have been concerns whether the pilot trucking program would meet all U.S. safety regulations and just how they would be enforced. Mexico lacks any effective safety standards for its drivers or trucks. There is also no accurate drug or alcohol policy in place and it is without a reliable national criminal or driving database. Unions, as well as some safety and consumer groups, oppose the cross-border trucking program, citing safety, security and environmental concerns. The Teamsters Union, along with Public Citizen and the Sierra Club, have filed a suit to stop the program, in an attempt to close the border to Mexican trucks.

Some are calling on the Obama administration to block any move to end the cross-border trucking program and instead take action to make it permanent. Proponents argue that Mexican long-haul trucks have been unfairly denied full access inside the U.S., not because of safety and security concerns, but as a result of union pressures to prevent competition. They contend that protectionist measures have hindered American trucking companies from reaping the benefits of gaining full access into Mexico. They are also warning that ending the pilot program would raise the price of consumer goods. There are accusations that the Democrat-controlled congress is further shilling to unions and that the move to end the trucking program is a means of rewarding them.

The cross-border trucking program is part of NAFTA and the corporate North American Union agenda of further erasing continental borders. If it becomes permanent and is expanded, it could lower wages and lead to more American job losses. There is also the potential that it could destroy small and medium sized independent trucking companies. Allowing Mexican trucks full access inside the U.S. is a safety issue, as well as a security threat which could increase drug and human smuggling. Republican Congressman, Ron Paul, had this to say about the pilot trucking program when it was first announced. “Rather than securing our borders, we seem to be providing more pores for illegal aliens, drug dealers, and terrorists to permeate.” In light of the growing drug cartel violence in Mexico, further securing the border should be a national security priority.

craig-oxley - May 17, 2009 12:39 AM (GMT)

The SPP: Three's Company or Three's a Crowd?

Published on 05-14-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
Dana Gabriel - Black Listed News

In the last year, there has been little mention of the Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP) from the governments of Canada, the U.S., and Mexico. A battle appears to be brewing as to the next course of action to take in regards to North American integration. Some would like to see more focus placed on Canada-U.S. bilateralism while others believe that trilateralism should always be the way to go. This could be a manufactured debate with the goal of trying to resurrect this agenda. You can be sure that the global elite pushing for deeper continental integration, will take a North American Union any which way they can.

It seems to always be the same people championing for further North American integration, but with the decline of the SPP, a rift may be emerging. Recent op-eds that appeared in the Globe and Mail back this up. On one side, you have former deputy foreign minister of Mexico Andrés Rozental and Robert Pastor, who is considered by many to be the architect of a proposed North American Community. They argued in favor of trilateralism. The bilateral side was represented by former Canadian deputy prime minister John Manley and Gordon Giffin, former US ambassador to Canada. They believe that the trilateral framework of NAFTA should not apply to all aspects of North American relations. It’s hard to take this apparent quarrel too seriously as all have participated in past reports and policy paper initiatives pushing for expanded North American integration. It could be a legitimate power struggle and infighting, brought about by a clash of ideas on how to best achieve these objectives. It might also be nothing more than staged theatrics designed to try and jumpstart continental integration, in an effort to fill the void left by the SPP.

In an article from February of 2009, former international trade and foreign affairs minister David Emerson, appears to be talking out of both sides of his mouth. He feels that NAFTA has made Canada “U.S.-centric” and as a result, it is losing ground in the rest of the world. At the same time, the article also reports that Emerson has, “called on the government to aggressively seek stronger Canada-U.S. ties, up to and including a customs union. He said at minimum, Canada should advocate a North American security perimeter arrangement, a labour mobility agreement that modernizes NAFTA provisions, and greater integration on regulatory matters.” Emerson is now calling on Canada to lead a new charge towards greater continental integration. He believes that the North American partnership is in need of repair and has proposed Project North America. The former senior cabinet minister insists that Canada needs to work more closely with the U.S. in areas of trade, energy, the environment, and continental security. Emerson said, "I think the process of integration has to begin with the two leaders, perhaps three." He is also against revitalizing SPP working groups which have been for the most part, inactive since Obama became president.

Before the SPP Leader Summit in New Orleans in April of 2008, it was reported that there may be a move to try and shove Mexico out of the SPP. Former Canadian ambassador to the U.S., Derek Burney stated, “Attempts to ‘triangulate’ in recent years, by bringing in Mexico, have produced little of substance and allowed attention to be diverted from more pressing bilateral concerns.” In an article from October 2008, John Ibbitson proposed that Prime Minister Stephen Harper pursue a new Canada-U.S. environmental, security and economic accord with the incoming administration. He said, “Mexico, unfortunately, should not be part of this conversation-it’s not far enough along.” In January of this year, the Carleton University Canada-U.S. Project was released to the public. It acknowledged the failures of the SPP and called for wholesale changes. It also blamed the sometimes unnecessary inclusion of Mexico from preventing more meaningful Canada-U.S. bilateralism. The report called for Canada to pursue a NAFTA policy of trilateralism when necessary, but on certain matters, Canada-U.S. bilateralism should be the priority.

In February of this year, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs, was told that the controversial SPP was likely dead. CEO and president of the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, Thomas d’Aquino, testified and answered questions before the committee. He admitted that it was probably only a matter of time before the SPP was replaced. He emphasized the importance of Canada-U. S. bilateralism, but cautioned against cutting Mexico out of the equation. In an article from several months back, Jerome Corsi writes that, “while North American integration advocates may have backed off promoting the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America as their vehicle to create a North American Union, the globalist effort to integrate North America economically and politically continues under different names.”

The SPP has been a huge public relations nightmare, thanks in part to many who have exposed its agenda. The lack of transparency, coupled with the fact that there was never a mandate from the people of Canada, the U.S. and Mexico, can also be blamed for its undoing. The vision of a North American Union has not been abandoned and plans for deeper integration continue on many different fronts. The global elite can never be accused of letting a crisis go to waste. Some are using the swine flu pandemic scare as a means to push for further continental integration. We might only be a crisis or two away from a North American Union.

craig-oxley - May 17, 2009 12:40 AM (GMT)

Former president of Mexico calls for a North American Union at underreported summit

Published on 05-14-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
http://www.mdjonline.com/content/index/sho...tem/133087.html

MARIETTA - Former Mexican President Vicente Fox pushed Tuesday for forming a union between Canada, Mexico and the United States. Fox was the keynote speaker at Kennesaw State University's inaugural summit on the Commission of North American Prosperity, or North America 2050.

"It was this leading nation (the United States) that came up with the idea to convince every other nation to open its market and borders. It was this leading nation that said this was the path to go. We saw the Coca Colas, hamburgers and cars coming into our county and we were frightened because we were concerned about losing jobs. We were afraid of opening our markets because we didn't feel self-sufficient and competitive enough," he said. "It was very difficult in the beginning, but today Mexico is a competitive country with more trade agreements than any other country. We're a very solid and strong contributor to this economy."

Referencing the European Union, Fox said the common market is both powerful and productive.

"The most powerful tool in their market is the cohesive fund. Each country contributes 2 percent of their gross national product, which is invested in underdeveloped areas and poor families. This is the core of their strength," he said. "I want a better future for North America."

Looking down the road, Fox said he believes in 20 years the "dreams of our founding fathers will be fulfilled with freedom and better distribution of wealth."

Fox also addressed drug violence in Mexico on Tuesday, saying that the United States' consumption has encouraged a continual problem. Discussion panelist U.S. Col. Eric Rojo, international consultant on border security, concurred.

"We're very good at blaming Mexico for drugs, but we consume them. As long as there is demand for jobs and drugs, there will be a supply and no army can stop them. All these expenditures on security are a waste of money," Rojo said. "Security is about trust, and today we have a lack of trust. Unfortunately, we go to whipping posts like Lou Dobbs and they fuel the ignorance. The largest bridge we need to cross is the ignorance amongst ourselves."

Dr. Peter Appleton, who represented Canada, said leaders should look for similarities among the countries when trying to solve problems. Appleton is the president of the U.S.-Mexico Chamber of Commerce.

"I think it's important that we talk about common concerns so we can find common solutions. If ever there was a match in theory that was made in heaven, it is North America. Canada and Mexico both have the oil supply and the United States needs resources. Why can't we work together? Ronald Regan took down the Berlin wall and we've spent the last 10 years putting one up. Where's the logic in that? How is that fair?"

Dr. Robert Pastor, professor of international studies at American University, said closing the borders to the U.S. would be self-defeating.

"A country that opens itself to the world will do better. The best way to improve the lives of your people and to protect your sovereignty is to open yourself to the world," he said. "The European Union called on all people to unite. North America didn't do anything like that with NAFTA. We didn't have a spiritual vision past anything other than a business contract."

Economists predict China will have the largest economy in the world by 2040, eclipsing the United States, which will slip into second place. India will move up to third place and Mexico is expected to rank fifth, Fox said.

The United States has the opportunity to remain on top by joining with its northern and southern neighbors to form North America, he said.

"If we're going to have a partnership between the U.S. and Mexico, we need to do it all the way, not just in places," Fox said. "My vision is that if we work together, use our minds and plan for the future, those numbers in 2040 will be different."

Panelists also fielded questions from the audience at yesterday's summit. Audience members asked why Mexican trucks had trouble crossing into the United States, how did Canada benefit from NAFTA and whether it was realistic to push for immigration reform with the current state of the economy, among other questions.

Joan Manning, of Marietta, listened intently at the summit.

"I'm impressed by what considerate minds they are and by their tolerance and desire to improve the relations between nations and living conditions among the poor. They're also looking to the future and not just stopping at today. I came primarily because I wanted to hear Vicente Fox, but I really have enjoyed and learned a lot from these men."

Fox also delivered the keynote address for Emory University's 164th commencement ceremony on Monday.

craig-oxley - July 4, 2009 04:38 PM (GMT)

North American Integration: Deep-Rooted Agenda Continues

Published on 07-03-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel - BLN Contributing Writer

North American integration is a deep-rooted agenda that continues on many different fronts. This has not changed under an Obama administration. Posted on the U.S. Department of State's website calendar of events is the fifth annual North American Leaders Summit, which is set to take place August 8-11 in Mexico. Much of the foundation and framework for a North American superstate has already been achieved through NAFTA and the Security Prosperity Partnership (SPP). The latest leaders summit could be used as an opportunity to revive stalled SPP measures and launch a new strategy that would further build off past continental integration initiatives.

With the decline of the SPP, other groups have picked up the slack in an effort to further advance continental integration and protect any previous accomplishments. One of these such organizations is the Standing Commission on North American Prosperity which is an initiative of the U.S.-Mexico Chamber of Commerce. In May of this year, they held meetings in Atlanta, Georgia where Former Mexican President and staunch globalist, Vicente Fox called for a new era of North American collaboration. He stated, "If we are together, the U.S., Mexico and Canada, no doubt we'll be number one – the number one economy, the number one market, the number one consumer market – in the world." He also said, "My dream is that we will not have a border." Fox has been a strong advocate of deep continental integration using the European Union as the model.

NAFTA and the SPP would not have been possible without the tireless work of the Canadian Council of Chief Executives (CCCE). Former Liberal deputy prime minister, John Manley is set to replace the retiring Thomas d'Aquino as president of the CCCE. Stuart Trew of the Council of Canadians called it, "a match made in heaven for the Canadian and American business lobbies that could always count on Manley to endorse their priorities inside and outside of Parliament." He also said, "Perhaps no politician has done more to further the CCCE's case for a Fortress North America where business and investment can roam free while citizens in Canada and Mexico endure new U.S. security practices across the continent." The CCCE has called for the reinvention of North American borders and has pressured the Canadian government to further merge its military and security apparatus with their American counterparts. Since their inception, they have had intimate ties to both the Liberal and Conservative parties, with many of their proposals being implemented into policy. By his own admission, Manley's role as head of the CCCE will be to further bridge the divide between business and government.

In his book Open and Shut: Why America has Barack Obama and Canada has Stephen Harper, Toronto journalist John Ibbitson calls for a North American environmental, economic and security accord. He argues that the border between Canada and the US should be eliminated. Vancouver Sun columnist, Barbara Yaffe comments on the book's scenario of erasing the Canada-U.S. border. "The two nations would retain their distinct sovereignty but there would be no more passports or work visas. The continent would see a free flow of goods, services and people; common rules for immigration and refugees; joint inspection of shipping containers from abroad; an integrated terrorist watch list; a system of security enforcement around the perimeter of the continent." Clearly, some of these measures would constitute a loss of sovereignty. This also ties into my recent article U.S.-Canada Border Security and Military Integration. It may seem inconceivable, but if the globalists get their way in the not-so-distant future, the northern border could be gone.

The North American Supercorridor Coalition (NASCO) recently held their 2009 Conference in Quebec. NASCO is made up of politicians and business leaders who promote trinational trade and transportation. The meetings in Quebec were attended by four Canadian premiers, four Mexican governors, as well as Iowa's Governor, Chet Culver and Vermont's Governor, James Douglas. Some have linked NASCO to a NAFTA Superhighway. In January of this year, the Texas Department of Transportation proclaimed that the Trans-Texas Corridor (TTC) was dead. The TTC has been referred to by many as the first leg of a NAFTA Superhighway and would extend from the Texas-Mexico border to the Oklahoma state line. The perceived demise of the TTC was more of a public relations stunt designed to try and silence critics and appease Texas lawmakers. The project will be broken up into smaller sections, making it more difficult to stop in the future.

It is through trade deals such as NAFTA and initiatives like the SPP that corporations have further strengthened their power and grip over our lives. Although trade with other nations is vital, the current NAFTA model is badly flawed and unfair. Further North American integration, deregulation and privatization will be devastating for many. This corporate agenda threatens our freedom, sovereignty, as well as our standard of living. Some have labeled plans for a North American Union as a conspiracy theory, but the fact remains that the deep-rooted agenda of continental integration continues.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, as well as other issues.

Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com

craig-oxley - July 19, 2009 12:14 AM (GMT)

North American summit added to Obama's agenda

Statement from press secretary announces travel plans

Posted: July 18, 2009
By Bob Unruh
http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=104297

After weeks of total silence on the issue, the White House press secretary today issued a terse statement confirming that President Obama will, in fact, attend the North American Leaders summit with Mexican President Felipe Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper next month.

WND reported earlier on the silence from the White House about the meeting that used to be known as the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America.

The only mention at that time of the Mexico summit that WND could find on a U.S. government website was on a calendar on the U.S. Department of State site that listed only: "August 8-11, North American Leader's Summit, Mexico," with no additional information.

Now in an e-mailed statement from Press Secretary Robert Gibbs titled "Upcoming Travel by the President," he confirms Obama will attend.

"The president will travel to Guadalajara, Mexico, August 9-10 to attend the North American Leaders Summit with Mexican President Felipe Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper," the two-sentence announcement began.

"The summit meeting will provide an opportunity for the United States, Mexico, and Canada to engage on a broad range of issues, including economic recovery and competitiveness in North America, our shared interest in energy and the environment, and cooperation among our governments to promote the safety and welfare of our citizens, including continued close cooperation to counter the A/H1N1 influenza pandemic."

WND has reported that the last annual SPP meeting in New Orleans included a determined public relations effort to drop the SPP designation completely in order to defuse criticism.

When he was a candidate, Obama wrote an article published by the Dallas Morning News entitled, "I will repair our relationship with Mexico," in which he stated: "Starting my first year in office, I will convene annual meetings with Mr. Calderon and the prime minister of Canada. Unlike similar summits under President Bush, these will be conducted with a level of transparency that represents the close ties among our three countries."

Brent Patterson, the director of campaigns at the Council of Canadians, had been critical of Obama for not announcing his plans, questioning Obama's "commitment … to transparency and accountability for this meeting."

The Council of Canadians is a citizens' organization WND has previously reported is actively opposed to North American political integration under NAFTA and the SPP.

WND has previously reported that Robert A. Pastor, the American University professor who for more than a decade has been a major proponent of building a North American Community, has declared the SPP "is dead," largely due to efforts to expose the SPP's North American integration agenda.

WND has also reported that President Obama has backtracked on his campaign promises to renegotiate NAFTA in order to get provisions more favorable to U.S. workers and U.S. jobs.

During the presidential campaign, Obama was forced to fire from his campaign an important economic adviser. Austan Goolsbee, an economics professor at the University of Chicago business school, was dismissed after reporters learned he had traveled to Canada to reassure Canadians that Obama's campaign promises to renegotiate NAFTA were just campaign rhetoric.

In the Ohio and Pennsylvania Democratic Party primaries, candidate Obama had pledged to renegotiate NAFTA as part of his appeal to Ohio and Pennsylvania workers who have lost manufacturing jobs under the free trade agreements negotiated by Presidents Clinton and George W. Bush.

Now, Goolsbee is back in the White House, having taken a leave of absence from the University of Chicago. Obama appointed him to serve as chief economist and staff director of the newly created Presidential Economic Recovery Advisory Board, chaired by former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volker.

Obama also appointed Goolsbee to the Council of Economic Advisors, or CEA, which is charged with assisting in the development of White House economic policy.

craig-oxley - July 23, 2009 05:49 PM (GMT)

NAU: Obama to Meet Mexican, Canadian Counterparts Next Month

Published on 07-22-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
http://www.digitaljournal.com/article/276237

Pres. Obama will be meeting with Mexican President Felipe Calderón and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper in August to discuss "a broad range of issues," according to Press Secretary Robert Gibbs.

Canada, the U.S. and Mexico will meet at the next North American leaders summit to discuss the Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP).

A statement from an e-mail by Press Secretary Robert Gibbs confirmed Pres. Obama's agenda for August 2009: "The president will travel to Guadalajara, Mexico, August 9-10 to attend the North American Leaders Summit with Mexican President Felipe Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper. The summit meeting will provide an opportunity for the United States, Mexico, and Canada to engage on a broad range of issues, including economic recovery and competitiveness in North America, our shared interest in energy and the environment, and cooperation among our governments to promote the safety and welfare of our citizens, including continued close cooperation to counter the A/H1N1 influenza pandemic."

There has been criticism that the SPP is too secretive and during Pres. Obama's campaign, he stated that he would force the SPP to be more open about their meetings and discussions.

Obama was also criticized when he claimed he would overhaul NAFTA; economic advisor Austan Goolsbe told Canadian officials that his "promises" were just campaign rhetoric.

Conspiracies have been floating for several years now that there is a push towards a North American Union, an amalgamation that would be similar to the European Union in 1999.

craig-oxley - July 27, 2009 03:00 PM (GMT)

Leaders' Summit on North American Relations Held in June

Monday, 27 July 2009 05:29 Dana Gabriel
By Dana Gabriel
http://www.borderfirereport.net/dana-gabri...eld-in-june.php

Unbeknownst to many, the Leaders' Summit on North American Relations was held in Quebec in June of this year. It represents yet another facet of North American integration. This should not be confused with the upcoming North American Leaders' Summit which is scheduled to take place in Mexico on August 9-10.

The fifth Leaders' Summit on North American Relations was held on June 3 of this year in Quebec City. The summit was chaired by Quebec Premier Jean Charest. It focused on, "four main areas: the economic context and the financial crisis; North American integration: NAFTA's track record and prospects; transportation and infrastructure; and energy and climate change." In conjunction with the summit, the North American SuperCorridor Coalition (NASCO) Conference also took place from June 2-4.

The goal of the summit was to further boost North American competitiveness and enhance trilateral cooperation. The meetings and work sessions were attended by government leaders from Canada, the U. S. and Mexico. This includes Canadian provincial Premiers Gary Doer of Manitoba and Shawn Graham of New Brunswick, along with Shawn Skinner, Trade Minister of Newfoundland and Labrador. U.S. participants included state governors Chet Culver of Iowa and James Douglas of Vermont. Mexico was represented by state governors José Natividad González Parás, Governor of Nuevo León, Juan Manuel Oliva Ramírez, Governor of Guanajuato, Amalia Garcia Medina of Zacatecas, as well Economic Development Secretaries for Durango and Michoacán, Jorge A. Reynoso Martínez and Eloy Vargas Arreola. The leaders agreed that many necessary improvements can be made within the existing NAFTA framework.

In a Joint Statement, “the Leaders reaffirmed their belief that there is an important need for provincial and state governments to take part in forums aimed at promoting ongoing dialogue on issues of mutual interests.” They also, “reaffirmed the essential role that Canadian provinces and the Mexican and U.S. states have in developing trilateral relations and enhancing North America’s strategic positioning in the international arena.” They are committed to further strengthening continental relations and encouraging other Canadian provinces, as well as Mexican and U.S. states to participate in future summits. The next Leaders’ Summit on North American Relations will be held in Des Moines, Iowa in 2010.

As many are now aware, Mexico will host the fifth North American Leaders’ Summit in Guadalajara on August 9-10 of this year. The SPP website describes the summit as, “a unique opportunity for our three neighboring nations to identify ways to collaborate on shared opportunities and collectively address our common challenges. The leaders will discuss improving North American competitiveness as we recover from the economic downturn, promoting clean energy to combat climate change, and protecting the safety of our citizens.” It is also being reported that the Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP) has been dismantled but some working groups will live on. If this is indeed true, it does not constitute a victory as there have been numerous calls to replace and rename the SPP. This includes a new report for the Brookings Institution and Canadian International Council entitled “Toward a New Frontier: Improving the U. S.-Canadian Border.” The report recommends that the U.S. move slower on SPP priorities with Mexico than with Canada and for the whole process to be renamed. It appears as if the latest summit could be used as an opportunity to revive stalled measures and launch a new strategy that would further build off past continental integration initiatives.

Interlocking superstates are the foundation for global government. Much like the formation of the European Union, a North American Union is being created incrementally. There are many different facets to North American integration and this deep-rooted agenda continues on many different fronts.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, as well as other issues.
Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com
Visit his blog site at http://www.beyourownleader.blogspot.com
Dana Gabriel Archives

Alexandra - July 27, 2009 07:45 PM (GMT)

Midwest governors OK pact for high-speed rail push http://www.reuters.com/article/marketsNews...753262720090727

CHICAGO, July 27 (Reuters) - The prospect of billions of dollars in federal money to spur high-speed rail has united eight U.S. Midwest governors who announced on Monday an agreement to work together to obtain that funding.

The governors, as well as Chicago Mayor Richard Daley, agreed to create a Midwest rail steering group to coordinate applications for funding under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, which allocates $8 billion nationwide for high-speed rail.

"We want to make sure the Midwest is in front of the rest of the nation," said U.S. Senator Dick Durbin, an Illinois Democrat who joined Daley and the governors of Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin at a high-speed rail summit.

Governors from those states, as well as Indiana, Minnesota and Missouri, signed the agreement.

Wisconsin Governor Jim Doyle said federal high-speed rail funding could rise to as much as $19 billion in the coming years with ongoing appropriations and that the Midwest states want a substantial portion of that money despite the fact that other U.S. regions were also vying for it.

"I don't think you will find any part of the country that will have as well coordinated, thought out, solid application as we're going to put out from the Midwest states," he said.

The U.S. Department of Transportation has already received pre-applications for the funds totaling $102 billion with $13 billion of that amount requested in the Midwest. Funding grants are expected to be finalized this fall.

The Midwest coalition has identified priority rail corridors linking Chicago to St. Louis, Milwaukee and Madison, Wisconsin, and to the Detroit area. Those corridors as well as additional ones reaching into other states carry a price tag in the tens of billions of dollars over 10 to 20 years, according to Doyle. The high cost will require local funding at a time when most Midwest states are facing budget problems due to the recession.

Illinois Governor Pat Quinn said his state took a first step toward local funding by including high-speed rail in $31 billion, six-year capital spending legislation he signed into law this month. The measure raises fees, taxes and allows video gaming terminals to generate money to help pay off bonds.

Iowa Governor Chet Culver said his state was partnering with a private freight carrier for a passenger rail link between Chicago and Iowa City estimated to cost $130 million.

"There's a lot of opportunities here to partner with the freight rail carriers to just upgrade the tracks to take them from 59 miles per hour to 79," he said.

Michigan Governor Jennifer Granholm, whose state has lost thousands of manufacturing jobs due to the ailing automotive industry, said high-speed rail could mean 57,000 permanent jobs and 15,000 construction jobs for the region. (Reporting by Karen Pierog; Additional reporting by Lisa Lambert in Washington; Editing by James Dalgleish)

NOTE: I find it interesting, given that I-35, which is supposedly to become the NAFTA Superhighway, is fairly close by.

craig-oxley - July 31, 2009 05:28 PM (GMT)

SPP Continues Under Obama, Meeting With Harper and Calderon Next Month

By Andrew Moran, on 07-22-2009 00:02
http://www.noonehastodietomorrow.com/agenda/nau/1243

Pres. Obama will be meeting with Mexican President Felipe Calderón and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper in August to discuss "a broad range of issues," according to Press Secretary Robert Gibbs.

Canada, the U.S. and Mexico will meet at the next North American leaders summit to discuss the Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP).
A statement from an e-mail by Press Secretary Robert Gibbs confirmed Pres. Obama's agenda for August 2009: "The president will travel to Guadalajara, Mexico, August 9-10 to attend the North American Leaders Summit with Mexican President Felipe Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper. The summit meeting will provide an opportunity for the United States, Mexico, and Canada to engage on a broad range of issues, including economic recovery and competitiveness in North America, our shared interest in energy and the environment, and cooperation among our governments to promote the safety and welfare of our citizens, including continued close cooperation to counter the A/H1N1 influenza pandemic."
There has been criticism that the SPP is too secretive and during Pres. Obama's campaign, he stated that he would force the SPP to be more open about their meetings and discussions.
Obama was also criticized when he claimed he would overhaul NAFTA; economic advisor Austan Goolsbe told Canadian officials that his “promises” were just campaign rhetoric.

Conspiracies have been floating for several years now that there is a push towards a North American Union, an amalgamation that would be similar to the European Union in 1999.

craig-oxley - August 12, 2009 01:14 AM (GMT)

Obama: North America Union needs 'aggressive action'

Published on 08-11-2009 Email To Friend Print Version

GUADALAJARA, Noting the huge trading partnership among the three neighbors, Obama said that commerce must be expanded, not restricted.

Wrapping up a North American summit Monday afternoon, Obama joined Mexican President Felipe Calderón and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper for a news conference after about two hours of talks.

Noting the huge trading partnership among the three neighbors, Obama said that commerce must be expanded, not restricted.

The president also emphasized a need for orderly and legal immigration, a sensitive issue on all borders.

"But ultimately I think the American people want fairness," he said. "And we can create a system in which you have strong border security, we have an orderly process for people to come in, but we're also giving an opportunity for those who are already in the United States to be able to achieve a pathway to citizenship so that they don't have to live in the shadows and their children and their grandchildren can have a full participation in — in the United States."

On Mexico's turf, Obama backed Calderón and his efforts to take on drug cartels during a spiraling war on drugs and guns. Washington is debating whether to withhold money to help fight the powerful cartels because of allegations that the Mexican military has been guilty of human rights abuses.

Obama said he had great confidence that under Calderón "human rights will be observed."

Calderón said the Mexican government has an "absolute and categorical" commitment to human rights.

On commerce, Obama said that a "Buy America" provision in the giant economic stimulus package earlier this year had not hurt trade with Canada. "I do think it's important to keep this in perspective," Obama said. "This in no way has endangered the billions of dollars in trade taking place between our two countries."

As for health care, he said the Canadian system had evolved differently from the one in the USA and that it would not work in the U.S. He said the "vigorous debate" unfolding at home over health care was itself healthy — but he also said he hoped that "more sensible and reasoned arguments will emerge" as the legislation heads toward possible votes this fall.

In a written statement, they pledged a united effort on economic recovery, trade, swine flu and climate change. A statement from the leaders said their nations offered a "joint, responsible and transparent" response to the spreading swine flu threat.

They men spoke at the end of a swift North American Leaders' Summit, an annual gathering launched during George W. Bush's presidency. The gathering typically yields fresh promises of coordination on many issues but no breakthroughs or initiatives.

The leaders renewed calls for the restoration of Honduran President Manuel Zelaya, who was ousted in a June 28 coup.

Obama blasted critics who said the United States should intervene in the government dispute on Honduras: "The same critics who say that the United States has not intervened enough in Honduras are the same people who say that we're always intervening and the Yankees need to get out of Latin America. You can't have it both ways."

The North American leaders also tried to coordinate plans to minimize the severity of the H1N1 flu virus as school begins, said John Brennan, an Obama adviser on homeland security.

The virus has flared up again in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas after an initial outbreak that began in Mexico in April spread rapidly worldwide. Swine flu has killed 149 people in Mexico and infected 17,730. In the U.S., the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said there have been 436 swine flu deaths and an estimated 1 million cases.

World health officials are worried it may evolve into a more dangerous strain during the winter flu season. "There are people who are going to be getting sick in the fall and die," Brennan said.

Meanwhile, drug-related violence in Mexico has been increasing even after Calderón began dispatching troops to confront drug traffickers in December 2006. As many as 4,000 people have died in drug-related violence this year, up 65% from the 2,422 killed in the same period in 2008, according to an unofficial tally by El Universal newspaper.

Harper said Sunday that Canada will increase its aid to Mexico's anti-drug fight by bringing 300 Mexican police officers and 32 commanders to the Canadian Police College for training.

The U.S. has pledged $1.4 billion to help Mexico battle its drug cartels, but Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., threatened last week to withhold part of that money because of possible human rights abuses by Mexico's military.

During their meeting Sunday, Calderón urged Obama to resurrect a program to allow some Mexican trucks onto U.S. highways as part of the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement, Calderón's office said. Mexico has retaliated by imposing tariffs on $2.4 billion of U.S. goods.

Calderón urged Harper to reverse the visa rule for Mexican visitors, saying it prevented thousands from traveling to Canada in July, Calderón's office said.

Contributing: Chris Hawley, the Latin America

craig-oxley - August 24, 2009 03:26 PM (GMT)

Environmental Concerns Advancing North American Integration

Published on 08-21-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel - BLN Contributing Writer

The Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP) has essentially been rendered inactive, yet many of its key priorities such as energy integration were part of the agenda at the recent North American Leaders' Summit held in Guadalajara, Mexico on Aug 9-10. Environmental concerns are being used to further advance North American integration and the U.S., Canada and Mexico have committed to a more continental approach in combating climate change.

In the North American Leaders' Declaration on Climate Change and Clean Energy it states, "We stress that the experience developed during the last 15 years in the North American region on environmental cooperation, sustainable development, and clean energy research, development, and deployment constitutes a valuable platform for climate change action, and we resolve to make use of the opportunities offered by existing bilateral and trilateral institutions." The leaders offered a shared vision for a low-carbon North America and the importance of taking aggressive action on climate change, including better cooperation in reducing emissions. In conclusion, it says, "In order to facilitate these actions, we will work cooperatively to develop and follow up on a Trilateral Working Plan and submit a report of results at our next North American Leaders Summit in 2010."

A more North American strategy in regards to climate change is moving forward. This includes coordination of an emissions trading system. It is also expected that a new version of the Canadian government's climate change plan will be released this fall which will be more comparable to U.S. efforts. In a recent article from the Wall Street Journal, one of the creators of the cap-and trade concept, Thomas Crocker says that he is now, "skeptical that cap-and-trade is the most effective way to go about regulating carbon." Many critics of a cap-and-trade system argue that it could further damage the economy and lead to millions of jobs being lost.

An article from the New York Times entitled Climate Change Seen as Threat to U.S. Security states a, "growing number of policy makers say that the world's rising temperatures, surging seas and melting glaciers are a direct threat to the national interest." It goes on to say, "If the United States does not lead the world in reducing fossil-fuel consumption and thus emissions of global warming gases, proponents of this view say, a series of global environmental, social, political and possibly military crises loom that the nation will urgently have to address." The security card is being used in an effort to further galvanize support for climate and energy legislation, including a cap-and-trade system which will be debated in the Senate next month.

It is hard to deny all the fear-mongering that has been associated with global warming. It has become like a religion with no room for debate and those not agreeing with man-made global warming being labeled as heretics. Although as humans we have done some harm to the planet, it is the doom and gloom of global warming that receives the most attention while other environmental issues are seemingly ignored. Whether you believe the threat of climate change to be real or exaggerated it is being used to further integrate North America. Global warming hysteria is a vehicle for social engineering with many solutions being offered that could radically alter our very existence.

With the decline of the SPP and cracks emerging in NAFTA, it appears as if North American integration is in disarray. Let me remind you that the global elite pushing for a North American Union and a New World Order are masters of getting order out of chaos. The SPP could be rebranded under a new name, but regardless, there are other initiatives that could fill its void in regards to continental integration.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, as well as other issues.
Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com
Visit his blog site
Dana Gabriel Archives

craig-oxley - September 9, 2009 07:53 PM (GMT)

Expanding the Pathways to Prosperity in the Americas

Published on 09-07-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel - BLN Contributing Writer

The Pathways to Prosperity in the Americas, which some have dubbed PPA, was first launched by the Bush administration in September of 2008 in an effort to further deepen existing economic partnerships in the region. Many speculated that it was a last ditch effort by Bush to resurrect a revised version of the failed Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA). The Obama administration has continued with the PPA and is set to re-launch and expand the initiative which would lead to greater integration in the Americas. Some aspects of the PPA are similar to the defunct Security and Prosperity Partnership and could spread SPP objectives to other parts of the Western Hemisphere.

At the Pathways to Prosperity Ministerial held in El Salvador on May 31, 2009, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton pledged support for the PPA. She stated, “President Obama has emphasized that it's not important whether ideas come from one party or another, so long as they move us in the right direction. This meeting builds on the work of the previous U.S. administration, but the President and I are also committed to re-launching Pathways to Prosperity, and expanding its work to spread the benefits of economic recovery, growth, and open markets to the most vulnerable and marginalized citizens of our region.” It appears as if the Obama administration wishes to put their own stamp of approval on the PPA and further expand it.

The PPA now includes 14 partner countries Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, the U.S. and Uruguay. Besides NAFTA and CAFTA, there are other Free Trade Agreements amongst partner nations that are already active, with some being negotiated or pending legislative approval. At the meeting, Clinton also stressed that, “Pathways should be open to working with new partners including other nations and sub-regional banks that share our commitment to open markets and greater social inclusion. I want to note the presence of the observer countries – Brazil and Trinidad and Tobago – that are here today. Going forward, I hope you and other countries from our hemisphere will join us in this initiative as full members.” If you combine all the bilateral and regional trade deals in the Americas, it could facilitate a larger multilateral agreement. Expanding the PPA could be a backdoor to achieving something similar to the FTAA.

A Joint Statement By North American Leaders from the recent Summit held in Guadalajara, Mexico on Aug 9-10 stated, “Our three governments recognize that we cannot limit our efforts to North America alone, and we have agreed to instruct our respective Ministers to strive for greater cooperation and coordination as we work to promote security and institutional development with our neighbors in Central America and the Caribbean.” Could they be referring to the PPA? The Leaders also promised to hold public consultations on the North American agenda as it appears that they have learned from mistakes made with the SPP. At least in rhetoric, the PPA attempts to balance economic progress and trade initiatives with social justice. They can talk all they want about fair trade, social development priorities and how they are going to listen to our concerns. Until something is done with the flawed NAFTA model which has benefited multinational corporations at the expense of labor, health, safety and environmental rights, it will not mean a damn thing.

An article from April of this year entitled Obama's Agenda for Change and the 2009 Summit of the Americas called on the new administration to announce the cancellation of the SPP, along with its hemispheric extension, the PPA. It pointed out that, “The PPA bears many of the hallmarks of the SPP.” It goes on to say, “The PPA, like the SPP, is little more than an attempt to justify economic deregulation and to promote an escalation of militarism in the region.” The SPP website now says that it will serve as an archive for documents and will not be updated and announced that, “Going forward, we want to build on the accomplishments achieved by the SPP and further improve our cooperation.” Stuart Trew of the Council of Canadians reported that as a venue for North American integration, the SPP is dead.

Trade, social development and foreign aid, along with other endeavors, have been used to further promote U.S. interest around the globe. In some cases, this has resulted in shared security goals and closer military cooperation which has led to U.S. involvement in the region. In the aftermath of the SPP’s demise, beware of other initiatives that could take its place and advance economic, political, social, security and military integration, not only in North America, but the rest of the Western Hemisphere.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, as well as other issues.

Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com
Visit his blog site at beyourownleader.blogspot.com

craig-oxley - September 29, 2009 02:43 PM (GMT)

U.S.-Canada Regional Economic and Energy Integration

Published on 09-28-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
By Dana Gabriel - BLN Contributing Writer

Trilateral initiatives, such as NAFTA and the Security and Prosperity Partnership (SPP) have further advanced North American integration. It is also at a state and provincial level that regional integration is being achieved in areas of trade, the environment and energy.

The 33rd Annual Conference of New England Governors and Eastern Canadian Premiers was held in Saint John, New Brunswick, Canada on September 14-15 and was co-chaired by host Premier Shawn Graham and Maine Governor John Baldacci. Throughout the years, the governors and premiers have forged a partnership and expanded economic ties, including cooperation on energy and environmental issues. At each conference, policy resolutions are enacted which call on actions by the state and provincial governments, as well as by the two national governments. The current global financial crisis has placed more focus on finding collaborative regional approaches to economic and energy issues. The recent conference included resolutions concerning the green economy, renewable energy, climate change, energy efficiency, pandemic preparedness and open and secure trade. Regional leaders endorsed a blueprint for the region's energy future.

In March of this year, Premier Graham and Governor Baldacci announced support for a Northeast Energy Corridor. This would position New Brunswick and Maine as energy hubs and link their resources to energy stressed East Coast states. It would also expand U.S.-Canada shared strategic objectives in energy supply and energy security. There are calls for such an energy corridor to be flexible and able to handle power lines, natural gas and other energy supplies, depending on future demand. In an open letter to the Eastern Canadian premiers, the Council of Canadians cautioned, "against adopting a regional energy vision that includes large energy project 'corridors' directed at export-oriented trade. These projects create negative local impacts and undermine energy security in Eastern Canada." My article Towards a North American Energy Corridor also details plans to develop a cross-border Western Energy Corridor. It is through the SPP, that the North American Energy Working Group has further integrated a continental energy strategy.

The 29th Annual Conference of New England Governors and Eastern Canadian Premiers in 2005 produced a Resolution Concerning the Security and Prosperity of North America. It stated that the governors and premiers, "inform the governments of Canada and the United States that it supports the objective of the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America, and note to the two federal governments the importance of involving the states and provinces in the preparation of measures to support the Partnership." Part of the resolution also included, "preparing a draft action plan aimed at strengthening cooperation between the members of the Conference of New England Governors and Eastern Canadian Premiers in areas targeted by the Security and Security Partnership of North America."

A recent article by Jerome Corsi reported that, "President Obama is continuing President George W. Bush's effort to advance North American integration with a public-relations makeover calculated to place the program under the radar of public opinion and to deflect concerns about border security and national sovereignty." According to confidential sources in the U.S. Department of Commerce and State Department. "The Obama administration has 'rebranded' and 'refocused' the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America, or SPP, to advance the Bush administration's agenda of North American integration under the rubric of the 'North American Leaders Summit,' a less controversial banner." Corsi also reported that the North American Competitiveness Council which is made up of business executives from Canada, the U.S. and Mexico will continue to operate under the new structure, along with more than 20 trilateral working groups. They will further concentrate in areas of North American citizen security, economic competitiveness, energy policy and climate change.

North American integration continues on many different fronts and this includes at a state and provincial level. It appears as if the SPP may be dead in name only. Many of its key priorities were part of the agenda at the recent North American Leaders Summit held in Mexico. The push for a North American Union continues as it is becoming increasingly clear that Obama embraces globalization and has no intention of upholding the Constitution or protecting American sovereignty.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, as well as other issues.
Contact: newworldordermustbestopped@hotmail.com
Visit his blog site
Dana Gabriel Archives

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 02:37 AM (GMT)

For Immediate Release
February 04, 2011
http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office...-canada-regul-0

Joint Statement by President Obama and Prime Minister Harper of Canada on Regulatory Cooperation

Today, President Barack Obama and Prime Minister Stephen Harper have directed the creation of a United States-Canada Regulatory Cooperation Council (RCC), composed of senior regulatory, trade, and foreign affairs officials from both governments. In recognition of our $1 trillion annual trade and investment relationship, the RCC has a two-year mandate to work together to promote economic growth, job creation, and benefits to our consumers and businesses through increased regulatory transparency and coordination.

They have directed that the first meeting of the RCC be convened within 90 days by the relevant agencies in the United States and Canada.

The President and the Prime Minister have taken this initiative because they believe that their citizens deserve smarter, more effective approaches to regulation that enhance the economic competitiveness and well-being of the United States and Canada, while maintaining high standards of public health and safety and environmental protection. Improving regulatory cooperation and adopting compatible approaches will lead to greater prosperity on both sides of the border and will in no way diminish the sovereignty of either the United States or Canada or the ability of either country to carry out its regulatory functions according to its domestic and legal policy requirements.

The President and the Prime Minister both recognize the crucial importance of such regulatory cooperation as the U.S. and Canadian economies pull out of the recession and confront the challenges of improving productivity and keeping a competitive edge.

They also believe that regulatory cooperation can spur economic growth in each country; fuel job creation; lower costs for consumers, producers, and governments; and particularly help small and medium-sized businesses. The United States and Canada intend to eliminate unnecessary burdens on cross-border trade, reduce costs, foster cross-border investment, and promote certainty for businesses and the public by coordinating, simplifying and ensuring the compatibility of regulations, where feasible.

The United States and Canada are committed to working through the RCC to provide early notice of regulations with potential effects across our shared border, to strengthen the analytic basis of regulations, and to help make regulations more compatible.

Building on ongoing cooperation, both countries intend to work through the RCC to determine sectors on which to focus its work that are characterized by high levels of integration, significant growth potential, and rapidly evolving technologies.

Both countries are committed to evidence-based, predictable, cost-effective regulatory approaches carefully targeted to enable businesses to continue to innovate and grow.

The President and the Prime Minister believe that the United States and Canada must work together to make their economies stronger and more competitive, while meeting their fundamental responsibilities to protect the safety and welfare of their citizens.

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 02:38 AM (GMT)

The security perimeter imaginarium of Dr. Harper

Kelly McParland February 7, 2011 – 11:15 am http://fullcomment.nationalpost.com/2011/0...m-of-dr-harper/

"Wait a minute ... You're saying the 9/11 terrorists DIDN'T come from Canada?"

It says in the Toronto Star that the Conservatives' security perimeter initiative could "divide the federal Liberals and make it harder for the NDP to ensure the survival of the Conservative minority government."

That would be a pity, given that the odds of the perimeter negotiations making any progress range from zero to none.

To achieve an agreement between countries, especially one as far-reaching as the integration of border security, you need both sides to be involved. But if the Americans are even remotely interested in a perimeter deal, they're keeping it well hidden.

The New York Times didn't mention the Harper-Obama agreement (though it did quote some remarks the Prime Minister made about Egypt). There was a story inside the Wall Street Journal, but if any other U.S. media reported on the meeting and press conference, I can't find it.

There is no hint that Congress is interested. As the Journal pointed out — twice — when it comes to border security, American legislators think of more police and tougher restrictions, not easier flow of goods. Most of the Republicans who control the House couldn't care less if Canada is having a harder time getting its exports through. The unions that support the Democrats still think NAFTA was a Communist plot, and cling to the belief that restrictions on imports mean a bigger market for U.S.-made goods. President Obama was nice enough to meet the Prime Minister and hold a press conference, but his re-election campaign is already under way, and the lengthy list of issues of concern to U.S. voters doesn't include Canada's desire to reduce congestion at the border (which many of them still think is one big welcome mat for foreign terrorists anyway).

So it would be pretty self-defeating if the Liberals or anyone else wasted much time debating the merits of the Tory plan. The Avro Arrow will be flying again before this baby ever does.

National Post

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

Canada kept U.S. border talks under wraps: document

2011/02/08
http://www.thestar.com/news/canada/article...s-document?bn=1

Les Whittington and Tonda MacCharles
Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—The federal government deliberately kept negotiations on a border deal with Washington secret while it planned ways to massage public opinion in favour of the pact, according to a confidential communications strategy.

The 14-page public relations document recommended that talks keep a “low public profile” in the months leading up to the announcement by Prime Minister Stephen Harper and U.S. President Barack Obama. At the same time, the government would secretly engage “stakeholders” — interested parties such as big business groups and others — in a way that respected “the confidentiality of the announcement.”

In advance, the government departments involved — including industry, foreign affairs, international trade and citizenship and immigration — were to “align supportive stakeholders to speak positively about the announcement,” according to the strategy prepared by Public Safety Minister Vic Toews’ officials.

On Friday, Harper and Obama signed off on a plan that for the first time envisions throwing up a single security ring around the perimeter of Canada and the U.S. The wide-ranging blueprint calls for increased cooperation between the two countries’ police, border and intelligence agencies; an integrated Canada-U.S. exit-entry system using high-tech identification techniques and more sharing of information about Canadians with U.S. authorities.

At least three major business organizations — the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives and the Canadian Trucking Alliance — quickly issued statements praising the framework agreement Friday.

The document was prepared last fall, when the Canada-U.S. talks were being conducted without any public notice.

Under “communications challenges,” the document lists: “Greater information sharing is part of the initiative. The safeguarding of privacy and sovereignty will be of concern for Canadians.”

It also says Canadians may be too sanguine about security to see the need for the deal. “The Canadian public may underestimate the security threat to Canada.”

The confidential government document also contains a list of “high risk” stakeholders — those in Canada who might raise strenuous objections to stepped-up Canada-U.S. security arrangements.

Officials surmised that Jennifer Stoddart, the federal privacy commissioner, would be worried by plans to share more personal data on Canadians with U.S. authorities. “Will raise concerns re information sharing and protecting private information,” the document says of Stoddart. In response, the government should stress that “we value and respect our separate constitutional and legal frameworks that protect privacy, civil liberties and human rights." It also recommended "ongoing engagement by officials" with Stoddart.

Advocacy and civil rights groups such as the Council of Canadians, led by Maude Barlow, were also expected to react negatively because of "privacy concerns." The strategy paper again recommended that Conservatives should stress Canada's protections for human rights and privacy. It also suggested that cabinet ministers be made available to the media to counteract Barlow's statements.

Refugee and immigration organizations were considered "high-risk stakeholders" and expected to react by saying the new U.S.-Canada border measures will limit immigration. The recommended response was to say that the deal "will accelerate legitimate travel" and won't change Canadian immigration and refugee policy. Another high-risk stakeholder was expected to be the Mexican government, which "may raise concerns about not being included in the vision."

A separate list of "medium risk" stakeholders included academics, who will "expect proof of economic benefits" and may be worried about privacy and sovereignty, and the media, which will "look for specifics" that would be announced later. Also considered a "medium risk" are U.S. critics, who will see the new deal as a "threat to U.S. jobs."

Now that Canada and the U.S. have begun work on implementing the deal, the Liberals and NDP say they are planning to bring cabinet ministers before a Commons committee to find out the details of the plan.

The public campaign to persuade Canadians that a muscular security deal won't trade away Canadian rights was clearly underway Monday.

Public Safety Minister Vic Toews, appearing at a Senate committee on national security and defence, painted it as "necessary" to the free flow of cross-boarder trade, and "beneficial" to Canada.

The Americans, he said, bring greater resources, "assets" and much-appreciated expertise to border security, citing joint efforts during the Olympics security operations.

Asked later whether Canadians should be concerned about a new regime that might see random searches or seizures at the border, Toews said there's little need to worry.

"I don't think that is a concern that they should have, but those are the kinds of questions that need to be asked and discussed."

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 02:40 AM (GMT)

New Harper/Obama Border Deal about Corporate Power - Not Security and Trade

by Jack Etkin
http://www.pacificfreepress.com/news/1-/80...-and-trade.html

The agreeement signed in Washington on Friday February 4 will put a new border - A Security Perimeter - AROUND Canada and the United States. And it will begin the work of REMOVING the border between us in order to give Big Business more control of Canada's resources and people.

This is being done without the involvement of our Parliament, or the people of Canada or the United States. It is an undemocratic betrayal of all of us.

The Corporations behind this deal own the politicians who signed it, and the media that are telling us 'how good it is'.

'This is the kind of government action that we in the business community have been seeking for years'.

Statement from The Canadian Council of Chief Executives; Feb. 4, 2011

The CCCE is the secretive umbrella group that represents Corporate Canada. The CCCE is the banks, big oil, the drug companies and manufacturers and retailers and all the rest; the people and corporations who own our country. Many believe they ARE the government of Canada. They are the ones behind this deal.

Also in the Border Deal: A new 'Council' will 'harmonize' regulations between Canada and the United States (google: Regulatory Cooperation Council):

The Corporations want ONE SET of business-friendly rules for Canada and the United States, they want control of the rules and regulations that govern us, and that is what this deal is largely about.

Where is the Corporate Media? Where is the CBC? All silent - under Corporate orders.

Where are the Unions? The Environmental Groups? The Council of Canadians? The Social Groups. The other Political Parties? We are allowed to hear nothing from them either.

This powerful new agreement will further undermine our democracy, it is all about Corporate Power and Wealth.

Here in Victoria BC, our main Corporate radio station, CFAX, tells us the new border deal will be good for security and trade and nothing to worry about. That is just Corporate Propaganda, but only that one message is put out.

The border deal will 'protect us' from terror. That's how it's being 'sold', but in fact we are getting in bed with the number one terrorist nation in the world today, the United States of America; a nation that is also bankrupt and may be nearing social upheaval. Even worse, this deal gives more power to Corporations which have neither heart nor soul and who will happily see us ruined if it means increased Profit for them; we know this because it is what they do everywhere in the world. Why is Stephen Harper signing us into secret deals with these lunatics?

The new agreement will make it easier to cross the border. This is the other selling point for the deal, but of course the 'tightening' of the Canada/US border was done to give us 'a problem' that they are now going to solve with a new border around us - which was the Corporate Plan all along.

These are the kinds of games these lunatics play. Do we Canadians want to be part of that? And does anyone care WHAT we want?

What can we do?

1. Contact your local Corporate Media and demand coverage of this story - but remember that the person you are talking to is not to blame; the owners are to blame.

2. Contact your local politician and find out what they are doing about this.

3. Inform yourself, and inform your friends and family.

4. Support democracy and free media whereever you find them.

Stop this Border Deal!

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 02:42 AM (GMT)

[dohtml] February 8, 2011<o:p></o:p>

Obama Creates World’s First Superstate With US-Canada Merger<o:p></o:p>

By: Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers <o:p></o:p>

In a shocking coup d'état said to rival Nazi Germany’s 1938 Anschluss (German for “link-up”) of the Austrian Republic, the United States this past week effectively took control of Canada creating what is being called by Russian diplomatic officials as the world’s first 21st Century “Superstate”.

The <st1:place w:st="on"><st1:country-region w:st="on">United States</st1:country-region></st1:place> announcement of this “merger” between these two North American Nations was made February 4th by a posting on the WhiteHouse.Gov website of President Obama and which, in part, says:

“Today, President Barack Obama and Prime Minister Stephen Harper have directed the creation of a United States-Canada Regulatory Cooperation Council (RCC), composed of senior regulatory, trade, and foreign affairs officials from both governments. In recognition of our $1 trillion annual trade and investment relationship, the RCC has a two-year mandate to work together to promote economic growth, job creation, and benefits to our consumers and businesses through increased regulatory transparency and coordination.<o:p></o:p>

 They have directed that the first meeting of the RCC be convened within 90 days by the relevant agencies in the United States and Canada.”<o:p></o:p>

Concealed in the “diplo-speak” wording of this historic agreement, however, is the complete overturning of the sovereignty of both the American and Canadian peoples laws and regulations they have lived under for centuries, but which will now be “melded” together with no votes allowed by either of them ever again.

The shock and uproar in Canada over their Prime Minister’s, Steven Harper [photo 2nd left with Obama], signing away their sovereignty to the United States is unprecedented, but the same cannot be said of the American people who, according to Canada's National Post, have not been allowed to know about it, and as we can read from their article titled

"The security perimeter imaginarium of Dr. Harper", and which, in part, says:

"The
New York Times didn't mention the Harper-Obama agreement (though it did quote some remarks the Prime Minister made about Egypt). There was a story inside the Wall Street Journal, but if any other U.S. media reported on the meeting and press conference, I can't find it. There is no hint that the US Congress is interested either."<o:p></o:p>

Equally as shocking were the Canadian government's deliberate actions to keep this merger secret from their own citizens, and as we can read as reported by the Toronto Star News Service in their article titled "Canada kept U.S. border talks under wraps" and which, in part, says:

"The federal government deliberately kept negotiations on a border deal with Washington secret while it planned ways to massage public opinion in favour of the pact, according to a confidential communications strategy.<o:p></o:p>

<a href="http://www.thestar.com/news/canada/article/934675--the-federal-government-deliberately-kept-negotiations-on-a-border-deal-with-washington-secret-canada-kept-u-s-border-talks-under-wraps-
document?bn=1">The 14-page public relations document recommended that talks keep a "low public profile" in the months leading up to the announcement by Prime Minister Stephen Harper and U.S. President Barack Obama. At the same time, the government would secretly engage "stakeholders" — interested parties such as big business groups and others — in a way that respected "the confidentiality of the announcement."<o:p></o:p></ span>

In advance, the government departments involved — including industry, foreign affairs, international trade and citizenship and immigration — were to "align supportive stakeholders to speak positively about the announcement," according to the strategy prepared by Public Safety Minister Vic Toews' officials."<o:p></o:p>

One of the "supportive stakeholders" in the merger of <st1:country-region w:st="on">Canada</st1:country-region> with the <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">US</st1:place></st1:country-region> is called the Canadian Council of Chief Executives (CCCE), who in their statement supporting it said, "This is the kind of government action that we in the business community have been seeking for years".

<st1:country-region w:st="on">Canada</st1:country-region>'s Pacific Free Press, however, has slammed this merger for what it really is, a capitalist corporate takeover of both the <st1:country-region w:st="on">United States</st1:country-region> and <st1:place w:st="on">><st1:country-region w:st="on">Canada</st1:country-region></st1:place>, and as we can read as reported in their article titled "<b style='mso-bidi-font-weight:
normal'>New Harper/Obama Border Deal about Corporate Power - Not Security and Trade":

"The Corporations behind this deal own the politicians who signed it, and the media that are telling us 'how good it is'. <o:p></o:p>

The CCCE is the secretive umbrella group that represents Corporate Canada. The CCCE is the banks, big oil, the drug companies and manufacturers and retailers and all the rest; the people and corporations who own our country. Many believe they ARE the government of Canada. They are the ones behind this deal. <o:p></o:p>

Also in the Border Deal: A new 'Council' will 'harmonize' regulations between Canada and the United States (google: Regulatory Cooperation Council): <o:p></o:p>

The Corporations want ONE SET of business-friendly rules for Canada and the United States, they want control of the rules and regulations that govern us, and that is what this deal is largely about.<o:p></o:p>

Where is the Corporate Media? Where is the CBC? All silent - under Corporate orders. <o:p></o:p>

Where are the Unions? The Environmental Groups? The Council of Canadians? The Social Groups. The other Political Parties? We are allowed to hear nothing from them either. <o:p></o:p>

This powerful new agreement will further undermine our democracy, it is all about Corporate Power and Wealth. <o:p></o:p>

Here in Victoria BC, our main Corporate radio station, CFAX, tells us the new border deal will be good for security and trade and nothing to worry about. That is just Corporate Propaganda, but only that one message is put out. <o:p></o:p>

The border deal will 'protect us' from terror. That's how it's being 'sold', but in fact we are getting in bed with the number one terrorist nation in the world today, the United States of America; a nation that is also bankrupt and may be nearing social upheaval. Even worse, this deal gives more power to Corporations which have neither heart nor soul and who will happily see us ruined if it means increased Profit for them; we know this because it is what they do everywhere in the world. Why is Stephen Harper signing us into secret deals with these lunatics? <o:p></o:p>

<a href="http://www.pacificfreepress.com/news/1-/8006-new-harperobama-border-deal-about-corporate-

power-not-security-and-trade.html">The new agreement will make it easier to cross the border. This is the other selling point for the deal, but of course the 'tightening' of the Canada/US border was done to give us 'a problem' that they are now going to solve with a new border around us - which was the Corporate Plan all along. <o:p></o:p></ p>

These are the kinds of games these lunatics play.”<o:p></o:p>

The great British Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill (1874-1965) once said, “Men occasionally stumble over the truth, but most of them pick themselves up and hurry off as if nothing ever happened.”, and which, sadly, appears to be the case with this historic merger between the US and Canada as those who know and care won’t be heard, but those who do will reign in tyranny over those who live their lives in ignorance.

And yes it is true, and worth repeating, “These are the kinds of games these lunatics play.” [/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 1, 2011 01:25 AM (GMT)

ASU hosts model North American Union legislature

May 31, 2011
http://asunews.asu.edu/20110525_triumvirate

The North American Center for Transborder Studies (NACTS) at Arizona State University will co-host the 2011 “Triumvirate” at the Tempe campus.

The sixth edition of the Triumvirate, the only trinational inter-parliamentary student simulation in North America, will take place from May 29 through June 3. Organized by ASU and the North American Forum on Integration (NAFI) from Montreal, the event will bring together about 50 students from seven American, Canadian and Mexican universities.

“The Triumvirate, is a unique, one-of-a-kind event,” NACTS director Rick Van Schoik said.

University student participants from Mexico, the United States and Canada participate in a week-long simulation exercise simulating a congressional meeting between North American legislators. Student delegates are assigned one of the three roles: legislator (representing a country other than their own), journalist, or lobbyist. The legislators will debate themes of a political, economic and environmental nature, while lobbyists will attempt to influence the legislators’ decisions and the TrilatHerald journalist team will analyze the evolution of the debates.

Related

WikiLeaks: ‘North American Initiative’ no ‘theory’

For five days, participants will discuss hot political topics affecting North America: immigration and guest worker programs, green building practices, corporate social responsibility in the mining industry, and the promotion of North American trade corridors.

As a pioneer on the political scene, the Triumvirate seeks to bring together future North American leaders to increase their awareness of the issues that characterize North American relations while enabling them to develop a better knowledge of democratic institutions and the realities of the member countries of NAFTA.

Triumvirate seeks to strengthen a sense of belonging to North America and discuss regional integration issues. “The event is a bull’s-eye target for NACTS’ work and commitment to social and economic development in the Americas,” Van Schoik said.

“The simulation enables participants to delve into the heart of the North American political dynamics and to negotiate draft bills that, we hope, will inspire our political leaders,” Christine Fréchette, executive director and founder of NAFI, said.

TheUnhivedMind - June 5, 2011 12:17 AM (GMT)

Leaked U.S. cable lays out North American ‘integration’ strategy

Prime Minister Stephen Harper and U.S. President Barack Obama after a February 2011 meeting where they discussed continental trade and security.

Postmedia News Jun 2, 2011 – 3:02 PM ET | Last Updated: Jun 3, 2011 2:26 PM ET
By Robert Hiltz
http://news.nationalpost.com/2011/06/02/le...tion’-strategy/

OTTAWA — The integration of North America’s economies would best be achieved through an “incremental” approach, according to a leaked U.S. diplomatic cable.

The cable, released through the WikiLeaks website and apparently written Jan. 28, 2005, discusses some of the obstacles surrounding the merger of the economies of Canada, the United States and Mexico in a fashion similar to the European Union.

“An incremental and pragmatic package of tasks for a new North American Initiative (NAI) will likely gain the most support among Canadian policymakers,” the document said. “The economic payoff of the prospective North American initiative … is available, but its size and timing are unpredictable, so it should not be oversold.”

Many different areas of a possible integration are discussed throughout the cable, but the focus is on improving the economic welfare of the continent. It suggests one of the main benefits to Canada would be easier access across the U.S. border, calling it a “top motive” for this country.

The cable states Canada and the U.S. already share perimeter security “to some degree,” the question is then how “strong” the two countries want to make that bond.

Discussions are currently underway about increasing co-operation between the two countries when it comes to perimeter security. A broad-based document was released by Prime Minister Stephen Harper and U.S. President Barack Obama in February of this year, laying the groundwork for a deal that would see improved intelligence communication for security concerns and trade.

The details are currently being hashed out by officials from both countries. The proposed deal aims to improve the flow of cross-border traffic and increase security against terrorist threats.

Opposition parties have expressed a certain wariness over the lack of transparency of the talks and say they worry Harper will be too willing to make concessions to the U.S. over security issues, in order to gain an advantage in cross-border trade.

In the cable, U.S. diplomats focused on a number of key areas to move forward with continental integration, including a possible common currency, labour markets, international trade and the borders of the three countries.

The cable said Canadian economists were split on whether a fixed exchange rate, or a move to adopt the U.S. greenback, would benefit this country.

The document states Canadian economists point to labour markets as one of the areas which could have the greatest benefit for all three countries.

“They advocate freeing up professional licensing laws, and developing a quick, simple, low-cost work permit system, at least for U.S. and Canadian citizens,” the cable said.

It goes on to say North America would be well served by implementing a single, continent wide, tariff or a customs union arrangement.

The proposed customs union would eliminate the North American Free Trade Agreement’s “restrictive” rules of origin.

“NAFTA’s (rules of origin) are so restrictive that importers often prefer to pay the tariff rather than try to prove North American origin,” the cable said.

The cable concludes with a caveat: “There is little basis on which to estimate the size of the ‘upside’ gains from an integration initiative concentrating on non-tariff barriers of the kind contained in NAI. For this reason we cannot make the claims about how large the benefits might be on a national or continental scale.”

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 11:07 PM (GMT)

U.S-Canada Perimeter Security and an Integrated North American Command

June 8, 2011
By Dana Gabriel
http://beyourownleader.blogspot.com/2011/0...ated-north.html

While few details have emerged surrounding talks between the U.S. and Canada on a North American security perimeter, there is little doubt that deeper military integration between both countries will play an important part of any such deal. Plans for a common security perimeter have renewed calls to expand the NORAD bilateral air defence model to include ground and naval forces. There are also efforts to increase security cooperation in the Arctic and further integrate military command structures.

As part of the Tri Command Vision, North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD), United States Northern Command (USNORTHCOM), and Canada Command (Canada COM) are working closer together in the defense and security of North America. Moving forward, the Tri Command strategic goals are to, “Improve unity of effort with each other and with our respective mission partners; develop a culture of continuous collaboration and cooperation in planning, execution, training, information management, and innovation; enhance intelligence and information sharing and fusion." In order to better achieve these objectives, "The Commands shall develop and share comprehensive, situational awareness and a common operating picture, and must strive to interact seamlessly with each other and with our respective civil authorities, non-governmental organizations and other mission partners." The Tri Command is part of efforts to merge the three commands into one.

In his report, 'Now for the Hard Part': A User's Guide to Renewing the Canadian-American Partnership, Colin Robertson, Vice President and Senior Research Fellow at the Canadian Defence and Foreign Affairs Institute outlines a plan of action for future bilateral relations. With respects to what a common security perimeter deal might look like, he proposed, "Start by extending to our land and sea environments the interoperability that our Air Force already enjoys through NORAD. It will require our Forces in Canada Command to match their current crossservice 'jointness' with those of American Forces employed in Northern Command." Robertson added, "A security perimeter will also go some distance to resolving the remaining disputes and the shared challenges around stewardship, sovereignty and surveillance of the North West Passage and the activities of foreign ships and submarines in Arctic waters." In a prelude to what joint security in the Arctic might look like, last year's Operation Nanook, an annual Canadian Forces sovereignty exercise included military participation from the U.S. and Denmark.

In their report, From Vision to Action: Advancing the Canada – United States Partnership, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives (CCCE) issued a wide range of proposals as part of the public consultation process regarding negotiations on a trade and perimeter security agreement. This included recommendations concerning NORAD, as well as shared Arctic security. In the section titled, extending the NORAD model of bilateral engagement, the CCCE emphasized that, "Canada and the United States should extend existing bi-national air perimeter defense arrangements under the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) to incorporate what is already an increasing maritime interoperability." As part of strengthening the northern security perimeter, the CCCE explained, "The Canadian Governments Northern Strategy recognizes that the United States is Canada's 'premier partner' in the Arctic. We welcome the commitment to work together on a common security agenda for the North." Both countries are moving towards merging their Arctic foreign policies and further adopting a North American approach.

In April of this year, the U.S. Department of Defense released the Unified Command Plan 2011 which updated, "geographic areas of responsibility for commanders of combatant commands." The adjustment brought about, "Shifting areas of responsibilities boundaries in the Arctic region to leverage long-standing relationships and improve unity of effort. As a result of this realignment, responsibility for the Arctic region is now shared between USEUCOM and USNORTHCOM." This change to the Unified Command Plan reflects the growing importance of the Arctic. With the move, USNORTHCOM has been given the responsibility to advocate for Arctic capabilities. This is significant considering its partnership with Canada COM, as well as NORAD and will facilitate with the development of an integrated Arctic security framework.

In a posting on his Commander's Blog, Admiral James A. Winnefeld, Jr., commander of USNORTHCOM and NORAD addressed some of the challenges the U.S. faces in the Arctic. He confirmed that the region is becoming one of USNORTHCOM's most important with its areas of responsibility now expanded to include the North Pole and the Bering Strait. Winnefeld stated, "In close coordination with the Commander of USEUCOM, our interagency partners and our close Canadian partners, we will work to gain an understanding of our gaps in this unique and austere environment and identify future capabilities and requirements." He went on to say, "Our responsibility in the Arctic is a recognition of our close, enduring and vital relationship with Canada Command and the U.S. Coast Guard." During a bilateral meeting earlier this year, U.S. Secretary of Defense Robert Gates and Canadian Minister of National Defense Peter MacKay discussed the need to further strengthen the U.S.-Canada defense relationship. This included expanding cooperation in the Arctic and deepening coordinated contributions to global security.

Increasingly, the Canadian government's foreign policy is becoming more aggressive as it further embraces the U.S. pro-war agenda. Military spending is at its highest point since the second World War. There are reports that Canadian Forces are looking to establish bases overseas. In an effort to gain more influence in Washington and elevate its status in NATO, Canada has taken on a key role in military operations in Libya. It has extended its mission in Afghanistan which has transitioned from a combat role to a training capacity. There are also growing concerns over its decision to purchase 65 F-35 Joint Strike Fighter jets which is tied to plans for a North American security perimeter.

The end results of a fully integrated continental security perimeter could sacrifice what is left of Canadian sovereignty and independence. This could bring its military, security and foreign policy under the umbrella of a single, U.S.-dominated North American Command.

Dana Gabriel is an activist and independent researcher. He writes about trade, globalization, sovereignty, security, as well as other issues. Contact: beyourownleader@hotmail.com. Visit his blog at beyourownleader.blogspot.com

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 11:06 PM (GMT)

U.S. truckers shocked by agreement with Mexico

U.S. jobs and tax dollars in jeopardy

http://www.ooida.com/MediaCenter/Press_Rel...11/070611.shtml

(Grain Valley, Mo., July 6, 2011) – Small-business truckers and professional truck drivers, represented by the Owner-Operator Independent Drivers Association (OOIDA), are fuming about a move made today by the government. U.S. Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood is signing a cross-border trucking agreement with Mexico without providing the public or Congress with the final details of the agreement.

“If the agreement is good for the U.S. why the hell is he (Secretary LaHood) sneaking down there to sign it?” said Jim Johnston, President of OOIDA. “So much for their supposed transparency. Why not let the public see the details before signing the agreement? Seems like the Administration is dead set on caving to Mexico’s shakedown regardless of the costs to the American public and our tax coffers.”

The Association has adamantly opposed opening the border because Mexico has failed to institute regulations and enforcement programs that are even remotely similar to those in the United States and because there would be no relevant corresponding reciprocity for U.S. truckers.

“People in Washington are constantly talking about two things these days – creating good jobs for Americans and cutting wasteful spending. This program does exactly the opposite for both,” said Todd Spencer, Executive Vice President of OOIDA. “This program will jeopardize the livelihoods of tens of thousands of U.S.-based small-business truckers and professional truck drivers and undermine the standard of living for the rest of the driver community.”

Every year, U.S. truckers are burdened with new safety, security and environmental regulations. Those regulations come with considerable compliance costs. Mexico-domiciled trucking companies do not contend with a similar regulatory regime nor with the corresponding costs.

“U.S. taxpayers have already seen too much of their money wasted as our government has attempted to accommodate trucking companies from Mexico. Yet Mexico has done nothing to raise their trucking industry’s standards or address safety and security issues associated with their trucks crossing into the U. S.” said Spencer.

As far as reciprocal access to the Mexican market, the Association knows that most truckers refuse to haul loads into Mexico because of safety concerns, noting that the Department of State issues warnings against doing so on a regular basis.

OOIDA remains unconvinced that U.S. taxpayers will benefit from supposed efficiencies that proponents of the Obama-Calderon agreement are suggesting will accompany the new program.

A report issued by the Congressional Research Service in February of 2010 stated:

“The rationale of eliminating the truck drayage segment at the border, and of NAFTA in general, is to reduce the cost of trade between the two countries, thus raising each nation’s economic welfare However the cost to federal taxpayers of ensuring Mexican truck safety, estimated by the U.S. DOT to be over $500 million as of March 2008*, appears to be disproportionate to the amount of dollars saved thus far by U.S. importers or exporters that have been able to utilize long-haul trucking authority. . . . Any accumulated savings in trucking costs enjoyed by shippers therefore should be weighed against the public cost of funding the safety inspection regime for Mexican long-haul carriers.”

*The amount cited by the U.S. DOT does not include money spent by other federal and state government entities for drug interdiction, homeland security or immigration enforcement.

OOIDA also notes that trade with Mexico is already healthy and rising without the new trucking program in place. According to the most recent data from the U.S. Department of Transportation’s Bureau of Transportation Statistics, surface transportation with Mexico totaled $32.1 billion in March 2011, up 15.3% compared to March 2010. In fact, truck-borne trade with Mexico was up 22% in March compared with February 2011 and up 15% compared with March of 2010.

Adding insult to injury is the fact that U.S. taxpayer dollars will be used to fund the program including the purchase and installation of electronic monitoring devices for Mexican trucking companies participating in the program. Funding for those devices will come from taxes paid by U.S. truckers and citizens into the Highway Trust Fund, a fund that already is teetering on insolvency.

“How many more taxpayer dollars should we spend on efforts that at best won’t help us and in all likelihood will actually hurt us?” asked Spencer.

The Owner-Operator Independent Drivers Association is the largest national trade association representing the interests of small-business trucking professionals and professional truck drivers. The Association currently has more than 151,000 members nationwide. OOIDA was established in 1973 and is headquartered in the Greater Kansas City, Mo., area.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Yod and the Yoni Worship by Craig Oxley

Title: The Yod and the Yoni Worship by Craig Oxley

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:56 PM (GMT)

Notice the Tie and Collar in the Formal dress of Males. This is the suit of the modern times.

Notice the position of the mythical Jesus on the Cross

Whats going on here exactly? Its all symbolism my friends. This is what its all about:

Y CHROMOSOME

MALES ONLY!

Make sense now?

-Craig Oxley

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:57 PM (GMT)

THE Y CHROMOSOME IN THE STUDY OF HUMAN EVOLUTION, MIGRATION AND PREHISTORY

BY NEIL BRADMAN AND MARK THOMAS
http://www.ucl.ac.uk/tcga/ScienceSpectra-p...pect-14-98.html

Neil Bradman and Mark Thomas of The Centre for Genetic Anthropology at University College London reveal the power of modern genetic analysis for exploring the role of fathers in human history.

IN THE BEGINNING...

Genesis, chapter 5, records "the generations of Adam": Adam begat Seth, Seth begat Enosh, Enosh begat Kenan... down to Noah of the flood (Table 1). Translated into modern genetic terms, the account could read "Adam passed a copy of his Y chromosome (Figure 1) to Seth, Seth passed a copy of his Y chromosome to Enosh, Enosh passed a copy of his Y chromosome to Kenan"... and so on until Noah was born carrying a copy of Adam's Y chromosome. The Y chromosome is paternally inherited; human males have one while females have none. What is more, the Y chromosome a father passes to his son is, in large measure, an unchanged copy of his own.

But small changes (called polymorphisms) do occur, and this article describes how the correct interpretation of these changes in the Y chromosome, when passed down from generation to generation, can illuminate our understanding of human history. The study of Y chromosome differences is still in its infancy: until a few years ago, no polymorphisms had been discovered, and even today relatively few have been described. Studies recording the frequency of different combinations of polymorphisms (haplotypes) are even rarer.

THE Y CHROMOSOME

All human cells, other than mature red blood cells, possess a nucleus which contains the genetic material (DNA) arranged into 46 chromosomes, themselves grouped into 23 pairs In 22 pairs, both members are essentially identical, one deriving from the individual's mother, the other from the father; such pairs are known as autosomes. The 23rd pair is different: while in females this pair has two like chromosomes called "X," in males it comprises one "X" and one "Y," two very dissimilar chromosomes. It is these chromosome differences which determine sex. During the production of sperm and eggs (gametes), the paired chromosomes separate so that each gamete ends up with only one member of each chromosome pair. However, before separation occurs, the paired autosomes swap pieces of their DNA with each other. In women, this exchange process also takes place between the two X chromosomes but, in men, unmatched X and Y chromosomes do not exchange DNA except at the ends of the two chromosomes; these are called the pseudoautosomal regions.

All eggs contain an X chromosome while sperm are of two types: those containing an X chromosome and those containing a Y. Fertilization restores the chromosomes to their normal paired condition. Thus, a Y sperm fertilizing the X egg (remember: all eggs carry only X because females have no Y chromosome) produces an XY zygote (cell produced by union of two gametes) which develops as male; fertilization by an X sperm gives rise to a female XX zygote. Since every male must possess a Y chromosome which can be inherited only from his father, a man's Y chromosome represents a unique record of his paternal inheritance.

There is another form of DNA which follows the female line of inheritance. Outside the nucleus, DNA contained in the energy-producing mitochondria is inherited only through the female line (the sperm's mitochondria are discarded in fertilization), providing its own unique record of female inheritance (Figure 2).

The chromosomes are mainly composed of DNA, that remarkable substance which constitutes "the book of life," the genetic instruction manual written in a four letter alphabet: A (adenine), T (thymine), C (cytosine) and G (guanine). It is these letters we must read to uncover the history recorded in the 60 million letters of the Y chromosome. In the copying of DNA from one generation to the next, mistakes, though rare, are sometimes made. Since the Y chromosome, unlike the autosomes in the other 22 pairs, does not exchange letters with a partner (except for the comparatively small pseudoautosomal regions), those mistakes are the only changes which are passed on to the next generation.

DNA can be classified into two categories: genic, in which the "letters" are involved in the production of the proteins responsible for most of the physical characteristics of each individual organism, and so-called junk which seems to have little apparent purpose. Most (perhaps 98 percent) of the Y chromosome is junk and changes in it are selected neither for nor against. So they are passed on — a record of an event which had no effect on the life of the man in whom the change occurred nor, indeed, on the life of his descendants.

Imagine an island in which over many generations the population numbers remain constant. Some men have sons, some do not: those with sons pass on their Y chromosomes while the Ys of the others are lost to history. It is easy to show that eventually the descendants of only one of the original Y chromosomes (in many copies) survive in the population because, once a particular line dies out, it never reappears. In the Y chromosome's passage through the generations, changes occur randomly in its junk DNA and so the Y chromosomes of the contemporary population retain a record of their passage through time: they can reveal the paternal genealogy of their owners and the relationships between different groups of individuals. For us as genetic anthropologists, that island is the whole world and we are the current generation whose genetic history is open for study.

CHROMOSOME CHANGES

Changes that do occur from generation to generation are of four types:

indels - insertions into or deletions of the DNA at particular locations on the chromosome. One insertion particularly useful in population studies is the YAP, which stands for "Y chromosome alu polymorphism." Alu is a sequence of approximately 300 letters (base pairs) which has inserted itself into a particular region of the DNA. There have been some half a million alu insertions in human DNA; YAP is one of the more recent.
snips - are "single nucleotide polymorphisms" in which a particular nucleotide (an A, for example) is changed (perhaps into a G). Stable indels and snips are relatively rare and, in the case of the latter, so infrequent that it is reasonable to assume they have occurred at any particular position in the genome only once in the course of human evolution. Snips and stable alus have been termed "unique event polymorphisms" (UEPs).
Two other polymorphisms complete the marker set which can be used to unravel all Y chromosome history:

microsatellites are short sequences of nucleotides (such as GATA) repeated over and over again a variable number of times in tandem. The specific number of repeats in a particular variant (or allele) usually remains unchanged from generation to generation but changes do sometimes occur and the number of repeats may increase or decrease.
It is usually assumed that increases or decreases in the number of repeats take place in single steps, for instance from nine repeats to ten, but whether decreases in number are as common as increases has not been established. Changes in microsatellite length occur much more frequently than new UEPs arise. What is more, while we can reasonably assume that a UEP has arisen only once, the number of repeat units in a microsatellite may have changed many times along a paternal lineage.

the fourth polymorphism category is minisatellites, extensively studied by Mark Jobling at the University of Leicester. Unlike microsatellites, in which the repeated sequences are short (often no more than 3 or 4 nucleotides), in minisatellites they are normally 10-60 base pairs long and the number of repeats often extends to several dozen. Changes during the copying process take place more frequently in minisatellites than in microsatellites and the mechanisms may be different in the two cases.
In using polymorphisms to study changes over time, we are fortunate in having markers which change at different rates. Perhaps we can think of the UEPs as the hour hand, the microsatellite polymorphisms as the minute hand and the minisatellites as a sweep second hand of the evolutionary clock. Because most of the Y chromosome does not exchange DNA with a partner, a further benefit of using it to study evolution is that all the markers are joined one to another along its entire length. Such linkage of markers means that a haplotype constructed from a number of different markers records the evolutionary history of the particular Y chromosome on which they are all located.

To illustrate this, imagine (as, in fact, once did happen) that many years ago the Y chromosome of a particular man acquired the YAP insert; we call him YAP+. That man had one or more sons, sons who carried the YAP+ insert on their Y chromosomes. In turn, at least one of the man's sons (a grandson of the original YAP+) had one or more of his own sons... and so the process continued with the number of male offspring increasing until there were many men who had Y chromosomes with YAP+. Imagine further that in one such descendant (as, once again, did in fact happen), an A at one particular place on the Y chromosome was exchanged for a G and that the man in whom this took place also gave rise to an unbroken line of male descendants. There were now individuals in the population with the haplotype YAP+A and others with YAP+G, as well as those without the YAP insert whom we might designate as YAP-A. One of the Y chromosome microsatellites (DYS19) is found in various lengths (alleles) called 11, 12, 13, 14, etc. Thus, the haplotype of a man descended from the individual in whom A was mis-copied to G (who was, in turn, a descendant of the man in whom the YAP+ was inserted), and who has a DYS19 polymorphism of length 14, is described as YAP+ sY81(G) DYS19(14). Haplotypes can be used to construct trees describing the evolutionary history of the Y chromosome; in such evolutionary trees, UEPs provide the trunk and branches, and microsatellites the twigs.

The human Y chromosome has of course an ancestry predating the species it inhabits; haplotypes can also be used to draw evolutionary trees describing the relationships of the Y chromosomes of other primates.

TYPING THE Y

Unfortunately, identifying the haplotype of any particular individual is not as easy as reading the letters on a printed page. Analytical techniques are developing rapidly but a great deal of work is still involved. Obtaining the DNA itself is now relatively simple. Although it can be extracted from blood, cheek cells are just as good and can be collected simply by taking a mouth swab. The cell membranes are disrupted and DNA purified by one of a number of standard procedures. Small pieces of DNA called primers, copies of the nucleotide sequences located on both sides of a polymorphic site, are added to a mixture of the original DNA together with individual nucleotides (A, T, C and G) plus an enzyme called Taq, and the mixture heated and cooled 30-40 times so that multiple copies of the polymorphic loci can be produced (for details of this procedure, the Polymerase Chain Reaction [PCR], see Science Spectra No. 5, p. 50, 1996). The different polymorphic loci are distinguished from each other by their chain lengths, which can be measured using an automatic DNA sequencer (Figure 3).

Once typing is complete, haplotypes may be constructed and differences between them evaluated. Using reasonable assumptions about the rates at which different types of mutations occur, one can estimate a date for the most recent common ancestor (MRCA) of any two or more Y chromosomes, i.e. of any two living individuals. For example, Mike Hammer at the University of Arizona, having sequenced 2,400 bases in the same Y chromosome region from 16 ethnically diverse humans and four chimpanzees, was able to date the common ancestral human Y chromosome at 188,000 years with a 95 percent confidence interval from 51,000 to 411,000 years. The YAP+ insert was dated to 141,000 years before present, with a 95 percent confidence interval of 29,000 years to 340,000 years. In a different study published in the same issue of Nature, Whitfield et al. in Cambridge interpreted data from sequencing 18,300 bases obtained from five ethnically diverse humans and a chimpanzee to give an MRCA time of between 37,000 and 49,000 years before present; in other words, those five men had a common great, great....great-grandfather some 40,000 or 50,000 years ago.

Where a significant number of individuals (usually more than 50) in a population have been analyzed, the frequency of occurrence of different haplotypes can be used both to distinguish populations and to shed light on the sub-structures within a population.

Not only does a new UEP arise on a particular Y chromosome at a particular time and in a particular person, it begins its history in the company of certain pre-existing microsatellite alleles. When a new UEP arises in a certain man, perhaps microsatellite DYS19 has a particular length. As the new UEP is copied from generation to generation, so too is DYS19. The UEP does not change but, albeit not very often, DYS19 does,perhaps increasing, perhaps decreasing in length. The longer the time since the UEP arose, the greater will be the number of different DYS19 alleles. Such a process differentiates one population from another; all things being equal, the more closely two populations display common haplotype frequencies, the more closely related is their biological history likely to be. Three examples illustrate these possibilities.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN LEMBA

The Lemba (Figure 4) are a black Southern African Bantu-speaking population who assert Jewish ancestry. Claiming Jewish origins is not an unusual phenomenon: the myth of the lost tribes is a powerful story and many groups have either claimed to be the descendants of one or other of the tribes or have been put forward for that honor.

The Lemba make no such grandiose claim but their oral history records an origin "in the north" as craftsmen in metalwork who traveled south to trade. Professor Mathivha of the University of the North, himself a Lemba, suggests an origin amongst Jewish traders in the Yemen. In a migration such as this, men and women may not have been equally represented amongst the travelers. In fact, Lemba tradition has it that at one time men left behind at a trading station received news of the fall of their homeland, took local wives, settled down and developed into the groups living today. If that, or something like it, were actually the case, we should expect to see more evidence of a non-Bantu origin in the paternally inherited Y chromosomes of the Lemba than in either their maternally-inherited mitochondrial DNA or their mixed autosomes. Intriguingly, half or more of the Lemba Y chromosomes are reported to have a Semitic origin although it is uncertain whether they were inherited from Jewish or Arab traders. Future interpretation will depend, in part, on the extent to which, if at all, it proves possible to differentiate the Y chromosomes of Jewish and Arab populations.

THE JEWISH PRIESTS

A study in collaboration with Karl Skorecki, a nephrologist at the Rambam Medical Centre in Haifa, and Mike Hammer, looked at Jewish priests (Cohanim; singular Cohen). Cohanim are not the same as Rabbis; the latter are appointed functionaries while members of the priestly class inherit their position through the male line. In biblical tradition, Aaron (Figure 5), the brother of Moses, was the first priest: God awarded the priesthood to him - and his sons. In other words, the priesthood passes with the Y chromosome and there is no legitimate way in which a non-priest can become a priest. We reasoned that if oral tradition had been faithfully maintained, with the priesthood being passed, by and large, from father to son throughout the generations, an island of Y chromosomes of Jewish priests would have been created set within, but separated from, a sea of non-priests.

Applying what we knew about Y chromosome polymorphisms, two markers were selected for analysis. The first was a UEP which, we postulated, should, if the oral tradition had been maintained, be more homogeneous within the priestly group than in other Jews. This would be so because the Jewish population as a whole is likely to contain a variety of Y chromosomes contributed by men from many different communities converting to Judaism. Furthermore, since a Jew is defined as the son of a Jewess, the Y chromosomes, even of non-Jews, could enter the Jewish population. We also selected a microsatellite known to have a number of common alleles because, we argued, over time the microsatellite would have evolved independently in both the priestly Y chromosomes and those of the non-priests. In addition, as we have just noted, the non-priest Y chromosome pool would have been augmented by new entrants. As a consequence, we anticipated that the distribution of allele frequencies in the two populations might well be different. Of course, there are likely to have been some mistakes over time - men who forgot their father's priestly status, cases of false paternity and so on but, if the oral tradition had been maintained, a difference between the two populations should be observable.

Having constructed haplotypes using the YAP+, a UEP and the microsatellite DYS19, we noted the frequency of each haplotype in putative priests (Cohanim) and non-priests in both the Ashkenazic and non-Ashkenazic communities who, prior to the creation of the modern State of Israel, had occupied different geographical regions for 500 years or more. Using a simple statistical test (known as the 2 test), it was possible to distinguish the priestly from the non-priestly populations in both communities, suggesting that the oral tradition had indeed been maintained.

IN ANCIENT TIMES

So far we have considered only the analysis of DNA obtained from our contemporaries and suggested ways in which we might deduce past history from an interpretation of those data. However, there are direct routes to the past: DNA can be extracted from ancient remains (see "Digging into the Past with DNA" in Science Spectra No. 6, p. 64, 1996) and human Y chromosomes from the Neolithic have now been typed. Marina Faerman and her colleagues at the Hadassah Medical School in Jerusalem adopted this approach to identify the sex of infant skeletons too young and incomplete to be classified in any other way. They took advantage of the fact that the amelogenin gene exists in two forms, the one on the X chromosome being different in length from the one on Y. Small portions of cautical bones, cranial bones and teeth were crushed to powder and decalcified; DNA was purified, copied by PCR using primers flanking the region, and the size of the products was measured by a technique known as agarose gel electrophoresis. Since Y chromosomes yield fragments 218 base pairs long while X chromosome products contain 330 base pairs, they should be clearly distinguishable: if the specimen yields the shorter gene, it must come from a Y chromosome fragment and thus from a male.

Would that the process were as straightforward as it sounds! In ancient remains, DNA is often degraded so that continuous fragments are no longer present and cannot be copied. In addition, substances may be present which inhibit both purification and amplification. But Faerman overcame these difficulties and obtained positive results from 18 separate specimens.

A further problem she faced was the risk of incorrectly identifying a skeleton as female when really it was male. This could arise if the Y chromosome DNA were so degraded that copies could not be made of the relevant 218-base pair fragment but were successfully obtained from the 330-base pair X chromosome sequence present in the same sample. Classification of a skeleton as male requires both products to be identified while a female skeleton should be expected to yield only the longer fragment. Faerman and her colleagues argued that the risk of misclassification was low since the longer X chromosome sequence would be more likely to be degraded than the shorter Y chromosome fragment. In addition, experiments undertaken under controlled conditions indicated that false positive readings are more likely than false negatives.

WE OURSELVES

On a personal note, we must say that there is something moving in feeding into a database one's own detailed Y chromosome haplotype and finding in that database a dozen or so relatives of the paternal line, members of far-flung populations, men whom one has never met, who know nothing of one's own existence but who, nevertheless, share a common ancestor not so long ago. The father of one of the author's daughter's best friends turned out to have a Y chromosome matching the author's own although neither knew in detail how they might be paternally related. The case of the other author, who probably derives from ancient Celtic stock, is even more remarkable. His Y chromosome haplotype has thus far been found only in two other individuals: one is his prospective Swedish father-in-law, the other a native of Turkey. But then, if we go back far enough, all men are not only born equal but are paternally related.

Suggested Reading

Cavalli-Sforza, L.L. and Cavalli-Sforza, F. The Great Human Diasporas: the History of Diversity and Evolution, Addison-Wesley Publishing Co., Reading, MA (1995).

Jobling, M.A. and Tyler-Smith, C. "Fathers and Sons: the Y Chromosome and Human Evolution," Trends in Genetics, 11, 449-456 (1995).

Skorecki, K. et al. "Y Chromosomes of the Jewish Priests," Nature, 385, 32 (1997).

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:57 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Codes for computing

In Unicode the capital Y is codepoint U+0059 and the lowercase y is U+0079.

The ASCII code for capital Y is 89 and for lowercase y is 121; or in binary 01011001 and 01111001, correspondingly.

The EBCDIC code for capital Y is 232 and for lowercase y is 168.

The numeric character references in HTML and XML are "Y" and "y" for upper and lower case respectively.

QUOTE

Y is the twenty-fifth letter of the Latin alphabet. It also has the following meanings.

Science
In astronomy,
Y stands for an hypothetical ultra-cool brown dwarf class of stars.
Y stands for a December 16 through 31 discovery, in the provisional designation of a comet (e.g. C/1823 Y1, the Great Comet of 1823) or asteroid (e.g. (4324) 1981 YA1).
In biochemistry, Y is the symbol for tyrosine.
In chemistry, Y is the symbol for yttrium.
In color models,
Y stands for the color yellow in the CMYK color model.
Y stands for luminance in many color models used for television broadcast, such as YIQ and YUV.
In electrical engineering, Y is the symbol for admittance, the inverse of impedance.
In genetics,
Y denotes the Y chromosome.
In sex, XY denotes male in the XY sex-determination system.
Haplogroup Y (mtDNA) is a human mitochondrial DNA (mtDNA) haplogroup.
In the SI system,
Y, yotta is the SI prefix meaning 1024.
y, yocto is the SI prefix meaning 10-24.

[edit] Mathematics
y commonly denotes the dependent variable.
y is the usual symbol for the variable represented on the vertical axis (ordinate, or Y-axis) in analytic geometry.
In combinatory logic, Y is the name of a well known fixed point combinator.

[edit] Computing
Y Window System is a proposed development of the X Window System.
In command line interpreters like 4DOS, y is a command to concatenate the output of two or more streams.
In SketchUp, y is the green axis.
In Internet slang and text messaging, Y (or y) often stands for why due to the similarity in pronunciation.
In programming languages, is the Y programming language

[edit] Places
Y is the name of a place in Alaska; see Y, Alaska.
Y is the name of a commune in the Somme département of France; see Y, Somme.
As the first letter of a postal code, in Canada, Y stands for the Yukon.

[edit] Other uses
In comic books, Y: The Last Man is the title of a DC comics series by Brian K. Vaughan.
In economics, Y is used to represent income.
In film, Y is the name of a 1987 Swedish film; see Y (film).
In finance, Y is the U.S. ticker symbol for Alleghany Corporation.
In games, Y is the name of a modern board game, played on a triangle-shaped board; see Y (game).
In music, Y is the debut album by Bristol-based post-punk band The Pop Group.
In scheduled air transport, Y is used to refer to economy class seating (first class is F).
In sociology, Y refers to Generation Y.
In World War II, Y referred to a listening service headquartered at Beaumanor Hall.
"The Y" is short for:
the YMCA, or sometimes the YWCA.
the YMHA or YWHA.
Brigham Young University (BYU) or the large "Y" made of stones on the mountain overlooking BYU.

Now folks remember Yod Hey Vav Hey in Hebrew? What is Yod? Its PHALLIC!

QUOTE

792 3 THE YOD IS THE POINT WITHIN A CIRCLE
792 6 THE YOD IS HOLY (IT IS SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND CREATOR)
15 1-2 THE YOD IS THE 'G', UNHOLY TRINITY, POINT WITHIN A CIRCLE
287 3 THE 'G' OR YOD IS THE NAME OF THE GOD OF MASONRY
323 1 THE YOD CREATED THE UNIVERSE AND COMPLETES THE UNHOLY TRINITY 402 1 THE PHALLUS IS THE MASONIC SYMBOL FOR CREATION
632 1 THE 'G' OR YOD IS THE NAME OF THE MASONIC DEITY
763 11-12 THE YOD (PHALLUS) IS THE CREATOR AND FATHER OF ALL
771 7 ADAM IS GOD IN HUMAN FORM AND IS A PHALLIC IMAGE
792 6 THE YOD IS HOLY (IT IS SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND CREATOR
402 2 MASONS HONOR AND CONSECRATE THE PHALLUS
772 2 WOMAN IS MAN'S CREATION. MAN IS THE CREATOR (YOD)
427 2 THE ANCIENT MYSTERIES THAT ARE MASONRY WORSHIP THE PHALLUS
http://home.computer.net/~cya/cy00028.html

Incidentally Y in Hebrew = 10 any relationship to Akhenaton?

In Braille Y looks like this:

Heres the hand symbol:

Now notice something thrown by 5th Degree Witch Barbara Bush whos married to SMOM Papal Knight George Herbert Walker Bush and a member of the Council of 13:

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:00 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

The Meaning of Yod as Ten

The word (yod) means “arm” or “hand” and the numeric value is ten. Now ten is a number marking shelemut, or completion and order, as evidenced by the following:

The base 10 number system is universal. Just as Yod is part of all of the previous letters of the alphabet (as a component), so Yod is part of all of the numbers. It is said by the sages the Yod does not mean 10 because we have ten toes and fingers but we have ten toes and fingers because Yod means 10.

There were ten things created on the first day and ten things created at the end of the sixth day of creation.

There were ten generations from Adam to Noah, suggesting that the godlessness of those generations was made complete.

There were ten generations from Noah to Abraham, suggesting that the godliness of those generations was made complete.

According to midrash, there were ten trials given to Abraham to demonstrate his merit as the father of the nations.

There were ten plagues issued during the Exodus of Egypt.

God gave us Ten Commandments.

The “tenth part” shall be holy for the LORD (Leviticus 27:32).

There are ten days of Awe - from Tishri 1 to Tishri 10, culminating in Yom Kippur, which occurs on the 10th day of Tishri.

Ten men are required for a minyan, or complete quorum needed for Jewish corporate prayer.

(Jewish mysticism) There are ten forces of the “Tree of Life,” called Sefirot, that depict the metaphysical working of God in the universe.

http://www.hebrew4christians.com/Grammar/U...et/Yod/yod.html

QUOTE

792 3 THE YOD IS THE POINT WITHIN A CIRCLE

Notice if you look at a Maypole from a birdseye view its a dot and the people make up the Circle.

QUOTE

Yod (astrology)

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
Jump to: navigation, search
This is about the astrological yod. For other uses, see Yod (disambiguation)
In astrology a yod is said to form whenever one planet forms quincunxes (150° aspects) to two other planets that are separated by a sextile (60° aspect). The Hebrew word for "hand", it is also used to denote the silver pointing device used in Judaism for reading sacred texts. This term is used to denote the "pointer" shape of the three planets, when lines are drawn from each planet to the centre of the radix. The two planets in the sextile, being in complementary elements (fire and air or earth and water) work very well together, but the sign to which both of them are quincunx is of a dissimilar element to the other two and possesses characteristics that tend to be extremely incompatible with those of the other two signs. This third planet is pulling in an opposite direction from the other two and would like to resolve, but the astrological energies of the signs are so vastly different that they do not notice each other.[citation needed] Often, this is compared with "ships passing in the night".

However, unlike with a grand cross the conflict is much less apparent because the two planets in sextile cannot understand the third and it serves to create a situation which can be analogised to a coma. It is felt that the individual cannot see the conflicts involved and thus is not likely to be able to deal with them as productively as with a grand cross.[citation needed]

A hypothetical example of a yod would be with Jupiter at 11° Pisces quincunxing Mars at 11° Leo and the Sun at 11° Libra. The conflict arises between the worldly, sociable character of Leo and Libra which tend to seek inspiration in the world, versus the introverted, unworldly character of Pisces which is too sensitive to be able to cope with worldly life and aims to work in the background serving others. These energies do not interact and hence this hypothetical native would possess great difficulty making the choice between serving others and seeking inspiration on the social stage.

Golden Yod
Related to the Yod, though much less inharmonious and more rarely noticed, is the golden yod. A golden yod occurs when one planets forms biquintiles (144° aspect) to two others separated by a quintile (72° aspect). Because these aspects are seen as benefic, the golden yod is seen as benefic and often as reflecting characteristics acquired by the person whose chart contains it.

An example of a golden yod would be with Mars at 18° Cancer, the Moon at 6° Taurus and Jupiter at 12° Sagittarius.

Retrieved from "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Yod_%28astrology%29"

QUOTE

CHURCH

The word church is not in the original Bible. The word church comes from the old English and Germanic word kirke, (pronounced "keer - kay"), and which itself came from the Babylonian for the goddess Circe (pronounced "seer-say"). This is the word from which we get circle, circumference, circumstance, circumvent, etc. The goddess Circe was thought to be connected with the power of the sun, which is round, and thus the connection to Circe, a circle. In anglo-saxon history, the pagans worshipped the sun standing in a kirke, a circle. These pagan worshippers became known as the circle, or the kirke, then ultimately the church. Yes, pagans were called the church before Christians were called the church. Therefore, church means, at the least, a pagan circle for worship, and at the worst, the worship of the goddess Circe, or the worship of the sun.

It was a direct willful act of English translators in the 1500's to translate the Greek word ekklesia as church. They did this, most probably, because the pagans who accepted some form of Christianity retained the word church from their pagan circle to refer to their Christian meeting. They called ekklesia church in order to keep a conceptual link between paganism and Christianity. Ekklesia actually means called out. Every instance in your English Bible where you see the name church it should be called out, or called out ones. Now, consider this:

(Exo 23:13 KJV) "And in all things that I have said unto you be circumspect: and make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth."

We are commanded not to even mention the names of other gods! What does that portend for the ubiquitous use of the word church, which is the name of a pagan god? And to add insult to injury, notice how the King James says, "be circumspect" which is a form of the root Circe! Actually the word in Hebrew is shamar, which means to guard against. The L-RD has commanded us to guard against the mention of any other god, not to make a circle against it. See how far we have been from the truth! G-d help us.

Once we know this we cannot do it anymore. The word church is not in the Bible and it is from the name of a pagan god, and to me that means it is off the list of acceptable verbage, especially in defining or identifying any form of the people of G-d. The people of the One True G-d are not and cannot be the church.

This has been done in ignorance by most, but knowlingly by many in the pulpit, who have been afraid, apathetic, or just too pathetic to tell the truth. If we continue to do this once knowing, then we show ourselves to love our language, our traditions, and our religion, rather than loving G-d. Remember, there is a demon by the name of Circe who is somewhere watching and enjoying the game that has been played. To let that demon have any glory is a dishonor to the One True G-d. But there is an even worse crime.

The Hebrew word for ekklesia is miqra. The Septuagint, which is the Greek text of the Hebrew scriptures, was translated by a council of rabbis long before Yeshua came. They chose the Greek word ekklesia to translate the Hebrew word miqra for one good reason: they mean exactly the same thing -- called out. Miqra is the word that the English Bibles usually translate as convocation, as in "it shall be a holy convocation unto you" (Lev. 23:36). So in the Old Testament the phrase called out is translated as convocation and in the New Testament the same phrase is translated as church. However, they are the same, but because of the different English words they are made to seem different from each other. The entire concept of the church is based on this willful deception, making the doctrine of the church, as traditionally put forth, a false doctrine. This makes the Apostles Creed section which states,"We believe in the holy catholic church," a pledge to a lie.

The fact of the original language Bible texts is, that there is no difference between the people of the Most High in the Old or New Testaments. The called out are the called out. G-d has one name for all who are His, and there is no difference in His view. Yeshua did NOT start something new when He said, "I will build my called out, and the gates hell will not prevail against them." Yeshua was only affirming what He had said all along. "Come out from among them (the world) says the L-RD and touch not the unclean thing."

The original language does not support the formation of a new institution apart from Israel. The building up of the called out is the purifying of Israel; the fulfilling of the promises to Israel. Israel shall succeed. Hell will not overcome it. Messiah was promising to see to that!

The centuries long attempt by the church (now you really know who that is) to divorce itself from Israel, and even to destroy Israel, is fruit enough to show that what is called the church is not what Yeshua, the Lion of Judah, had in mind. It should shake us to the foundations. One can only suppose there has been a conspiratorial rebellion against the truth. At least the Faithful should no longer be a part of perpetuating a lie.

Now this is just the beginning of errors, but I think a great one. More revelations of translation error will be forthcoming here, and if you have any to add, please e-mail me at: mbi@[nospam] messianic.com.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:00 PM (GMT)

Now from the Male we go to the Female:

 YONI **

You should be able to see the Vagina within these pictures:

Figure 187.

QUOTE

The word yoni (Sanskrit •••• yoni) is the Sanskrit word for "Divine Passage" ,"Place of birth","Womb"(more as nature as a womb and cradle of all creations) or "sacred Temple" (cf. lila). The Ayurveda, or Science of Life, described yoni as a part of the female anatomy. Here the term was meant as a designation of respect for women who gave birth, thus contributing to the continuation of the community. It is from here that the grave misinterpretation of yoni by some Western historians and philosophers to mean vulva or vagina in all contexts, arose. The word also has a wider meaning in both profane and spiritual contexts, covering a range of meanings of "place of birth, source, origin, spring, fountain, place of rest, repository, receptacle, seat, abode, home, lair, nest, stable" (Monier-Williams) The yoni is also considered to be symbolic of Shakti or other goddesses of a similar nature.

Because of its polysemy, Yoni is perhaps the most misused and misunderstood Sanskrit word.

In addition, Yoni is a popular hebrew name short for éåðúï in hebrew. Yonatan Netanyahu is perhaps the most famous Yoni whom many are named after for his heroic actions.

Historical perspective

Lingam-Yonis have been recovered from the archeological sites at Harappa and Mohenjo-daro which were centers of the Indus Valley Civilization.

The ancient Aryans were a community that, through centuries of development, realized advances in a wide range of fields ranging from astrology to agriculture. The accumulated wisdom of this people, as well as their guidelines for living, was set down in an ancient set of records known as the Vedas. These four Vedas bore the names Rigveda, Yajurveda, Samaveda, and Atharvaveda.

These ancient Vedas contain the word yoni in various contexts. The original meaning of yoni was "Divine Passage". A child was considered to be born from a yoni of stars - constellations that prevailed during the child birth. The Aryans had identified some 50,000 astrological yonis that favour a child's birth.

The term yoni was also used in agricultural references by the Aryans. A fertile yoni meant a good harvest of crops.

Yonic is to vaginal as phallic is to penile.

According to Hindu-belief, a man has three destinations in after-life depending upon his Gunas(qualities)in the previous life. These three Gunas are Sato-guna (highest virtue), Rajo-guna (medium virtue) and Tamo-guna (Lowest Virtue). The man with Sato-guna enters the heavens(mokhsha) whereas the man with Tamo-guna enters the hell. The man with Rajo-guna is sent back to the earth to again complete a cycle of birth and death.

Further, depending upon his Rajo-guna, a person may again be born as a Human or can take birth in a lower species than Human. For this, his soul passes through 8.4 Million Yonis before it takes birth as a man. Each of these 8.4 Million specifies a specie like fish, bird, insect etc. If the Rajo-gunas are higher, chances of re-birth as human are higher. If the Rajo-gunas are of lower nature, the soul will enter the body of a species corresponding to that Rajo-guna.

Yonic Symbols

The term yoni is also the basis for the Western-used adjective yonic, which is the counterpart to the term phallic. Examples of yonic symbolism can be seen in Georgia O'Keefe's flower paintings.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Yonic_symbol

Friends, religion is simply SEX, CREATION, ASTRO-THEOLOGY and BIO CHEMISTRY such as the interaction of Alkaloid Plants and Mushrooms such as Amanita Muscaria. When people say thats the Catholic Version or that religion not ours their in denial as their faith is being destroyed. We're entering the new age and just as Moses destroyed the age of the Bull for the age of the Ram the same is now being done with Jesus as we now enter into Aquarius. When religious folk claim its in revelations and so forth whats happening its simply because its an encoded blueprint deep down and its just being followed on as its always done.

Wake Up People!

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:01 PM (GMT)

One Penis (Yod/Phallic) entering the Female head of the mushroom.

[dohtml]<IMG SRC="http://i105.photobucket.com/albums/m202/anunnaki_2006/Amanita_muscariaB.jpg" WIDTH="300" HEIGHT="350">[/dohtml]

The HERMAPHRODITE, A Phallic (Yod), Vagina (Yoni) and one BREAST (The fully expanded head of the Mushroom).

[dohtml]<IMG SRC="http://i105.photobucket.com/albums/m202/anunnaki_2006/amanita-muscaria.jpg" WIDTH="350" HEIGHT="350"> [/dohtml]

Notice the little skirt on the Phallic area?

[dohtml]<IMG SRC="http://i105.photobucket.com/albums/m202/anunnaki_2006/aman.jpg" WIDTH="400" HEIGHT="350"> [/dohtml]

[dohtml]<embed style="width:400px; height:326px;" id="VideoPlayback" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" src="http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docId=5164705298671448349" flashvars="" width="128" height="128">[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:01 PM (GMT)

S O M A

QUOTE

However, the whole debate was rekindled by R. Gordon Wasson during the late 1960s when he proposed a new candidate for soma - the fly-agaric mushroom. The arguments he put forward are complex; suffice it to say that many distinguished orientalists and other scholars accepted his thesis.

The Cross is a SUN symbol my friends. Without the SUN we'd all be dead and certainly no SOMA or Mushrooms would grow. Now notice the Colouring of the ENGLISH flag (Do not compare it with that bastardised slavish Brit-ish [yiddish] Union Jack).

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:02 PM (GMT)

Rings are YONIs, the female organ awaiting the PHALLIC YOD Fingers to enter. Did you notice whats part of the Fertility Ritual of Marriage? RINGS! This is also due to you being married infront of your god EL or whats known as The Planet Saturn.

The Saturnalian Brotherhood
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=14789

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:06 PM (GMT)

LIVE EARTH
THE CONCERTS FOR A CLIMATE IN CRISIS

Heres another Yod and Yoni above for you.

Heres some well known names and their logos. Notice the Yod entering the Yoni. The Airwick and Lidl are very sneaky. Notice how these two have all the letters in upper case but then have the lower case "l"?????? Usually you will see the dot (a Yod itself) highlighted. -Craig Oxley

NASA

AFFINITY
Care Training

Look at your TV my friends now find this button:

It's the YOD going into the YONI and you know what happens next during sex don't you?

The ORGASM before CREATION! Remember also folks that just that millisecond prior to this your left and right hemisphere parts of the brain align which is great for Mind Control.

Now what have you created from that big bang?

You've now powered up and ready to watch!

YAHWEH - is not the name of God in Hebrew, it's an expressing term such as the release of energy. In the ancient Hebrew the release of dynamic energy was called Yahweh. It's always been associated with sex. In the ancient Caananite system, the Orgasm was known as being at one with Yahweh (the explosion of Divine creativity), thats why our Jewish physicists told us our Universe came into existance by a big bang, an explosion.

Notice folks how the six YOD, enters into the YONI in this news logo? Remember that the YONI is the upside down Triangle, Circle, Water/any vessel on it and also the 'U' shape. -Craig Oxley

Oh look at what we see at the new national Armed Forces Memorial in Alrewas, Staffordshire. Notice how it cost six million, yes that creative number six again.

The YOD and the YONI

Hugo Boss XY for him and XX for her. So here we have the Y for him whilst getting three X's known as the 666, the number of CREATION. This is why we see it on love letters as kisses and pornographic material known as the xxx industry. Nothing satanic and evil as the Solar Cult have made out so just to suppress the true underpinning of sex/fertility and creation. The only thing remotely satanic is the fact that Satan is the Planet Saturn in reality and it's the sixth planet from the Sun.

Notice the highlighting of the Y in a clever subliminal that actually contridicts somewhat what it's supposed to be about. Notice the Y has a phallic inside it? Well yes male-male but think about it for a minute. The 'v' part of the Y is a female and the phallic is entering the 'v' this is the same for a 'u' shape, all the female. Now remember that TV is also a 222 if you take the T as 20 in the English Alphabet and V is 22 so we get 2022.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:06 PM (GMT)

So we have a Maypole:

This as already spoken about, symbolises the Phallus whilst the spinning around circle is the female. The Phallus is embedded into the Earth which is Gaia and female. Now the Pole symbolises the union of both sexes just as the letter U does which brings together the two J's once reflecting on itself. This is the Generative Principle. Now if you realise that the letter P or Pei is the male phallic which enters the female and it's sperm searchs for the egg which is the O as is the vagina itself. Once an egg is fertilised it becomes a Q. This is why you say 'Thank You' when infact your saying 'Thank Q.' It's all sex my friends along with planet worship and so forth all encoded into a system you do not see. So you have the word Pole made up of P the phallic, O the egg and LE which comes to Q(17) this giving us the plan of action so to speak. Now when your pregnant you become a B and this letter was used to make the word Bred or Breed in this act. You will then utilise an R which is the water breaking then finally give BIRTH. So you can see now where we get the Birds and the Bee's from. Birds is a BR which comes with the Breed, Bred whilst Be is the pregnancy representing the carrying of Horus by his mother. Now the Bee goes around and creates life in the plant kingdom and helps keep us all alive via POL-LEnation, you see the POLE there again? Remember the P or Pei being the male phallus? Well remember thats a PEnis. You SPELL your words with a PEn or a PEncil and words are swords which are spokes to the wheel or Circle which is THE WORD! Whats really interesting is that the Pei (P) comes from the G flipped 180 degrees. Now a P flipped 180 degrees makes a d so what do we get? A 'gd' and what does that remind you of? The G-D or should I say GOD!

So what do you see in this logo above? It's the H which once again is equal to the Female or circle. You then have typically lower case i for the phallus which itself represents both male and female. Notice the dot coloured blue for the Moon or Isis! You have the Q which is the fertilisation. Easy when you know how!

Anyone remember Q from James Bond? Where did he do? He worked for the R&D division of MI5. The D stands for Development and this is whats happening when the Egg is fertilised (Q).

Notice how we have OPQR in that order within the English alphabet. Theres the egg, penis, fertilised egg then water breaking and Birth.

All in a days work haha
Craig Oxley

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:06 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="355"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/06PXIPFrgeg"></param><param name="wmode" value="transparent"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/06PXIPFrgeg" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="355"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=06PXIPFrgeg

Notice the phallic Yod 'i' which is also important as it's a Yoni also with the dot of the 'i', a kind of Hermaphrodite. Note the dot is of the female egg which represent the numbers 6 and 15, the later being the sacred number of Lucifer. Now see when the dot of the phallic, possibly representing semen in flight is shot off. It gets shot onto a spring which is of a female U shape which represents the Luciferian 5. The semen then travels and hits a rotating mixer which is spinning in a circular feminine motion. I cannot tell if the motion is clockwise or anti-clockwise but remember that Venus has an anti-clockwise rotation. In order for this mixer to be working it needs Saturnalian ELectricity which comes from the Saturnalian square plug usually containing the Trinity; earth, live and neutral. The colours for live and neutral are red and blue, this ties in with Horus and Set, also Mars and Moon/Venus. Note how the earth is usually wired with a green and yellow themselves links to Venus and Mercury. Remember Mercury is Hermes and Venus is Aphrodite thus making the divine Hermaphrodite linked to the Earth.

We then see the lightening or discharge which is symbolism of chaos mostly linked with Marduk. What comes after Marduk destroys Tiamet? Water and after thunder and lighting what comes next? Rains of Lucifer. Note how thunder is symbolism of speaking with the Gods. We could take this from the sexual symbolism of this video as being one with Yahweh as in the orgasm itself during the sexual act of the Generative Principle. Remember the Generative Principle is the root of two, the square of El the God of the Canaanites. We then see the mixer phallic bring about the life from its tip to another younger phallic. This then shoots semen at the original phallic knocking it over. This reveals a Luciferian green female Yoni facing it directly. The new phallic then fires at the mixer. Is this symbolism of old life making way for the new continuing life? You then notice this phallic turn into a look a like human phallic with bELl end. He then fires his semen at the screen which itself looks like the contents of an egg which again is symbolism of the female but also life. Now note how the screen is glass and how glass is seen as the female linked to the moon goddess Isis. This is linked in with the reflection of her light upon the waters. This is why Alice the female uses the Looking Glass also symbolising the transferance of the soul. We should note the twister part which is many circles of Lucifer as such but linked to her the same due to the spirals. It says 'Its no creme egg' now remember in order to get life within the egg you need the creme/semen haha.

Just a quick set of thoughts

CRAIG OXLEY

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:08 PM (GMT)

The security council in the UN building

BLADE II

THE FEMALE IS TO ENTER THE FEMININE CIRCLE (YONI) OF LUCIFER
THEY ENTER THE CENTER BEING WHERE THE MALE YOD RESIDES
ALL CREATING THE ANCIENT SOLAR/FERTILITY SYMBOL
ONCE AGAIN THE CIRCLE IS SQUARED OFF

NOW WE SEE THE FEMININE BURNT UP BY OSIRIS
THE SUN PHALLIC IN THE CENTER LEAVING ONLY THE MALE BLACK DOT PRESENT WITHIN THE CIRCLE

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:10 PM (GMT)

user posted image

The "frosh-soph brawl" was an annual event at Loyola University during which sophomores defended a greased pole with a cap on top of it. Freshmen tried to climb the moat-surrounded hill and retrieve the cap. The location for this "sport" was an empty field on the southeast side of campus. This photo, taken in 1953, was submitted by Terence G. Obrien, DDS [SciEng '54].

user posted image
user posted image

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:12 PM (GMT)

THE PINEAL GLAND

ESPECIALLY WHEN COLOURED IN BLUE

THIS IS A SEXUAL STIMULATE SYMBOL

AS WE KNOW ALSO LINKED TO SEX AS YOD/YONI

--

The Queen with her Crown:

Symbolises this:

user posted image

THE SUN AND THE CROWN - IT'S KETHER

- GOD -

NOW THE SWASTIKA EVOLVES FROM THE

BEING THE MALE AND FEMALE:

GENERATIVE PRINCIPLE

ALSO THE PRANA ENTERING THE CROWN AND

FIRING UP THE THIRD EYE PINEAL GLAND (CIRCLE/DOT)

AS THE PRANA TRAVELS DOWN THE SPINAL COLUMN VERTICAL AXIS

FIRING UP THE OTHER 5 CHAKRAS TO THE ROOT OF SATURN BEFORE

EXITING TO GROUND THROUGH THE FEET ON THE EARTH

LINKED ALSO WITH:

THE CUBE OF PERFECTION

THE BEAUTIFUL NUMBER SIX OF THE SUN

AND THE NUMBER TEN

NOW NOTE HOW THE SCEPTRE & ORB REPRESENT

THE PLANET JUPITER (ENLIL)

IN ALL IT'S MAJESTY AND MAGNIFICANCE

REMINDS ME OF THIS:

NOW THE QUEEN RULES HER KINGDOM

ITSELF LINKED TO THE NUMBER 10

AND THAT MAGICKAL CIRCLE

OF DIVINITY

USUALLY SIZED IN FEET TO THE SQUARING OF THREE

GIVING COMPLETION NINE FEET

A MERE REFLECTION OF PERFECTION SIX

SHE IS DIVINE THIS IS WHY SHE'S ON THIS:

ARE YOU NOW GETTING THE PICTURE WHEN

THEY SPEAK OF 6 6 6 AND THE HOLY SUN CROWN?

REMEMBER THE CIRCLE IS OF THE 36 (3X6)

CROWN COMES FROM GREEK CHRONOS

MEANING TIME AND THE:

PLANET SATURN

---

soulinspiration - December 8, 2010 12:11 PM (GMT)

The Mystical Significance of the Hebrew Letters - Yud

http://www.inner.org/hebleter/yud.htm

QUOTE

The Hebrew Letters
Yud: The Infinite Point

The letter yud, a small suspended point, reveals the spark of essential good hidden within the letter tet. Subsequent to the initial tzimtzum, the contraction of G-d's Infinite light in order to make "place" for Creation, there remained within the empty void a single, potential point or "impression." The secret of this point is the power of the Infinite to contain finite phenomena within Himself and express them to apparent external reality. Finite manifestation begins from a zero-dimensional point, thereafter developing into a one-dimensional line and two-dimensional surface. This is alluded to in the full spelling of the letter yud (yud-vav-dalet): "point" (yud), "line" (vav), "surface" (dalet). These three stages correspond in Kabbalah to: "point" (nekudah), "spectrum" (sefirah), "figure" (partzuf). The initial point, the essential power of the yud, is the "little that holds much." The "much" refers to the simple Infinity of G-d hidden within the initial point of revelation, which reflects itself as the Infinite potential of the point to develop and express itself in all the manifold finite phenomena of time and space.

Before the tzimtzum, the power of limitation was hidden, latent within G-d's Infinite Essence. Following the tzimtzum, this power of limitation became revealed, and paradoxically the Infinite Essence of G-d that originally "hid" the power of limitation now Itself became hidden (not in truth, but only from our limited human perspective) within the point of contracted light.

From within this point of limitation is revealed the secret of the ten sefirot, the Divine channels of light through which G-d continually brings His world into being. Ten, the numerical value of the yud, is also the number of commandments (literally "statements") revealed by G-d to His People Israel at Sinai. All the commandments, and in fact every letter of Torah, possess the power of the "little that holds much"; each is a channel for the revelation of G-d's Infinite Light in finite reality.

FORM

A "formed" point: a crown above and a "pathway" below.
The smallest of the letters; The only letter suspended in midair.

Worlds:

The "pathway" of the yud; The initial point of space and time.
Natural wisdom: "The wisdom of Solomon."
Direction and purpose: the consciousness of the present moment.

Souls:

The "body" of the yud; The enwedged point.
"The wisdom of G-d" as manifest in the judgment of Solomon.
The power of self-nullification.

Divinity:

The crown of the yud above; The unenwedged point.
"The wisdom of G-d" inspiring and directing Solomon's genius.
Revealed Omnipresence; The beginning and end of every letter (form).

NAME

Hand; to thrust.

Worlds:

The secret of space; To thrust - the principle of action and reaction.
The wave-nature of radiation.

Souls:

Intelligence; Friendship.
To acknowledge - to make space for others; Empathy

Divinity:

G-d's "hand" - the Infinite Will and ability to sustain the Creation.
Charity, physical and spiritual.
"Shaking G-d's Hand": identifying with archetypal souls and Temple service.
G-d's thought - the origin of the Jewish soul.

NUMBER

Ten; "The tenth shall be holy"; the decimal nature of reality.

Worlds:

Ten Divine utterances through which the world was created.
Ten things created on the first day.
Ten things created at dusk at the end of the first Friday.
Ten generations from Adam to Noah and from Noah to Abraham.
Ten kings ruled the whole world; Ten nations given to Abraham.
Ten pure animals; Ten categories of forbidden magic.
Ten battles of Joshua; Ten essential limbs of the body.

Souls:

The sefirot - Spiritual Powers; Ten categories of the souls of Israel.
Ten trials of Abraham; A minyan of ten men.
Ten synonyms for prayer; Ten synonyms for song.
Ten cardinal songs sung throughout history.
Ten martyrs of Israel; Ten spiritual functions of the heart.

Divinity:

Ten Commandments; Ten plagues.
Ten miracles in the Holy Temple; Ten days of repentance.
Yom Kippur--the tenth day; The Divine Name ten times on Yom Kippur.
Ten names of Ruach HaKodesh; Ten are called "the man of G-d."
Ten verses of Kingdom, Remembrance and Shofar-blast.
Ten synonyms for teshuvah.

soulinspiration - December 8, 2010 12:18 PM (GMT)

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Yodh

QUOTE

Yodh

...

Yodh (also spelled Yud or Yod or Jod or Jodh) is the tenth letter of many Semitic alphabets, including Phoenician, Aramaic, Hebrew Yud •, Syriac • and Arabic Y•• • (in abjadi order, 28th in modern order). Its sound value is /j/ in all languages for which it is used; in many languages, it also serves as a long vowel, representing /i•/.

The Phoenician letter gave rise to the Greek Iota (I), Latin I, Cyrillic •, Coptic iauda (•) and Gothic eis (•).

...

Hebrew Yud

...

Significance

In gematria, Yud represents the number ten.

As a prefix, it designates the third person singular (or plural, with a Vav as a suffix) in the future tense.

As a suffix, it indicates first person singular possessive; av (father) becomes avi (my father).

In Judaism

Two Yuds in a row designate the name of God Adonai and in pointed texts are written with the vowels of Adonai; this is done as well with the Tetragrammaton.

As Yud is the smallest letter, much kabbalistic and mystical significance is attached to it. The letter Yud could be overlooked by scribes because of its size and position as a mater lectionis. In modern Hebrew, the phrase "tip of the Yud" refers to a small and insignificant thing, and someone who "worries about the tip of a Yud" is someone who is picky and meticulous about small details.

Much kabbalistic and mystical significance is also attached to it because of its gematria value as ten, which is an important number in Judaism, and its place in the name of God. See The Mystical Significance of the Hebrew Letters - Yud

"Yod" in the Hebrew language signifies iodine.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: BUSH 41 CAUGHT IN PEDOPHILE STING

Title: BUSH 41 CAUGHT IN PEDOPHILE STING

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:55 PM (GMT)

D.C. POLICE PEDOPHILE STING RAID

CATCHES V.P. BUSH 41 AND PRESIDENT REAGAN

THIS BANNED EDITION OF THE WASHINGTON TIMES WAS DESTROYED EN MASSE BY GEORGE H.W. BUSH. THIS WAS NOT THE FIRST TIME THAT REPORTS STARTED TO SIFT OUT THAT VICE-PRESIDENT BUSH WAS A KNOWN PEDOPHILE!

user posted image

"One former top-level Pentagon officer said that for the past eight years, military and civilian intelligence authorities have been concerned that "a nest of homosexuals" at top levels of the Reagan Administration may have been penetrated by Soviet backed espionage agents posing as male prostitutes, said one former Pentagon official."

- Washington Times, June29, 1989

Cold - March 7, 2009 01:23 PM (GMT)

A more suitable name for The White House would be The Pink House or The Pink Brothel. Probably full of homos over there. Where's the honesty today?

Alexandra - March 7, 2009 01:28 PM (GMT)

Honesty? I don't think these guys know the meaning of the word.

Scar - November 2, 2010 04:38 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/rD9w-zhIwIU?fs=1&hl=en_US"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/rD9w-zhIwIU?fs=1&hl=en_US" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://abcnews.go.com/Blotter/story?id=4249898&page=1

http://susiebright.blogs.com/susie_brights...gainst-it-.html

The Washington Times

THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1989 • WASHINGTON, D.C. 25 cents

Homosexual prostitution inquiry ensnares VIPs with Reagan, Bush

'Call boys' took midnight tour of White House

The following archive paints a chilling portrait of what is really going on in the upper echelons of the ruling elite here in America. The story involves children from orphanages in Nebraska being flown around the United States by top Republican officials in order to engage in child sex orgies with America's ruling elite. It is a fact that during the 1980's, child sexual services were provided by top Republican officials to key, bureaucrats and diplomats but most importantly, there is a chilling proximity of all of these events and personalities, to the President of the United States at the time, George H.W. Bush. And there have been victims who claim that the President himself engaged in the activities. It is a tale of child sex, murder, espionage, blackmail, and huge payoffs. And all the players are involved. From the White House to the CIA to the media barrons to the Republican elite - right down to the orphanages where they procured their victims.

This story was the second biggest scandal of the 1980's which was completely obliterated by the Bush White House - A complete coordinated blackout by the ruling elite in cooperation with the American television networks. (The biggest scandal being the Bush involvement in the attempted assassination of President Reagan) Since the elite who own the television networks in America are the same elite who feast off the carcass of the American population - just like the Bushes do and who sit on the same boards of the same corporate cartels as the Bushes do - most Americans will never hear of this explosive story. But thanks to the Internet all these suppressed news facts are re-surfacing. Perhaps the most chilling aspect of this horrific tale is that such realities can be so completely obliterated by the powers that be so that, even though these are simply the very biggest most explosive stories of our time - you will never know that they happened. That is why http://www.voxfux.com exists. To bring you the hard cold truth about what is really happening to our world. To inform you about who these people really are who rule America.

Fortunately not all people are in on the crimes of the elite. Once and a while a person comes along who is human and who fights and resists this evil force which is destroying the human race. In this case, former republican Senator John Decamp was involved in the production a documentary called "Conspiracy of Silence" it was to air May 3, 1994 on the Discovery Channel. This documentary exposed a network of religious leaders and Washington politicians who flew children to Washington D.C. for sex orgies. As the story goes, at the last minute before airing, there was a massive effort from key Washington politicians who were implicated in the scandal to exert pressure on the channel to threatened the TV Cable industry with restrictive legislation if this documentary was aired.

Almost immediately, the rights to the documentary were purchased by unknown persons who had ordered all copies destroyed. A copy of this videotape was furnished anonymously to former Nebraska state senator and attorney John De Camp who made it available to retired F.B.I. chief, Ted L. Gunderson. While the video quality is not top grade, this tape is a blockbuster in what is revealed by the participants involved. You can view the online video below.

The Franklin Cover-up Scandal

The Child sex ring that reached Bush/Reagan Whitehouse

Boy prostitutes 15 years old (and younger) were taking midnight tours of the Whitehouse. There are 19 more Washington Times articles in full text about this case available here at-http://www.voxfux.com/features/bush_child_...cle_archive.htm

HERE'S THE VIDEO

Conspiracy of Silence-
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-7...66698433381712#

The Washington Times, Pg. A3 July 26, 1989 Headline: Secret Service furloughs third White House guard

Once, Mr. Spence's influence with the Washington power elite appeared almost limitless, demonstrated by his ability to arrange midnight tours of the White House. The Times has confirmed that Mr. Spence arranged at least four midnight tours of the White House, including one June 29, 1988, on which he took with him a 15-year-old boy whom he falsely identified as his son.

One man Mr. Spence apparently cultivated was a uniformed Secret Service officer assigned to the midnight shift at the White House. The officer, Reginald A. deGueldre, was interrogated for more than 10 hours last week about his association with Mr. Spence. Five Secret Service agents, armed with search warrants, searched his house for nearly two hours Friday night, although they wouldn't say what they were looking for. The agents seized several photographs from Mr. deGueldre's home.

Mr. deGueldre said he has been told he will be called to testify before a federal grand jury. According to one law enforcement official, Mr. deGueldre failed the portion of a polygraph test involving favors he may have done for Mr. Spence.

The story was also covered in the New York Times and other major east coast newspapers, but because of the links to Whitehouse and control from the top the story was killed..

There are two main suspects in the child ring were Craig Spence and Lawrence E. King Jr. Below are some pictures of them. Both were involved in the Republican party. King sang the National athem at two republican national conventions during the 1980s. He served time in jail for bank fraud and is now living somewhere on the east coast. Spence was an important Republican lobbyist, who feared that, because he knew something very dark, implicating the very most powerful man in America, George H. W. Bush, that he would be killed by the CIA at his murder would be made to look like a suicide. He was later found dead in a hotel room - the CIA connected coroner declared the bizarre death -suicide. Several of his partners went to jail for being involved in the adult part of the homosexual sex ring. Democrats were also involved in this as well, so don't expect them to expose the sex ring.

Lobbyist Is Arrested in New York

Craig J. Spence, a Washington lobbyist who is a subject of a Federal investigation of male prostitution in Washington, is facing cocaine and gun possession charges in New York, the Manhattan District Attorney's office said yesterday.

Mr. Spence, 48 years old, was arrested July 31 at the Barbizon Hotel at 140 East 63d Street in Manhattan. Gerald McKelvey, a spokesman for District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau, said Mr. Spence had called the police to say a man in his room had just robbed him of $6,000 at gunpoint.

When the police arrived, Mr. McKelvey said, they found Mr. Spence and another man, Casey Regan, 22, in the room arguing. Mr. Spence told the police that Mr. Regan had stolen a gun from him and then used it to rob him. The police also found a small amount of cocaine in an envelope, Mr. McKelvey said.

Mr. Spence was charged with criminal possession of a loaded .32-caliber Craig J. Spence, who faces cocaine and gun charges.

A Lurid, Mysterious Scandal Begins Taking Shape

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
Special to The New York Times

OMAHA, Dec. 15 — For several weeks a Federal investigation has riveted attention here on a failed local credit union formed to help the poor, on $38 million that it is missing and on its manager, a nationally active Republican politician whom the Government accuses of embezzling at least some of the funds.

Now the inquiry, joined by state investigations, is widening and has begun to take on the stark trappings of lurid melodrama.

The collapse of the credit union and the Government's lawsuit alleging embezzlement were the extent of the case, at least on the public record, until last Monday. Then rumors that had been circulating in Omaha for much of the last month made their way into remarks presented to the Executive Board of the State Legislature in Lincoln. The speaker was State Senator Ernie Chambers of Omaha, who said he had received numerous reports, to which he clearly gave credence, that instances of child sexual and physical abuse were linked to the scandal.

Mr. Chambers did not describe the reports of sexual abuse and that they were a subject of its own criminal inquiry into the credit union affair. And the office of the Nebraska Attorney General said it had directed the state police also to investigate the reports.

If sensation has begun to characterize the case, so has mystery. The various investigators, their efforts barely begun, decline to speak of them in detail. Mr. Chambers himself says he wants to disclose just enough to encourage those with information on the affair to give testimony before the legislative committee.

Reports of sex abuse add to a theft case.

As a result, there are these large gaps in public knowledge about the case, among others:

¶If child prostitution was involved, how vast was it?

¶If foster homes were involved dren were transported or paid with any of the money that the Government's suit accuses him of diverting from the Franklin Community Federal Credit Union.

The suit was brought last month in Federal District Court here, where Mr. King has filed a motion denying all the allegations of embezzlement.

Mr. King's lawyer, William Morrow, has declined to make him available for press interviews. But Mr. Morrow said his client contended that personal payments and contributions of more than $4 million that Mr. King made this year and last, all of them itemized by the Government in documents that it filed with its suit, had come from his own accounts at the credit union. Records to support that contention are not available, Mr. Morrow said, because all the credit union's papers have been seized by Federal agents.

As for the inquiries into sexual abuse, Mr. Morrow noted a World-Herald article Tuesday in which Mr. O'Hara, the F.B.I. agent, was quoted as saying, "We are looking for credible witnesses."

"I think," said Mr. Morrow, "that he is saying the F.B.I. has no credible evi-

Associated Press

Lawrence E. King Jr., manager of the Franklin Community Federal Credit Union, which is the focus of widening inquiries.

ment s ary a ager h
The
among leader
Mayor voted the bel posits source Omaha had be The tors h
Comm
millior money Nation has sir millior
suit s
Comm least $ posit s
standi than $ and se
Doc large says h generously at Republican National

More info-
http://www.kmf.org/williams/bushbook/bush21.html

Decamp also wrote a book called the Franklin Coverup.

Copyrighted material; sample page 25 of 25

The Franklin Cover-up

The shut-down of Omaha, Nebraska's Franklin Community Federal Credit Union, raided by federal agencies in November 1988, sent shock waves all the way to Washington, D.C. $40 million was missing. The credit union's manager: Republican Party activist Lawrence E. "Larry" King, Jr., behind whose rise to fame and riches stood powerful figures in Nebraska politics and business, and in the nation's capital.

In the face of opposition from local and state law enforcement, from the FBI, and from the powerful Omaha World-Herald newspaper, a special Franklin committee of the Nebraska Legislature launched its own probe. What looked like a financial swindle, soon exploded into a hideous tale of drugs, Iran-Contra money-laundering, a nationwide child abuse ring, and ritual murder.

Nineteen months later, the legislative committee's chief investigator died—suddenly, and violently, like more than a dozen other people linked to the Franklin case.

Author John DeCamp knows the Franklin scandal from the inside. In 1990, his "DeCamp memo" first publicly named the alleged high-ranking abusers. Today, he is attorney for two of the abuse victims.

Using documentation never before made public, DeCamp lays bare not only the crimes, but the cover-up—a textbook case of how dangerous the corruption of institutions of government, and the press, can be. In its sweep and in what it portends for the nation, the Franklin cover-up followed the ugly precedent of the Warren Commission.

Senator John W. DeCamp

During 16 years in office, former state Senator John DeCamp was cited, even by his enemies at the World-Herald, as one of the most effective legislators in Nebraska history. A highly decorated Vietnam War veteran, in 1975 he initiated Operation Baby Lift, which evacuated 2,800 orphaned Vietnamese children. He practices law in Lincoln, Nebraska, is married, and is the father of four children.

ISBN 0-9632158-0-9 $9.95

In the Franklin Coverup, it talks about the possible killing of a child at the Bohemian Grove.

Click link to see a scan of the book- http://www.voxfux.com/features/bush_child_...overupGrove.gif

TheUnhivedMind - November 2, 2010 04:58 PM (GMT)

Conspiracy of Silence - Illuminati Pedophiles in Washington D.C. (documentary)

[dohtml]<embed id=VideoPlayback src=http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=3395321338401208062&hl=en&fs=true style=width:400px;height:326px allowFullScreen=true allowScriptAccess=always type=application/x-shockwave-flash> </embed>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - November 2, 2010 04:59 PM (GMT)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Blacks, whites and Asians have different ancestors

Title: Blacks, whites and Asians have different ancestors
Description: and did not come from Africa, claims sci

craig-oxley - September 15, 2010 04:18 PM (GMT)

Blacks, whites and Asians have different ancestors – and did not come from Africa, claims scientist

Sunday, September 12, 2010
http://www.articlesafari.com/2010/09/white...me-from-africa/

A public claim by a fellow of the prestigious Royal Geographic Society that humans did not all come from Africa — and that blacks, whites and Asians have different ancestors — has been dismissed by world experts as “dangerous”, “wrong” and “racist”.

In a paper widely trumpeted and due for release in book form, Akhil Bakshi, the leader of a recent major scientific expedition supported by India’s prime minister, claims that “Negroid”, “Caucasian” and “Mongoloid” peoples are not only separate races but separate species, having evolved on different continents. Responding to the claims — developed while Bakshi led the Gondwanaland expedition from India to South Africa — Professor Lee Berger, a leading palaeoanthropologist at the University of the Witwatersrand, immediately insisted that, there were no fundamental differences between the races and that all humans had the same genetic and physical roots in Africa.

The prevalent scientific theory of modern humans — the “Out of Africa” model — is that they left Africa just 55000 years ago and replaced the last remnants of other ancient hominids living in Europe, Asia and elsewhere.

The old biological racial distinctions of “Caucasian”, “Negroid” and “Mongoloid” have recently been abandoned by mainstream scientists — removed, for instance, from the US National Library of Medicine in 2003.

Bakshi has become a self-declared champion of a minority scientific view called “multiregionalism”, which claims that modern humans evolved from separate hominid populations. Hominids encompass all humans and the ancient family of human-like ancestors, including large-brained ancient ancestors and unsuccessful species such as Neanderthals.
However, Bakshi — who has no training as an anthropologist — has linked to this model a theory that these populations evolved according to the genetic material left behind when the prehistoric supercontinents, the northern Laurasia and the southern Gondwanaland, broke up. An influential figure in India, Bakshi is also a filmmaker and author who has led four major scientific expeditions since 1994. Bakshi admitted to the Sunday Times that “some of my points may prove to be wrong, and may be seen as politically incorrect.

He claims indigenous “Negroid” populations occur in places like Australia, India, Sri Lanka, the Philippines and the Andaman Islands not because they moved there from Africa, but because all these land masses were once part of Gondwanaland — and that all evolved separately. Whites, according to Bakshi, are from Laurasia and blacks are from Gondwanaland. He argues that, 60000 years ago, humans could not have crossed vast oceans and deserts to reach remote places like Australia and North America, and they must therefore have evolved there.

“His is a highly confused argument which jumps enormous levels, which are quite impossible to link,” Tobias said.
However, he added that the true picture of modern humanity’s precise departure from Africa was far from clear- cut.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Royals and nobles believe in Dragon genes?

Title: Royals and nobles believe in Dragon genes?

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:28 PM (GMT)

Royals and nobles believe in Dragon genes?
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=4657

14april2000 - July 13, 2010 10:05 PM (GMT)

Royals and Nobles Believe in Dragon Genes?

http://www.bibliotecapleyades.net/sociopol...agoncourt06.htm

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Amazing details of exactly what asylum seekers

Title: Amazing details of exactly what asylum seekers
Description: MUST BY LAW be given for free.

craig-oxley - August 30, 2009 10:14 AM (GMT)

Amazing details of exactly what asylum seekers MUST BY LAW be given for free.

Were you aware? No you were not... And you are not allowed to become aware either.

Date: Thu, 17 May 2007
http://tpuc.org/node/60

ASYLUM SCANDAL

We know they're going to move asylum seekers in there. All the flats have been done up, central heating, the works. And they've put up brand new net curtains. That's a sure sign.

This is the kind of message that we have been hearing from angry locals all over Britain for the last couple of years. Many of the details change, but the total renovations and the highly visible net curtains crop up time and time again.

So too do the denials by local councils that the premises concerned are going to house asylum seekers. And almost as regular is the spectacle of those same councils being forced to eat their words within weeks as local residents wake up to find that new neighbours from Albania and Somalia have been moved in overnight.

The repetition of this pattern over the entire country has been something of a mystery up until now. Strangest of all has been the sight of so many councils telling lies to local residents and newspapers alike, even though the bureaucrats and local councillors telling the lies must know that they will be exposed and discredited within weeks. Just such a sequence of events, for example, played a major role in the by-election victory of our Robin Evans in Blackburn last autumn.

Secret Tenancy Agreement

The answers to this puzzle lies in a secret 26-page document the Revised Tenancy Agreement April 2001 - produced by the Secretary of State for the Home Office, acting through the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. Its very existence is supposed to be secret, Section 3 (p), on page 8 has this warning for people or companies thinking of making money out of housing asylum seekers:

The Landlord's attention is drawn to the Official Secrets Acts 1911-1989. The landlord shall take all reasonable steps to ensure that all individuals engaged on any work in connection with this Agreement have notice that these statutory provisions apply to them and shall continue to apply after the expiry or termination of the Term.

I don't know whether there is anything to make a reader who is not planning to be a signatory to the document subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. I don't know, and I don't care. This document is so shocking that the truth about it has to be told. All I will say is that this article is published here solely on my authority, so if some Home Office legal bigwigs wants to prosecute over this shockingly democratic breach of their veil of secrecy, they know where to find me.

The anti-free speech restrictions continue on page 9, although by this time the section numbers seem to have become somewhat confused and very unclear. The actual meaning of Section (a) (iii), however, is all too clear:

The Landlord shall ensure that no press release or other public document containing Confidential Information is issued and shall not make any public statement concerning Confidential Information without the prior written approval of the Directorate and the Tenant Company as to its content and the manner and extent of its publication.

This is the answer to one key asylum mystery. This is why local councils and private companies alike, which are providing accommodation for 'refugees', continually refuse to comment or lie about their role in housing asylum seekers. Once they've signed up to this Agreement, they simply don't have a choice.

Detailed list of items for asylum seekers

So what doesn't the Home Office want you to know? Take a look at Schedule 1 on page 14, and you can see for yourself:

This list of requirements for any property being used to house asylum seekers begins, reasonably enough, by insisting that it shall be fit for human habitation, and have adequate light. Let us ignore the fact that many hundreds of thousands of our own people are either homeless or live in houses which are unfit for human habitation because, according to central government and local councils, there isn't enough money to deal with all the problems.

By the time we get to Section 1.3, the secret Agreement begins to lay out requirements which are beyond the reach not just of a relatively small number of the homeless or desperately poor:

all meters shall be of the quarterly type, the use of card or key meters shall not be allowed.

Isn't that nice? If you and your family fall into arrears on your utility bills, particularly electricity, you have to agree to the installation of a card meter set at such a rate that it gobbles up money. British families with children can't be officially cut off but if they run out of meter credit, their lights and heating go off anyway and they have to go to bed at dusk in the winter to try to keep warm. Such hardships are unacceptable, however, when it comes to asylum seekers.

Section 1.7 insists that The Property shall have a full and safe central heating system installed. Paraffin or bottled gas fed heating systems shall not be used. Perish the thought! Such devices are fine for British pensioners and young families shivering on the poverty line, but far too smelly, inconvenient and dangerous for Mr Blunkett's favourites.

New electrical goods

After laying down requirements on issues such as fire safety, the Schedule reaches Point 10: All electrical appliances in the Property shall be either new or, if second hand, shall be supplied complete with a twelve month guarantee. Well, I don't know about you, but when my wife and I got married and set up home, we had to get our first electric cooker and heaters from an auction, completely without any guarantee at all. And, of course, ordinary British youngsters moving into places of their own still face the same choice between paying through the nose for new equipment or going without guarantees.

Pages 15 and 16 go on to provide a long list of the things needed in the kitchen, living room, bedrooms and bathroom of each asylum property. As you're probably expecting by now, this features everything from chip pans to teaspoons, from an easy chair for each bed space to a Boots first aid kit.

The long 'General' list in Section 1.13 even proves that the popular observation about new net curtains showing that asylum seekers are moving in is true, since landlords are ordered to provide net & drawable curtains to all living rooms and bedrooms. They get everything, in fact, including the kitchen sink.

Free colour TV and licence paid!

One item does, however, stand out:

For Each Living/Dining Room

1 new twenty inch screen colour television complete with licence which shall be renewed at each annual anniversary of the Start Date throughout the Term.

Native Brits, of course, have to wait until they are 75 to get a free TV licence, and non-payment of this iniquitous tax is the biggest single 'crime' that puts British women in prison.

Many of those women can't afford a TV licence because they are struggling to bring up young families on pitifully low incomes. As a result, they are also often unable to afford proper child safety equipment. No wonder, then, that the Home Office bureaucrats being so generous with our tax money wanted to keep Section 1.20 secret:

Where there are to be children living in the Property, the Property shall include:

Adequate cot and highchair facilities

Appropriate sterilisation equipment;

Child safety gates on all stairways;

Childproof resistant devices or casement stays on all windows;

Appropriate play areas both inside and outside the Property.

Another thing that ordinary families on average incomes find a big problem is the occasional cost of major repairs. Asylum seekers have no such worries. Under this Agreement, the Landlord is bound to do all repairs within seven days, and to provide an emergency repair service (Section 1.23) where a threat to health and safety is apparent. The rest of us have to turn to Yellow Pages or pay for call out insurance, but it would be unfair to expect asylum seekers to do the same, wouldn't it?

Similarly favourable treatment is also specified in the Letting Provisions, Section (f) of which commits the Landlord to redecorate all parts of the Property in the third year of the Term. The rest of us may have to fork out down at "Do It All", but not Mr Blunkett's special guests.

Perhaps most ludicrous of all, however, is the next section (g) of the Letting Provisions, whereby the Landlord agrees: To have the exterior of all windows of the Property cleaned once every twelve weeks. I kid you not, it's there on page 7. What would George Formby have had to say about it?

Who pays?

So what do all these modcons and services cost the lucky occupants of such premises? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. When various bleeding heart liberals tell us how asylum seekers only get basic income support payments, they don't tell us about the Letting Provisions on page 4 of the Home Office's Revised Tenancy Agreement, do they? Yet these show that not only do asylum seekers get their TV licences paid for them, we also pick up the tab for their rent, water rates, gas, electricity and council tax bills.

Surely, you must think, these people must want to spend night after night on the phone to all their friends and family back home, telling them all about the wonders of Soft Touch Britain? A lot of their pocket money must go on paying the phone bill? No, as you probably guessed, they don't have to pay a penny. Section 1 ((B) of the Letting Provisions sets out the fact that the Tenant Company (funded by the taxpayer) agrees to pick up the phone bill for every single property provided by the Landlord in question to asylum seekers.

Don't forget that every single council or housing association in this land which is housing asylum seekers has signed this document. Thousands of councillors in the ruling party in Labour, Lib Dem and Tory councils alike have either read this document or studiously avoided seeing it so they didn't have to.

It only took one BNP member in one council to leak this insulting and undemocratic document. By contrast, we will never know how many Lib-Lab-Con merchants have seen this Agreement since it first started being used in 2001, but not a single one of them has had the guts to put the interests of democracy and their constituents before asylum seekers and the Home Office.

http://www.mediafire.com/?94qysxhim71

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF NWO INFORMATION

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF NWO INFORMATION

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:39 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=2

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MIND CONTROL IN THE 21st CENTURY

Title: MIND CONTROL IN THE 21st CENTURY

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:37 PM (GMT)

MIND CONTROL IN THE 21st CENTURY
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=5203

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE SECRET COVENANT

Title: THE SECRET COVENANT

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:37 PM (GMT)

THE SECRET COVENANT

(Full version, rated R !)

An illusion it will be, so large, so vast it will escape their perception.

Those who will see it will be thought of as insane.

We will create separate fronts to prevent them from seeing the connection between us.

We will behave as if we are not connected to keep the illusion alive. Our goal will be accomplished one drop at a time so as to never bring suspicion upon ourselves. This will also prevent them from seeing the changes as they occur.

We will always stand above the relative field of their experience for we know the secrets of the absolute.

We will work together always and will remain bound by blood and secrecy. Death will come to he who speaks.

We will keep their lifespan short and their minds weak while pretending to do the opposite.

We will use our knowledge of science and technology in subtle ways so they will never see what is happening.

We will use soft metals, aging accelerators and sedatives in food and water, also in the air.

They will be blanketed by poisons everywhere they turn.

The soft metals will cause them to lose their minds. We will promise to find a cure from our many fronts, yet we will feed them more poison.

The poisons will be absorbed trough their skin and mouths, they will destroy their minds and reproductive systems.

From all this, their children will be born dead, and we will conceal this information.

The poisons will be hidden in everything that surrounds them, in what they drink, eat, breathe and wear.

We must be ingenious in dispensing the poisons for they can see far.

We will teach them that the poisons are good, with fun images and musical tones.

Those they look up to will help. We will enlist them to push our poisons.

They will see our products being used in film and will grow accustomed to them and will never know their true effect.

When they give birth we will inject poisons into the blood of their children and convince them its for their help.

We will start early on, when their minds are young, we will target their children with what children love most, sweet things.

When their teeth decay we will fill them with metals that will kill their mind and steal their future.

When their ability to learn has been affected, we will create medicine that will make them sicker and cause other diseases for which we will create yet more medicine.

We will render them docile and weak before us by our power.

They will grow depressed, slow and obese, and when they come to us for help, we will give them more poison.

We will focus their attention toward money and material goods so they many never connect with their inner self. We will distract them with fornication, external pleasures and games so they may never be one with the oneness of it all.

Their minds will belong to us and they will do as we say. If they refuse we shall find ways to implement mind-altering technology into their lives. We will use fear as our weapon.

We will establish their governments and establish opposites within. We will own both sides.

We will always hide our objective but carry out our plan.

They will perform the labor for us and we shall prosper from their toil.

Our families will never mix with theirs. Our blood must be pure always, for it is the way.

We will make them kill each other when it suits us.

We will keep them separated from the oneness by dogma and religion.

We will control all aspects of their lives and tell them what to think and how.

We will guide them kindly and gently letting them think they are guiding themselves.

We will foment animosity between them through our factions.

When a light shall shine among them, we shall extinguish it by ridicule, or death, whichever suits us best.

We will make them rip each other's hearts apart and kill their own children.

We will accomplish this by using hate as our ally, anger as our friend.

The hate will blind them totally, and never shall they see that from their conflicts we emerge as their rulers. They will be busy killing each other.

They will bathe in their own blood and kill their neighbors for as long as we see fit.

We will benefit greatly from this, for they will not see us, for they cannot see us.

We will continue to prosper from their wars and their deaths.

We shall repeat this over and over until our ultimate goal is accomplished.

We will continue to make them live in fear and anger though images and sounds.

We will use all the tools we have to accomplish this.

The tools will be provided by their labor.

We will make them hate themselves and their neighbors.

We will always hide the divine truth from them, that we are all one. This they must never know!

They must never know that color is an illusion, they must always think they are not equal.

Drop by drop, drop by drop we will advance our goal.

We will take over their land, resources and wealth to exercise total control over them.

We will deceive them into accepting laws that will steal the little freedom they will have.

We will establish a money system that will imprison them forever, keeping them and their children in debt.

When they shall ban together, we shall accuse them of crimes and present a different story to the world for we shall own all the media.

We will use our media to control the flow of information and their sentiment in our favor.

When they shall rise up against us we will crush them like insects, for they are less than that.

They will be helpless to do anything for they will have no weapons.

We will recruit some of their own to carry out our plans, we will promise them eternal life, but eternal life they will never have for they are not of us.

The recruits will be called "initiates" and will be indoctrinated to believe false rites of passage to higher realms. Members of these groups will think they are one with us never knowing the truth. They must never learn this truth for they will turn against us.

For their work they will be rewarded with earthly things and great titles, but never will they become immortal and join us, never will they receive the light and travel the stars.

They will never reach the higher realms, for the killing of their own kind will prevent passage to the realm of enlightenment. This they will never know.

The truth will be hidden in their face, so close they will not be able to focus on it until its too late.

Oh yes, so grand the illusion of freedom will be, that they will never know they are our slaves.

When all is in place, the reality we will have created for them will own them. This reality will be their prison. They will live in self-delusion.

When our goal is accomplished a new era of domination will begin.

Their minds will be bound by their beliefs, the beliefs we have established from time immemorial.

But if they ever find out they are our equal, we shall perish then. THIS THEY MUST NEVER KNOW.

If they ever find out that together they can vanquish us, they will take action.

They must never, ever find out what we have done, for if they do, we shall have no place to run, for it will be easy to see who we are once the veil has fallen. Our actions will have revealed who we are and they will hunt us down and no person shall give us shelter.

This is the secret covenant by which we shall live the rest of our present and future lives, for this reality will transcend many generations and life spans.

This covenant is sealed by blood, our blood. We, the ones who from heaven to earth came.

This covenant must NEVER, EVER be known to exist. It must NEVER, EVER be written or spoken of for if it is, the consciousness it will spawn will release the fury of the PRIME CREATOR upon us and we shall be cast to the depths from whence we came and remain there until the end time of infinity itself.

The Bankindex editorial staff thanks you for all your e-mails regarding this piece, but we do NOT know who he or she is. The piece came in through one of our forms and the Author left an unusable e-mail address. Thank you.

Written by UNKNOWN Author has submitted second version, Posted 6/21/2002

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Project for the Exposure of Hidden Institutions

Title: Project for the Exposure of Hidden Institutions

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:36 PM (GMT)

Project for the Exposure of Hidden Institutions (PEHI)

Written: Joël van der Reijden (mail)
Date: August 9, 2005

The purpose of the Project for the Exposure of Hidden Institutions (PEHI) is to put together the entire spectrum of hidden organizations and secret societies. Most of you who visit this site have probably heard of the more well-known 'secret societies' like the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bohemian Grove, and the Skull & Bones student society. Two other well known 'secret societies' are Bilderberg and the Trilateral Commission. The thing is, when you really research these institutes you find that members often disagree with each other, there's considerable infighting, and most members don't seem to be privy to a lot of information from the black world. This is the reason I always wondered how people went from the above organizations straight to the very undefined concept of the 'Illuminati'. Of course, I can see something very strange is going on. For some reason it's possible to suppress information about humanities past, the UFO phenomenon, the supernatural, high profile assassinations, or the true cause of many terrorist attacks. Rather than focusing on one tiny subject, PEHI will attempt to answer how all the above is possible and which persons and institutes are responsible for it.

This site will be fundamentally different than most. We don't need another rewrite combined with another religiously biased opinion, which doesn't stroke with any of the evidence. We need names of institutions, names of members, and as much background information about both as possible. We need organized digital membership lists in which all this information is available for any purpose at any time. Biographies should be included and must be updated continually in all of these lists as new information becomes available. I can already guarantee you that when this is done on all the globalist societies, one by one, we will see patterns in the leadership and we can pick out those people that need to be investigated still further. If there are any 'puppet masters', this is the only way to pick them out and to have a rock solid foundation of research no one can dispute.

General oversight

At this introduction page I will give you an idea of what I'm working on at the moment. It's not meant to back up every claim with a list of sources. This is something that will be done at the 'in depth' section of the website.

Above I have organized a lot of the most influential privately funded discussion forums in the world. Already it is clear that a few interests dominate the scene. The first one is the infamous Rockefeller family. This family played a major role in setting up and / or maintaining most of the American-based institutions: the Americas Society, the Asia Society, the Japan Society, the CFR, and the Trilateral Commission. As far as I know, they also funded the Atlantic Institute for International Affairs and the Williamsburg Meetings, and probably a lot more. They themselves, or their proteges, are represented in almost every organization you see on the left. They funded many other less important organizations, which will be included in an upcoming 'Rockefeller family timeline'. Another major influence appears to be the Rothschild family. Of course, just as the Rockefellers, this has been repeated endlessly, but I personally had a hard time finding any indisputable evidence that backs up this claim. A lot of research still needs to be done, but here's what I know for sure: Today's chairman of Le Cercle has been a 15 year Rothschild veteran. A previous chairman of Le Cercle had a very dubious father who was one of the most important (hidden) Jews to have built up the state of Israel, side by side with the Rothschilds.

The chairman of The European Institute is also a 15 year Rothschild veteran, again the only person of the board directly involved with the Rothschilds. The Rothschild Foundation is one the prime sponsors of the 1001 Club-affiliated Club 21, which funds and manages the so called 'Peace Parks' Foundation. On the board of directors of the Club 21 sits a Rothschild director, who is a son of a former Rothschild associate. The foundation of the chairman of the European Institute is involved with this club to a lesser extent. The same goes for the Rockefellers by the way. Other interesting coincidences I noticed is the fact that the only Brit I have come across that has been invited to the Bohemian Grove camp Mandalay is a representative of the Rothschild and Murdoch interests. These last two are close friends. The only Brit I found that has been invited to the Sun Valley meetings turned out to be another very close associate of Jacob the Rothschild. Jacob de Rothschild has been the president of the London-based Institute for Jewish Policy Research and still is it's honorary president. The exact extent of the influence of the institute I do not know. All I know is that it has been described as 'very influential', that until recently it used to be called the 'Institute for Jewish Affairs', that it is closely affiliated with Chatham House (RIIA), and that the Israeli ambassador pays them a visit once in a while. Another interesting fact is that the Rothschild Foundation donated the money to build the Israeli Supreme Court and the Knesset. Coincidentally, the Supreme Court has a large pyramid with an eye sticking through its roof. What is a very interesting with the Rothschilds is that indeed they seem to do almost everything through a front man. But personally, I have no reason to believe they cannot be touched. For example, in 1981 Mitterrand came to power and immediately nationalized the Rothschild bank. Guy the Rothschild (and Le Cercle who had been trying to prevent Mitterrand from coming to power) wasn't very happy about it. From that time on, Rothschild started focusing on his main U.S. company, New Court (now Rothschild Inc.), which was located in Rockefeller Center at the time. There are other indications that the Rothschilds are very influential, but not the ultimate 'puppet masters' For instance, some of them were captured or killed by the nazis. Others successfully fled. In 1996, Amschel Rothschild was found dead in Paris, just after he was selected to take over the Paris branch of family. It's a very strange affair and although his aunt and closest friends vehemently denied he was anything near depressed, nobody objected when the death was labeled a suicide. Looking at some of the statements of the Paris investigators there's every indication that Amschel was murdered. It doesn't seem to make much sense that his own family did it. Then they wouldn't have appointed him in the first place. So who was responsible? One other interesting tidbit that actually shows their influence again is the fact that Bill Clinton allowed Sir Evelyn de Rothschild to spent his wedding night in the White House! I still need to do a lot of research on this family before I can post a 'Rothschild family timeline' with all the documentation, but what has been written above is completely documented.

One thing that often seems to pop up is the close relationship between the British Royal family and the Rothschild family. If the Rockefellers mainly represent the American interests, the Rothschilds mainly the Zionist interests, then the Royal family is the spider in the British interests.

British Royal family and their business interests

British Invisibles	Pilgrims Society	1001 Club
President: HRH the Duke of Kent (Prince Edward)	Patron: Queen Elizabeth II (active member)	Co-founder: HRH the Duke of Edinburgh (Prince Philip)
- LOTIS (WTO) - Corporation of London	- CFR - Federal Reserve - Trilateral Commission - Americas Society - Brookings Institution - Ditchley Foundations - RIIA (Chatham House) - Bank of England - English Speaking Union - Church of England - Atlantic Council - Group of Thirty	- WWF worldwide - Peace Parks Foundation - IUCN (and Natural Resources) - Greenpeace - African Wildlife Foundation - Worldwatch Institute - Earth Policy Institute - Club of Rome

J.R. '05

This list will expand as new information becomes available.

These three important institutions have absorbed the leadership (or the founders) of all the organizations below it. In all of these high-level discussion groups the Royal family members aren't just figureheads. It has been stated repeatedly that the Royal family has made large investments in many of the largest British multinationals. This may not be proven, but it's actually quite understandable when you have such a huge amount of money laying around. Again, the British royal family members don't seem to be the ultimate 'puppet masters'. Prince Philip and his son Charles have very different personalities. Lord Louis Mountbatten, who was killed by an 'IRA bomb' in 1979, seems to have been assassinated by some right-wing Le Cercle-like interest. Two suspects were arrested even before the bomb went off, one of them was later convicted of the murder and sentenced to life. According to Diana's butler, the Queen mother warned him after Diana's death: "Nobody, Paul has been as close to a member of my family as you have. There are powers at work in this country about which we have no knowledge." Who or what was she referring to when she advised Paul to lay low?

Another institute with a lot of power is the Vatican. The Knights of Malta, Opus Dei, and the Jesuits are all operating from out of the the Vatican and are heavily involved with the intelligence agencies of the West. I found many of them in the secret intelligence group Le Cercle. Especially the Order of Malta has a very close relationship with the Monarchs of Europe. It's worldwide head, Andrew Bertie is a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II and attends many of the royal weddings. The full influence of these organizations isn't known, but a large amount of the Knights of Malta and Opus Dei figures have been involved in serious scandals over the years. The Sovereign Military Order of Malta (SMOM) is a descendent of the Knights Hospitaller, the organization to which many of the Templar assets were transferred. It's Protestant version is the Order of St. John, headed by Queen Elizabeth II, which is far less controversial. These two groups are the main interests represented at Le Cercle, which I rate among the most secret organizations we know of today.

You also have some royal and industrial families in mainland Europe that seem to have quite a bit of influence on the globalization process.

By the way, did you know that the Ordo Draconis is actually a real organization with royal and noble families in it? You don't have to believe it from some second hand source, just visit the website from the royal house of Stewart and look at their European Council of Princes section. You'll find a page about their involvement in the Ordo Draconis. And did you know that they believe in so called 'dragon genes'? I wrote a little bit about it here, which is a small elaboration on statements that were made in the article on Le Cercle.

So, as you can see, there's plenty of stuff to investigate. This introduction page is only meant to give an idea of where my personal research is going. Below you can find the names of some of the more important institutions people need to be aware of. Some of them are very secretive. Others are quite well-known, although knowledge usually doesn't extent beyond the name itself. In time, every single organization will be discussed on this site. I left out many of the smaller, regional ones. If you start adding all the world's think tanks and meeting clubs, the list will be at least 5 times as long. And why bother writing them down when most of their chairmen and presidents can be found in maybe a handful of the most important institutions below?

Existence proven

It's hard to categorize a lot of the institutions below, because you don't always know who's primary purpose they serve. Generally, I tend to look at the country the institute was founded in and who's heading it. As for America, keep in mind that the Carnegie, Rockefeller, Ford, and other foundations have funded a huge amount of very influential non-governmental think tanks. The Brookings Institution, the Aspen Institute, the Foreign Policy Association, and the RAND Corporation are examples of this.

United Kingdom
Anglo-Arab Organization
British Invisibles (IFSL)
Chatham House (RIIA)
Corps of Commissionaires
Crown Agents

Fabian Society
Group 13
Hakluyt
Livery Companies
Multinational Chairman's Group
Order of the Garter
Order of St. John of Jerusalem
Privy Council
The Round Table network
United Grand Lodge
U.K. Intelligence l

United States
Alfalfa Dinners
Americas Society
Asia Society
Bohemian Grove
Business Roundtable
Council for National Policy Council of Foreign Relations
Japan Society
JASON Group
Group Kroll Associates
MITRE Corporation (not-for-profit)
RAND Corporation (not-for-profit)
Renaissance Weekend
Sun Valley meetings
U.S. Council on International Business
U.S.-Russia Business Council

Anglo-US (and / or European) interests
1001 club
Atlantic Councils
Atlantic Institute for International Affairs
Bilderberg
British-American Project (BAP)
China-EU Business Summit
Club of Rome
DAVOS
EU-Japan Business Dialogue
EU-Russia Industrialists' Roundtable
European Round Table
European Business Summit

European Institute Forum Europe
Friends of Europe
Group of Thirty International Chamber of Commerce
Le Cercle
Oil Club
Open Russia Foundation
Pacific Basin Economic Pilgrims Society
Pugwash Conferences
Safari Club (shut down 25 years ago)
Stay-Behind networks (should be gone now)
The Ditchley Foundations
Trans-Atlantic Business Dialogue
Trilateral Commission
TUCETU
WBCSD

Israel
Anti-Defamation League (ADL)
AIPAC
B'nai B'rith
CPMAJO
Herzliya Conference (IPS)
Institute for Jewish Policy Research (JPR) World Jewish Congress
Israeli Intelligence

Vatican

Jesuits
Knights of Malta
Opus Dei

Muslim world
Muslim Brotherhood

Other religious European Council of Princes
Ordo Draconis (Sarkany Rend)
Scientology

Questioned fraternities

Princeton's Cap & Gown
Yale's Scroll & Key
Yale's Skull & Bones
Yale's Wolf's Head

If you are interested in a list of all the international Institutes of International affairs I suggest you click here.

Existence not proven (from my own viewpoint)

Bormann Organization / Group Martin Bormann was Hitler's most trusted aide and has never been captured. Some believe he oversaw the transfer of most of the Nazi capital into some 750 corporations in Germany, South-America, and the U.S. He received help from someone like Allen Dulles (SMOM, OSS chief, Pilgrims Society member, later CIA director). The purpose was to establish a future 4th Reich. It's quite obvious that this is linked with the Ratlines and the recruitment of Nazi general Reinhard Gehlen in the aftermath of WWII. I suggest you check Paul Manning's 1981 book 'Martin Bormann: Nazi in Exile' and the person who took over his work, Dave Emory. It seems that Paul Manning and his publisher have been punished severely for putting out the book.

Chateau des Amerois The castle was owned by Prince Philipp von Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and later by the Solvay family. The Solvay family is one of the leading industrial families of Europe (producer of medicines, plastics, and chemicals like fluor). In their 1996 book, Fritz Springmeier and Cisco Wheeler (very unsure what to think of their information) referred to it as the 'Mothers of Darkness castle'. This obscure castle does indeed exist and has been named in late 1996 and early 1997 by at least one 'X' survivor of the Dutroux affair as a place where nasty things happened. Different witnesses who described child torture, child rape, child molestation, child hunting, and child murder have been declared 'mad', but only after all the original investigators were suddenly replaced. There were also multiple claims of sex parties that were held in different castles. It didn't matter that the witness accounts included many verifiable corroborative details and helped solve a couple of previous child murders. The cover up was so obvious that 300,000 Belgiums went to the streets to protest against the way the investigation was conducted. At least 3 families of the victims have been convinced there is a massive cover up and at least 20 crucial witness have 'committed suicide'. It seems to be very hard to get access to these X-files. Maybe that has to do with the fact that many senior officials have been named as participants in the above crimes, including members of the royal family and at least one former European Commissioner (name hasn't been made public). At the moment, I don't see how Springmeier or Wheeler could have gained access to these secret hearings, but we'll see where this story goes in the future. I'll also check out the place the first time I'm getting near it. The chateau is not named in the usual lists of Belgium castles. Pictures and references are in very short supply.

Club of the Isles Could easily be the 1001 Club or possibly the Multinational Chairman's Group, because they share many of the same interests. Executive Intelligence Review mentioned it a couple of times. I asked them about the club, but they don't seem to have that much additional info either.

Committee of 26 This group is mentioned in Simon Regan's book 'Who killed Diana?'. The author was informed about this group through his intelligence contacts, including the one who advised him to look into Le Cercle. I quote from his book: "My own security contacts, including the Baroness, had also told me about a highly mysterious organization called the Committee of 26, which is apparently based in Bristol, in England's West Country. I have never heard of this and can find no other official reference in any file. But it is apparently a super-secret "liaison desk" between the highest echelons of British and American agencies and has the "co-operation" of the French. I was told it was "Old Guard" and worked unilaterally. That is, it was a kind of uncontrolled "super-agency" which answered to no one. I cannot show that this agency even exists... I trust the Baroness, but she was unable to give me any feasible further "chapter and verse." David Icke in his book 'The Biggest Secret' wrote: "Why Bristol? It is a former Knights Templar port and its name has evolved from Barati, the Phoenician goddess. It just so happens that an elite unit of British Intelligence called the Committee of 26 is based there and they use the runway at the British Aerospace complex to fly British and foreign agents in and out of the country... In that period in the 1980s, not only in Bristol, there were strange deaths galore of people at the cutting edge of development in the 'defence' industries. "

Committee of 300 The group former MI6 agent John Coleman talked about back in 1992. It's very interesting if you compare the name with the 'Committee of 26' from totally different sources. I read chunks of the book, looking for evidence of its existence, but couldn't find it. I have organized the list of names (google's recent spelling correction is a god sent) and have been able to copy a significant amount of biographies from prominent and less-prominent members from other hidden organizations John Coleman has never talked about. I guess that's a good thing, but as I just said, this doesn't prove anything. I also have trouble believing 'the Olympians' control everything from China to South-Africa. Looking at the names, it's just like all the other hidden organizations, i.e. a high level discussion group.

Group 13 & I3 These two are said to be assassination teams from Britain and the U.S. Although there is no conclusive evidence, I am quite certain that both exist. You can find some information about Britain's Group 13 here and some information about the NSA's I3 here. The supposed head of Group 13 turned out to be someone who's background cannot be fully traced, not even by the British Parliament. This person and his allies also infiltrated the boards of many arms companies. When a company, like Astra, isn't useful anymore, they just give themselves huge salaries and run the company into the ground.

Knight's Templar (CIA) In his 1977 book 'The Night Watch', former CIA officer David Atlee Phillips wrote on page 123: "...that small circle of well-bred, highly educated adventurers who were known to some in the CIA as the 'Knights Templars' - Allen Dulles, Frank Wisner, Kermit Roosevelt, Tracey Barnes, Dick Bissell, and kindred spirits. Other CIA veterans have confirmed the existence of similar associations within the agency, with names like the "Century group" and the "Gold Key group". The first three have been known members of Le Cercle. Of the first two we know they were involved in recruiting Nazis in the wake of WWII. Kermit Roosevelt helped de Marenches in setting up the Safari Club and led Operation Ajax which brought the Shah to power. I find it very interesting all these small hints to Templar organizations within intelligence groups as Le Cercle, the Committee of 26, and now the CIA.

Tavistock Network Said to be a worldwide mind-control network. Haven't studied it and don't really have an opinion about it either. The Tavistock Institute is located in London. You saw it in July 2005 when a bomb on a London bus splattered blood and debris on its facade. John Coleman talked about it. Kay Griggs also mentioned it.

The Brotherhood / The Firm Mentioned by Kay Griggs, wife of marine colonel George Griggs. According to Kay, her husband usually referred to the loose network he was part of as 'the Brotherhood' or 'the Firm'. She was also talking about a Zionist clique centered in New York City, which had the unofficial name 'the Joint'. Kay describes how there is a network of transnational criminals involved in all kinds of nasty stuff. This includes drug running, illegal arms trade, sexual perversion, mind control, assassinations, and the conducting of terrorism when deemed necessary. A short article with all the names she mentioned will be put up on this site. You can find the full 8-hour video here.

Did you notice that almost every single group we don't know that much about is related to intelligence? We can only guess how much more has been hidden from the public completely

Part 2, UFO organizations

If someone thinks the UFO phenomenon is a non-issue, I suggest you take a look at some of the mainstream newspaper articles I gathered here. Whatever it is, the phenomenon is real and it is very likely that secret institutions have been set up to study it.

IPU stands for the Interplanetary Phenomenon Unit, which, supposedly, was set up after the February 1942 Battle of Los Angeles incident. In a 1980 document released through a FOIA request, the Interplanetary Phenomenon Unit was part of the Scientific and Technical Branch of the Counterintelligence Directorate. It was dissolved during the late 1950's and allegedly never reactivated. Their files were surrendered to the Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI). You can find scanned documents and a lot of additional info on Majesticdocuments.com.

MJ-12 is said to be a highly secret intelligence agency set up for the purpose of investigating the UFO phenomenon. At the same time they kept all the information from the public. The project was started after the July 1947 UFO wave, followed by a crash in Roswell. Together with the birth of MJ-12 the National Security State was born. Almost anyone who has claimed to have inside information on the group has said that MJ-12 still exists today, although it changes its name once in a while. Many have also added that the group has been privatized, which is a subject that sounds very familiar. There is a large amount of documentation on Majestic 12, although these documents won't be accepted, simply because they are too extraordinary to believe. According to Stanton Friedman, most of the later documents are fake, but the earlier ones stand up to careful scrutiny. You can find scanned documents and a lot of additional info on Majesticdocuments.com. It is said that certain JASON studies have been conducted for MJ-12. The existence of the JASON Group is beyond dispute and an article about them will appear soon.

Then there are some societies I won't go into, because they are too 'far out' when there is a complete lack of any evidence they exist. If you're interested in Tamar, Moriah, the Cult of the Serpent, the Grand Druid Council, the Order of the Quest, the Keepers of the Dawn, or something similar like that, I suggest you do an internet search. I also skipped the Priory the Sion, because I haven't got a clue what to believe about it.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: the Council on Foreign Relations - by Myron Fagan

Title: the Council on Foreign Relations - by Myron Fagan

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:35 PM (GMT)

The Illuminati and the Council on Foreign Relations
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=16394

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Targets of the Illuminati and the Committee of 300

Title: Targets of the Illuminati and the Committee of 300

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:30 PM (GMT)

Targets of the Illuminati and the Committe of 300

By Dr. John Coleman.
From: http://100777.com/coleman01.htm

1. To establish a One World Government/New World Order with a unified church and monetary system under their direction. The One World Government began to set up its church in the 1920:s and 30:s, for they realized the need for a religious belief inherent in mankind must have an outlet and, therefore, set up a "church" body to channel that belief in the direction they desired.

2. To bring about the utter destruction of all national identity and national pride, which was a primary consideration if the concept of a One World Government was to work.

3. To engineer and bring about the destruction of religion, and more especially, the Christian Religion, with the one exception, their own creation, as mentioned above.

4. To establish the ability to control of each and every person through means of mind control and what Zbignew Brzezinski called techonotronics, which would create human-like robots and a system of terror which would make Felix Dzerzinhski's Red Terror look like children at play.

5. To bring about the end to all industrialization and the production of nuclear generated electric power in what they call "the post-industrial zero-growth society". Excepted are the computer- and service industries. US industries that remain will be exported to countries such as Mexico where abundant slave labor is available. As we saw in 1993, this has become a fact through the passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement, known as NAFTA. Unemployables in the US, in the wake of industrial destruction, will either become opium-heroin and/or cocaine addicts, or become statistics in the elimination of the "excess population" process we know of today as Global 2000.

6. To encourage, and eventually legalize the use of drugs and make pornography an "art-form", which will be widely accepted and, eventually, become quite commonplace.

7. To bring about depopulation of large cities according to the trial run carried out by the Pol Pot regime in Cambodia. It is interesting to note that Pol Pot's genocidal plans were drawn up in the US by one of the Club of Rome's research foundations, and overseen by Thomas Enders, a high-ranking State Department official. It is also interesting that the committee is currently seeking to reinstate the Pol Pot butchers in Cambodia.

8. To suppress all scientific development except for those deemed beneficial by the Illuminati. Especially targeted is nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. Particularly hated are the fusion experiments currently being scorned and ridiculed by the Illuminati and its jackals of the press. Development of the fusion torch would blow the Illuminati's conception of "limited natural resources" right out of the window. A fusion torch, properly used, could create unlimited and as yet untapped natural resources, even from the most ordinary substances. Fusion torch uses are legion, and would benefit mankind in a manner which, as yet, is not even remotely comprehended by the public.

9. To cause, by means of limited wars in the advanced countries, by means of starvation and diseases in the Third World countries, the death of three billion people by the year 2050, people they call "useless eaters". The Committee of 300 (Illuminati) commissioned Cyrus Vance to write a paper on this subject of how to bring about such genocide. The paper was produced under the title "Global 2000 Report" and was accepted and approved for action by former President James Earl Carter, and Edwin Muskie, then Secretary of States, for and on behalf of the US Government. Under the terms of the Global 2000 Report, the population of the US is to be reduced by 100 million by the year of 2050.

10. To weaken the moral fiber of the nation and to demoralize workers in the labor class by creating mass unemployment. As jobs dwindle due to the post industrial zero growth policies introduced by the Club of Rome, the report envisages demoralized and discouraged workers resorting to alcohol and drugs. The youth of the land will be encouraged by means of rock music and drugs to rebel against the status quo, thus undermining and eventually destroying the family unit. In this regard, the Committee commissioned Tavistock Institute to prepare a blueprint as to how this could be achieved. Tavistock directed Stanford Research to undertake the work under the direction of Professor Willis Harmon. This work later became known as the "Aquarian Conspiracy".

11. To keep people everywhere from deciding their own destinies by means of one created crisis after another and then "managing" such crises. This will confuse and demoralize the population to the extent where faced with too many choices, apathy on a massive scale will result. In the case of the US, an agency for Crisis Management is already in place. It is called the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), whose existence I first enclosed in 1980.

12. To introduce new cults and continue to boost those already functioning which include rock music gangsters such as the Rolling Stones (a gangster group much favored by European Black Nobility), and all of the Tavistock-created rock groups which began with the Beatles.

13. To continue to build up the cult of Christian Fundamentalism begun by the British East India Company's servant Darby, which will be misused to strengthen the Zionist State of Israel by identifying with the Jews through the myth of "God's chosen people", and by donating very substantial amounts of money to what they mistakenly believe is a religious cause in the furtherance of Christianity.

14. To press for the spread of religious cults such as the Moslem Brotherhood, Moslem Fundamentalism, the Sikhs, and to carry out mind control experiments of the Jim Jones and "Son of Sam" type. It is worth noting that the late Khomeini was a creation of British Military Intelligence Div. 6, MI6. This detailed work spelled out the step-by-step process which the US Government implemented to put Khomeini in power.

15. To export "religious liberation" ideas around the world so as to undermine all existing religions, but more especially the Christian religion. This began with the "Jesuit Liberation Theology", that brought an end to the Somoza Family rule in Nicaragua, and which today is destroying El Salvador, now 25 years into a "civil war". Costa Rica and Honduras are also embroiled in revolutionary activities, instigated by the Jesuits. One very active entity engaged in the so-called liberation theology, is the Communist-oriented Mary Knoll Mission. This accounts for the extensive media attention to the murder of four of Mary Knoll's so-called nuns in El Salvador a few years ago. The four nuns were Communist subversive agents and their activities were widely documented by the Government of El Salvador. The US press and the new media refused to give any space or coverage to the mass of documentation possessed by the Salvadorian Government, which proved what the Mary Knoll Mission nuns were doing in the country. Mary Knoll is in service in many countries, and placed a leading role in bringing Communism to Rhodesia, Moçambique, Angola and South Africa.

16. To cause a total collapse of the world's economies and engender total political chaos.

17. To take control of all foreign and domestic policies of the US.

18. To give the fullest support to supranational institutions such as the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Bank of International Settlements, the World Court and, as far as possible, make local institutions less effective, by gradually phasing them out or bringing them under the mantle of the UN.

19. To penetrate and subvert all governments, and work from within them to destroy the sovereign integrity of the nations represented by them.

20. To organize a world-wide terrorist apparatus and to negotiate with terrorists whenever terrorist activities take place. It will be recalled that it was Bettino Craxi, who persuaded the Italian and US Governments to negotiate with the Red Brigades kidnapers of Prime Minister Moro and General Dozier. As an aside, Dozier was placed under strict orders not to talk what happened to him. Should he ever break that silence, he will no doubt be mad "a horrible example of", in the manner in which Henry Kissinger dealt with Aldo Moro, Ali Bhutto and General Zia ul Haq.

21. To take control of education in America with the intent and purpose of utterly and completely destroying it. By 1993, the full force effect of this policy is becoming apparent, and will be even more destructive as primary and secondary schools begin to teach "Outcome Based Education" (OBE).

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US. DENTENTION CENTERS - DONT BE IN DENIAL

Title: US. DENTENTION CENTERS - DONT BE IN DENIAL

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:29 PM (GMT)

US. DENTENTION CENTERS - DONT BE IN DENIAL Updated 7-20-05
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=2149

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: WIZARD OF OZ and the ILLUMINATI MIND CONTROL

Title: WIZARD OF OZ and the ILLUMINATI MIND CONTROL

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:29 PM (GMT)

WIZARD OF OZ and the ILLUMINATI MIND CONTROL
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=2035

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Where the U.S President really takes orders from!

Title: Where the U.S President really takes orders from!

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:27 PM (GMT)

Where the U.S President really takes orders from!
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=17861

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE UNITED STATES IS STILL A BRITISH COLONY

Title: THE UNITED STATES IS STILL A BRITISH COLONY

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:27 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=40756

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Sensitivity Training - Edward Griffin [VID]

Title: Sensitivity Training - Edward Griffin [VID]

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:22 PM (GMT)

Edward Griffin - Seduction of a Generation
(Sensitivity Training, Brainwashing)

31 min - Apr 5, 2006
G. Edward Griffin - www.realityzone.com
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-5300142475723291102

Very prophetic filmstrip from 1969, narrated by G. Edward Griffin, about the use of sensitivity training as a tool in social engineering.

[dohtml]<embed id="VideoPlayback" src="http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=-5300142475723291102&hl=en&fs=true" style="width:400px;height:326px" allowFullScreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"> </embed>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Kimball-Cherokee Castle where the Bushes KILL

Title: Kimball-Cherokee Castle where the Bushes KILL

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:20 PM (GMT)

Kimball-Cherokee Castle where the Bushes KILL
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=1319

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Disney Bloodline

Title: The Disney Bloodline
Description: THE SKILL OF LYING, THE ART OF DECEIT

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:20 PM (GMT)

The Disney Bloodline
THE SKILL OF LYING, THE ART OF DECEIT
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=4408

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Cave Mystery Schools

Title: Cave Mystery Schools

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:19 PM (GMT)

Cave Mystery Schools
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...?showtopic=8549

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

Title: SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:15 PM (GMT)

SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE
The London Connection

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...topic=1287&st=0

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NWO 2006 Plans - William Cooper Had Some Answers

Title: NWO 2006 Plans - William Cooper Had Some Answers

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:54 PM (GMT)

NWO 2006 Plans - William Cooper Had Some Answers

As We Look To The New World Order's 2006 Agenda, It's Best To Review The Research And Writings Of William Cooper

William Cooper, a former military intelligence officer and world-reknown lecturer and writer, was killed in a suspicious 2001 police shootout in his Arizona home. Author of the best selling underground book of all time, Behold A Pale Horse, his top secret intelligence document discoveries provide proof positive the Illuminati intends mass destruction of half the world's population, reaching its diabolical goal in what the author terms 'the age of deception.'

By Greg Szymanski
12-26-5

To better understand what the New World Order has planned for 2006 and the years to come, it's wise to review the life and works of writer and lecturer, William Cooper, killed in a Nov. 6, 2001, police shootout in his Arizona home.

Cooper, 58, author of more than 20 books including "Behold A Pale Horse," the best selling underground book of all time, was also a highly popular worldwide radio talk show host, his show, "The Hour of the Time," appearing on shortwave and the internet on the Worldwide Christian Radio station out of Nashville.

After Cooper's untimely and suspicious death, Mills Crenshaw, a KTALK radio host out of Salt Lake City, put the sad event into perspective:

"William Cooper may be one of America's greatest heroes and this story may be the biggest story in the history of the world."

This week in the minds of many people, starting a new year is like wiping life's slate clean, starting anew, with fresh ideas, with important new goals and renewed interests in becoming useful each and every day of the year.

So, with the New World Order gathering momentum, it's useful to remember a page out of Cooper's life by embracing in the final days of 2005 the efforts of one lone, brave man who dedicated his entire existence to exposing the Illuminati's diabolical plans to destroy America, as well as the rest of the world.

In one of his 1997 writings entitled "Majestytwelve," Cooper draws this conclusion:

"If you wish to remain Free you will have to fight for it... not because we want to fight, or you want to fight, but because the traitors (within our government) will give us no choice in the matter. There will be either a revolution (the Marxist's choice) or there will be a serious attempt to restore Constitutional Republican government under Law (the Patriots choice). In any event there WILL BE WAR between the Citizens of the United States of America and the Marxist minions of the subversive corporate United States' new world order."

In Cooper's final years, he worked alone in his Arizona home with his two dogs, rooster and chicken, sending his family out of the U.S . in 1999 for their security. Prior to several years of Arizona desert solitude, Copper became known as a world class lecturer, appearing at Wembly Hall in London as well as lecturing in every state of the Union for more during a 10 year period.

Known as a consummate researcher, backing his New World Order theories with hard data from his days in U.S. Navy Intelligence, Cooper always struck fear in the eyes of Presidents, including Clinton, who mounted an FBI attack to silence Cooper's views.

Shortly after the Oklahoma City bombing, Rush Limbaugh read a White House memo on the air during his broadcast, calling William Cooper, "...the most dangerous radio host in America". Cooper was later quoted as saying Clinton's pronouncement was "the greatest compliment that he has ever received."

Further, Cooper's FBI file which included references to his security clearances while in military service, was one of those unlawfully in possession of the White House in what has become known as, "Filegate". Shortly after this discovery, President Clinton ordered all federal agencies to begin investigation, persecution, and prosecution of Mr. Cooper to shut him up.

While engaged in ongoing federal battles with the FBI over free speech issues and the IRS who tried to put a financial stranglehold on his affairs, Cooper went to work full steam, creating several documentaries about the JFK assassination and the government's UFO hoax in order to strike fear in Americans.

Cooper also believed in empowering Americans with free thought through newspapers and the airwaves, starting the CAJI News Service, VERITAS national full size newspaper, The Intelligence Service, Harvest Publications, and has helped over 700 low power FM affiliate stations get equipped and on the air, including the station he managed as Trustee for the Independence Foundation Trust, 101.1 FM Eagar, Arizona, broadcasting to 7,000 people.

Under his leadership, his company also ventured into the publishing trade. The first book published being Oklahoma City: Day One by Michele Marie Moore... the definitive classic on the Oklahoma City bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building on April 19, 1995.

But to really understand Cooper's philosophy an where he obtained much of his secret information to be used in his later works, it's necessary to understand his military background, the place he became all to familiar with the real intentions of the New World Order

Cooper first served with the Strategic Air Command, United States Air Force, holding a secret clearance working on B-52 bombers, KC-135 refueling aircraft, and Minuteman missiles.

After the Air Force, he joined the United States Navy fulfilling a dream previously frustrated by chronic motion sickness. He served aboard the submarine USS Tiru (SS-416), USS Tombigbee (AOG-11), Naval Support Activity Danang RVN, Naval Security and Intelligence Camp Carter RVN, Danang Harbor Patrol RVN, Dong Ha River Security Group RVN, USS Charles Berry (DE-1035), Headquarters Commander in Chief Pacific Fleet, USS Oriskany (CVA-34).

Cooper was a member of the Office of Naval Security and Intelligence serving as a Harbor and River Patrol Boat Captain at Danang and the Dong Ha River Security Group, Cua Viet, Republic of Vietnam, being awarded several medals for heroism during combat.

He also served on the Intelligence Briefing Team for the Commander In Chief of the Pacific Fleet, designated KL-47 SPECAT operator in the CINCPACFLT Command Center at Makalapa Hawai1 where he held a Top Secret, Q, SI, security clearance.

Being privy to top secret information for many years, Cooper later would call on his military background and expertise as a centerpiece for much of his writing, deciding to tell the truth and be a man of conscience instead of selling his own soul to the New World Order thugs.

Although Cooper's works are immense, covering almost every possible element of what is amounting to a global takeover by the Illuminati, anyone reading the following excerpts from a top secret documents uncovered by Cooper will conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that America's destruction is underway from within and the only way to get back the country staring in 2006 is by a revolution of the people.

In the article referenced above, entitled Majestytwelve, Cooper's words make the hair on anyone's head stand up:

"The following is fact. It is not a theory it is a genuine conspiracy. I witnessed the Top Secret/Magic documents from which this information is excerpted while a member of the United States Navy attached to the Intelligence Briefing Team of Admiral Bernard Clarey, Commander in Chief of the United States Pacific Fleet.

"I certify that the following information is true and correct to the best of my memory and the research that I have accomplished. I will swear to it in any court of Law.

"I can produce the names of approximately 38 U.S. Navy officers and enlisted men who witnessed these documents while in the service of their countryI can produce the names of approximately 80 others whom I suspect have witnessed these same documents. I will not reveal the names except in a court of Law that is willing to prosecute the People and organizations involved in the conspiracy to overthrow the government of the United States of America to bring about a socialist totalitarian world government."

After Cooper went to great lengths to add authenticity and credibility to his discovery while in the military, he went on to delineate the intentions of the diabolical forces behind the secret military documents.

"Many years ago I had access to a set of documents that I eventually realized was the plan for the destruction of the United States of America and the formation of a socialist totalitarian world government. The plan was contained within a set of Top Secret documents with the title "MAJESTYTWELVE". There was no space between majesty and twelve. The term honored the planned placement of ultimate power in a body of wise men who are destined to rule the world as the disciples of a Messiah front man. This "Messiah will serve as a buffer between the wise men and the sheeple. I discovered these documents between 1970 and 1973 while I was a member of the Intelligence Briefing Team of the Commander in Chief of the United States Pacific Fleet.

"MAJESTYTWELVE was in a tall thin font style...imagine the title squeezed together between the M and E with all of the letters stretched vertically. The key to access was a Top Secret (Q) (SCI) security clearance with the compartmentalization of "MAJIC" (not magic). I cannot remember the exact font except that it is a tall thin version of San Serif... the exact name escapes me after all these years... but it is a key to access.

"The plan outlined the formation of a world totalitarian socialist government. It is to be ruled by a behind-the-scenes council of wise men. A so-called benevolent dictator, will be presented as the Messiah.

"The Constitution for the United States of America and its Bill of Rights will be scrapped. A parliamentary form of government will take its place. All military forces and individuals are to be disarmed except for an internal police force which will carry only the minimum weapons needed to maintain internal order."

Although Cooper only lived to see a little more than a year of the Bush Presidency, he was a firm advocate that President Clinton, although posing as a man of the people, was in fact one of the biggest and most diabolical front men for the New World Order.

And to prove his point, the following two Clinton quotes illustrates his true intentions:

"When we got organized as a country and we wrote a fairly radical Constitution with a radical Bill of Rights, giving a radical amount of individual freedom to Americans... And so a lot of people say there's too much personal freedom. When personal freedom's being abused, you have to move to limit it. That's what we did in the announcement I made last weekend on the public housing projects, about how we're going to have weapon sweeps and more things like that to try to make people safer in their communities." Said President Bill Clinton on MTV on March 3, 1994.

He further stated on several days later in a USA Today interview: "We can't be so fixated on our desire to preserve the rights of ordinary Americans"

Besides pointing the finger at Clinton, Cooper claimed the true source of the global conspiracy based in fact was to be found in a body known as the Illuminati, a group made up of the highest level of the so-called secret orders and secret societies. Explaing their origin and purpose, Cooper wrote:

They are bound together by blood oaths, a secret religion, and the promise of an elite status within regional government, or the world supra government. Their religion is based upon the Kabbalah, the Luciferian Philosophy, and the worship of the Sun. They are not bound by any oath or allegiance save their own. They are loyal to no government or People save their own. And they are Citizens of no country save their already in place secret world government. In their own words, "If you are not one of us you are nothing." To garner some sense of "feel" for the concept see the movie "They Live."

"It is a largely 'open' conspiracy, in that much of its membership, structure, methods, and operations, are matters of public record, however scattered and obscure. Its manner of coordination is atypical. Two nuclei - the elite core of the Wall Street clique (orbiting the House of Rockefeller) and the elite core of the European financial clique (orbiting the House of Rothschild) - coordinate this global conspiracy by waging psychological warfare on the rest of the conspirators, telling each no more than is necessary for him to fulfill his designated role, often with explicit recognition neither of his role, nor of the unarticulated rules that govern him.

"Thus, the overwhelming bulk of the conspirators do not know, but only suspect, that they are part of and in service to 'a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so complete, so pervasive, that they had better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it."

In his article about the secret military documents, he delves into the inner workings of the Illuminati, showing how some candidates rise to the top, hand picked for progress beyond the 13th Degree (York Rite) or 32nd Degree (Scottish Rite). Cooper claims those 'chosen few' disappear behind the veil and become one of the "Thousand Points of Light," are more properly known as the "Magi."

Looking back at history, Cooper adds:

"The process of initiation and blood oaths have always been the protection of the Illuminati in a Christian world that has had a tendency to "burn at the stake" those who differed in belief or philosophy. The "burning alive" of Jacques DeMolay, the persecution of men like Gallileo and Giordano Bruno by the Catholic Church, and the persecution of their Orders has resulted in the "Brotherhoods" hatred of Christianity and the goal of the extermination of all religions save theirs.

"You may verify the goal of the Illuminati by visiting the home page of Freemasonry's Grand Lodge of Scotland (if that link does not work click here). You will notice the flag of the Grand Lodge of Scotland and the "Universal" flag of Freemasonry is displayed. The "Universal" flag of Freemasonry is the United Nations Flag. (We thank those of you who responded with affidavits confirming this paragraph.) Since this paragraph has become well known the Grand Lodge of Scotland has replaced the United Nations Flag (Universal Flag of Freemasonry) on their WebPages with a graphic of the earth."

And buried deep in the documents uncovered by Cooper, which he vigorously tried to expose until his untimely death, was the call for a mass extermination in what he termed the "goal in the age of deception."

If anyone ever wonders on the dawn of this new year where the U.S. is headed after Oklahoma City and 9/11, listens to Cooper's predictions based on what he learned from years working in the military intelligence field:

"This is the age of deception. The world is on the razor. One half is scheduled to be exterminated if these people have their way, and the other half is scheduled to be enslaved when the mystical union between the moon IS (Isis or Church) and the sun

RA (Osiris or Doctrine) greets the Son of the morning EL (Horus or full body of Adepts) on the horizon (Horus risen) in the New Dawn (ISRAEL or realization of the New World Order).

"When the process is complete a new worldwide Soviet Union will emerge to thin the herd, shear the sheople, and march them off to enslavement or slaughter depending upon their individual ability to accept and adhere to their reeducation.

As Cooper ponders the fate of America and the world, his 1997 words appear to be coming true as we enter 2006.

"There will be no individual Rights only privileges. These will be granted or denied at will by the world supra government. All property is to be owned by the State. There will be a redistribution of wealth. They plan to eliminate class differences and reduce the standard of living to a lower level in the advanced nations, such as the United States, and to a higher standard of living in the so-called third world nations.

"This leveling of the standard of living will be accomplished through a global economic collapse which is in its beginning stages. The economic collapse will fulfill the goal of Marx and Engles' Communist Manifesto mandating the elimination of the middle class. The graduated income tax was the first implementation of this process and is one of the planks of the Communist Manifesto. NAFTA and GATT are a part of this process encouraging industry to move into third-world nations in order to exploit cheap labor.

"All existing religions will disappear. The only religion will be the state religion (humanism or illuminism).

"All County and State governments will be eliminated and replaced with regional government. These regional governments (Home Rule) are already in place. Regionalism is gradually taking control throughout America.

"There will be no more cash. Trade will be accomplished by a system of computer credits with accounts accessed through debit cards or computer chip implants. The cards or implants will also serve as personal identification, drivers license, and etc. When this is completed the human race will be shackled to a computer in a never ending cycle of debt. No action or movement will ever again be private."

Further delving into the age of new world order deception, Cooper points to the UFO and alien hoax thrust on America, finding within the Majestytwelve secret documents the entire plan for the creation of a socialist world government is protected by an artificial extraterrestrial threat from space. He adds the entire UFO phenomenon and the uFOOLogy movement has been created to further the protection and activation of the plan, outing Coast to Coast talk show host Art Bell, as one of the main Illuminati spokesman.

"Within MAJESTYTWELVE is Operation Majority justifying the plan by presenting an extraterrestrial threat as the reason for the necessity for world government ala "Who speaks for planet Earth... Argentina?" Exactly the manner in which Stanton T. Friedman ends his UFOs Are Real lectures," said Cooper.

"When I saw Operation Majority while serving in the Navy I believed the alien threat was real just like everyone else. It was not until I had performed many years of research that I was able to fully understand exactly what it was that I had seen. It was extremely difficult for me to believe that my government and the United States Navy had used me, especially since I had dedicated my life to government and military service. Most government and military personnel cannot and will not believe such and idea.

"The plan is real. The extraterrestrial threat is artificial. The threat is presented through the use of secret technology originally developed by the Germans in their secret weapons programs during WW-II, by geniuses like Nikola Tesla, and many others."

Concerning Bell's role in the New World Order agenda, Cooper again relies on the "age of deception" theory, as well as decoding Illuminati signs and symbols in order to find out the real truth among the many messages of deception. Referring to Bell's well-known logo of a gold pyramid in a deep blue sea with his name at the top of the pyramid, Cooper illustrates his point about Bell's role:

"I have long recognized that Art Bell is a shill for the New World Odor. It is confirmed in his book . World government is, in fact, the theme of the book.

"Did you know that the sea (mare or Mary) is a symbol of vast numbers of People, the masses in Marxist symbology? Did you notice that the pyramid rises from the sea (People) and dominates the scene as a promise, or savior? Did you know the pyramid missing the capstone represents the Great (unfinished) Work of the Mystery School? Did you know that the Great Work represents social engineering (socialism) working toward the apotheosis of the race (perfected man, sixth root race) as promised to Adam and Eve by Satan, and a New World Order?

"Did you notice that the name Art Bell straddles the capstone signifying that he is the Light Worker, or Illumined Man, or Master Mason, or Horus, or perfected god-Man, or Savior, who completes the Great Work? Did you notice the Bright Star fallen from heaven just above the capstone? Do you know who or what it represents? Do you see the Thousand Points of Light working in silence behind the veil (clouds) in the heavens. Illuminism is Marxism. It is a false promise that the human race will be perfected bringing a perfect utopian society through social engineering. This is a brainwashing mechanism whereby an ignorant slave race may be created to be ruled by a totalitarian socialist world government.

"Art Bell is a Freemason. He is a member of the Illuminati. Art Bell's book 'The Quickening' is one of the most blatant, in your face, pieces of new world order propaganda that I have ever seen. In it Art Bell, claiming to be a patriotic American, shamelessly advocates the formation of a world totalitarian socialist government."

With most people heading into the new year with the thought of another terrorist attack on the horizon, Cooper claims these attacks are a new world order strategy to tell Americans any opposition will be met with brute force.

"Ruby Ridge, the Waco Massacre, the attack against Patriots and Militias, and other acts of aggression against the American People who might combat this fraud are acts of war. These acts are designed to demonize fundamentalist Christians, Jews, Moslems, the lawful Militia, and anyone else who might fight in defense of the Constitution or Freedom.

"These terrorist acts deliver a message to the American People that any opposition to the new world supra government will be met with overwhelming force and the complete genocide of the enemies of socialism."

And as everybody has a New Year's Eve toast, while wondering where the next terrorist "shoe will drop," listen to Cooper's concluding analysis and ominous 1997 predictions, making anyone reading immediately want to pour another stiff drink.

"MAJESTYTWELVE stated that the first terrorist attack in the United States would occur in a large city such as New York or Los Angeles . Based upon that statement I accurately predicted that it would occur in New York, and it did when the World Trade Center was bombed.

"MAJESTYTWELVE stated that terrorism would continue until the American People consented to be completely and thoroughly disarmed. The document stated that the second major target would be, "somewhere in the heartland such as Oklahoma City". The actual target was not named. Since the document was not specific as to the actual target and its location I did not predict Oklahoma City... but my prediction of continued terrorist attacks including major attacks upon the "heartland" of America was accurate."

Writing before 9/11, he further predicted the following:

"If these acts of terror do not succeed there will be more bombings, chemical, or biological attacks. They will escalate in the destruction, maiming and killing of men women and especially children. More shootings at shopping centers, restaurants, and schools will occur. As a last resort, if all else fails, the Illuminati are prepared to detonate an atomic weapon in a large American city such as New York, Chicago, or Los Angeles."

For more important articles, go to www.arcticbeacon.com.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Royal Conspiracy: How the Crown & Jesuits Rule

Title: Royal Conspiracy: How the Crown & Jesuits Rule

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:53 PM (GMT)

*Now my friends unfortunatley THE CROWN refers to The City of London and not to the Monarchy. The City is made up of Bankers, Insurance firms etc which are run by the likes of the Rothschilds etc these along with monarchs are known as The Black Nobility or Bloodlines. It is proven that in England The Cecils dominated over the Royals and this is the real reason for the trouble with King Edward 8th as the almighty Cecils didn't want his girlfriend getting the Vril (Bloodline). Rothschilds and Cecils bickered about this but who won? The Cecils. This shows that the royals do not have the power people think. Now notice how Skolnick has only written the smallest of pieces on the Vatican and not even mentioned the Jesuits of which his title addresses. Again this shows hes either not the great fearless one hes made out to be or he doesn't truely understand the almight Jesuit Order. Hes absolutely correct that The Jesuit Order rules but they rule alone, their the omega point of the control system (pinacle). Read Eric Jon Phelps for real information on The Society of Jesus -2tuff

Royal Conspiracy: How the Crown & Jesuits Rule

by SHERMAN SKOLNICK

King of Spain Juan Carlos

Time and again, there are instances of great violence and political assassinations. Who benefits? There are no answers, certainly not from the aristocracies and the crowned heads of Europe.

From 1841 to 1963, seven US Presidents were assassinated. Four by gunfire. Three by poisoning. Who benefitted?

The European aristocracies, without their own written Constitutions and Bills of Rights, opposed those who fled to the New World and there established an organic charter, the U.S. Constitution and its Bill of Rights.

The aristocrats included the Crowned Monarchs which, of course, included the Pope in the Vatican. Their governance was and is founded on arbitrary might-makes-right power and ruling by supposed "Divine Right". Does anyone remember? Up to about 1870, what is now called "Italy" were the Papal States, ruled by theocracy with its own military force, Caesar and Heaven, joined at the hip.

These emperors, to restore and preserve their power, find it necessary to have now launched a new Crusade, again, against the supposed "infidels", the Moslem World.

Who remembers? The past Crusades ended up a disaster for Europe, causing the Eastern World to organize under Saladin, a Kurd.

Half-asleep Americans apparently pay no attention to words of knowledge and wisdom.

The former head of German intelligence, Andreas Von Buelow, states that September 11, 2001, was an American home-grown product, not involving Arabs except to be falsely blamed. The highest level of the U.S. Central Government and their stooges in the Intelligence Agencies and U.S. Military were in on it. It was sort of like the aborted plan in 1962, thirty nine years prior, to justify invading Cuba, by Joint Chiefs of Staff planning to destroy U.S. buildings and airplanes, causing great bloodshed to innocent Americans, to be falsely blamed onto Fidel Castro. The book documenting "Operation Northwoods", namely "Body of Secrets", by James Bamford, was issued just prior to 9-11. Who in the monopoly press connected the dots?

A week after our exclusive interview with Von Buelow was on the air on our radio show in Toronto, "Cloak and Dagger", and at the height of our ratings in Canada for the time slot, Mojo Radio, pressured by financial forces, yanked our show off the air after the popular program had been on the air for 76 weeks.

Does anyone remember? After 9-11, and before the invasion of Iraq, the King of Spain, Juan Carlos, ordered White House resident and occupant, George W. Bush, and British Prime Minister, Tony Blair, to show up at islands, offshore Portugal, a meeting place chosen by the Monarch, for the King to give themthe favor of an audience.

This demonstration of WHO is REALLY in control, was, of course, not identified as such by the newsfakers in London and New York.

As we have earlier shown, the Head of State of Canada is Queen Elizabeth II. This Monarch, in reality and show of power, is the actual Head of State, as well, of the United States.

By benefitting from, if not ordering, the political murders of seven U.S. Presidents, the British Monarchy and the Jesuits, as the brute force of the Vatican, have repeatedly snuffed out U.S. Presidents that opposed these foreign forces from encroaching on U. S. industrial and financial and other development.

[To understand this, study the parts of the series, "The Overthrow of the American Republic", at www.cloakanddagger.ca and www.skolnicksreport.com and as archived with Skolnick as a columnist at www.rense.com]

A bit of history seldom mentioned or completely previously censored. With the end of World War One came the apparent decline if not supposed disapearance of the Monarchies of Europe. The supposed British Monarchy, at Buckingham Palace, was actually German royalty, the House of Hanover (Saxe-Coburg-Gotha). Because of anti-German sentiment in England during World War One, the pretended Royal Brits changed to a fake name, the House of Windsor.

In December 1936, when war with Germany was expected again, King Edward 8th, supposedly British, but actually German, abdicated with the lame excuse he wanted to marry a forbidden commoner.

His successor on the British throne (actually of German royalty, George Saxe-Coburg-Gotha), became King George the 6th and committed treason with the Nazis -- covered up by Buckingham Palace's art expert, Anthony Blunt, who during World War Two, went behind the German lines to retrieve documents from a European castle that showed the treachery of King George 6th.

Blunt was later unmasked as a Moscow secret agent, to protect the supposed British royals, Blunt was not prosecuted. Having removed himself from the throne, King Edward 6th and his commoner wife Wallis Simpson (who was a major worldwide shipping magnate with the Nazis), became the Duke and Duchess of Windsor.

The Duke was the ruler, during World War Two, of the British colony, the Bahamas. He secretly and treasonously arranged to re-fuel Nazi submarines right off-shore of the United States which then torpedoed American ships killing numerous American sailors and merchant marines.

During the War, the Duke and Duchess met with officials of the German High Command and the Gestapo, in neutral Portugal. [In recent years, a heavily documented video production, showing previously secret films, showed the treason of the Duke and Duchess. It was shown on the History Channel, on Cable TV.]

Upon the death of King George 6th in 1952, his daughter, also of course as him, of German royalty, came on the throne as Queen Elizabeth II.

Now, with the impending worldwide financial collapse, has come the re-emergence of the Monarchies of Europe, to rule with an iron-fist and promote Fascism, to be pushed down upon unsuspecting Americans and others with the cover story propaganda that it is simply fighting the "terrorism" of the Moslem World. That is, simply stated, Rule by the Crowned Heads By Fear and Terror supposedly to be blamed on "The Arabs".

The Iberian Peninsula has quietly been the focus of U.S. intelligence agencies' dirty, bloody operations.

In 1974, Frank Carlucci headed the American CIA operation to overthrow the Lisbon socialist government. He had been Chief of Sears Roebucks international operations, an actual "spook" operation and later a top official of the American spy machine. Much later, he was the head of the international war-mongers, weapons producers, and all-around secret operations bribery center, known as Carlyle Group.

Carlyle, which is financially tied to the Bush Crime Family, is interwoven with Queen Elizabeth II's private bank, Coutts Bank London.

There the Queen has a joint account amounting to ONE HUNDRED BILLION DOLLARS, with the Bush Crime Family.

Having a huge financial interest in the same account is their business partner, Saddam Hussein. The document showing this with the secret codes has been posted on www.cloakanddagger.ca

The massive joint account is used to launder illicit funds from gold smuggling; sale of forbidden nuclear weapons (such as by Donald Rumsfeld's Swiss firm, ABB, to the North Koreans); hiding other weapons dealings with known terrorists with Hillary Rodham Clinton and her business partners (our tv show in Chicago got her lesbian business partner, Diane Lewis, in 1992, arrested for illegally supplying known terrorists with missile parts) and Hillary in financial matters is interwoven with the Bush Crime Family, which many know-nothings do not suspect because of her hot-air public viewpoints; the joint account is entangled with concealing funds from the worldwide dope cartels; and laundering the proceeds from land-mine producing companies, that is of firms owned by Queen Elizabeth II and her husband, Duke of Edinburgh, also known as Prince Philip.

Notice what Queen Elizabeth II did, by way of joining with and merging her financial interests, with Carlyle Group.

"The Queen has a new bank manager, following the departure of Andrew Fisher, chief executive of Coutts, to the Carlyle Group, the US private equity firm". Financial Times of London, December 19, 2001.

The Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Philip, also called "Consort" to the Queen, actually the husband of Queen Elizabeth II; they together are major owners of weapons factories worldwide, including the manufacturing of land-mines.

Prince Diana headed a worldwide campaign against land-mines. So you can quickly sense one of the motives for Prince Philip to have ordered British Counter-Intellience, MI-6, to murder Diana and her intended Arab husband, Dodi Fayed.

It was disguised as an "accident" in a Paris tunnel, site of the traditional place that European monarchs fought one another to the death, the murdered Monarch, so the legend goes, then goes to Heaven to sit next to Jesus Christ.

The Daily Mirror of London, went to press several hours before the actual political assasinations, with why and how Prince Philip wants Diana and her intended Arab husband Dodi Fayed dead. To be used by Queen Elizabeth II's husband, the newspaper contended, was British Counter-Intelligence, MI-6. August, 1997.

[The Queen's unlisted "General Counsel", in interviews with certain North American journalists, denied Prince Philip ordered the assassination of Princess Diana. See: "The Ash Wednesday Plot", Part 3, at www.cloakanddagger.ca]

The Bush Crime Family, for the purposes of disguising their illicit operations worldwide, have twenty-five secret massive accounts. They are shown in documents posted early in the year 2000 at http://www.skolnicksreport.com

The series there "Greenspan Aids and Bribes Bush". The secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records, with Greenspan's secret authorization code, are attached to the website series. Also, it includes the notes of the Chief of the Internal Affairs section of the U.S. Treasury, inquiring into the dirty business of Daddy Bush and his sons.

One of the documents shows the Bush Crime Family account in a bank in Malaga, Spain, ostensibly used for bloody operations on the Iberian Peninsula.

The oil-soaked, spy-riddled monopoly press, U.S./Europe, are promoting false accusations as to the bombings in Madrid, "The Arabs did it!" The precision co-ordinating of ten major bombings within a few minutes requires the type of technical skill and the planning typical of bloody operations of intelligence agencies, not dissident Basques or disgruntled Arabs.

Not replicated or noticed by the monopoly press elsewhere, the press in Portugal reported official inquiries into the role of Daddy Bush in the political assassination of Portugal's Prime Minister and an associate of his, by way of a sabotaged airplane crash.

The Portuguese leaders were going public with the role of Daddy Bush, arranging a treasonous deal in a Paris suburb, October, 1980. Top Iranian officials were there bribed with money and promised weapons shipments, by George Herbert Walker Bush, so that the Reagan/Bush ticket could win the Presidential election in 1980 against incumbent Jimmy Carter. The Georgia Democrat was shown as a wimp, not able to get the release of the 52 U.S. hostages held by Iran. Bush otherwise feared an "October Surprise" that would aid Carter in the election. Their release treasonously delayed by Daddy Bush, the hostages were set free in January, 1981, at the very moment Reagan/ Bush were inaugurated as President and Vice President.

The secret air flight to the Paris suburb, October, 1980, was piloted by Office of Naval Intelligence Commander Gunther Russbacher. His signed, detailed statement shows that among the top dignataries onboard were former Director of Central Intelligence, George Herbert Walker Bush, running for Vice President; U.S. SENATOR JOHN F. KERRY (Democrat, Mass.), an apparent American CIA agent provocateur previously posing as a peacenik; and U.S. Congressman Dan Rostenkowski(D., Ill.), head of the tax-writing committee of Congress, often bribed to push tax loop-holes for the Chicago commodity markets. Rosty was later sent to federal prison for embezzling funds from the private bank of the U.S. Congress.

Portugal was to be a transit point for secret weapons shipments by Reagan/Bush, headed for Israel which was the further trans-shipment point to Iran, as part of the treasonous money/weapons Daddy Bush deal.

The French CIA and Israeli intelligence, The Mossad, with video and other proof of the Reagan/Bush treachery, use the details as blackmail against the current Bush White House. To silence the top Portuguese officials, Daddy Bush had them assassinated, and members of the Lisbon legislature have the proof, according to press accounts there.

Among spy agencies, the American CIA has a propensity for using cryptic numerology as well as Greek mythology to label their secret operations. The CIA likes to set off their bloody business on the anniversary of other events. An example is the murder, by airplane sabotage, of John F. Kennedy, Jr., in July, 1999. [See the anniversaries identified in the series, "What Happened To America's Golden Boy", www. skolnicksreport.com]

So, the approval ratings of George W. Bush were declining. Some feared a U.S. military disaster in the U.S.'s role as foreign invaders on the soil of Iraq. So, 911 days since September 11, 2001, namely March 11, 2004, there are ten precision bombings in Madrid, Spain. The liars and whores of the press, just like after a political assassination, crank up a smokescreen against patsies, currently Basque dissidents and then the Arabs.

Commonfolk have an extreme difficulty understanding the Crowned Heads of Europe, the Aristocracy of Europe-U.S. It requires a mindset seldom understood.

How other supposed humans, even those in the Establishment that worship satanic idols (such as Skull & Bastards Society members George W. Bush and John F. Kerry), who would benefit from instigating violence and wars that cause great bloodshed; and foment Depressions, that steal away the properties and life savings of ordinary people to further enrich the ultra wealthy. And then such monsters, having set loose such forces, sit down in their private dining rooms, with gold tableware, and eat their supper as if nothing happened.

The subject matters of "Aristocracy", who, what, why, and when, are seldom, if ever, taught in universities in North America.

How many months, if not years, must now pass, before ordinary people understand the role of the Establishment, not the Arabs, in the violence of September 11, 2001?

And likewise, how much time must now pass before half-asleep Americans and befuddled Canadians understand WHO BENEFITS from the violence in Madrid?

Notice how the Royalty of Spain, apparently want to quickly show they supposedly have no complicity in the Madrid event, such as with the other Crowned Heads of Europe and their adjunct, the intelligence agencies; and that they are all sad about the violence and their apparent secret agenda of which it is a part.

Spanish King Juan Carlos said in a televised address to the people after visiting survivors in one of the city's hospitals, "A nightmare has struck showing terrorism's cruel face".

And "Your king is suffering with all of you and shares your indignation."

Also, "For the first time in the history of Spain, the royal family took part, which was headed by Crown Prince Felipe and his sisters Elena and Cristina." [Inter Press Service". 3/13/2004.]

When will we all finally understand how, why and when the crowned heads of Europe intend to rule by fear and terror?

* Mr. Skolnick's research reports of his investigative group are on his website www.skolnicksreport.com
Also shown on www.cloakanddagger.ca

Mr. Skolnick together with Lenny Bloom are co-hosts of a audiostreaming program on internet, soon to be at maximum Internet pipeline power, live ON-LINE as if a radio broadcast and also archived ON-LINE. Their temporary schedule in the meantime is shown on www.cloakanddagger.ca

Recently published, the book "Ahead of the Parade" by Sherman H. Skolnick, A Who's Who of Treason & High Crimes---Exclusive Details of Fraud & Corruption of the Monopoly Press, the Banks, the Bench and the Bar, & the Secret Political Police. Toll FREE order line for US/Canada
1-800-861-7899.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: REPORT FROM IRON MOUNTAIN

Title: REPORT FROM IRON MOUNTAIN

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:51 PM (GMT)

REPORT FROM IRON MOUNTAIN: ON THE POSSIBILITY AND DESIRABILITY OF PEACE

With introductory material by Leonard C. Lewin

The Dial Press, Inc. 1967

New York...

Library of Congress Catalog card Number 67-27553 Printed in the U. S.

CONTENTS:

Forward -- vii

Background Information -- xvii

Statement by "John Doe" -- xxxi

The Report of the Special Study Group

Letter of Transmittal -- 3

Introduction -- 7

Section 1. Scope of the Study -- 11

Section 2. Disarmament and the Economy -- 17

Section 3. Disarmament Scenarios -- 23

Section 4. War & Peace as Social Systems -- 27

Section 5. The Functions of War -- 33

Section 6. Substitutes for the Functions of War -- 57

Section 7. Summary and Conclusions -- 79

Section 8. Recommendations -- 95

NOTES -- 103

FOREWORD

"John Doe," as I will call him in this book for reasons that will be made clear, is a professor at a large university in the Middle West. His field is one of the social sciences, but I will not identify him beyond this. He telephoned me one evening last winter, quite unexpectedly; we had not been in touch for several years. He was in New York for a few days, he said, and there was something important he wanted to discuss with me. He wouldn't say what it was. We met for lunch the next day at a midtown restaurant.

He was obviously disturbed. He made small talk for half an hour, which was quite out of character, and I didn't press him. Then, apropos of nothing, he mentioned a dispute between a writer and a prominent political family that had been in the headlines. What, he wanted to know, were my views on "freedom of information"? How would I qualify them? And so on. My answers were not memorable, but they seemed to satisfy him. Then, quite abruptly, he began to tell me the following story:

Early in August of 1963, he said, he found a message on his desk that a "Mrs. Potts" had called him from Washington. When he returned the call, a MAN answered immediately, and told Doe, among other things, that he had been selected to serve on a commission "of the highest importance." Its objective was to determine, accurately and realistically, the nature of the problems that would confront the United States if and when a condition of "permanent peace" should arrive, and to draft a program for dealing with this contingency. The man described the unique procedures that were to govern the commission's work and that were expected to extend its scope far beyond that of any previous examination of these problems.

Considering that the caller did not precisely identify either himself or his agency, his persuasiveness must have been a truly remarkable order. Doe entertained no serious doubts of the bona fides of the project, however, chiefly because of his previous experience with the excessive secrecy that often surrounds quasi-governmental activities. In addition, the man at the other end of the line demonstrated an impressively complete and surprisingly detailed knowledge of Doe's work and personal life. He also mentioned the names of others who were to serve with the group; most of them were known to Doe by reputation. Doe agreed to take the assignment --- he felt he had no real choice in the matter --- and to appear the second Saturday following at Iron Mountain, New York. An airline ticket arrived in his mail the next morning.

The cloak-and-daggar tone of this convocation was further enhanced by the meeting place itself. Iron Mountain, located near the town of Hudson, is like something out of Ian Fleming or E.Phillips Oppenheim. It is an underground nuclear hideout for hundreds of large American corporations. Most of them use it as an emergency storage vault for important documents. But a number of them maintain substitute corporate headquarters as well, where essential personnel could presumably survive and continue to work after an attack. This latter group includes such firms as Standard Oil of New Jersey, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, and Shell.

I will leave most of the story of the operations of the Special Study Group, as the commission was formally called, for Doe to tell in his own words ("Background Information"). At this point it is necessary to say only that it met and worked regularly for over two and a half years, after which it produced a Report. It was this document, and what to do about it, that Doe wanted to talk to me about.

The Report, he said, had been suppressed --- both by the Special Study Group itself and by the government INTERAGENCY committee to which it had been submitted. After months of agonizing, Doe had decided that he would no longer be party to keeping it secret. What he wanted from me was advice and assistance in having it published. He gave me his copy to read, with the express understanding that if for any reason I were unwilling to become involved, I would say nothing about it to anyone else.

I read the Report that same night. I will pass over my own reactions to it, except to say that the unwillingness of Doe's associates to publicize their findings became readily understandable. What had happened was that they had been so tenacious in their determination to deal comprehensively with the many problems of transition to peace that the original questions asked of them were never quite answered. Instead, this is what they concluded:

Lasting peace, while no theoretically impossible, is probably unattainable; even if it could be achieved it would almost certainly not be in the best interestes of a stable society to achieve it.

That is the gist of what they say. Behind their qualified academic language runs this general argument: War fills certain functions essential to the stability of our society; until other ways of filling them are developed, the war system must be maintained -- and improved in effectiveness.

It is not surprising that the Group, in its Letter of Transmittal, did not choose to justify its work to "the lay reader, unexposed to the exigencies of higher political or military responsibility." Its Report was addressed, deliberately, to unnamed government administrators of high rank; it assumed - considerable politicial sophistication from this select audience. To the general reader, therefore, the substance of the document may be even more unsettling than its conclusions. He may not be prepared for some of its assumptions -- for instance, that most medical advances are viewed more as problems than as progress; or that poverty is necessary and desirable, public postures by politicians to the contrary notwithstanding; or that standing armies are, among other things social-welfare institutions in exactly the same sense as are old-people's homes and mental hospitals. It may strike him as odd to find the probably explanation of "flying saucer" incidents disposed of en passant in less than a sentence. He may be less surprised to find that the space program and the "controversial antimissile missile and fallout shelter programs are understood to have the spending of vast sums of money, not the advancement of science or national defense, as their principal goals, and to learn that "military" draft policies are only remotely concerned with defense.

He may be offended to find the organized repression of minority groups, and even the reestablishment of slavery, seriously (and on the whole favorably discussed as possible aspects of a world at peace. He is not likely to take kindly to the notion of the deliberate intensification of air and water pollution (as part of a program leading to peace), even when the reason for considering it is made clear. That a world without war will have to turn sooner rather than later to universal test-tube procreation will be less disturbing, if no more appealing. But few readers will not be taken aback, at least, by a few lines in th Report's conclusions, repeated in its formal recommendations, that suggest that the long-range planning--and "budgeting" -- of the "optimum" number of lives to be destroyed annuallly in overt warfare is high on the Group's list of priorities for government action.

I cite these few examples primarily to warn the general reader what he can expect. The statesmen and strategists for whose eyes the Report was intended obviously need no such protective admonition.

This book, of course, is evidence of my response to Doe's request. After carefully considering the problems that might confront the publisher of the Report, we took it to The Dial Press. There, its significance was immediately recognized, and, more important, we were given firm assurances that no outside pressures of any sort would be permitted to interfere with its publication.

It should be made clear that Doe does not disagree with the substance of the Report, which represents as genuine consensus in all important respects. He constituted a minority of one -- but only on the issue of disclosing it to the general public. A look at how the Group dealt with this question will be illuminating

The debate took place at the Group's last full meeting before the Report was written, late in March, 1966, and again at Iron Mountain. Two facts must be kept in mind, by way of background. The first is that the Special Study Group had never been explicitly charged with or sworn to secrecy, either when it was convened or at any time thereafter. The second is that the Group had neverthe-less operated as if it had been. This was assumed from the circumstances of its inception and from the tone of its instructions. (The Group's acknowledgment of help from "the many persons....who contributed so greatly to our work" is somewhat equivocal; these persons were not told the nature of the project for which their special resources of information were solicited.)

Those who argued the case for keeping the Report secret were admittedly motivated by fear of the explosive political effects that could be expected from publicity. For evidence, they pointed to the suppression of the far less controversial report of then-Senator Hubert Humphrey's subcommittee on disarmament in 1962. (Subcommittee members had reportedly feared that it might be used by Communist propagandists, as Senator Stuart Symington put it, to "back up the Marxian theory that was production was the reason for the success of capitalism.") Similar political precautions had been taken with the better-known Gaither Report in 1957, and even with the so-called Moynihan Report in 1965.

Furthermore, they insisted, a distinction must be made between serious studies, which are normally classified unless and until policy makers decide to release them, and conventional "showcase" projects, organized to demonstrate a political leadership's concerns about an issue and to deflect the energy of those pressing for action on it. (The example used, because some of the Group had participated in it, was a "While House Conference" on intended cooperation, disarmament, etc., which had been staged late in 1965 to offset complaints about escalation of Vietnam War.)

Doe acknowledges this distinction, as well as the strong possibility of public misunderstanding. But he feels that if the sponsoring agency had wanted to mandate secrecy it could have done so at the outset. It could also have assigned the project to one of the government's established "think tanks," which normally work on a classified basis. He scoffed at fear of public reaction, which could have no lasting effect on long-range measures that might be taken to implement the Group's proposals, and derided the Group's abdication of responsibility for its opinions and conslusions. So far as he was concerned, there was such a thing as a public right to know what was being done on its behalf; the burden of proof was on those who would abridge it.

If my account seems to give Doe the better of the argument, despite his failure to convince his colleagues, so be it. My participation in this book testifies that I am not neutral. In my opinion, the decision of the Special Study Group to censor its own findings was not merely timid but presumptuos. But the refusal, as of this writing, of the agencies for which the Report was prepared to release it themselves raises broader questions of public policy. Such questions center on the continuing use of self-serve definitions of "security" to avoid possible political embarrassment. It is ironic how oftern this practice backfires.

I should state, for the record, that I do not share the attitudes toward war and peace, life and death, and survival of the species manifested in the Report. Few readers will. In human terms, it is an outrageous document. But it does represent a serious and challenging effort to define an enormous problem. And it explains, or certainly appears to explain, aspects of American policy otherwise incomprehensible by the ordinary standards of common sense. What we may think of these explanations is something else, but it seems to me that we are entitled to know not only what they are but whose they are.

By "whose" I don't mean merely the names of the authors of the Report. Much more important, we have a right to know to what extent their assumptions of social necessity are shared by the decision-makers in our government. Which do they accept and which do they reject? However disturbing the answers, only full and frank discussion offers any conceivable hope of solving the problems raised by the Special Study Group in their Report from Iron Mountain.

L.C.L. New York June 1967

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

[The following account of the workings of the Special Study Group is taken verbatim from a series of tape recorded interviews I had with "John Doe." The transcript has been edited to minimize the intrusion of my questions and comments, as well as for length, and the sequence has been revised in the interest of continuity. L.C.L.]

HOW WAS THE GROUP FORMED?

...The general idea for it, for this kind of study dates back at least to 1961. It started with some of the new people who came in with the Kennedy administration, mostly, I think, with McNamara, Bundy, and Rusk. They were impatient about many things....One of them was that no really serious work had been done about planning for peace---a long-range peace, that is, with long- rang planning.

Everything that had been written on the subject [before 1961] was super- ficial. There was insufficient appreciation of the scope of the problem. The main reason for this, of course, was that the idea of a real peace in the world, general disarmament and so on, was looked on as utopian. Or even crack- pot. This is still true, and it's easy enough to understand when you look at what's going on in the world today....It was reflected in the studies that had been made up to that time. They were not realistic...

The idea of the Special Study, the exact form it would take, was worked out early in '63...The settlement of the Cuban missile affair had something to do with it, but what helped most to get it moving were the big changes in military spending that were being planned.....Plants being closed, relocations, and so forth. Most of it wasn't made public until much later....

[I understand] it took a long time to select the people for the Group. The calls didn't go out until the summer.....

WHO MADE THE SELECTION?

That's something I can't tell you. I wasn't involved with the preliminary planning. The first I knew of it was when I was called myself. But three of the people had been in on it, and what the rest of us know we learned from them, about what went on earlier. I do know that it started very informally. I don't know what particular government agency approved the project.

WOULD YOU CARE TO MAKE A GUESS?

All right---I think it was an ad hoc committee, at the cabinet level, or near it. It had to be. I suppose they gave the organizational job--making arrangements, paying the bills, and so on---to somebody from the State or Defense of the National Security Council. Only one of us was in touch with Washington, and I wasn't the one. But I can tell you that very, very few people knew about us....For instance, there was the Ackley Committee. It was set up after we were. If you read their report---the same old tune---economic reconversino, turning sword plants into plowshare factories...I think you'll wonder if even the President knew about our Group. The Ackley Committee certainly didn't.

IS THAT POSSIBLE, REALLY? I MEAN THAT NOT EVEN THE PRESIDENT KNEW OF YOUR COMMISSION?

Well, I don't think there's anything odd about the government attacking a problem at two different levels. Or even about two or three [government] agencies working at cross-purposes. It happens all the time. Perhaps the President did know. And I don't mean to denigrate the Ackley Committee, but it was exactly that narrowness of approach that we were supposed to get away from.....

You have to remember -- you've read the Report---that what they wanted from us was a different kind of thinking. It was a matter of approach. Herman Kahn calls is "Byzantine"--no agonizing over cultural and religious values. No moral posturing. It's the kind of thinking that Rand and the Hudson Institure and I.D.A. (Institute for Defense Analysis.) brought into war planning...What they asked up to do, and I think we did it, was to give the same kind of treat- ment to the hypothetical nuclear war...We may have gone further than they expected, but once you establish your premises and your logic you can't turn back....

Kahn's books, for example, are misunderstood, at least by laymen. They shock people. But you see, what's improtant about them is not his conclusions, or his opinions. It's the method. He has done more than anyone else I can think of to get the general public accustomed to the style of modern military think- ing.....Today it's possible for a columnist to write about "counterforce strategy" and "minimum deterrance" and "credible firststrike capability" with- out having to explain every other word. He can write about war and strategy without getting bogged down in questions or morality.....

The other big difference about or work is breadth. The Report speaks for itself. I can't say that we took every relevant aspect of life and society into account, but I don't think we missed anything essential...

WHY WAS THE PROJECT GIVEN TO AN OUTSIDE COMMISSION? WHY COULDN'T IT HAVE BEEN HANDLED BY AN APPROPRIATE GOVERNMENT AGANCY?

I think that's obvious, or should be. The kind of thinking wanted from our Group just isn't to be had in a formal government operation. Too many cont- straints. Too many inhibitions. This isn't a new problem. Why else would outfits like Rand and Hudson stay in business? Any assignment that's at all sophisticated is almost always given to an outside group. This is true even in the State Department, in the "gray" operations, those that are supposed to be unofficial, but are really as official as can be. Also with the C.I. A....

For our study, even the private research centers were too institutional... A lot of thought went into making sure that our thinking would be unrestricted. All kinds of little things. The way we were called into the Group, the places we met, all kinds of subtle devices to remind us. For instance, even our name, the Special Study Group. You know government names. Wouldn't you think we'd have been called "Operation Olive Branch," or "Project Pacifica," or something like that? Nothing like that for us---too allusive, too suggestive. And no minutes of our meetings---too inhibiting.... About who might be reading them. Of course, we took notes for our own use. And among ourselves, we usually called ourselves "The Iron Mountain Boys," or "Our Thing," or whatever came to mind.....

WHAT CAN YOU TELL ME ABOUT THE MEMBERS OF THE GROUP?

I'll have to stick to generalities....There were fifteen of us. The important thing was that we represented a very wide range of disciplines. And not all academic. People from the natural sciences, the social sciences, even the humanities. We had a lawyer and a businessman. Also, a professional war planner. Also, you should know that everyone in the Group had done work of distinction in at least two different fields. The interdisciplinary element was built in.....

It's true that there were no women in the Group, but I don't think that was significant..... We were all American citizens, of course. And all, I can say, in very good health, at least when we began.... You see, the first order of business, at the first meeting, was the reading of dossiers. They were very detailed, and not just professional, but also personal. They included medical histories. I remember one very curious thing, for whatever it's worth. Most of us, and that includes me, had a record of abnormally high uric acid con- centrations in the blood..... None of us had ever had this experience, of a public inspection of credentials, or medical reports. It was very disturbing...

But it was deliberate. The reason for it was to emphasize that we were supposed to make ALL our own decisions on procedure, without outside rules. This included judging each other's qualifications and making allowances for possible bias. I don't think it affected our work directly, but it made the point it was supposed to make..... That we should ignore absolutely nothing that might conceivably affect our objectivity.

[At this point I persuaded Doe that a brief occupational description of the individual members of the Group would serve a useful purpose for readers of the Report. The list which follows was worked out on paper. (It might be more accurate to say it was negotiated)/. The problem was to give as much relevant information as possible without violating Doe's commitment to protect his colleagues' anonymity. It turned out to be very difficult, especially in the cases of those members who are very well known. For this reason, secondary areas of achievement or repu- tations are usually not shown.

The simple alphabetical "names" were assigned by Doe for convenient reference; they bear no intended relation to actual names. "Able" was the Group's Washington contact. It was he who brought and read the dossiers, and who most often acted as chairman. He, "Baker," and "Cox" were the three who had been involved in the preliminary planning. There is no other significance to the order of listing.

"Arthus Able" is an historian and political theorist, who has served in government.

"Bernard Baker: is a professor of international law and a consultant on government operations.

"Charles Cox" is an economist, social critic, and biographer.

"John Doe."

"Edward Ellis" is a sociologist often involved in public affairs.

"Frank Fox" is a cultural anthropologist.

"George Green" is a psychologist, educator, and developer of personnel testing systems.

"Harold Hill" is a psychiatrist, who has conducted extensive studies of the relationship between individual and group behavior.

"John Jones" is a scholar and literary critic.

"Martin Miller" is a physical chemist, whose work has received inter- national recognition at the highest level.

"Paul Peters" is a biochemist, who has made important discoveries bearing on reproductive processes.

"Richard Roe" is a mathematician affiliated with an independent West Coast research institution.

"Samuel Smith" is an astronomer, physicist, and communications theorist.

"Thomas Taylor" is a systems analyst and war planner, who has written extensively on war, peace, and international relations.

"William White" is an industrialist, who has undertaken many special government assignments.]

HOW DID THE GROUP OPERATE? I MEAN, WHERE AND WHEN DID YOU MEET, AND SO FORTH?

We met on the average of once a month. Usually it was on weekends, and usually for two days. We had a few longer sessions, and one that lasted only four hours. .... We met all over the country, always at a different place, except for the first and last times, which were at Iron Mountain. It was like a traveling seminar....Sometimes at hotels, sometimes at universities. Twice we met at summer camps, and once at a private estate, in Virginia. We used a business place in Pittsburgh, and another in Poughkeepsie, [New York]....We never met in Washington, or on government property anywhere....Able would announce the times and places two meetings ahead. They were never changed.....

We didn't divide into subcommittees, or anything else that formal. But we all took individual assignments between meetings. A lot of it involved getting information from other people.... Among the fifteen of us, I don't thing there was anybody in the academic or professional world we couldn't call on if we wanted to, and we took advantage of it..... We were paid a very modest per diem. All of it was called "expenses" on the vouchers. We were told not to report it on our tax returns.... The checks were drawn on a special account of Able's at a New York bank. He signed them....I don't know what the study cost. So far as our time and travel were concerned, it couldn't have come to more than the low six-figure range. But the big item must have been computer time, and I have no idea how high this ran.....

YOU SAY THAT YOU DON'T THINK YOUR WORK WAS AFFECTED BY PROFESSIONAL BIAS. WHAT ABOUT POLITICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL BIAS? IS IT POSSIBLE TO DEAL WITH QUESTIONS OF WAR AND PEACE WITHOUT REFLECTING PERSONAL VALUES?

Yes, it is. I can understand your skepticism. But if you had been at any of our meetings you'd have had a very hard time figuring out who were the liberals and who were the conservatives, or who were hawks and who were doves. There IS such a thing as objectivity, and I think we had it... I don't say no one had any emotional reaction to what we were doing. We all did, to some extent. As a matter of fact, two members had heart attacks after we were finished, and I'll be the first to admit it probably wasn't a coincidence.

YOU SAID YOU MADE UP YOUR OWN GROUND RULES. WHAT WERE THESE GROUND RULES?

The most important were informality and unanimity . By informality I mean that our discussions were open-ended. We went as far afield as any one of us thought we had to. For instance, we spent a lot of time on the relationship between military recruitment policies and industrial employment. Before we were finished with it, we'd gone through the history of western penal codes and any number of comparative psychiatric studies [of draftees and volunteers]. We looked over the organization of the Inca empire. We determined the effects of automation on underdeveloped societies....It was all relevant....

By unanimity, I don't mean that we kept taking votes, like a jury. I mean that we stayed with every issue until we had what the Quakers call a "sense of the meeting." It was time-consuming. But in the long run it saved time. Eventually we all got on the same wavelength, so to speak.....

Of course we had differences, and big ones, especially in the beginning... For instance, in Section I you might think we were merely clarifying our instructions. Not so; it took a long time before we all agreed to a strict interpretation.... Roe and Taylor deserve most of the credit for this... There are many things in the Report that look obvious now, but didn't seem so obvious then. For instance, on the relationship of war to social systems. The original premise was conventional, from Clausewitz. .... That war was an "instrument" of broader political values. Able was the only one who challenged this, at first. Fox called his position "perverse." Yet it was Fox who furnished most of the data that led us all to agree with Able eventually. I mention this be- cause I think it's a good example of the way we worked. A triumph of method over cliche..... I certainly don't intend to go into details about who took what side about what, and when. But I will say, to give credit where due, that only Roe, Able, Hill and Taylor were able to see, at the beginning, where our method was taking us.

BUT YOU ALWAYS REACHED AGREEMENT, EVENTUALLY?

Yes. It's a unanimous report... I don't mean that our sessions were always harmonious. Some of them were rough. The last six months there was a lot of quibbling about small points... We'd been under pressure for a long time, we'd been working together too long. It was natural.....that we got on each other's nerves. For a while Able and Taylor weren't speaking to each other. Miller threatened to quit. But this all passed. There were no important differences...

HOW WAS THE REPORT ACTUALLY WRITTEN? WHO DID THE WRITING?

We all had a hand in the first draft. Jones and Able put it together, and then mailed it around for review before working out a final version... The only problems were the form it should take and whom we were writing it for. And, of course, the question of disclosure.... [Doe's comments on this point are summarized in the introduction.]

YOU MENTIONED A "PEACE GAMES" MANUAL. WHAT ARE PEACE GAMES?

I wanted to say something about that. The Report barely mentions it. "Peace games" is a method we developed during the course of the study. It's a forecasting technique, an information system. I'm very excited about it. Even if nothing is done about our recommendations--which is conceivable--this is something that can't be ignored. It will revolutionize the study of social problems. It's a by-product of the study. We needed a fast, dependable procedure to approximate the effects of disparate social phenomena on other social phenomena. We got it. It's in a primitive phase, but it works.

HOW ARE PEACE GAMES PLAYED? ARE THEY LIKE RAND'S WAR GAMES?

You don't "play" peace games, like chess or Monopoly, any more than you play war games with toy soldiers. You use computers. It's a programming system. A computer "language," like Fortran, or Algol, or Jovial.... Its advantage is its superior capacity to interrelate data with no apparent common points of reference.... A simple analogy is likely to be misleading. But I can give you some examples. For instance, supposing I asked you to figure out what effect a moon landing by U.S. astronauts would have on an election in, say, Sweden. Or what effect a change in the draft law--a specific change--would have on the value of real estate in downtown Manhattan? Or a certain change in college entrance requirements in the United States on the British shipping industry?

You would probably say, first, that there would be no effect to speak of, and second, that there would be no way of telling. But you'd be wrong on both counts. In each case there would be an effect, and the peace games method could tell you what it would be, quantitatively. I didn't take these examples out of the air. We used them in working out the method....Essentiallly, it's an elaborate high-speed trial-and-error system for determining working algorithms. Like most sophisticated types of computer problem-solving...

A lot of the "games" of this kind you read about are just glorified and conversational exercises. They really are games, and nothing more. I just saw one reported in the Canadian Computer Society Bulletin, called a "Vietnam Peace Game." They use simulation techniques, but the programming hypotheses are speculative....

The idea of a problem-solving system like this is not original with us. ARPA (the Advanced Research Projects Agency, of the Department of Defense DoD.) has been working on something like it. So has General Electric, in California. There are others..... We were successful not because we know more than they do about programming, which we don't, but because we leaned how to formulate the problems accurately. It goes back to the old saw. You can always find the answer if you know the right question.....

SUPPOSING YOU HADN'T DEVELOPED THIS METHOD. WOULD YOU HAVE COME TO THE SAME CONCLUSIONS IN THE REPORT?

Certainly. But it would have taken many times longer..But please don't misunderstand my enthusiasm [about the peace games method]. With all due respect to the effects of computer technology on modern thinking, basic judgments must still be made by human beings. The peace games technique isn't responsible for our Report. We are.

STATEMENT BY "JOHN DOE"

Contrary to the decision of the Special Study Group, of which I was a member, I have arranged for the general release of our Report. I am grateful to Mr. Leonard C. Lewin for his invaluable assistance in making this possible, and to The Dial Press for accepting the challenge of publication. Responsibility for taking this step, however, is mine and mine alone.

I am well aware that my action may be taken as a breach of faith by some of my former colleagues. But in my view my responsibility to the society for which I am a part supersedes any self-assumed obligation on the part of fifteen individual men. Since our Report can be considered on its merits, it is not necessary for me to disclose their identity to accomplish my purpose. Yet I gladly abandon my own anonymity it is were possible to do so without at the same time comprising theirs, to defend our work publicly if and when they release me from this personal bond.

But this is secondary. What is needed now, and needed badly, is widespread public discussion and debate about the elements of war and the problems of peace. I hope that publication of this Report will serve to initiate it.

THE REPORT OF THE SPECIAL STUDY GROUP

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the convener of this Group:

Attached is the Report of the Special Study Group established by you in August, 1963, 1) to consider the problems involved in the contigency of a transition to a general condition of peace, and 2) to recommend procedures for dealing with this contingency. For the covenience of nontechnical readers we have elected to submit our statistical supporting data, totaling 604 exhibits, separately, as well as a preliminary manual of the "peace games" method devised during the course of our study.

We have compelted our assignment to the best of our ability, subject to the limitations of time and resources available to us. Our conclusions of fact and our recommendations are unanimous; those of use who differ in certain secondary respects from the findings set forth herein do not consider these differences sufficient to warrant the filing of a minority report. It is our earnest hope that the fruits of our deliberations will be of value to our government in its efforts to provide leadership to the nation in solving the complex and far-reaching problems we have examined, and that our recommendations for subsequent Presidential action in this area will be adopted.

Because of the unusual circumstances surrounding the establishment of this Group, and in view of the nature of its findings, we do not recommend that this Report be released for publication. It is our affirmative judgment that such action would not be in the public interest. The uncertain advantages of public discussion of our conclusions and recommendations are, in our opinion, greatly outweighed by the clear and predictable danger of a crisis in public confidence which untimely publication of this Report might be expected to provoke. The likelihood that a lay reader, unexposed to the exigencies of higher political or military responsibility, will misconstrue the purpose of this project, and the intent of its participants, seems obvious. We urge that circulation of this Report be closely restricted to those whose responsibilities require that they be apprised of its contents.

We deeply regret that the necessity of anonymity, a prerequisite to our Group's unhindered pursuit of its objectives, precludes proper acknowledgment of our gratitude to the many persons in and out of government who contributed so greatly to our work.

FOR THE SPECIAL STUDY GROUP

[signature withheld for publication]

30 SEPTEMBER, 1966

INTRODUCTION

The Report which follows summarizes the results of a two-and-a-half-year study of the broad problems to be anticipated in the event of general trans- formation of American society to a condition lacking its most critical current characteristics: its capability and readiness to make war when doing so is judged necessary or desirable by its political leadership.

Our work has been predicated on the belief that some kind of general peace may soon be negotiable. The de facto admission of Communist China into the United Nations now appears to be only a few years away at most. It has become increasinly manifest that conflicts of American national interest with those of China and the Soviet Union are susceptible of political solution, despite the superficial contraindictions of the current Vietnam war, of the threats of an attack on China, and of the necessarily hostile tenor of day-to-day foreign policy statements. It is also obvious that differences involving other nations can be readily resolved by the three great powers whenever they arrive at a stable peace among themselves. It is not necessary, for the purposes of our study, to assume that a general detente of this sort will come about---and we make no such argument--but only that it may.

It is surely no exaggeration to say that a condition of general world peace would lead to changes in the social structures of the nations of the world of unparalleled and revolutionary magnitude. The economic impact of general disarmament, to name only the most obvious consequence of peace, would revise the production and distribution patterns of the globe to a degree that would make changes of the past fifty years seem insignificant. Political, sociological, cultural, and ecological changes would be equally far-reaching. What has motivated our study of these contingencies has been the growing sense of thoughtful men in and out of government that the world is totally unprepared to meet the demands of such a situation.

We had originally planned, when our study was initiated, to address ourselves to these two broad questions and their components: What can be expected if peace comes? What should we be prepared to do about it? But as our investigation proceeded, it became apparent that certain other questions had to be faced. What, for instance, are the real functions of war in modern societies, beyond the ostensible ones of defending and advancing the "national interests" of nations? In the absence of war, what other institutions exist or might be devised to fulfill these functions? Granting that a "peaceful" settlement of disputes is within the range of current international relationships, is the abolition of war, in the broad sense, really possible? If so, is it necessarily desirable, in terms of social stability? If not, what can be done to improve the operation of our social system in respect to its war-readiness?

The word peace, as we have used it in the following pages, describes a permanent, or quasi-permanent, condition entirely free from the national exercise, or contemplation, of any form of the organized social violence, or threat of violence, generally known as war. It implies total and general disarmament. It is not used to describe the more familiar condition of "cold war," "armed peace," or other mere respite, long or short, from armed conflict. Nor is it used simply as a synonym for the political settlement of international differences. The magnitude of modern means of mass destruction and the speed of modern communications require the unqualified working definition given above; only a generation ago such an absolute description would have seemd utopian rather than pragmatic. Today, any modification of this definition would render it almost worthless for our purpose. By the same standard, we have used the work war to apply interchangeably to conventional ("hot") war, to the general condition of war preparation or war readiness, and to the general "war system." The sense intended is made clear in context.

The first section of our Report deals with its scope and with the assumptions on which our study was based. The second considers the effects of disarmament on the economy, the subject of most peace research to date. The third takes up so-called "disarmament scenarios" which have been proposed. The fourth, fifth, and sixth examine the nonmilitary functions of war and the problems they raise for a viable transition to peace; here will be found some indications of the true dimensions of the problem, not previously coordinated in any other study. In the seventh section we summarize our findings, and in the eight we set forth our recommendations for what we believe to be a practical and necessary course of action.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:51 PM (GMT)

SECTION 1 - SCOPE OF THE STUDY

When The Special Study Group was established in August, 1963, its members were instructed to govern their deliberations in accordance with three principal criteria. Briefly stated, they were these: 1) military-style objectivity; 2) avoidance of preconceived value assumptions; 3) inclusion of all revelant areas of theory and data.

These guideposts are by no means as obvious as they may appear at first glance, and we believe it necessary to indicate clearly how they were to inform our work. For they express succinctly the limitations of previous "peace studies," and imply the nature of both government and unofficial dissatisfaction with these earlier efforts. It is not our intention here to minimize the significance of the work of our predecessors, or to belittle the quality of their contributions. What we have tried to do, and believe we have done, is extend their scope. We hope that our conclusions may serve in turn as a starting point for still broader and more detailed examinations of every aspect of the problems of transition to peace and of the questions which must be answer- ed before such a transition can be allowed to get under way.

It is a truism that objectivity is more often an intention expressed than an attitude achieved, but the intention---conscious, unambiguous, and constantly self-critical -- is a precondition to its achievement. We believe it no accident that we were charged to use a "military contingency" model for our study, and we owe a considerable debt to the civilian war planning agencies for their pioneering work in the objective examination of the contingencies of nuclear war. There is no such precedent in the peace studies. Much of the usefulness of even the most elaborate and carefully reasoned programs for economic conversion to peace, for example, has been vitiated by a wishful eagerness to demonstrate that peace is not only possible, but even cheap or easy. One official report is replete with references to the critical role of "dynamic optimism" on economic developments, and goes on to submit, as evidence, that it "would be hard to imagine that the American people would not respond very positively to an agreed and safeguarded program to substitute an internatinal rule of law and order," etc. Anothe line of argument frequently taken is that disarmament would entail comparatively little disruption of the economy, since it need only be partial; we will deal with this approach later. Yet genuine objectivity in war studies is often critized as inhuman. As Herman Kahn, the writer on strategic studies best known to the general public, put it: "Critics frequently object to the icy rationality of the Hudson Institute, the Rand Corporation, and other such organizations. I'm always tempted to ask in reply, `Would you prefer a warm, human error? Do you feel better with a nice emotional mistake.'" And, as Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara has pointed out, in reference to facing up to the possibility of nuclear war, "Some people are afraid even to look over the edge. But in a thermonuclear war we cannot afford any political acrophobia." Surely it would be self-evident that this applies equally to the opposite prospect, but so far no one has taken more than a timid glance over the brink of peace.

An intention to avoid preconceived value judgments is if anything even more productive of self-delusion. We claim no immunity, as individuals, from this type of bias, but we have made a continuously self-conscious effort to deal with the problems of peace without, for exampel, considering that a condition of peace is per se "good" or "bad." This has not been easy, but it has been obligatory; to our knowledge, it has not been done before. Previous studies have taken the desirability of peace, the importance of human life, the superiority of democratic institutions, the greatest "good" for the greatest number, the "dignity" of the individual, the desirability of maximum health and longevity, and other such wishful premises as axiomatic values necessary for the justification of a study of peace issues. We have not found them so. We have attempted to apply the standards of physical science to our thinking, the principal characteristic of which is not quantification, as is popularly believd, but that, in Whitehead's words, "...it ignores all judgments of value; for instance, all esthetic and moral judgments." Yet it is obvious that any serious investigation of a problem, however "pure," must be informed by some normative standard. In this case it has been simply the survival of human society in general, of Amerian society in particular, and, as a corollary to survival, the stability of this society.

It is interesting, we believe, to note that the most dispassionate planners of nuclear strategy also recognize that the stability of society is the one bedrock value that cannot be avoided. Secretary McNamara has defended the need for American nuclear superiority on the grounds that it "makes possible a strategy designed to preserve the fabric of our societies if war should occur." A former member ofthe Department of State policy planning staff goes further. "A more precise word for peace, in terms of the practical world, is stability. ... Today the great nuclear panoplies are essential elements in such stability as exists. Our present purpose must be to continue the process of learning how to live with them." We, of course, do not equate stability with peace, but we accept it as the one common assumed objective of both peace and war.

The third criterion-breadth-has taken us still farther afield from peace studies made to date. It is obvious to any layman that the economic patterns of a warless world will be drastically different from those we live with today, and it is equally obvious that the political relationships of nations will not be those we have learned to take for granted, sometimes described as a global version of the adversary system of our common law. But the social implications of peace extend far beyond its putative effects on national economics and international relations. As we shall show, the relevance of peace and war to the internal political organization of societies, to the sociological relationships of their members, to psychological motivations, to ecological processes, and to cultural values is equally profound. More important, it is equally critical in assaying the consequences of a transition to peace, and in deter- mining the feasibility of any transition at all.

It is not surprising that these less obvious factors have been generally ignored in peace research. They have not lent themselves to systematic analysis. They have been difficult, perhaps impossible, to measure with any degree of assurance that estimates of their effects could be depended on. They are "intangibles," but only in the sense that abstract concepts in mathematics are intangible compared to those which can be quantified. Economic factors, on the other hand, can be measured, at least superficialy; and international relationships can be verbalized, like law, into logical sequences.

We do not claim that we have discovered an infallible way of measuring these other factors, or of assigning them precise weights in the equation of transition. But we believe we have taken their relative importance into account to this extent: we have removed them from the category of the "intangible," hence scientifically suspect and therefore somehow of secondary importance, and brought them out into the realm of the objective. The result, we believe, provides a context of realism for the discussion of the issues relating to the possible transition to peace which up to now has been missing.

This is not to say that we presume to have found the answers we were seeking. But we believe that our emphasis on breadth of scope has made it at least possible to begin to understand the questions.

SECTION 2 - DISARMAMENT AND THE ECONOMY

In this section we shall briefly examine some of the common features of the studies that have been published dealing with one or another aspect of the expected impact of disarmament on the American economy. Whether disarmament is considered as a by-product of peace or as its precondition, its effect on the national economy will in either case be the most immediately felt of its consequences. The quasi-mensurable quality of economic manifestations has given rise to more detailed speculation in this area than in any other.

General agreement prevails in respect to the more important economic problems that general disarmament would raise. A short survey of these problems, rather than a detailed critique of their comparative significance, is sufficient for our purposes in this Report.

The first factor is that of size. The "world war industry," as one writer has aptly caled it, accounts for approximately a tenth of the output of the world's total economy. Although this figure is subject to fluctuation, the causes of which are themselves subject to regional variation, it tends to hold fairly steady. The United States, as the world's richest nation, not only accounts for the largest single share of this expense, currently upward of $60 billion a year, but also "...has devoted a higher proportion [emphasis added] of its gross national product to its military establishment than any other major free world nation. This was true even before our increased expenditures in Southeast Asia." Plans for economic conversion that minimize the economic magnitude of the problem do so only by rationalizing, however persuasively, the maintenance of a substantial residual military budget under some euphemized classification.

Conversion of military expenditures to other purposes entails a number of difficulties. The most serious stems from the degree of rigid specialization that characterizes modern war production, best exemplified in nuclear and missile technology. This constituted no fundamental problem after World War II, nor did the question of free-market consumer demand for "conventinal" items of consumption---those good and services consumers had already been conditioned to require. Today's situation is qualitatively different in both respects.

This inflexibility is geographical and occupational, as well as industrial, a fact which has led most analysts of the economic impact of disarmament to focus their attention on phased plans for the relocation of war industry personnel and capital installations as much as on proposals for developing new patterns of consumption. One serious flaw common to such plans is the kind called in the natural sciences the "macroscopic error." An implicit presumption is made that a total national plan for conversion differs from a community program to cope with the shutting down of a "defense facility" only in degree. We find no reason to believe that this is the case, nor that a general enlargement of such local programs, however well thought out in terms of housing, occupational retraining, and the like, can be applied on a national scale. A national economy can absorb amost any number of subsidiary reorganizations within its total limits, providing there is no basic change in its own structure. General disarmament, which would require such basic changes, lends itself to no valid smaller-scale analogy.

Even more questionable are the models proposed for the retaining labor for nonarmaments occupations. Putting aside for the moment the unsolved questions dealing with the nature of new distribution patterns---retraining for what?-- the increasingly specialized job skills associated with war industry production are further depreciated by the accelerating inroads of the industrial techniques loosely described as "automation." It is not too much to say that general disarmament would require the scrapping of a critical proportion of the most highly developed occupational specialites in the economy. The political difficulties inherent in such an "adjustment" would make the outcries resulting from the closing of a few obsolete military and naval installatins in 1964 sound like a whisper.

In general, discussions of the problem of conversion have been characterized by an unwillingness to recognize its special quality. This is best ecemplified by the 1965 report of the Ackley Committee. One critic has tellingly pointed out that it blindly assumes that "...nothing in the arms economy--neither its size, nor its geographical concentration, nor its highly specialized nature, nor the peculiarties of its market, nor the special nature of much of its labor force---endows it with any uniqueness when the necessary time of adjustment comes."

Let us assume, however, despite the lack of evidence that a viable program for conversion can be developed in the framework of the existing economy, that the problems noted above can be solved. What proposals have been offered for utilizing the productive capabilities that disarmament would presumably release?

The most common held theory is simply that general economic reinvestment would absorb the greater part of these capabilities. Even though it is now largely taken for granted (and even by today's equivalent of traditional laissez-faire economists) taht unprecedented government assistance (and con- comitant government control) will be needed to solve the "structural" problems of transition, a general attitude of confidence prevails that new consumption patterns will take up the slack. What is less clear is the nature of these patterns.

One school of economists has it that these patterns will develop on their own. It envisages the equivalent of the arms budget being returned, under careful control, to the consumer, in the form of tax cuts. Another, recognizing the undeniable need for increased "consumption" in what is generally considered the public sector of the economy, stresses vastly increased government spending in such areas of national concern as health, education, mass transportation, low-cost housing, water supply, control of the physical environment, and, stated generally, "poverty."

The mechanisms proposed for controlling the transition to an arms-free economy are also traditional--changes in both sides of the federal budget, manipulation of interest rates, etc. We acknowledge the undeniable value of fiscal tools in a normal cyclical economy, where they provide leverage to accelerate or brake an existing trend. Their more committed proponents, however, tend to lose sight of the fact that there is a limit to the power of these devices to influence fundamental economic forces. They can provide new incentives in the economy, but they cannot in themselves transform the production of a billion dollars' worth of missiles a year to the equivalent in food, clothing, prefabricated houses, or television sets. At bottom, they reflect the economy; they do not motivate it.

More sophisticated, and less sanguine, analysts contemplate the diversion of the arms budget to a non-military system equally remote from the market economy. What the "pyramid-builders" frequently suggest is the expansion of space-research programs to the dollar level of current expenditures. This approach has the superficial merit of reducing the size of the problem of transferability of resources, but introduces other difficulties, which we will take up in section 6.

Without singling out any one of the several major studies of the expected impact of disarmament on the economy for special criticism, we can summarize our objections to them in general terms as follows:

1. No proposed program for economic conversion to disarmament sufficiently takes into account the unique magnitude of the required adjustments it would entail.

2. Proposals to transform arms production into a beneficent scheme of public works are more the products of wishful thinking than of realistic understanding of the limits of our existing economic system.

3. Fiscal and monetary measures are inadequate as controls for the process of transition to an arms-free economy.

4. Insufficient attention has been paid to the political acceptability of the objectives of the proposed conversion models, as well as of the political means to be employed in effectuating a transition.

5. No serious consideration has been given, in any proposed conversion plan, to the fundamental nonmilitary function of war and armaments in modern society, nor has any explicit attempt been made to devise a viable substitute for it. This criticism will be developed in sections 5 and 6.

SECTION 3 - DISARMAMENT SCENARIOS

SCENARIOS, as they have come to be called, are hypothetical constructions of future events. Inevitably, they are composed of varying proportions of established fact, reasonable inference, and more or less inspired guesswork. Those which have been suggested as model procedures for effectuating international arms control and eventual disarmament are necessarily imaginative, although closely reasoned; in this respect they resemble the "war games" analyses of the Rand Corporation, with which they share a common conceptual origin.

All such scenarios that have been seriously put forth imply a dependence on bilateral or multilateral agreement between the great powers. In general, they call for a progressive phasing out of gross armaments, military forces, weapons, and weapons technology, coordinated with elaborate matching procedures of verification, inspection, and machinery for the settlement of international disputes. It should be noted that even proponents of unilateral disarmament qualify their proposals with an implied requirement of reciprocity, very much in the manner of a scenario of graduated response in nuclear war. The advantage of unilateral initiative lies in its political value as an expression of good faith, as well as in its diplomatic function as a catalyst for formal disarmament negotiations.

The READ model for disarmament (developed by the Research Program on Economic Adjustments to Disarmament) is typical of these scenarios. It is a twelve-year program, divided into three-year stages. Each stage includes a separate phase of: reduction of armed forces; cutbacks of weapons production, inventories, and foreign military bases; development of international inspection procedures and control conventiona; and the building up of a sovereign international disarmament organization. It anticipates a net matching decline in U.S. defense expenditures of only somewhat more than half the 1965 level, but a necessary redeployment of some five-sixths of the defense-dependent labor force.

The economic implications assigned by their authors to various disarmament scenarios diverge widely. The more conservative models, like that cited above, emphasize economic as well as military prudence in postulating elaborate fail-safe disarmament agencies, which themselves require expenditures substantially substituting for those of the displaced war industries. Such programs stress the advantages of the smaller economic adjustment entailed. Others emphasize, on the contrary, the magnitude (and the opposite advantages) of the savings to be achieved from disarmament. One widely read analysis estimates the annual cost of the inspection function of general disarmament throughout the world as only between two and three percent of current military expenditures. Both types of plan tend to deal with the anticipated problem of economic reinvestment only in the aggregate. We have seen no proposed disarmament sequence that correlates the phasing out of specific kinds of military spending with specific new forms of substitute spending.

Without examining disarmament scenarios in greater detail, we may characterize them with these general comments:

1. Given genuine agreement of intent among the great powers, the scheduling of arms control and elimination presents no inherently insurmountable procedural problems. Any of several proposed sequences might serve as the basis for multilateral agreement or for the first step in unilateral arms reduction.

2. No major power can proceed with such a program, however, until it has developed an economic conversion plan fully integrated with each phase of disarmament. No such plan has yet been developed in the United States.

3. Furthermore, disarmament scenarios, like proposals for economic conversion, make no allowance for the non-military functions of war in modern societies, and offer no surrogate for these necessary functions. One partial exception is a proposal for the "unarmed forces of the United States," which we will consider in section 6.

SECTION 4 - WAR AND PEACE AS SOCIAL SYSTEMS

We have dealt only sketchily with proposed disarmament scenarios and economic analyses, but the reason for our seemingly casual dismissal of so much serious and sophisticated work lies in no disrespect for its competence. It is rather a question of relevance. To put it plainly, all these programs, however detailed and well developed, are abstractions. The most carefully reasoned disarmament sequence inevitably reads more like the rules of a game or a classroom exercise in logic than like a prognosis of real events in the real world. This is as true of today's complex proposals as it was of the Abbe de St. Pierre's "Plane for Perpetual Peace in Eurpope" 250 years ago.

Some essential element has clearly been lacking in all these schemes. One of our first tasks was to try to bring this missing quality into definable focus, and we believe we have succeeded in doing so. We find that at the heart of every peace study we have examined--from the modest technoligical proposal (e.g., to convert a poison gas plant to the production of "socially useful" equivalents) to the most eleborate scenario for universal peace in out time--lies one common fundamental misconception. It is the source of the miasma of unreality surrounding such plans. It is the incorrect assumption that war, as an institution, is subordinate to the social systems it is believed to serve.

This misconceptino, although profound and far-reaching, is entirely comprehensible.

Few social cliches are so unquestioningly accepted as the notion that war is an extension of diplomacy (or of politics, or of the pursuit of economic objectives). If this were true, it would be wholly appropriate for economists and political theorists to look on the problems of transition to peace as essentially mechanical or procedural---as indeed they do, treating them as logistic corollaries of the settlement of national conflicts of interest. If this were true, there would be no real substance to the difficulties of transition. For it is evident that even in today's world there exist no conceivable conflict of interest, real or imaginary, between nations or between social forces within nations, that cannot be resolved without recourse to war--if such resolution were assigned a priority of social value. And if this were true, the economic analyses and disarmament proposals we have referred to, plausible and well conceived as they may be, would not inspire, as they do, an inescapable sense of indirection.

The point is that the cliche is not true, and the problems of transition are indeed substantive rather than merely procedural. Although was is "used" as an instrument of national and social policy, the fact that a society is organized for any degree of readiness for war supersedes its political and economic structure. War itself is the basic social system, within which other secondary modes of social organization conflict or conspire. It is the system which has governed most human societies of record, as it is today.

Once this is correctly understood, the true magnitude of the problems entailed in a transition to peace---itself a social system, but without precedent except in a few simple preindustrial societies---becomes apparent. At the same time, some of the puzzling superficial contradictions of modern societies can then be readily rationalized. The "unnecessary" size and power of the world war industry; the preeminence of the military establishment in every society, whether open or concealed; the exemption of military or paramilitary institutions from the accepted social and legal standards of behavior required elsewhere in the society; the successful operation of the armed forces and the armaments producers entirely outside the framework of each nation's economic ground rules: these and other ambiquities closely associated with the relationship of war to society are easily clarified, once the priority of war-making potential as the principal structuring force in society is accepted. Economic systems, political philosophies, and corpora jures serve and extend the war system, not vice versa.

It must be emphasized that the precedence of a society's war-making potential over its other characteristics is not the result of the "threat" presumed to exist at any one time from other societies. This is the reverse of the basic situation; "threath" against the "national interest" are usually created or accelerated to meet the changing needs of the war system. Only in comparatively recent times has it been considered politically expedient to euphemize war budgets as "defense" requirements. The necessity for governments to dis- tinguish between "aggression" (bad) and "defense" (good) has been a by-product of rising literacy and rapid communication. The distinction is tactical only, a concession to the growing inadequacy of ancient war-organizing political rationales.

Wars are not "caused" by international conflicts of interest. Proper logical sequence would make it more often accurate to say that war-making societies require---and thus bring about---such conflicts. The capacity of a nation to make war expresses the greatest social power it can exercise; war-making, active or contemplated, is a matter of life and death on the greatest scale subject to social control. It should therefore hardly be surprising that the military institutions in each society claim its highest priorities.

We find further that most of the confusion surrounding the myth that war-making is a tool of state policy stems from a general misapprehension of the functions of war. In general, these are conceived as: to defend a nation from military attack by another, or to deter such an attack; to defend or advance a "national interest"--economic, political, idealogical; to maintain or in- crease a nation's military power for its own sake. These are the visible, or ostensible, functions of war. If there were no others, the importance of the war establishment in each society might in fact decline to the subordinate level it is believed to occupy. And the elimination of war would indeed be the procedural matter that the disarmament scenarios suggest.

But there are other, broader, more profoundly felt functions of war in modern societies. It is these invisivle, or implied, functions that maintain war-readiness as the dominant force in our societies. And it is the unwillingness or inability of the writers of disarmament scenarios and reconversion plans to take them into account that has so reduced the usefulness of their work, and that has made it seem unrelated to the world we know.

SECTION 5 - THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR

As we have indicated, the preeminence of the concept of war as the principal organizing force in most societies has been insufficiently appreciated. This is also true of its extensive effects throughout the many nonmilitary activities of society. These effects are less apparent in complex industrial socie- ties like our own than in primitive cultures, the activities of which can be more easily and fully comprehended.

We propose in this section to examine these nonmilitary, implied, and usually invisible functions of war, to the extent that they bear on the problems of transition to peace for our society. The military, or ostensible, function of the war system requires no elaboration; it serves simply to defend or advance the "national interest" by means of organized violence. It is often necessary for a national military establishment to create a need for its unique powers--to maintain the franchise, so to speak. And a healthy military apparatus requires "exercise," by whatever rationale seems expedient, to prevent its atrophy.

The nonmilitary functions of the war system are more basic. They exist not merely to justify themselves but to serve broader social purposes. If and when war is eliminated, the military functions it has served will end with it. But its nonmilitary functions will not. It is essential, therefore, that we understand their significance before we can reasonably expect to evaluate whatever institutions may be proposed to replace them.

ECONOMIC

The production of weapons of mass destruction has always been associated with economic "waste." The term is pejorative, since it implies a failure of function. But no human activity can properly be considered wasteful if it achieves its contextual objective. The phrase "wasteful but necessary," applied not only to war expenditures but to most of the "unproductive" commercial activities of our society, is a contradiction in terms. "...The attacks that have since the time of Samuel's criticism of King Saul been leveled against military expenditures as waste may well have concealed or misunderstood the point that some kinds of waste may have a larger social utility."

In the case of military "waste," there is indeed a larger social utility. It derives from the fact that the "wastefulness" of war production is exercised entirely outside the framework of the economy of supply and demand. As such, it provides the only critically large segment of the total economy that is subject to complete and arbitrary central control. If modern industrial societies can be defined as those which have developed the capacity to produce more than is required for their economic survival (regardless of the equities of distribution of goods within them), military spending can be said to furnish the only balance wheel with sufficient inertia to stabilize the advance of their economies. The fact that war is "wasteful" is what enables it to serve this function. And the faster the economy advances, the heavier this balance wheel must be.

This function is often viewed, oversimply, as a device for the control of surpluses. One writer on the subject puts it this way: "Why is war so wonderful? Because it creates artificial demand...the only kind of artificial demand, moreover, that does not raise any political issues: war, and only war, solves the problem of inventory." The reference here is to shooting war, but it applies equally to the general war economy as well. "It is generally agreed," concludes, more cautiously, the report of a panel set up by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, "that the greatly expanded public sector since World War II, resulting from heavy defense expenditures, has provided additional protection against depressions, since this sector is not responsive to con- traction in the private sector and has provided a sort of buffer or balance wheel in the economy."

The principal economic function of war, in our view, is that it provides just such a flywheel. It is not to be confused in function with the various forms of fiscal control, none of which directly engages vast numbers of control, none of which directly engages vast numbers of men and units of production. It is not to be confused with massive government expenditures in social welfare programs; once initiated, such programs normally become integral parts of the general economy and are no longer subject to arbitrary control.

But even in the context of the general civilian economy war cannot be considered wholly "wasteful." Without a long-established war economy, and without its frequent eruption into large-scale shooting war, most of the major industrial advances known to history, beginning with the development of iron, could never have taken place. Weapons technology structures the economy. According to the writer cited above, "Nothing is more ironic or revealing about our society than the fact that hugely destructive war is a very progressive force in it. ... War production is progressive because it is production that would not otherwise have taken place. (It is not so widely appreciated, for example, that the civilian standard of living rose during World War II.)" This is not "ironic or revealing," but essentially a simple statement of fact.

It should also be noted that the war production has a dependably stimulating effect outside itself. Far from constituting a "wasteful" drain on the economy, war spending, considered pragmatically, has been a consistently positive factor in the rise of gross national product and of individual productivity. A former Secretary of the Army has carefully phrased it for public consumption thus: "If there is, as I suspect there is, a direct relation between the stimulus of large defense spending and a substantially increased rate of growth of gross national product, it quite simply follows that defense spending per se might be countenanced on economic grounds alone [emphasis added] as a stimulator of the national metabolism." Actually, the fundamental nonmilitary utility of war in the economy is far more widely acknowledged than the scarcity of such affirmations as tha quoted above would suggest.

But negatively phrased public recognitions of the importance of war to the general economy abound. The most familiar example is the effect of "peace threats" on the stock market, e.g., "Wall Street was shaken yesterday by news of an apparent peace feeler from North Vietnam, but swiftly recovered its com- posure after about an hour of sometimes indiscriminate selling." Savings banks solicit deposits with similar cautionary slogans, e.g., "If peace breaks out, will you be ready for it?" A more subtle case in point was the recent refusal of the Department of Defense to permit the West German government to substitute nonmilitary goods for unwanted armaments in its purchase commitments from the United States; the decisive consideration was that the German purchases should not affect the general (nonmilitary) economy. Other incidental examples are to be found in the pressures broght to bear on the Department when it announces plans to close down an obsolete facility (as a "wasteful" form of "waste"). and in the usual coordination of stepped-up mililtary activities (as in Vietnam in 1965) with dangerously rising unemployment rates.

Although we do not imply that a substitute for war in the economy cannot be devised, no combination of techniques for controlling employment, production, and consumption has yet been tested that can remotely compare to it in effectiveness. It is, and has been, the essential economic stabilizer of modern societies.

POLITICAL

The political functions of war have been up to now even more critical to social stability. It is not surprising, nevertheless, that discussions of economic conversion for peace tend to fall silent on the matter of political implementation, and that disarmament scenarios, often sophisticated in their weighing of international political factors, tend to disregard the political functions of the war system withing individual societies.

These functions are essentially organizational. First of all, the existence of a society as a political "nation" requires as part of its definition an attitude of relationship toward other "nations." This is what we usually call a foreign policy. But a nation's foreign policy can have no substance if it lacks the means of enforcing its attitude toward other nations. It can do this in a credible manner only if it implies the threat of maximum political organization for this purpose--which is to say that it is organized to some degree for war. War, then, as we have defined it to include all national activities that recognize the possibility of armed conflict, is itself the defining ele- ment of any nation's existence vis-a-vis any other nation. Since it is historically axiomatic that the existence of any form of weaponry insures its use, we have used the work "peace" as virtually synonymous with disarmament. By the same token, "war" is virtually synonymous with nationhood. The elimination of war implies the inevitable elimination of national sovereignty and the traditional nation-state.

The war system not only has been essential to the existence of nations as independent political entities, but has been equally indispensable to their stable internal political structure. Without it, no government has ever been able to obtain acquiescence in its "legitimacy," or right to rule its society. The possibility of war provides the sense of external necessity without which nor government can long remain in power. The historical record reveals one instance after another where the failure of a regime to maintain the credibility of a war threat led to its dissolution, by the forces of private interest, or reactions to social injustice, or of other disintegrative elements. The organization of a society for the possibility of war is its principal political stabilizer. It is ironic that this primary function of war has been generally recognized by historians only where it has been expressly acknowledged--in the pirate societies of the great conquerors.

The basic authority of a modern state over its people resides in its war powers. (There is, in fact, good reason to believe that codified law had its origins in the rules of conduct established by military victors for dealing with the defeated enemy, which were later adapted to apply to all subject populations.) On a day-to-day basis, it is represented by the institution of police, armed organizations charged expressly with dealing with "internal enemies" in a military manner. Like the conventional "external" military, the police are also substantially exempt from many civilian legal restraints on their social behavior. In some countries, the artificial distinction between police and other military forces does not exist. On the long-term basis, a government's emergency war powers -- inherent in the structure of even the most libertarian of nations -- define the most significant aspect of the relation between state and citizen.

In advanced modern democratic societies, the war system has provided political leaders with another political-economic function of increasing importance: it has served as the last great safeguard against the elimination of necessary social classes. As economic productivity increases to a level further and further above that of minimum subsistence, it becomes more and more difficult for a society to maintain distribution patterns insuring the existence of "hewers of wood and drawers of water". The further progress of auto- mation can be expected to differentiate still more sharply between "superior" workers and what Ricardo called "menials," while simultaneously aggravating the problem of maintaining an unskilled labor supply.

The arbitrary nature of war expenditures and of other military activities make them ideally suited to control these essential class relationships. Obviously, if the war system were to be discarded, new political machinery would be needed at once to serve this vital subfunction. Until it is developed, the continuance of the war system must be assured, if for no other reason, among others, than to preserve whatever quality and degree of poverty a society requires as an incentive, as well as to maintain the stability of its internal organization of power.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:52 PM (GMT)

SOCIOLOGICAL
Under this heading, we will examine a nexus of functions served by the war system that affect human behavior in society. In general, they are broader in application and less susceptible to direct observation than the economic and political factors previously considered.

The most obvious of these functions is the time-honored use of military institutions to provide antisocial elements with an acceptable role in the social structure. The disintegrative, unstable social movements loosely described as "fascist" have traditionally taken root in societies that have lacked adequate military or paramilitary outlets to meet the needs of these elements. This function has been critical in periods of rapid change. The danger signals are easy to recognize, even though the stigmata bear different names at different times. The current euphemistic cliches--"juvenile delinquency" and "alienation" -- have had their counterparts in every age. In earlier days these conditions were dealt with directly by the military without the complications of due process, usually through press gangs or outright enslavement. But it is not hard to visualize, for example, the degree of social disruption that might have taken place in the United States during the last two decades if the problem of the socially disaffected of the post-World War II period had been foreseen and effectively met. The younger, and more dangerous, of these hostile social groupings have been kept under control by the Selective Service System.

This system and its analogues elsewhere furnish remarkably clear examples of disguised military utility. Informed persons in this country have never accepted the official rationale for a peacetime draft--military necessity, preparedness, etc. --as worthy of serious consideration. But what has gained credence among thoughtful men is the rarely voiced, less easily refuted, proposition that the institution of military service has a "patriotic" priority in our society that must be maintained for its own sake. Ironically, the simplistic official justification for selective service comes closer to the mark, once the non-military functions of military institutions are understood. As a control device over the hostile, nihilistic, and potentially unsettling elements of a society in transition, the draft can again be defended, and quite convincingly, as a "military" necessity.

Nor can it be considered a coincidence that overt military activity, and thus the level of draft calls, tend to follow the major fluctuations in the unemployment rate in the lower age groups. This rate, in turn, is a timetested herald of social discontent. It must be noted also that the armed forces in every civilization have provided the principal state-supported haven for what we now call the "unemployable." The typical European standing army (of fifty years ago) consisted of "...troops unfit for employment in commerce, industry, or agriculture, led by officers unfit to practice any legitimate profession or to conduct a business enterprise." This is still largely true, if less apparent. In a sense, this function of the military as the custodian of the economically or cuturally deprived was the forerunner of most contemporary civilian social-welfare programs, from the W.P.A. to various forms of "socialized" medicine and social security. It is interesting that liberal sociologists currently proposing to use the Selective Service System as a medium of cultural upgrading of the poor consider this a novel application of military practice.

Although it cannot be said absolutely that such critical measures of social control as the draft require a military rationale, no modern society has yet been willing to risk experimentation with any other kind. Even during such periods of comparatively simple social crisis as the so-called Great Depression of the 1930s, it was deemed prudent by the government to invest minor make-work projects, like the "Civilian" Conservation Corps, with a military character, and to place the more ambitious National Recovery Administration under the direction of a professional army officer at its inception. Today, at least one small Northern European country, plagued with uncontrollable unrest among its "alienated youth," is considering the expansion of its armed forces, despite the problem of making credible the expansion of a non-existent external threat.

Sporadic efforts have been made to promote general recognition of broad national values free of military connotation, but they have been ineffective. For example, to enlist public support of even such modest programs of social adjustment as "fighting inflation" or "maintaining physical fitness" it has been necessary for the government to utilize a patriotic (i.e. military) incentive. It sells "defense" bonds and it equates health with military preparedness. This is not surprising; since the concept of "nationhood" implies readiness for war, a "national" program must do likewise.

In general, the war system provides the basic motivation for primary social organization. In so doing, it reflects on the societal level the incentives of individual human behavior. The most important of these, for social purposes, is the individual psychological rationale for allegiance to a society and its values. Allegiance requires a cause; a cause requires an enemy. This much is obvious; the critical point is that the enemy that defines the cause must seem genuinely formidable. Roughly speaking, the presumed power of the "enemy" sufficient to warrant an individual sense of allegiance to a society must be proportionate to the size and complexity of the society. Today, of course, that power must be one of unprecedented magnitude and frightfulness.

It follows, from the patterns of human behavior, that the credibility of a social "enemy" demands similarly a readiness of response in proportion to its menace. In a broad social context, "an eye for an eye" still characterizes the only acceptable attitude toward a presumed threat of aggression, despite con- trary religious and moral precepts governing personal conduct. The remoteness of personal decision from social consequence in a modern society makes it easy for its members to maintain this attitude without being aware of it. A recent example is the war in Vietnam; a less recent one was the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. In each case, the extent and gratuitousness of the slaughter were abstracted into political formulae by most Americans, once the proposition that the victims were "enemies" was established. The war system makes such an abstracted response possible in nonmilitary contexts as well. A conventional example of this mechanism is the inability of most people to connect, let us say, the starvation of millions in India with their own past conscious political decision-making. Yet the sequential logic linking a decision to res- trict grain production in America with an eventual famine in Asia is obvious, unambiguous, and unconcealed.

What gives the war system its preeminent role in social organization, as elsewhere, is its unmatched authority over life and death. It must be emphasized again that the war system is not a mere social extension of the presumed need for individual human violence, but itself in turn serves to rationalize most nonmilitary killing. It also provides the precedent for the collective willingness of members of a society to pay a blood price for institutions far less central to social organization that war. To take a handy example..."rather than accept speed limits of twenty miles an hour we prefer to let automobiles kill forty thousand people a year." A Rand analyst puts it in more general terms and less rhetorically: "I am sure that there is, in effect, a desirable level of automobile accidents---desirable, that is, from a broad point of view; in the sense that it is a necessary concomitant of things of greater value to society." The point may seem too obvious for iteration, but it is essential to an understanding of the important motivational function of war as a model for collective sacrifice.

A brief look at some defunct premodern societies is instructive. One of the most noteworthy features common to the larger, more complex, and more successful of ancient civilizations was their widespread use of the blood sacrifice. If one were to limit consideratin to those cultures whose regional hegemony was so complete that the prospect of "war" had become virtually inconceivable ---as was the case with several of the great pre-Columbian societies of the Western Hemisphere---it would be found that some form of ritual killing occupied a position of paramount social importance in each. Invariably, the ritual was invested with mythic or religious significance; as will all religious and totemic practice, however, the ritual masked a broader and more important social function.

In these societies, the blood sacrifice served the purpose of maintaining a vestigial "earnest" of the society's capability and willingness to make war-- i.e., kill and be killed--- in the event that some mystical--i.e., unforeseen --circumstance were to give rise to the possibility. That the "earnest" was not an adequate substitute for genuine military organization when the unthinkable enemy, such as the Spanish conquistadores, actually appeared on the scene in no way negates the function of the ritual. It was primarily, if not exclusively, a symbolic reminder that war had once been the central organizing force of the society, and that this condition might recur.

It does not follow that a transition to total peace in modern societies would require the use of this model, even in less "barbaric" guise. But the historical analogy serves as a reminder that a viable substitute for war as a social system cannot be a mere symbolic charade. It must involve risk of real personal destruction, and on a scale consistent with the size and complexity of modern social systems. Credibility is the key. Whether the substitute is ritual in nature or functionally substantive, unless it provides a believable life- and-death threat it will not serve the socially organizing function of war.

The existence of an accepted external menace, then, is essential to social cohesiveness as well as to the acceptance of political authority. The menace must be believable, it must be of a magnitude consistent with the complexity of the society threatened, and it must appear, at least, to affect the entire society.

ECOLOGICAL

Men, like all other animals, is subject to the continuing process of adapting to the limitations of his environment. But the principal mechanism he has utilized for this purpose is unique among living creatures. To forestall the inevitable historical cycles of inadequate food supply, post-Neolithic man destroys surplus members of his own species by organized warfare.

Ethologists have often observed that the organized slaughter of members of their own species is virtually unknown among other animals. Man's special propensity to kill his own kind (shared to a limited degree with rats) may be attributed to his inability to adapt anachronistic patterns of survival (like primitive hunting) to his development of "civilizations" in which these patterns cannot be effectively sublimated. It may be attributed to other causes that have been suggested, such as a maladapted "territorial instinct," etc. Nevertheless, it exists and its social expression in war constitutes a biological control of his relationship to his natural environment that is peculiar to man alone.

War has served to help assure the survival of the human species. But as an evolutionary device to improve it, war is almost unbelievably inefficient. With few exceptions, the selective processes of other living creatures promote both specific survival and genetic improvement. When a conventionally adaptive animal faces one of its periodic crises of insufficiency, it is the "inferior" members of the species that normally disappear. An animal's social response to such a crisis may take the form of a mass migration, during which the weak fall by the wayside. Or it may follow the dramatic and more efficient pattern of lemming societies, in which the weaker members voluntarily disperse, leaving available food supplies for the stronger. In either case, the strong survive and the weak fall. In human societies, those who fight and die in wars for survival are in general its biologically stronger members. This is natural selection in reverse.

The regressive genetic effort of war has been often noted and equally often deplored, even when it confuses biological and cultural factors. The disproportionate loss of the biologically stronger remains inherent in traditional warfare. It serves to underscore the fact that survival of the species, rather than its improvement, is the fundamental purpose of natural selection, if it can be said to have a purpose, just as it is the basic premise of this study.

But as the polemologist Gaston Bouthoul has pointed out, other institutions that were developed to serve this ecological function have proved even less satisfactory. (They include such established forms as these: infanticide, practiced chiefly in ancient and primitive societies; sexual mutilation; monasticism; forced emigration; extensive capital punishment, as in old China and eighteenth-century England; and other similar, usually localized, practices.)

Man's ability to increase his productivity of the essentials of physical life suggests that the need for protection against cyclical famine may be nearly obsolete. It has thus tended to reduce the apparent importance of the basic ecological function of war, which is generally disregarded by peace theorists. Two aspects of its remain especially relevant, however. The first is obvious: current rates of population growth, compounded by environmental threat to chemical and other contaminants, may well bring about a new crisis of insufficiency. If so, it is likely to be one of unprecedented global magnitude, not merely regional or temporary. Conventional methods of warfare would almost surely prove inadequate, in this event, to reduce the consuming population to a level consistent with survival of the species.

The second relevant factor is the efficiency of modern methods of mass destruction. Even if their use is not required to meet a world population crisis, they offer, perhaps paradoxically, the first opportunity in the history of man to halt the regressive genetic effects of natural selection by war. Nuclear weapons are indiscriminate. Their application would bring to an end the disproportionate destruction of the physically stronger members of the species (the "warriors") in periods of war. Whether this prospect of genetic gain would offset the unfavorable mutations anticipated from postnuclear radioactivity we have not yet determined. What gives the question a bearing on our study is the possibility that the determination may yet have to be made.

Another secondary ecological trend bearing on projected population growth is the regressive effect of certain medical advances. Pestilence, for example, is no longer an important factor in population control. The problem of increased life expectancy has been aggravated. These advances also pose a potentially more sinister problem, in that undesirable genetic traits that were formerly self-liquidating are now medically maintained. Many diseases that were once fatal at preprocreational ags are now cured; the effect of this development is to perpetuate undesirable susceptibilities and mutations. It seems clear that a new quasi-eugenic function of war is now in process of formation that will have to be taken into account in any transition plan. For the time being, the Department of Defense appears to have recognized such factors, as has been demonstrated by the planning under way by the Rand Corporation to cope with the breakdown in the ecological balance anticipated after a thermonuclear war. The Department has also begun to stockpile birds, for example, against the expected proliferation of radiation-resistant insects, etc.

CULTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC

The declared order of values in modern societies gives a high place to the so-called "creative" activities, and an even higher one to those associated with the advance of scientific knowledge. Widely held social values can be translated into political equivalents, which in turn may bear on the nature of a transition to peace. The attitudes of those who hold these values must be taken into account in the planning of the transition. The dependence, therefore, of cultural and scientific achievement on the war system would be an important consideration in a transition plan even is such achievement had no inherently necessary social function.

Of all the countless dichotomies invented by scholars to account for the major differences in art styles and cycles, only one has been consistently unambiguous in its application to a variety of forms and cultures. However it may be verbalized, the basic distinction is this: Is the work war-oriented or is it not? Among primitive peoples, the war dance is the most important art form. Elsewhere, literature, music, painting, sculpture, and architecture that has won lasting acceptance has invariably dealt with a theme of war, expressly or implicitly, and has expressed the centricity of war to society. The war in question may be national conflict, as in Shakespeare plays, Beethoven's music, or Goya's paintings, or it may be reflected in the form of religious, social, or moral struggle, as in the work of Dante, Rembrandt, and Bach. Art that cannot be classified as war-oriented is usually described as "sterile," "decadent," and so on. Application of the "war standard" to works of art may often leave room for debate in individual cases, but there is no question of its role as the fundamental determinant of cultural values. Aesthetic and moral standards have a common anthropological origin, in the exaltation of bravery, the willingness to kill and risk death in tribal warfare.

It is also instructive to note that the character of a society's culture has borne a close relationship to its war-making potential, in the context of its times. It is no accident that the current "cultural explosion" in the United States is taking place during an era marked by an unusually rapid advance in weaponry. This relationship is more generally recognized than the literature on the subject would suggest. For example, many artists and writers are now beginning to express concern over the limited creative options they envisage in the warless world they think, or hope, may be soon upon us. They are currently preparing for this possibility by unprecedented experimentation with meaningless forms; their interest in recent years has been increasingly engaged by the abstract pattern, the gratuitous emotin, the random happening, and the unrelated sequence.

The relationshp of war to scientific research and discovery is more explicit. War is the principal motivational force for the development of science at every level, from the abstractly conceptual to the narrowly technological. Modern society places a high value on "pure" science, but it is historically inescapable that all the significant discoveries that have been made about the natural world have been inspired by the real or imaginary military necessities of their epochs. The consequences of the discoveries have indeed gone far afield, but war has always provided the basic incentive.

Beginning with the development of iron and steel, and proceeding through the discoveries of the laws of motion and thermodynamics to the age of the atomic particle, the synthetic polymer, and the space capsure, no important scientific advance has not been at least indirectly initiated by an implicit requirement of weaponry. More prosaic examples include the transistor radio (an outgrowth of military communications requirements), the assembly line (from Civil War firearms needs), the steel-frame building (from the steel battleship), the canal lock, and so on. A typical adaptation can be seen in a device as modest as the common lawnmower; it developed from the revolving scythe devised by Leonardo da Vinci to precede a horse-powered vehicle into enemy ranks.

The most direct relationship can be found in medical technology. For example, a giant "walking machine," and amplifier of body motions invented for military use in difficult terrain, is now making it possible for many previously con- fined to wheelchairs to walk. The Vietnam war alone has led to spectacular improvements in amputation procedures, blood-handling techniques, and surgical logistics. It has stimulated new large-scale research on malaria and other typical parasite diseases; it is hard to estimate how long this t? Amoould otherwise have been delayed, despite its enormous nonmilitary importance to nearly half the world's population.

OTHER

We have elected to omit from our discussion of the nonmilitary functions of war those we do not consider critical to a transition program. This is not to say they are unimportant, however, but only that they appear to present no special problems for the organization of a peace-oriented social system. They include the following:

War as a general social release. This is a psychosocial function, serving the same purpose for a society as do the holiday, the celebration, and the orgy for the individual---the release and redistribution of undifferentiated tensions. War provides for the periodic necessary readjustment of standards of social behavior (the "moral climate") and for the dissipation of general boredom, one of the most consistently undervalued and unrecognized of social phenomena.

War as a generational stabilizer. This psychological function, served by other behavior patterns in other animals, enables the physically deteriorating older generation to maintain its control of the younger, destroying it if necessary.

War as an idealogical clarifier. The dualism that characterized the traditional dialectic of all branches of philosophy and of stable political relationships stems from war as the prototype of conflict. Except for secondary considerations, there cannot be, to put it as simply as possible, more than two sides to a question because there cannot be more than two sides to a war.

War as the basis for the international understanding. Before the development of modern communications, the strategic requirements of war provided the only substantial incentive for the enrichment of one national culture with the achievements of another. Altough this is still the case in many international relationships, the function is obsolescent.

We have also forgone extended characterization of those functions we assume to be widely and explicitly recognized. An obvious example is the rold of war as controller of the quality and degree of unemployment. This is more than an economic and political subfunction; its sociological, cultural, and ecological aspects are also important, although often teleonomic. But none affect the general problem of substitution. The same is true of certain other functions; those we have included are sufficient to define the scope of the problem.

SECTION 6 - SUBSTITUTES FOR THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR

By now it should be clear that the most detailed and comprehensive master plan for a transition to world peace will remain academic if it fails to deal forthrightly with the problem of the critical nonmilitary functions of war. The social needs they serve are essential; if the war system no longer exists to meet them, substitute institutions will have to be established for the purpose. These surrogates must be "realistic," which is to say of a scope and nature that can be conceived and implemented in the context of present-day social capabilities. This is not the truism it may appear to be; the requirements of radical social change often reveal the distinction between a most conservative projection and a wildly utopian scheme to be fine indeed.

In this section we will consider some possible substitutes for these functions. Only in rare instances have they been put forth for the purposes which concern us here, but we see no reason to limit ourselves to proposals that address themselves explicitly to the problem as we have outlined it. We will disregard the ostensible, or military, functions of war; it is a premise of this study that the transition to peace implies absolutely that they will no longer exist in any relevant sense. We will also disregard the noncritical functions exemplified at the end of the preceding section.

ECONOMIC

Economic surrogates for war must meet two principal criteria. They must be "wasteful," in the common sense of the word, and they must operate outside the normal supply-demand system. A corollary that should be obvious is that the magnitude of the waste must be sufficient to meet the needs of a particular society. An economy as advanced and complex as our own requires the planned average annual destructoin of not less than 10 percent of gross national product if it is effectively to fulfill its stabilizing function. When the mass of a balance wheel is inadequate to the power it is intended to control, its effect can be self-defeating, as with a runaway locomotive. The analogy, though crude, is especially apt for the American economy, as our record of cyclical depressions shows. All have taken place during periods of grossly inadequate military spending.

Those few economic conversion programs which by implication acknowledge the nonmilitary economic function of war (at least to some extent) tend to assume that so-called social-welfare expenditures will fill the vacuum created by the disappearance of military spending. When one considers the backlog of un- finished business---proposed but still unexecuted---in this field, the assumption seems plausible. Let us examine briefly the following list, which is more or less typical of general social welfare programs.

HEALTH. Drastic expansion of medical research, education, and training facilities; hospital and clinic construction; the general objective of complete government-guaranteed health care for all, at a level consistent with current developments in medical technology.

EDUCATION. The equivalent of the foregoing in teacher training; schools and libraries; the drastic upgrading of standards, with the general objective of making available for all an attainable educational goal equivalent to what is now considered a professional degree.

HOUSING. Clean, comfortable, safe, and spacious living space for all, at the level now enjoyed by about 15 percent of the population in this country (less in most others).

TRANSPORTATION. The establishment of a system of mass public transportation making it possible for all to travel to and from areas of work and recreation quickly, comfortably, and conveniently, and to travel privately for pleasure rather than necessity.

PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT. The development and protection of water supplies, forests, parks, and other natural resources; the elimination of chemical and bacterial contaminants from air, water, and soil.

POVERTY. The genuine elimination of poverty, defined by a standard consistent with current economic productivity, by means of a guaranteed annual income or whatever system of distribution will best assure its achievement.

This is only a sampler of the more obvious domestic social welfare items, and we have listed it in a deliberately broad, perhaps extravagant, manner. In the past, such a vague and ambitious-sounding "program" would have been dismissed out of hand, without serious consideration; it would clearly have been, prima facie, far too costly, quite apart from its political implications. Our objective to it, on the other hand, could hardly be more contradictory. As an economic substitute for war, it is inadequate because it would be far too cheap.

If this seems paradoxical, it must be remembered that up to now all proposed social-welfare expenditures have had to be measured within the war economy, not as a replacement for it. The old slogan about a battleship or an ICBM costing as much as x hospitals or y schools or z homes takes on a very different meaning if there are to be more battleships or ICBM's.

Since the list is general, we have elected to forestall the tangential controversy that surrounds arbitraty cost projections by offering no individual cost estimates. But the maximum program that could be physically effected along the lines indicated could approach the established level of military spending only for a limited time--in our opinion, subject to a detailed cost-and-feasibility analysis, less than ten years. In this short period, at this rate, the major goals of the program would have been achieved. Its capital-investment phase would have been completed, and it would have established a permanent comparatively modest level of annual operating cost--within the framework of the general economy.

Here is the basic weakness of the sociel-welfare surrogate. On the short-term basis, a maximum program of this sort could replace a normal military spending program, provided it was designed, like the military model, to be subject to arbitrary control. Public housing starts, for example, or the development of modern medical centers might be accelerated or halted from time to time, as the requirements of a stable economy might dictate. But on the long-term basis, social-welfare spending, no matter how often redefined, would necessarily become an integral, accepted part of the economy, of no more value as a stabilizer than the automobile industry or old age and survivors' insurance. Apart from whatever merit social-welfare programs are deemed to have for their own sake, their function as a substitute for war in the economy would thus be self-liquidating. They might serve, however, as expedients pending the development of more durable substitute measures.

Another economic surrogate that has been proposed is a series of giant "space research" programs. These have already demonstrated their utility in more modest scale within the military economy. What has been implied, although not yet expressly put forth, is the development of a long-range sequence of space-research projects with largely unattainable goals. This kind of program offers several advantages lacking in the social welfare model. First, it is unlikely to phase itself out, regardless of the predictable "surprises" science has in store for us: the universe is too big. In the event some individual project unexpectedly succeeds there would be no dearth of substitute problems. For example, if colonization of the moon proceeds on schedule, it could then become "necessary" to establish a beachhead on Mars or Jupiter, and so on. Second, it need be no more dependent on the general supply-demand economy than its military prototype. Third, it lends itself extraordinarily well to arbitrary control.

Space research can be viewed as the nearest modern equivalent yet devised to the pyramid-building, and similar ritualistic enterprises, of ancient societies. It is true that the scientific value of the space program, even of what has already been accomplished, is substantial on its own terms. But current programs are absurdly obviously disproportionate, in the relationship of the knowledge sought to the expenditures committed. All but a small fraction of the space budget, measured by the standards of comparable scientific objectives, must be charged de facto to the military economy. Future space research, projected as a war surrogate, would further research, projected as a war surrogate, would further reduce the "scientific" rationale of its budget to a minuscule percentage indeed. As a purely economic substitute for war, therefore, extension of the space program warrants serious consideraton.

In Section 3 we pointed out that certain disarmament models, which we called conservative, postulated extremely expensive and elaborate inspection systems. Would it be possible to extend and institutionalize such systems to the point where they might serve as economic surrogates for war spending? The organization of failsafe inspection machinery could well be ritualized in a manner similar to that of established military processes. "Inspection teams" might be very like weapons. Inflating the inspection budget to military scale presents no difficulty. The appeal of this kind of scheme lies in the comparative ease of transition between two parallel systems.

The "elaborate inspection" surrogate is fundamentally fallacious, however. Although it might be economically useful, as well as politically necessary, during the disarmament transition, it would fail as a substitute for the economic function of war for one simple reason. Peace-keeping inspection is part of a war system, not of a peace system. It implies the possibility of weapons maintenance or manufacture, which could not exist in a world at peace as here defined. Massive inspection also implies sanctions, and thus war-readiness.

The same fallacy is more obvious in plans to create a patently useless "defense conversion" apparatus. The long-discredited proposal to build "total" civil defense facilities is one example; another is the plan to establish a giant antimissile missile complex (Nike-X, et al.). These programs, of course, are economic rather than strategic. Nevertheless, they are not substitutes for military spending but merely different forms of it.

A more sophisticated variant is the proposal to establish the "Unarmed Forces" of the United States. This would conveniently maintain the entire institutional military structure, redirecting it essentially toward social-welfare activities on a global scale. It would be, in effect, a giant military Peace Corps. There is nothing inherently unworkable about this plan, and using the existing military system to effectuate its own demise is both ingenious and convenient. But even on a greatly magnified world basis, social-welfare expenditures must sooner or later reenter the atmosphere of the normal economy. The practical transitional virtues of such a scheme would thus be eventually negated by its inadequacy as a permanent economic stabilizer.

POLITICAL

The war system makes the stable government of societies possible. It does this essentially by providing an external necessity for a society to accept political rule. In so doing, it establishes the basis for nationhood and the authority of government to control its constituents. What other institution or combination of programs might serve these functions in its place?

We have already pointed out that the end of the war means the end of national sovereignty, and thus the end of nationhood as we know it today. But this does not necessarily mean the end of nations in the administrative sense, and internal political power will remain essential to a stable society. The emerging "nations" of the peace epoch must continue to draw political authority from some source.

A number of proposals have been made governing the relations between nations after total disarmament; all are basically juridical in nature. They contemplate institutions more or less like a World Court, or a United Nations, but vested with real authority. They may or may not serve their ostansible post-military purpose of settling internatinal disputes, but we need not discuss that here. None would offer effective external pressure on a peace-world nation to organize itself politically.

It might be argued that a well-armed international police force, operating under the authority of such a supranational "court," could well serve the function of external enemy. This, however, would constitute a military operation, like the inspection schemes mentioned, and, like them, would be inconsistent with the premise of an end to the war system. It is possible that a variant of the "Unarmed Forces" idea might be developed in such a way that its "constructive" (i.e., social welfare) activities could be combined with an economic "threat" of sufficient size and credibility to warrant political organization. Would this kind of threat also be contradictory to our basic premise?--that is, would it be inevitably military? Not necessarily, in our view, but we are skeptical of its capacity to evoke credibility. Also, the obvious destabilizing effect of any global social welfare surrogate on politically necessary class relationships would create an entirely new set of transition problems at least equal in magnitude.

Credibility, in fact, lies at the heart of the problem of developing a political substitute for war. This is where the space-race proposals, in many ways so well suited as economic substitutes for war, fall short. The most ambitious and unrealistic space project cannot of itself generate a believable external menace. It has been hotly argued that such a menace would offer the "last, best hope of peace," etc., by uniting mankind against the danger of destruction by "creatures" from other planets or from outer space. Experiments have been proposed to test the credibility of an out-of-our-world invasion threat; it is possible that a few of the more difficult-to-explain "flying saucer" indicents of recent years were in fact early experiments of this kind. If so, they could hardly have been judged encouraging. We anticipate no difficulties in making a "need" for a giant super space program credible for economic purposes, even were there not ample precedent; extending it, for political purposes, to include features unfortunately associated with science fiction would obviously be a more dubious undertaking.

Nevertheless, an effective political substitute for war would require "alternate enemies," some of which might seem equally farfetched in the context of the current war system. It may be, for instance, that gross pollution of the environment can eventually replace the possibility of mass destruction by nuclear weapons as the principal apparent threat to the survival of the species. Poisoning of the air, and of the principal sources of food and water supply, is already well advanced, and at first glance would seem promising in this respect; it constitutes a threat that can be dealt with only through social organization and political power. But from present indications it will be a generation to a generation and a half before environmental pollution, however severe, will be sufficiently menacing, on a global scale, to offer a possible basis for a solution.

It is true that the rate of pollution could be increased selectively for this purpose; in fact, the mere modifying of existing programs for the deterrence of pollution could speed up the process enough to make the threat credible much sooner. But the pollution problem has been so widely publicized in recent years that it seems highly improbably that a program of deliberate environ- mental poisoning could be implemented in a politically acceptable manner.

However unlikely some of the possible alternate enemies we have mentioned may seem, we must emphasize that one must be found, of credible quality and magnitude, if a transition to peace is ever to come about without social disintegration. It is more probably, in our judgement, that such a threat will have to be invented, rather than developed from unknown conditions. For this reason, we believe further speculation about its putative nature ill-advised in this context. Since there is considerable doubt, in our minds, that any viable political surrogate can be devised, we are reluctant to compromise, by premature discussion, any possible option that may eventually lie open to our government.

SOCIOLOGICAL

Of the many functions of war we have found convenient to group together in this classification, two are critical. In a world of peace, the continuing stability of society will require: 1) an effective substitute for military institutions that can neutralize destabilizing social elements and 2) a credible motivational surrogate for war that can insure social cohesiveness. The first is an essential element of social control; the second is the basic mechanism for adapting individual human drives to the needs of society.

Most proposals that address themselves, explicitly or otherwise, to the postwar problem of controlling the socially alienated turn to some variant of the Peace Corps or the so-called Job Corps for a solution. The socially disaffected, the economically unprepared, the psychologically unconformable, the hard-core "delinquents," the incorrigible "subversives," and the rest of the unemployable are seen as somehow transformed by the disciplines of a service modeled on military precedent into more or less dedicated social service workers. This presumption also informs the otherwise hardheaded ratiocination of the "Unarmed Forces" plan.

The problem has been addressed, in the language of popular sociology, by Secretary McNamara. "Even in our abundant societies, we have reason enough to worry over the tensions that coil and tighten among underprivileged young people, and finally flail out in delinquency and crime. What are we to expect.. where mounting frustrations are likely to fester into eruptions of violence and extremism?" In a seemingly unrelated passage, he continues: "It seems to me that we could move toward remedying that inequity [of the Selective Service System] by asking every young person in the United States to give two years of service to his country--whether in one of the military services, in the Peace Corps, or in some other volunteer developmental w? Amat home or abroad. We could encourage other countries to do the same." Here, as elsewhere throughout this significant speech, Mr.McNamara has focused, indirectly but unmistakably, on one of the key issues bearing on a possible transition to peace, and has later indicated, also indirectly, a rough approach to its resolution, again phrased in the language of the current war system.

It seems cleara that Mr.McNamara and other proponents of the peace-corps surrogate for this tar function lean heavily on the success of the paramilitary Depression programs mentioned in the last section. We find the precedent wholly inadequate in degree. Neither the lack of relevant precedent, however, nor the dubious social welfare sentimentality characterizing this approach warrant its rejection without careful study. It may be viable --- provided, first, that the military origin of the Corps format be effectively rendered out of its operational activity, and second, that the transition from paramilitary activities to "developmental w? A" can be effected without regard to the attitudes of the Corps personnel or to the "value" of the work it is expected to perform.

Another possible surrogate for the control of potential enemies of society is the reintroduction, in some form consistent with modern technology and political processes, of slavery. Up to now, this has been suggested only in fiction, notably in the works of Wells, Huxley, Orwell, and others engaged in the imaginative anticipation of the sociology of the future. But the fantasies projected in Brave New World and 1984 have seemed less and less implausible over the years since their publication. The traditional association of slavery with ancient preindustrial cultures should not blind us to its adaptability to advanced forms of social organization, nor should its equally traditional incompatibility with Western moral and economic values. It is entirely possible that the development of a sophisticated form of slavery may be an absolute prerequisite for social control in a world at peace. As a practical matter, conversion of the code of military discipline to a euphemized form of enslavement would entail surprisingly little revision; the logical first stepmoould be the adoption of some form of "universal" military service.

When it comes to postulating a credible substitute for war capable of directing human behavior patterns in behalf of social organization, few options suggest themselves. Like its political function, the motivational function of war requires the existence of a genuinely menacing social enemy. The principal difference is that for purposes of motivating basic allegiance, as distinct from accepting political authority, the "alternate enemy" must imply a more immediate, tangible, and directly felt threat of destruction. It must justify the need for taking and paying a "blood price" in wide areas of human concern.

In this respect, the possible enemies noted earlier would be insufficient. One exception might be the environmental-pollution model, if the danger to society it posed was genuinely imminent. The fictive models would have to carry the weight of extraordinary conviction, underscored with a not inconsiderable actual sacrifice of life; the construction of an up-to-date mythological or religious structure for this purpose would present difficulties in our era, but must certainly be considered.

Games theorists have suggested, in other contexts, the development of "blood games" for the effective control of individual aggressive impulses. It is an ironic commentary on the current state of war and peace studies that it was left not to scientists but to the makers of a commercial film to develop a model for this notion, on the implausible level of popular melodrama, as a ritualized manhunt. More realistically, such a ritual might be socialized, in the manner of the Spanish Inquisition and the less formal witch trials of other periods, for purposes of "social purification," "state security," or other rationale both acceptable and credible to postwar societies. The feasibility of such an updated version of still another ancient institution, though doubtful, is considerably less fanciful than the wishful notion of many peace planners that a lasting condition of peace can be brought about without the most painstaking examination of every possible surrogate for the essential functions of war. What is involved here, in a sense, is the quest for William Jame's "moral equivalent of war."

It is also possible that the two functions considered under this heading may be jointly served, in the sense of establishing the antisocial, for whom a control institution is needed, as the "alternate enemy" needed to hold society together. The relentless and irreversible advance of unemployability at all levels of society, and the similar extension of generalized alienation from accepted values may make some such program necessary even as an adjunct to the war system. As before, we will not speculate on the specific forms this kind of program might take, except to note that there is again ample precedent, in the treatment meted out to disfavored, allegedly menacing, ethnic groups in certain societies during certain historical periods.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 10:52 PM (GMT)

ECOLOGICAL

Considering the shortcomings of war as a mechanism of selective population control, it might appear that devising substitutes for this function should be comparatively simple. Schematically this is so, but the problem of timing the transition to a new ecological balancing device makes the feasibility of substitution less certain.

It must be remembered that the limitation of war in this function is entirely eugenic. War has not been genetically progressive. But as a system of gross population control to preserve the species it cannot fairly be faulted. And, as has been pointed out, the nature of war is itself in transition. Current trends in warfare--the increased strategic bombing of civilians and the greater mililtary importance now attached to the destruction of sources of supply (as opposed to purely "military" bases and personnel)---strongly suggest that a truly qualititative improvement is in the making. Assuming the war system is to continue, it is more than probably that the regressively selective quality of war will have been reversed, as its victims become more genetically representative of their societies.

There is no question but that a universal requirement that procreation be limited to the products of artificial inseminatin would provide a fully adequate substitute control for population levels. Such a reproductive system would, of course, have the added advantage of being susceptible of direct eugenic management. Its predictable further development---conception and embryonic growth taking place wholly under laboratory conditions--would extend these controls to their logical conclusion. The ecological function of war under these circumstances would not only be superseded but surpassed in effectiveness.

The indicated intermediate step--total control of conception with a variant of the ubiquitous "pill," via water supplies or certain essential foodstuffs, offset by a controlled "antidote"---is already under development. There oould appear to be no foreseeable need to revert to any of the outmoded practices referred to in the previous section (infanticide, etc.) as there might have been if the possibility of transition to peace had arisen two generations ago.

The real question here, therefore, does not concern the viability of this war substitute, but the political problems involved in bringing it about. It cannot be established while the war system is still in effect. The reason for this is simple: excess population is tar material. As long as any society must comtemplate even a remote possibility ofwar, it must maintain a maximum supportable population, even when so doing critically aggravates an economic liability. This is paradoxical, in view of war's role in reducing excess population, but it is readily understood. War controls the general population level, but the ecological interest of any single society lies in maintaining its hegemony vis-a-vis other societies. The obvious analogy can be seen in any free-enterprise economy. Practices damaging to the society as a whole--both competitive and monopolistic--are abetted by the conflicting economic motives of individual capital interests. The obvious precedent can be found in the seemingly irrational political difficulties which have blacked universal adoption of simple birth-control methods. Nations desperately in need of increasing unfavorable production-consumption ratios are nevertheless unwilling to gamble their possible military requirements of twenty years hence for this purpose. Unilateral population control, as practiced in ancient Japan and in other isolated societies, is out of the question in today's world.

Since the eugenic solution cannot be achieved until the transition to the peace system takes place, why not wait? One must qualify the inclination to agree. As we noted earlier, a real possibility of an unprecedented global crisis of insufficiency exists today, which the war system may not be able to forestall. If this should come to pass before an agreed-upon transition to peace were completed, the result might be irrevocably disastrous. There is clearly no solution to this dilemma; it is a risk which must be taken. But it tends to support the view that if a decision is made to elminate the war system, it were better done sooner than later.

CULTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC

Strictly speaking, the function of war as the determinant of cultural values and as the prime mover of scientific progress may not be critical in a world without war. Our criterion for the basic nonmilitary functions of war has been: Are they necessary to the survival and stability of society? The absolute need for substitute cultural value-determinants and for the continued advance of scientific knowledge is not established. We believe it important, however, in behalf of those for whom these functions hold subjective significance, that it be known what they can reasonably expect in culture and science after a transition to peace.

So far as the creative arts are concerned, there is no reason to believe they would disappear, but only that they would change in charactermand relative social importance. The elimination of war would in due course deprive them of their principal conative force, but it would necessarily take some time for the transition, and perhaps for a generation thereafter, themes of sociomoral conflict inspired by the war system would be increasingly transferred to the idiom of purely personal sensibility. At the same time, a new aesthetic oould have to develop. Whatever its name, form, or rationale, its function would be to express, in language appropriate to the new period, the once discredited philosophy that art exists for its own sake. This aesthetic oould reject unequivocally the classic requirement of paramilitary conflict as the substantive content of great art. The eventual effect of the peace-world philosophy of art would be deomcratizing in the extreme, in the sense that a generally acknowledged subjectivity of artistic standards would equalize their new, content-free "values."

What may be expected to happen is that art would be reassigned the role it once played in a few primitive peace-oriented social systems. This was the functin of pure decoration, entertainment, or play, entirely free of the burden of expressing the sociomoral values and conflicts of a war-oriented society. It is interesting that the groundwork for such a value-free aesthetic is already being laid today, in growing experimentation in art without content, perhaps in anticipation of a world without conflict. A cult has developed around a new kind of cultural determinism, which proposes that the technological form of a cultural expression determines its values rather than does its ostensibly meaningful content. Its clear implication is that there is no "good" or "bad" art, only that which is appropriate to its (technological) times and that which is not. Its cultural effect has been to promote circumstantial constructions and unplanned expressions; it denies to art the relevance of sequential logic. Its significance in this context is that it provides a working model of one kind of value-free culture we might reasonably anticipate in a world at peace.

So far as science is concerned, it might appear at first glance that a giant space-research program, the most promising among the proposed economic surrogates for war, might also serve as the basic stimulator of scientific research. The lack of fundamental organized social conflict inherent in space work, however, would rule it out as an adeguate motivational substitute for war when applied to "pure" science. But it could no doubt sustain the broad range of technological activity that a space budget of military dimensions oould require. A similarly scaled social-welfare program could provide a comparable inpetus to low-keyed technological advances, especially in medicine, rationalized construction methods, educational psychology, etc. The eugenic substitute for the ecological function of war oould also require continuing research in certain areas of the life sciences.

Apart from these partial substitutes for war, it must be kept in mind that the momentum given to scientific progress by the great wars of the past century, and even more by the anticipation of World War III, is intellectually and materially enormous. It is our finding that if the war system were to end tomorrow this momentum is so great that the pursuit of scientific knowledge could reasonably be expected to go forward without noticeable diminution for perhaps two decades. It would then continue, at a progressively decreasing tempo, for at least another two decades before the "bank account" of today's unresolved problems would become exhausted. By the standards of the questions we have learned to ask today, there would no longer be anything worth knowing still unknown; we cannot conceive, by definition, of the scientific questions to ask once those we can now comprehend are answered.

This leads unavoidably to another matter: the intrinsic value of the unlimited search for knowledge. We of course offer no independent value judgments here, but it is germane to point out that a substantial minority of scientific opinion feels that search to be circumscribed in any case. This opinion is itself a factor in considering the need for a substitute for the scientific function of war. For the record, we must also take note of the precedent that during long periods of human history, often covering thousands of years, in which no intrinsic social value was assigned to scientific progress, stable societies did survive and flourish. Although this could not have been possible in the modern industrial world, we cannot be certain it may not again be true in a future world at peace.

SECTION 7 - SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

THE NATURE OF WAR

War is not, as is widely assumed, primarily an instrument of polcy utilized by nations to extend or defend their expressed political values or their economic interests. On the contrary, it is itself the principal basis of organizatin on which all modern societies are constructed. The common proximate cause of war is the apparent interference of one nation with the aspirations of another. But at the root of all ostensible differences of national interest lie the dynamic requirements of the war system itself for periodic armed conflict. Readiness for war characterizes contemporary social systems more broadly than their economic and political structures, which it subsumes.

Economic analyses of the anticipated problems of transition to peace have not recognized the broad preminence of war in the definition of social systems. The same is true, with rare and only partial exceptions, of model disarmament "scenarios." For this reason, the value of this previous work is limited to the mechanical aspects of transition. Certain features of these models may perhaps be applicable to a real situation of conversion to peace; this till depend on their compatibility with a substantive, rather than a procedural, peace plan. Such a plan can be developed only from the premise of full understanding of the nature of the war system it proposes to abolish, which in turn presupposes detailed comprehension of the functions the war system performs for society. It will require the construction of a detailed and feasible system of substitutes for those functions that are necessary to the stability and survival of human societies.

THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR

The visible, military function of war requires no elucidation; it is not only obvious but also irrelevant to a transition to the condition of peace, in which it will by definition be superfluous. It is also subsidiary in social significance to the implied, nonmilitary functions of war; those critical to transition can be summarized in five principal groupings.

1. ECONOMIC. War has provided both ancient and modern societies with a dependable system for stabilizing and controlling national economies. No alternate method of control has yet been tested in a complex modern economy that has shown itself remotely comparable in scope or effectiveness.

2. POLITICAL. The permanent possibility of war is the foundation for stable government; it supplies the basis for general acceptance of political authority. It has enabled societies to maintain necessary class distinctions, and it has ensured the subordination of the citizen to the state, by virtue of the residual war powers inherent in the concept of nationhood. No modern political ruling group has successfully controlled its constituency after failing to sustain the continuing credibility of an external threat of war.

3. SOCIOLOGICAL. War, through the medium of military institutions, has uniquely served societies, throughout the course of known history, as an indispensible controller of dangerous social dissidence and destructive antisocial tendencies. As the most formidable of threats to life itself, and as the only one susceptible to mitigation by social organization alone, it has played another equally fundamental role: the war system has provided the machinery through which the motivational forces governing human behavior have been translated into binding social allegiance. It has thus ensured the degree of social cohesion necessary to the viability of nations. No other institution, or groups of institutions, in modern societies, has successfully served these functions.

4. ECOLOGICAL. War has been the principal evolutionary device for maintaining a satisfactory ecological balance between gross human population and supplies available for its survival. It is unique to the human species.

5. CULTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC. War-orientation has determined the basic standards of value in the creative arts, and has provided the fundamental motivational source of scientific and technological progress. The concepts that the arts express values independent of their own forms and that the successful pursuit of knowledge has intrinsic social value have long been accepted in modern societies; the development of the arts and sciences during this period has been corollary to the parallel development of weaponry.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR: CRITERIA

The foregoing functions of war are essential to the survival of the social systems we know today. With two possible exceptions they are also essential to any kind of stable social organization that might survive in a warless world. Discussion of the ways and means of transition to such a world are meaningless unless a)substitute institutions can be devised to fill these functions, or B) it can reasonably be hypothecated that the loss or partial loss of any one function need not destroy the viability of future societies.

Such substitute institutions and hypotheses must meet varying criteria. In general, they must be technically feasible, politically acceptable, and potentially credible to the members of the societies that adopt them. Specifically, they must be characterized as follows:

1. ECONOMIC. An acceptable economic surrogate for the war system will require the expenditure of resources for completely nonproductive purposes at a level comparable to that of the military expenditures otherwise demanded by the size and complexity of each society. Such a substitute system of apparent "waste" must be of a nature that will permit it to remain independent of the normal supply-demand economy; it must be subject to arbitrary political control.

2. POLITICAL. A viable political substitute fir war must posit a generalized external menace to each society of a nature and degree sufficient to require the organization and acceptance of political authority.

3. SOCIOLOGICAL. First, in the permanent absence of war, new institutions must be developed that will effectively control the socially destructive seg- ments of societies. Second, for purposes of adapting the physical and psychological dynamics of human behavior to the needs of social organization, a credible substitute for war must generate an omnipresent and readily understood fear of personal destruction. This fear must be of a nature and degree sufficient to ensure adherence to societal values to the full extent that they are acknowledged to transcend the value of individual human life.

4. ECOLOGICAL. A substitute for war in its function as the uniquely human system of population control must ensure the survival, if not necessarily the improvement, of the species, in terms of its relations to environmental supply.

5. CULTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC. A surrogate for the function of war as the determinant of cultural values must establish a basis of sociomoral conflict of equally compelling force and scope. A substitute motivational basis for the quest for scientific knowledge must be similarly informed by a comparable sense of internal necessity.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR: MODELS

The following substitute institutions, among others, have been proposed for consideration as replacements for the nonmilitary functions of war. That they may not have been originally set forth for that purpose does not preclude or invalidate their possible application here.

1. ECONOMIC. a) A comprehensive social-welfare program, directed toward maximum improvement of general conditions of human life. B) A giant open-end space research program, aimed at unreachable targets. c) A permanent, ritualized, ultra-elaborate disarmament inspection system, and variants of such a system.

2. POLITICAL a) An omnipresent, virtually omnipotent international police force. B) An established and recognized extraterrestrial menace. c) Massive global environmental pollution. d) Fictitious alternate enemies.

3. SOCIOLOGICAL: CONTROL FUNCTION. a) Programs generally derived from the Peace Corps model. B) A modern, sophisticated form of slavery. MOTIVATIONAL FUNCTION. a) Intensified environmental pollution. B) New religions or other mythologies. c) Socially oriented blood games. d) Combination forms.

4. ECOLOGICAL. A comprehensive program of applied eugenics.

5. CULTURAL. No replacement institution offered. SCIENTIFIC. The secondary requirements of the space research, social welfare, and / or eugenics programs.

SUBSTITUTES FOR THE FUNCTIONS OF WAR: EVALUATION

The models listed above reflect only the beginning of the quest for substitute institutions for the functions of war, rather than a recapitulation of alternatives. It would be both premature and inappropriate, therefore, to offer final judgments on their applicability to a transition to peace and after. Furthermore, since the necessary but complex project of correlating the compatibility of proposed surrogates for different functions could be treated only in exemplary fashion at this time, we have elected to withhold such hypothetical correlations as were tested as statistically inadequate.

Nevertheless, some tentative and cursory comments on these proposed function-al "solutions" will indicate the scope of the difficulties involved in this area of peace planning.

ECONOMIC. The social-welfare model cannot be expected to remain outside the normal economy after the conclusion of its predominantly capital-investment phase; its value in this function can therefore be only temporary. The space-research substitute appears to meet both major criteria, and should be examined in greater detail, especially in respect to its probable effects on other war functions. "Elaborate inspection" schemes, although superficially attractive, are inconsistent with the basic premise of a transition to peace. The "unarmed forces" variant, logistically similar, is subject to the same functional criticism as the general social-welfare model.

POLITICAL. Like the inspection-scheme surrogates, proposals for plenipoteniary international police are inherently incompatible with the ending of the war system. The "unarmed forces" variant, amended to include unlimited powers of economic sanction, might conceivably be expanded to constitute a credible external menace. Development of an acceptable threat from "outer space," presumably in conjunction with a space-research surrogate for economic control, appears unpromising in terms of credibility. The environmental-pollution model does not seem sufficiently responsive to immediate social control, except through arbitrary acceleration of current polution trends; this in turn raises questions of political acceptability. New, less regressive, approaches to the creation of fictitious global "enemies" invite further investigation.

SOCIOLOGICAL: CONTROL FUNCTION. Although the various substitutes proposed for this function that are modeled roughly on the Peace Corps appear grossly inadequate in potential scope, they should not be ruled out without further study. Slavery, in a technologically modern and conceptually euphemized form, may prove a more efficient and flexible institution in this area. MOTIVATIONAL FUNCTION. ALthough none of the proposed substitutes for war as the guarantor of social allegiance can be dismissed out of hand, each presents serious and special difficulties. Intensified environmental threats may raise ecological dangers; mythmaking dissociated from tar may no longer be politically feasible; purposeful blood games and rituals can far more readily be devised than implemented. An institution combining this function with the preceding one, based on, but not necessarily imitative of, the precedent of organized ethnic repression, tarrants careful consideration.

ECOLOGICAL. The only apparent problem in the application of an adequate eugenic substitute for war is that of timing; it cannot be effectuated until the transition to peace has been completed, which involved a serious temporary risk of ecological failure.

CULTURAL. No plausible substitute for this function of war has yet been proposed. It may be, however, that a basic cultural value-determinant is not necessary to the survival of a stable society. SCIENTIFIC. The same might be said for the function of war as the prime mover of the search for knowledge. However, adoption of either a giant space-research program, a comprehensive social-welfare program, or a master program of eugenic control would provide motivation for limited technologies.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

It is apparent, from the foregoing, that no program or combination of programs yet proposed for a transition to peace has remotely approached meeting the comprehensive functional requirements of a world without war. Although one projected system for filling the economic function of war seems promising, similar optimism cannot be expressed in the equally essential political and sociological areas. The other major nonmilitary functions of war---ecological, cultural, scientific---raise very different problems, but it is least possible that detailed programming of substitutes in these areas is not prerequisite to transition. More important, it is not enough to develop adequate but separate surrogates for the major war functions; they must be fully compatible and in no degree self-canceling.

Until such a unified program is developed, at least hypothetically, it is impossible for this or any other group to furnish meaningful answers to the questions originally presented to us. When asked how best to prepare for the advent of peace, we must first reply, as strongly as we can, that the war system cannot responsibly be allowed to disappear until 1) we know exactly what it is we plan to put in its place, and 2) we are certain, beyond reasonable doubt, that these substitute institutions will serve their purposes in terms of the survival and stability of society. It will then be time enough to develop methods for effectuating the transition; procedural programming must follow, not precede, substantive solutions.

Such solitions, if indeed they exist, will not be arrived at without a revolutionary revision of the modes of thought heretofore considered appropriate to peace research. That we have examined the fundamental questions involved from a dispassionate, value-free point of view should not imply that we do not appreciate the intellectual and emotional difficulties that must be overcome on all decision-making levels before these questions are generally acknowledged by others for what they are. They reflect, on an intellectual level, traditional emotional resistance to new (more lethal and thus more "shocking") forms of weaponry. The understated comment of then-Senator Hubert Humphrey on the pub- lication of ON THERMONUCLEAR WAR is still very mcuh to the point: "New Thoughts, particularly those which appear to contradict current assumptions, are always painful for the mind to contemplate."

Nor, simple because we have not discussed them, do we minimize the massive reconciliation of conflicting interests with domestic as well as international agreement on proceeding toward genuine peace presupposes. This factor was excluded from the purview of our assignment, but we would be remiss if we failed to take it into account. Although no insuperable obstacle lies in the path of reaching such general agreements, formidable short-term private-group and general-class interest in maintaining the war system is well established and widely recognized. The resistance to peace stemming from such interest is only tangential, in the long run, to the basic functions of war, but it will not be easily overcome, in this country or elsewhere. Some observers, in fact, believe that it cannot be overcome at all in our time, that the price of peace is, simply, too high. This bears on our overall conclusions to the extent that timing in the transference to substitute institutions may often be the critical factor in their political feasibility.

It is uncertain, at this time, whether peace will ever be possible. It is far more questionable, by the objective standard of continued social survival rather than that of emotional pacifism, that it would be desirable even if it were demonstrably attainable. The war system, for all its subjective repugnance to important sections of "public opinion" has demonstrated its effectiveness since the beginning of recorded history; it has provided the basis for the development of many impressively durable civilizations, including that which is dominant today. It has consistently provided unambiguous social priorities. It is, on the whole, a known quantity. A viable system of peace, assuming that the great and complex questions of substitute institutions raised in this Report are both soluble and solved, would still constitute a venture into the unknown, with the inevitable risks attendant on the unforeseen, however small and however well hedged.

Government decision-makers tend to choose peace over war whenever a real option exists, because it usually appears to be the "safer" choice. Under most immediate circumstances they are likely to be right. But in terms of long-range social stability, the opposite is true. At our present state of knowledge and reasonable inference, it is the war system that must be identified with stability, the peace system that must be identified with social speculation, however justifiable the speculation may appear, in terms of subjective moral or emotional values. A nuclear physicist once remarked, in respect to a possible disarmament agreement: "If we could change the world into a world in which no weapons could be made, that would be stabilizing. But agreements we can expect with the Soviets would be destabilizing." The qualification and the bias are equally irrelevant; any condition of genuine total peace, however achieved, would be destabilizing until proved otherwise.

If it were necessary at this moment to opt irrevocably for the retention or for the dissolution of the war system, common prudence would dictate the former course. But it is not yet necessary, late as the hour appears. And more factors must eventually enter the war-peace equation than even the most determined search for alternative institutions for the functions of war can be expected to reveal. One group of such factors has been given only passing mention in this Report; it centers around the possible obsolescence of the war system itself. We have noted, for instance, the limitations of the war system in filling its ecological function and the declining importance of this aspect of war. It by no means stretches the imagination to visualize comparable developments which may compromise the efficacy of war as, for example, an economic controller or as an organizer of social allegiance. This kind of possibility, however remote, serves as a reminder that all calculations of contingency not only involve the weighing of one group of risks against another, but require a respectful allowance for error on both sides of the scale.

More expedient reason for pursuing the investigation of alternate ways and means to serve the current functions of war is narrowly political. It is possible that one or more major sovereign nations may arrive, through ambiguous leadership, at a position in which a ruling administrative class may lose control of basic public opinion or of its ability to rationalize a desired war. It is not hard to imagine, in such circumstances, a situation in which such governments may feel forced to initiate serious full-scale disarmament proceed- ings (perhaps provoked by "accidental" nuclear explosions), and that such nego- tiations may lead to the actual disestablishment of military institutions. As our Report has made clear, this could be catastrophic. It seems evident that, in the event an important part of the world is suddenly plunged without suffi- cient warning into an inadvertent peace, even partial and inadequate prepara- tion for the possibility may be better than none. The difference could even be critical. The models considered in the preceding chapter, both those that seem promising and those that do not, have one positive feature in common--an inher- ent flexibility of phasing. And despite our strictures against knowingly pro- ceeding into peace-transition procedures without thorough substantive prepara- tion, our government must nevertheless be ready to move in this direction with whatever limited resources of planning are on hand at the time---if circum- stances so require>. An arbitrary all-or-nothing approach is no more realistic in the development of contingency peace programming than it is anywhere else.

But the principal cause for concern over the continuing effectiveness of the war system, and the more important reason for hedging with peace planning, lies in the backwardness of current war-system programming. Its controls have not kept pace with the technological advances it has made possible. Despite its unarguable success to date, even in this era of unprecedented potential in mass destruction, it continues to operate largely on a laissez-faire basis. To the best of our knowledge, no serious quantified studies have even been conducted to determine, for example:

---optimum levels of armament production, for purposes of economic control, at any given relationship between civilian production and consumption patterns:

---correlation factors between draft recruitment policies and mensurable social dissidence;

---minimum levels of population destruction necessary to maintain war-threat credibility under varying political conditions;

---optimum cyclical frequency of "shooting" wars under varying circumstances of historical relationship.

These and other war-function factors are fully susceptible to analysis by today's computer-based systems, but they have not been so treated; modern ana- lytical techniques have up to now been relegated to such aspects of the osten- sible functions of war as procurement, personnel deployment, weapons analysis, and the like. We do not disparage these types of application, but only deplore their lack of utilization to greater capacity in attacking problems of broader scope. Our concern for efficiency in this context is not aesthetic, economic, or humanistic. It stems from the axiom that no system can long survive at either input or output levels that consistently or substantially deviate from an optimum range. As their data grow increasingly sophisticated, the war system and its functions are increasingly endangered by such deviations.

Our final conclusion, therefore, is that it will be necessary for our govern- ment to plan in depth for two general contingencies. The first, and lesser, is the possibility of a viable general peace; the second is the successful contin- uation of the war system. In our view, careful preparation for the possibility of peace should be extended, not because we take the position that the end of war would necessarily be desirable, if it is in fact possible, but because it may be thrust upon us in some form whether we are ready for it or not. Planning for rationalizing and quantifying the war system, on the other hand, to ensure the effectiveness of its major stabilizing functions, is not only more promis- ing in respect to anticipated results, but is essential; we can no longer take for granted that it will continue to serve our purposes well merely because it always has. The objective of government policy in regard to war and peace, in this perios of uncertainty, must be to preserve maximum options. The recomenda- tions which follow are directed to this end.

SECTION 8

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. We propose the establishment, under executive order of the President, of a permanent WAR/PEACE Research Agency, empowered and mandated to execute the programs described in (2) and (3) below. This agency (a) will be provided with nonaccountable funds sufficient to implement its responsibilities and decisions at its own discretion, and (B) will have authority to preempt and utilize, without restriction, any and all facilities of the executive branch of the government in pursuit of its objectives. It will be organized along the lines of the National Security Council, except that none of its governing, executive, or operating personnel will hold other public office or governmental responsibility. Its directorate will be drawn from the broadest practicable spectrum of scientific disciplines, humanistic studies, applied creative arts, operating technologies, and otherwise unclassified professional occupations. It will be responsible solely to the President, or to other officers of government temporarily deputized by him. Its operations will be governed entirely by its own rules of procedure. Its authority will expressly include the unlimited right to withhold information on its activities and its decisions, from anyone except the President, whenever it deems such secrecy to be in the public interest.

2. The first of the War/Peace Research Agency's two principal responsibilities will be to determine all that can be known, including what can reasonably be inferred in terms of relevant statistical probabilities, that may bear on an eventual transition to a general condition of peace. The findings in this Report may be considered to constitute the beginning of this study and to indicate its orientation; detailed records of the investigations and findings of the Special Study Group on which this Report is based, will be furnished the agency, along with whatever clarifying data the agency deems necessary. This aspect of the agency's work will hereinafter be referred to as "Peace Research."

The Agency's Peace Research activities will necessarily include, but not be limited to, the following:

(a) The creative development of possible substitute institutions for the principal nonmilitary functions of war.

(B) The careful matching of such institutions against the criteria summarized in this Report, as refined, revised, and extended by the agency.

© The testing and evaluation of substitute institutions, for acceptability, feasibility, and credibility, against hypothecated transitional and postwar conditions; the testing and evaluation of the effects of the anticipated atrophy of certain unsubstantiated functions.

(d) The development and testing of the corelativity of multiple substitute institutions, with the eventual objective of establishing a comprehensive program of compatible war substitutes suitable for a planned transition to peace, if and when this is found to be possible and subsequently judged desirable by appropriate political authorities.

(e) The preparatin of a wide-ranging schedule of partial, uncorrelated, crash programs of adjustment suitable for reducing the dangers of unplanned transition to peace effected by force majeure.

Peace Research methods will include but not be limited to, the following:

(a) The comprehensive interdisciplinary application of historical, scientific, technological, and cultural data.

(B) The full utilization of modern methods of mathematical modeling, analo- gical analysis, and other, more sophisticated, quantitative techniques in process of development that are compatible with computer programming.

© The heuristic "peace games" procedures developed during the course of its assignment by the Special Study Group, and further extensions of this basic approach to the testing of institutional functions.

3. The WAR/PEACE Research Agency's other principal responsibility will be "War Research." Its fundamental objective will be to ensure the continuing viability of the war system to fulfill its essential nonmilitary functions for as long as the war system is judged necessary to or desirable for the survival of society. To achieve this end, the War Research groups within the agency will engage in the following activities:

(a) Quantification of existing application of the non-military functions of war. Specific determinations will include, but not be limited to:

1. the gross amount and the net proportion of nonproductive military expenditures since World War II assignable to the need for war as an economic stabilizer;

2. the amount and proportion of military expenditures and destructin of life, property, and natural resources during this period assignable to the need for war as an instrument for political control;

3. similar figures, to the extent that they can be separately arrived at, assignable to the need for war to maintain social cohesiveness;

4. levels of recruitment and expenditures on the draft and other forms of personnel deployment attributable to the need for military institutions to control social disaffectin;

5. the statistical relationship of war casualties to world food supplies;

6. the correlation of military actions and expenditures with cultural activities and scientific advances (including necessarily the development of mensurable standards in these areas).

(B) Establishment of a priori modern criteria for the execution of the non- military functions of war. These will include, but not be limited to:

1. calculation of minimum and optimum ranges of military expenditure required, under varying hypothetical conditions, to fulfill these several functions, separately and collectively;

2. determination of minimum and optimum levels of destruction of LIFE, PROPERTY, and NATURAL RESOURCES prerequisite to the credibility of external threat essential to the political and motivational functions;

3. development of a negotiable formula governing the relationship between military recruitment and training policies and the exigencies of social control.

© Reconciliation of these criteria with prevailing economic, political, sociological, and ecological limitations. The ultimate object of this phase of War Research is to rationalize the heretofore informal operations of the war system. It shoud provide practical working procedures through which responsible governmental authority may resolve the following war-function problems, among others, under any given circumstances:

1. how to determine the optimum quantity, nature, and timing of military expenditures to ensure a desired degree of economic control;

2. how to organize the recruitment, deployment, and ostensible use of military personnel to ensure a desired degree of acceptance of authorized social values;

3. how to compute on a short-term basis, the nature and extent of the LOSS OF LIFE and other resources which SHOULD BE SUFFERED and/or INFLICTED DURING any single outbreako of hostilities to achieve a desired degree of internal political authority and social allegiance;

4. how to project, over extended periods, the nature and quality of overt warfare which must be planned and budgeted to achieve a desired degree of contextual stability for the same purpose; factors to be determined must include frequency of occurence, length of phase, INTENSITY OF PHYSICAL DESTRUCTION, extensiveness of geographical involvement, and OPTIMUM MEAN LOSS OF LIFE;

5. how to extrapolate accurately from the foregoing, for ecological purposes, the continuing effect of the war system, over such extended cycles, on population pressures, and to adjust the planning of casualty rates accordingly.

War Research procedures will necessarily include, but not be limited to, the following:

(a) The collation of economic, military, and other relevant date into uniform terms, permitting the reversible translation of heretofore discrete categories of information.

(B) The development and application of appropriate forms of cost-effectiveness analysis suitable for adapting such new constructs to computer terminology, programming, and projection.

© Extension of the "war games" methods of systems testing to apply, as a quasi-adversary proceeding, to the nonmilitary functions of war.

4. Since Both Programs of the WAR/PEACE RESEARCH Agency will share the same purpose---to maintain governmental freedom of choice in respect to war and peace until the direction of social survival is no longer in doubt -- it is of the essence of this proposal that the agency be constituted without limitation of time. Its examination of existing and proposed institutions will be self-liquidating when its own function shall have been superseded by the historical developments it will have, at least in part, initiated.

NOTES.....

SECTION 1

1. The Economic and Social Consequences of Disarmament: U.S.Reply to the Inquiry of the Secretary-General of the United Nations (Washington, D.C.: USGPO, June 1964), pp. 8-9.

2. Herman Kahn, Thinking About the Unthinkable (New York: Horizon, 1962), p.35.

3. Robert S. McNamara, in an address before the American Society of News- paper Editors, in Montreal, P.Q., Canada, 18 May 1966.

4. Alfred North Whitehead, in "The Anatomy of Some Scientific Ideas," in- cluded in The Aims of Education (New York: Macmillan, 1929).

5. At Ann Arbor, Michigan, 16 June 1962.

6. Louis J. Halle, "Peace in Our Time? Nuclear Weapons as a Stabilizer," The New Republic (28 December 1963).

SECTION 2

1. Kenneth E. Boulding, "The World War Industry as an Economic Problem," in Emile Benoit and Kenneth E. Boulding (eds.), Disarmament and the Economy (New York: Harper & Row, 1963).

2. McNamara, in ASNE Montreal address cited.

3. Report of the Committee on the Economic Impact of Defense and Disarmament (Washington: USGPO, July 1965).

4. Sumner M. Rosen, "Disarmament and the Economy," War/Peace Report (March 1966).

SECTION 3

1. Vide William D. Grampp, "False Fears of Disarmament," Harvard Business Review (Jan.-Feb.1964) for a concise example of this reasoning.

2. Seymour Melman, "The Cost of Inspection for Disarmament," in Benoit and Boulding, op. cit.

SECTION 5

1. Arthur I. Waskow, Toward the Unarmed Forces of the United States (Wash- ington: Institute for Policy Studies, 1966), p.9. (This is the unabridged edition of the text of a report and proposal prepared for a seminar of strate- gists and Congressman in 1965; it was later given limited distribution among other persons engaged in related projects.)

2. David T. Bazelon, "The Politics of the Paper Economy," Commentary (Nov- ember 1962), p.409.

3. The Economic Impact of Disarmament (Washington: USGPO, January 1962), p.409.

4. David T. Bazelon, "The Scarcity Makers," Commentary (October 1962), p. 298.

5. Frank Pace, Jr., in an address before the American Banker's Association, September 1957.

6. A random example, taken in this case from a story by David Deitch in the New York Herald Tribune (9 February 1966).

7. Vide L. Gumplowicz, in Geschichte der Staatstheorien (Innsbruck: Wagner, 1905) and earlier writings.

8. K.Fischer, Das Militar (Zurich: Steinmetz Verlag, 1932), pp.42-43.

9. The obverse of this phenomenon is responsible for the principal combat problem of present-day infantry officers: the unwillingness of otherwise "trained" troops to fire at an enemy close enough to be recognizable as an individual rather than simply as a target.

10. Herman Kahn, On Thermonuclear War (Princeton, N.J., Princeton University Press, 1960), p.42. 11. John D. Williams, "The Nonsense about Safe Driving," Fortune (September 1958).

12. Vide most recently K.Lorenz, in Das Sogenannte Bose: zur Naturgeschichte der Agression (Vienna: G. Borotha-Schoeler Verlag, 1964).

13. Beginning with Herbert Spencer and his contemporaries, but largely ignor- ed for nearly a century.

14. As in recent draft-law controversy, in which the issue of selective deferment of the culturally privileged is often carelessly equated with the preservation of the biologically "fittest."

15. G.Bouthol, in La Guerre (Paris: Presses universitairies de France, 1953) and many other more detailed studies. The useful concept of "polemology," for the study of war as an independent discipline, is his, as is the notion of "demographic relaxation," the sudden temporary decline in the rate of popula- tion increase after major wars.

16. This seemingly premature statement is supported by one of our own test studies. But it hypothecates both the stabilizing of world population growth and the institution of fully adequate environmental controls. Under these two conditions, the probability of the permanent elimination of involuntary global famine is 68 percent by 1976 and 95 percent by 1981.

SECTION 6

1. This round figure is the median taken from our comuptations, which cover varying contingencies, but it is sufficient for the purpose of general dis- cussion.

2. But less misleading than the more elegant traditional metaphor, in which war expenditures are referred to as the "ballast" of the economy but which suggests incorrect quantitative relationships.

3. Typical in generality, scope, and rhetoric. We have not used any pub- lished program as a model; similarities are unavoidably coincidental rather than tendentious.

4. Vide the reception of a "Freedom Budget for all Americans," proposed by A. Philip Randolph et al; it is a ten-year plan, estimated by its sponsors to cost $185 billion.

5. Waskow, op.cit.

6. By several current theorists, most extensively and effectively by Robert R. Harris in "The Real Enemy," an unpublished doctoral dissertation made avail- able to this study.

7. In ASNE, Montreal address cited.

8. The Tenth Victim.

9. For an examination of some of its social implications, see Seymour Ruben- feld, Family of Outcasts: A New Theory of Delinquency (New York: Free Press, 1965).

10. As in Nazi Germany; this type of "ideological" ethnic repression, direc- ted to specific sociological ends, should not be confused with traditional economic exploitation, as of Negroes in the U.S., South Africe, etc.

11. By teams of experimental biologists in Massachusetts, Michigan, and California, as well as in Mexico and the U.S.S.R. Preliminary test applications are scheduled in Southeast Asia, in countries not yet announced.

12. Expressed in the writings of H. Marshall McLuban, in Understanding Media: The Extensions of Man (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1964) and elsewhere.

13. This rather optimistic estimate was derived by plotting a three-dimen- sional distribution of three arbitratily defined variables; the macro-structur- al, relating to the extension of knowledge beyond the capacity of conscious experience; the organic, dealing with the manifestations of terrestrial life as inherently comprehensibel; and the infra-particular, covering the subconcep- tual requirements of natural phenomena. Values were assigned to the known and unknown in each parameter, tested against data from earlier chronologies, and modified heuristically until predictable correlations reached a useful level of accuracy. "Two decades" means, in this case, 20.6 years, with a standard deviation of only 1.8 years. (An incidental finding, not pursued to the same degree of accuracy, suggests a greatly accelerated resolution of issues in the biological sciences after 1972.)

SECTION 7

1. Since they represent an examination of too small a percentage of the eventual options, in terms of "multiple mating," the subsystem we developed for this application. But an example will indicate how one of the most frequen- tly recurring correlation problems--chronological phasing--was brought to light in this way. One of the first combinations tested showed remarkably high coefficients of compatibility, on a post hoc static basis, but no variations of timing, using a thirty-year transition module, permitted even marginal synchronization. The combination was thus disqualified. This would not rule out the possible adequacy of combinations using modifications of the same fac- tors, however, since minor variations in a proposed final condition may have disproportionate effects on phasing.

2. Edward Teller, quoted in War/Peace Report (December 1964).

3. E.g., the highly publicized "Delphi Technique" and other, more sophisti- cated procedures. A new system, especially suitable for institutional analysis, was developed during the course of this study in order to hypothecate mensur- able "peace games"; a manual of this system is being prepared and will be sub- mitted for general distribution among appropriate agencies. For older, but still useful, techniques, see Norman C. Dalkey's Games and Simulations (Santa Monica, Calif.:Rand, 1964).

SECTION 8

1. A primer-level example of the obvious and long overdue need for such translation is furnished by Kahn (in Thinking About the Unthinkable,p.102). Under the heading "Some Awkward Choices" he compares four hypothetical poli- cies: a certain loss of $3,000; a .1 chance of loss of $300,000; a.01 chance of loss of $30,000,000; and a .001 chance of loss of $3,000,000,000. A government decision-maker would "very likely" choose in that order. But what if "lives are at stake rather than dollars?" Kahn suggests that the order of choice would be reversed, although current experience does not support this opinion. Rational war research can and must make it possible to express, without ambiguity, lives in terms of dollars and vice versa; the choices need not be, and cannot be, "awkward."

2. Again, an overdue extension of an obvious application of techniques up to now limited such circumscribed purposes as improving kill-ammunition ratios determining local choice between precision and saturation bombing, and other minor tactical, and occasionally strategic, ends. The slowness of Rand, I.D.A., and other responsible analytic organizations to extend cost-effectiveness and related concepts beyond early-phase applications has already been widely re- marked on and critized elsewhere.

3. The inclusion of institutional factors in war-game techniques has been given some rudimentary consideratin in the Hudson Institute's Study for Hypo- thetical Narratives for Use in Command and Control Systems Planning (by William Pfaff and Edmund Stillman; Final report published in 1963). But here, as with other war and peace studies to date, what has blocked the logical extension of new analytic techniques has been a general failure to understand and properly evaluate the non-military functions of war.

-EOF-

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Prostitution ring for Wall Street clients busted

Title: Prostitution ring for Wall Street clients busted

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:37 AM (GMT)

Prostitution ring for Wall Street clients busted

By Bernd Debusmann Jr.
NEW YORK | Wed Jul 20, 2011 2:21pm EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/07/20/...ws&dlvrit=56943

(Reuters) - Seventeen people were indicted on Wednesday on charges of running a high-end prostitution ring that catered to Wall Street clients who often spent more than $10,000 in a night, authorities said.

The ring pulled in more than $7 million over three years, Brooklyn District Attorney Charles Hynes said at a news conference.

"The business of high-end prostitution is enormously profitable," Hynes said.

The prostitution service, named High Class NY, was run 24 hours a day out of an office in Brooklyn and charged from $400 to $3,600 an hour for its services, according to the 144-count indictment. It also provided customers with cocaine and other narcotics, the indictment said.

Hynes said clients often spent in excess of $10,000 in a single night.

They were "all high-end customers coming from the financial markets. People with nothing but money," he said.

Police said the business was extremely sophisticated, running several escort websites and using dummy corporations with misleading names and codes during business-related phone calls.

High Class NY even had a law firm draw up employment contracts for its prostitutes, who described themselves as models and fraudulently agreed to refrain from sexual contact with clients, police said.

"They were on the high-end of sophistication," said Vice Detective Joe Panico.

Among those indicted were High Class NY owner Mikhail Yampolsky and his wife Bronislava, who allegedly used the proceeds from their business to finance expensive trips to Atlantic City and luxury car purchases, Hynes said.

Also indicted were Yampolsky's son Alexander, step-son Jonathan, 11 managers and supervisors and two investors, Efim Gorelik and Yakov Maystrovich, he said.

Each of the investors had put $700,000 into High Class NY and were being paid back with interest, he said.

Each of those indicted faces the possibility of 25 years in prison if convicted. Two prostitutes face separate indictments on prostitution and drug charges.

(Editing by Ellen Wulfhorst and Tim Gaynor)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Rupert Murdoch Hires Author of U.S. Patriot Act to

Title: Rupert Murdoch Hires Author of U.S. Patriot Act to Description: assist with Phone Hacking Scandal [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:30 AM (GMT)

Wednesday, July 20, 2011
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...atriot-act.html

Rupert Murdoch Hires Author of U.S. Patriot Act to Assist with Phone Hacking Scandal

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Dcb2KzMamss?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Dcb2KzMamss?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Trial Looms for Price-Fixing in Digital Music

Title: Trial Looms for Price-Fixing in Digital Music

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:29 AM (GMT)

Trial Looms for Price-Fixing in Digital Music

By ADAM KLASFELD ShareThis
http://www.courthousenews.com/2011/07/19/38289.htm

MANHATTAN (CN) - Major record labels must face a consolidated class action lawsuit claiming they fixed prices on digital music, a federal judge ruled.
The defendants include Bertelsmann, Sony BMG Music Entertainment, Sony Corporation of America, Capitol Records (dba EMI Music North America), EMI Group North America, Capitol-EMI Music, Virgin Records America, Time Warner, UMG Recordings and Warner Music Group, which allegedly control 80 percent of the digital music in the United States.
Consumers claim in the proposed class action that all of the labels signed distribution agreements with two joint-venture entities called MusicNet and Pressplay, through which they allegedly conspired to fix the price, terms of sale and restrictions on digital music.
Each licensing agreement allegedly included publicly hidden Most Favored Nation clauses, guaranteeing that one licensor would receive at least equivalent licensing terms as another licensor. In effect, these agreements set wholesale price floor at 70 cents per song for Internet music, increasing prices as the cost to distribute Internet music fell to essentially zero, consumer class says.
In addition, the labels allegedly included digital-rights management, restricting how songs get transferred to portable players.
The labels allegedly hoped to make digital music an unattractive substitute for overpriced CDs.
Retailers that did not comply with the labels' agreements allegedly got shut out by the labels.
An independent competitor in the online music business, eMusic, is the second-largest online retailer and charges less than half of the labels' wholesale price at retail, but the labels refuse to do business with it, the consumer class says.

Dozens of plaintiffs filed lawsuits in multiple districts. The first consolidated class action was filed in April 2007, and then amended two months later. U.S. District Judge Loretta Preska tossed the original complaint, in a decision that was vacated and remanded back to her court on appeal.
The consumer class filed a third amended complaint on June 2, 2010.
On Monday, Judge Preska allowed the consumer class to pursue claims under the Sherman Act, the 19th century legislation that was the first federal statute to limit monopolies. An antitrust action under New York state law and certain consumer-protection and unjust-enrichment claims also survived dismissal.
Preska tossed claims related to a putative CD-purchaser class.
Multiple lawyers for both parties did not immediately respond to telephone requests for comment.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Inside Job Film Trailer - Former Federal Reserve

Title: Inside Job Film Trailer - Former Federal Reserve
Description: Governor Frederic Mishkin Is Corrupt

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:27 AM (GMT)

Inside Job Film Trailer - Former Federal Reserve Governor Frederic Mishkin Is Corrupt

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/8lHvTKzfu8Q" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Shh! There’s a Secret CIA Prison in Somalia

Title: Shh! There’s a Secret CIA Prison in Somalia

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:15 AM (GMT)

Shh! There’s a Secret CIA Prison in Somalia

Written by Michael Tennant
Wednesday, 20 July 2011 00:00
http://www.thenewamerican.com/usnews/forei...ison-in-somalia

With President Barack Obama having issued an executive order banning secret Central Intelligence Agency prisons and then-CIA Director Leon Panetta having stated that “CIA no longer operates detention facilities or black sites,” one might think a credible report that the CIA is still operating such a prison would make the front page of every newspaper in the country and be covered on all major television news programs. Alas, in 21st-century America, where the news media are the handmaidens of the state, the story has largely been ignored; and those outlets that have deemed it worthy of coverage have done so in such a way as to play down its revelations and play up the government’s denials.

On July 12 The Nation published a lengthy article by Jeremy Scahill exposing a secret CIA prison in Mogadishu, Somalia. Scahill’s report was based on an in-person investigation of the allegations, undertaken at great personal risk.

Scahill found that the CIA is using “a secret prison buried in the basement of Somalia’s National Security Agency (NSA) headquarters, where prisoners suspected of being [Somali militant group Al] Shabab members or of having links to the group are held.” The prison houses not just suspects captured within Somalia but also those picked up in Kenya (and possibly other countries) and rendered to Somalia for interrogation.

The conditions inside the prison are deplorable, says Scahill:

According to former detainees, the underground prison, which is staffed by Somali guards, consists of a long corridor lined with filthy small cells infested with bedbugs and mosquitoes.... The former prisoners described the cells as windowless and the air thick, moist and disgusting. Prisoners, they said, are not allowed outside. Many have developed rashes and scratch themselves incessantly. Some have been detained for a year or more. According to one former prisoner, inmates who had been there for long periods would pace around constantly, while others leaned against walls rocking.

"While the underground prison is officially run by the Somali NSA," Scahill writes, "US intelligence personnel pay the salaries of intelligence agents and also directly interrogate prisoners." There are two reasons for this. First, it gives the U.S. government plausible deniability concerning the prison; it's run by the Somalis, and when U.S. agents do get involved in interrogations, it's "rare" and "always jointly with Somali agents," as one U.S. official told Scahill. (In fact, Scahill points out, U.S. agents "directly interrogate prisoners" and "are [t]here full time.") Second, it offers the Americans a way around the nominal government of Somalia, which they do not trust. "Instead," Scahill explains, "the United States has Somali intelligence agents on its payroll. Somali sources with knowledge of the program described the agents as lining up to receive $200 monthly cash payments from Americans."

The prison appears to be part and parcel of U.S. policy with regard to Somalia. Writes Scahill: "On the one hand, the CIA is training, paying and at times directing Somali intelligence agents who are not firmly under the control of the Somali government, while [the U.S. Joint Special Operations Command] conducts unilateral strikes without the prior knowledge of the government; on the other, the Pentagon is increasing its support for and arming of the counterterrorism operations of non-Somali African military forces." As with most U.S. counterterrorism policy, its efficacy is doubtful. A "senior Somali intelligence official" told Scahill that "the CIA-led program in Mogadishu has brought few tangible gains" and "conceded that neither US nor Somali forces have been able to conduct a single successful targeted mission in the Shabab's areas in the capital."

In short, Obama's foreign policy, like his domestic policy, does not differ significantly from his predecessor's. As Scahill put it in an interview with Salon's Glenn Greenwald: "they [the Obama administration] continue even the most controversial Bush terrorism policies by having some other government technically operate it so they can keep their fingerprints off it." Greenwald points to other examples of Obama's clandestine continuation of George W. Bush's policies:

Indeed, the administration has even resorted to this playbook by using "torture by proxy" — as we saw when the Kuwait government, with at least the complicity if not direction of the U.S., detained and beat American teenager Gulet Mohamed during interrogation sessions. Just yesterday, a federal judge "reacted skeptically" to the Obama DOJ's demands for dismissal of a lawsuit (on secrecy grounds) brought by an American citizen imprisoned for four months in Africa, where "U.S. officials threatened him with torture, forced disappearance and other serious harm unless he confessed to ties with al-Qaida in Somalia.”

Despite all this, the mainstream news media have remained curiously uninterested in reporting on the stunning disconnect between Obama’s stated policies and his actual policies — though one notable exception is Scahill's appearance on MSNBC's Morning Joe.

But in general, when the media have deigned to cover the story, it has been under the guise of debunking it.

CNN’s Barbara Starr, in Greenwald’s words, “filed a truly incredible report” that managed to (a) sound like “a headline-making scoop for CNN” in which a CIA official revealed the existence of the Mogadishu prison to Starr and (B) repeat the government’s talking points about the prison’s being under Somali control and the CIA’s participation in interrogations being a “very small,” “support” role. More incredibly still, she managed to do this without once mentioning Scahill’s report (though she was forced to add “Parts of this story initially appeared in the magazine The Nation on Tuesday” after the magazine complained to CNN).

Luis Martinez, writing for ABC News, also took the government’s side against Scahill. According to Greenwald, Martinez “doesn’t pretend to do anything other than serve as obedient stenographer to the CIA by uncritically writing down and passing on the statements of an anonymous Government official in denying Scahill’s report.” At the same time, says Greenwald, Martinez actually went Starr one better (or worse) because his report justifies the CIA program by quoting the anonymous CIA official as describing the program as “the logical and prudent thing to do.” ABC then helpfully adds that “senior U. S. officials have expressed concern that al Shabab may be trying to expand its terror operations beyond Somalia” and that “U.S. government officials worry that those lawless regions might become a safe haven for al Shabab and other terror groups.” There is no discussion — zero — of the illegal aspects of maintaining a secret prison, the dangers of allowing unchecked renditions of prisoners to Somalia hidden from international human rights monitoring, or the likely violations of Obama’s highly-touted Executive Orders.

Because of this attitude on the part of the establishment media, Scahill has largely been relegated to appearing in alternative media which, while certainly important, simply do not have the reach or the respect that the major news outlets do. Scahill performed real, on-the-ground research; Starr and Martinez regurgitated CIA talking points. Yet Scahill is ignored and derided, while Starr and Martinez are treated as serious journalists. Observes Greenwald: “That’s because ‘Serious Journalism’ in Washington means writing down what government officials tell you to say, and granting them anonymity to ensure they have no accountability.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Why world leaders are losing hearts and minds

Title: Why world leaders are losing hearts and minds

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:49 AM (GMT)

Why world leaders are losing hearts and minds

Across the developed world, approval ratings for political leaders are plummeting. What's behind this dramatic loss of confidence – and can the power players bounce back?

By Adrian Hamilton
Wednesday, 20 July 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/po...ds-2316961.html

Cometh the hour, cometh the man. But not as far as Western politics are concerned, apparently. All through Europe and America, as Japan, Western democracies are suffering a collapse of leadership and a catastrophic decline in popular confidence in them. It's not as though the need for leadership is not there. On most accounts, Europe and the US are now facing the greatest crises in their economies cohesion since the end of the Second World War.

Yet everywhere the ratings of democratic leaders have gone into virtual freefall. Mrs Angela Merkel, Germany's Chancellor, who only a year ago was being hailed as the most sensible and reliable leader of the Western world with full voter support, has now seen her ratings fall precipitously. Only 40 per cent of German voters now say they are satisfied with her performance, her lowest scores since she took power nearly six years ago. And her centre-right coalition has fared even worse, with only 12 per cent of voters saying they are satisfied with it.

It's even worse in France, where the ever-hyperactive President Sarkozy, despite a slight rise because the pregnancy of his wife and his leadership of the intervention into Libya, has approval ratings of only just over 20 per cent, compared with ratings of more than 50 per cent recorded by his predecessors, François Mitterand and Jacques Chirac at the same point in their terms, when they were also less than a year away from re-election. Unsurprisingly Silvio Berlusconi, the Italian Prime Minister, has seen his support fall from over 50 per cent only a couple of months ago to around 40 per cent on the latest figures. The wonder may be that he kept his rating so high for so long, considering the trials that now beset him. The Greek Prime Minister, George Papandreou, has meanwhile seen his ratings slide from over a third to around a quarter in two months, while David Cameron's are heading in the same direction with the Murdoch scandal. His latest approval ratings have fallen from 37 per cent to 33 cent over the last month. Of all European leaders only the Irish Prime Minister, Enda Kenny, is enjoying strong support, at 65 per cent, the highest for any Irish leader in nearly a decade – but then he has only been in office for four months.

Go outside Europe and the Japanese Prime Minister, Naoto Kan, has managed to achieve the lowest approval scores of any current democratic leader with only 19 per cent of voters backing him. Most troubling of all is President Obama's inability to get his ratings from historically low levels, despite the killing of bin Laden. On the latest Rasmussen daily polling, only 25 per cent said they strongly approved of his performance as president compared with 42 per cent who strongly disapproved – a rating of minus 17, one of the lowest results since President Nixon was hit by the Watergate scandal.

You can't blame this all on a public growing tired with faces that have been there too long. Only Berlusconi has been in position for more than a decade. By post-War standards, Presidents Obama and Sarkozy are relatively fresh faces, still within their first terms, while David Cameron, Naoto Kan and George Papandreou have been in office for only a year or less. Nor can you put it all down to the normal process of disenchantment with leaders who seemed to promise so much when they were voted into office and then failed to deliver as reality overtook expectations.

That is part of it, no doubt, but it does not explain why the loss of confidence in Western leadership is quite so widespread and so dramatic. Nor can it be explained, as so often in the past, by a general shift between right and left. Chancellor Merkel, Nicolas Sarkozy and David Cameron are all of the right, but President Obama, Naoto Kan and George Papandreou are all left of centre – and all elected in a general rejection of their right-wing predecessors.

Economics is clearly the proximate cause. When the financial meltdown first occurred in 2008/9, it caught nearly every government unawares and unprepared. But at least it was perceived as a common threat which, partly thanks to Gordon Brown's leadership, produced a common front. Now that the immediate crisis has passed – or is perceived to have passed – the politics of recession and austerity has become a great deal more muddled and uncertain. On the one hand, most electorates seem to accept the need for belt-tightening. The days of "anything goes" are clearly over. On the other hand, when it comes to the precise nature of the cuts and the sharing of pain, voter support is a lot less certain. Governments – caught between the resentments of the public and the demands for budget reductions by the markets – have retreated into an ever more parochial indecision.

Chancellor Merkel is the most obvious case. Despite ruling over the most successful economy in the West, she has shifted stance, under the threat of widespread national defaults, to a nervous ambivalence between German nationalism and European interest. The demands for total Greek abnegation, along with calls for curbs on immigration and non-commitment on foreign ventures, have vied with a rhetoric of wider eurozone responsibility. Few could blame her for her increasing introversion in the light of her ratings and the drubbing her party has received in recent elections. But leadership it is not.

President Obama seems to be heading in the same direction. After all his talk of the need to keep the economy going through public expenditure, he too has been driven to a dispiriting attempt to meet the demands of opposition and polls in talking of ever deeper cuts to his budget. The peculiar nature of Congressional politics may have forced him in this direction but after all the hopes that the US at least would prove a beacon of Keynesian reflation, his retreat is disillusioning, as is his reluctance to project American leadership in the Middle East and Libya. Even President Sarkozy, while desperately trying to assert French international leadership in Libya and West Africa, has been forced by the polls to address domestic concerns with ever more virulent, and indeed racist, calls to bear down on immigrants.

It is a terrible comment on British politics that Gordon Brown, who really does have something to offer on economic and international affairs, should use only his second speech in the Commons since leaving office to speak on the Murdoch scandal. Of course, given hard times, electorates inevitably turn inwards to their own problems and democratic politicians feel the need to follow them. But leadership in a democracy requires that premiers rise above the imperatives of the polls to give a broader vision of the future in which voters can feel hope and confidence. Instead we have voted in a generation of leaders who seek refuge from the bigger challenges in the discussion of the specific and the parochial.

You can hardly argue that modern electorates don't seek leadership. The expectations loaded on President Obama were precisely because US voters, and many outside, wanted someone who represented a different and more sympathetic vision of the world than that of his predecessor, George Bush. So too with Naoto Kan, who was voted in as the first non-Liberal party premier in three generations. And, if David Cameron aroused much less widespread hope here, he did at least offer a fresh face. It may be that today's voters load politicians with impossibly contradictory demands. On the one hand most citizens – and this applies far wider than Britain – express contempt for politics in general and politicians in particular. Voter turnout has steadily dropped in most countries since the war and shows no signs of stopping its decline. On the other the hand the voters look to politicians to solve instantly problems of recession, budget, policing, health and climate change as if government had the power to wave wands and change everything. People want leadership but they don't actually want to join parties, stand for local elections or participate in the way a healthy democracy requires if it is to thrive.

Which is the chicken and the egg in this – whether lack of political participation is the consequence of failed politics or the cause of it – is a moot point. But either way the result has been a crop of politicians who have seen the job not in terms of belief or service but as a profession in its own right. It is not that government no longer attracts the brightest and the best. If you look across the cabinets of the Western world today, they are extremely well educated and intelligent. But in the search for electoral success they have become practitioners of the polls, ever seeking the nebulous middle ground to ensure their power.

This must be the first time in British history that the leaders of all three parties – David Cameron, Nick Clegg and Ed Miliband – have done nothing other in their lives than seek a career in politics. The same is now becoming true of the US administration and the governments of most European countries. It is also, it should be added, the first moment when virtually no leader of any country has had any experience of war.

Maybe the "vision thing" is not necessary when things are ticking along very nicely, peace is the order of the day and the economies have been growing apace, as most Western countries have in the past decade and more. Then Mrs Merkel's qualities of common sense and caution seemed sufficient and, indeed, much to be envied.

We're no longer in that period, however. The times are more than "interesting"; they have become really challenging and threatening. Look at almost every issue – from the threatened collapse of the euro to the faltering recovery in most economies, from the future of nuclear after Fukushima to the consequences of the Arab Spring – and you are seeing problems that demand both a decisive response and international co-ordination.

Look at the performance of the G8, the EU, and Nato and all you see are premiers simply incapable of rising to the occasion. The public may have unrealistic expectations of politicians but, on this, they are right. The current generation of Western leaders are simply not up to it.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Grand jury to probe Boston mob boss' life on run

Title: Grand jury to probe Boston mob boss' life on run

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:49 AM (GMT)

Grand jury to probe Boston mob boss' life on run

AP foreign, Tuesday July 19 2011
DENISE LAVOIE
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/feedarticle/9752594

AP Legal Affairs Writer= BOSTON (AP) — A federal grand jury is apparently investigating the 16 years former Boston crime boss James "Whitey" Bulger and his girlfriend spent on the run.

The property manager at a Santa Monica, Calif., apartment complex said Tuesday he has been subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury in Boston. Joshua Bond says he doesn't know if other residents of the complex where Bulger and Catherine Greig (GREHG) stayed for most of their years on the run also had been subpoenaed.

Bulger and Greig were apprehended in California last month. Bulger is charged with participating in 19 murders. Greig is charged with harboring a fugitive. A federal prosecutor said in court last week she could potentially face additional charges.

The grand jury was first reported by The Boston Globe.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Musing on the Banks of a Dry River Bed.

Title: Musing on the Banks of a Dry River Bed.

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:48 AM (GMT)

Musing on the Banks of a Dry River Bed.

Wednesday, July 20, 2011
http://zippittydodah.blogspot.com/2011/07/...-river-bed.html

Dog Poet Transmitting.....

'May your noses always be cold and wet'.

I try to stay positive in the face of all of I hear, see and encounter. I'm not referring just to the conditions of the wider world but to my world as well. We all carry a personal world and that's the sum total of what we've done and what we believe to be true and act upon, as if it were true and the reality of that is determined by how our personal truth measures up against the greater truth. The greater truth isn't ever seen by mortals because mortality is a veil and it contains the parameters of our personal truth, which isn't really truth but merely the demands that our false self makes upon appearances to support it. It's that 'seeing through a glass darkly' thing. I've mentioned several times over the years that when the truth takes off her clothes, the world disappears. The world is only a projection of our mortal dreams, measured against the time continuum in which they are shown to be nothing more than the shadows on the wall of Plato's Cave, or Plato's Retreat, depending on what you are into (grin).

I try to keep a positive attitude and that is no mean feat, given the sort of things that happen to me and often defy explanation or description. Why am I talking about this? It's because of the vast amount of cynicism I see operating all around me, in my smaller world and in the greater world at large. I was told that July would not be an easy passage for me and it has proven to be so. Hardly a day goes by for me when I don't get slammed by something that comes down to misunderstandings and results in a lack of support, while I try to stay an industrious fellow, in my general nose to the grindstone way. I always believe that I am turning a corner but it's proven to be something that extends far beyond anything I ever anticipated or expected it to be.

For most of my life I've been up against it and it has whittled me down until there's hardly anyone left at all. I suspect that's a good thing overall, even if it doesn't always feel like it is. These days part of me wants to head for the Himalayas or some remote part of Thailand. I suspect that my meager holdings are enough for me to maintain at a level possible in those places and I don't feel like there's that much holding me around here to make it worth remaining, in the constantly fluctuating groove I am moving through.

As incredibly difficult as my passage has been, I've always believed that there was a point to it and that one day I would understand the why and wherefore of it all. The more recent years have been more stable and I have been more dependable too. The world is changing in the ways I have expected it to and it's run true to form. The only thing I haven't been very good at is predicting the when of things and one shouldn't engage in such speculation anyway. I'm learning that.

I see an outpouring from various sources that say this whole thing with Murdoch and all the rest of the veil rending phenomena that the cosmos is engaged in will come to no good result and that soon enough it will all go back to business as usual. I don't believe that. What I see is evil engaged in its own destruction. That is the essential nature of evil. Evil does eventually destroy itself. It always has and it always will. To me, we are all part of a cosmic drama whose purpose is a lasting lesson that is geared toward our higher evolution; for those of us willing to take advantage of it. Our job is to live and learn and become the product and the fruit of a greater understanding. If we don't, we get recycled until we do. There are never a great many of us that are full time engaged in this. It's been my long time observation that most people come to a point of compromise with the world around them. They make arrangements and they make deals. If you don't do these things you become a peculiarity to the people who were more well disposed toward you when they were more like you, before they made their accommodations with death and the devil.

The world is the way it is not because of the Rupert Murdoch's and the rest of the satanic entities, like the Rothschild's, along with their enablers and high end employees. The world is the way it is because the bulk of humanity makes accommodations with them, believes what they tell them and endures the wars and economic fluctuations that are intentionally manipulated to the cyclic distress of the poor fools who put up with all of that shit. The greater darkness is fed by the countless tributaries of smaller darkness that flows into it, in response to the prompting and lures of what flows out of it. We're where we are because of what we are.

I tell myself that being isolated in my little world is not such a bad thing. I tell myself I would rather work for nothing and the general good, however indifferent the general population might be to it, than to be a more welcome member of a corrupt and doomed society. I assure myself that I am supported by invisible means, which seems to be true and that despite the expectations of various cynical and faithless people, who expect things from me according to a time line of their own creation that I am doing the right thing. I have no way of knowing if this is true. What I do know is that it's certainly not what I see around me. It's one of those, "oh ye of little faith" things. For me, one is either reliant on the cosmos or they are reliant on other people and I don't want any deeper contact with people who have little faith in the cosmos and even less in me. It's hard enough maintaining my own, without relying on people who don't have any. I'll be more detailed about that at Origami when it comes up tomorrow or the next day.

I get tired of people attributing irresistible power to demonic regimes like Israel and all her puppet nations. I get tired of people attributing irresistible power to corporations, individuals and dying systems that are all dying and being exposed in front of my eyes. I get tired of holding the fort and believing and affirming that the dawn is soon to break, while the dawn takes its own sweet time (grin) but there's too much evidence in my invisible account and in the encouragement of my invisible friends for me to be inclined to doubt it. It seems to me that we endure and soldier on, or we betray our deeper being for the false comfort of superficial lies, with the loss of our integrity and honor. When you're not a casual liar for the purpose of convenience and self interest, lies are usually very transparent. With me, lies are usually exposed when the evidence to the contrary comes flying up into my head the moment I hear them.

I can't answer for the way others live and do business. I also cannot embrace cynicism and the idea that we are all doomed. In that regard it is Nature that always lifts my spirits. I've had to battle depression for many years and I've used different things to militate against it. I recently found something that does but like most things that don't have the imprimatur of the pharmaceutical industry, people object to my right to use it, as well as make demands that I meet some personal criteria of theirs, when I never agreed to any of that. I do not go along to get along because I've seen where that leads. That has brought me to the point where I can literally walk out the door and disappear and not have to be concerned about anything or anyone I leave behind, because they will be fine and I have no contractual debts or obligations that can't be settled simply by leaving what I've set in motion to satisfy any demands anyone might feel they have a right to make on me. It's a rare kind of freedom to be in a position where you are unaffected by the games people like to play to make you behave the way they want you to, as if you were wearing their team uniform and had agreed to bend over whenever they need the reassurance.

I have one employer and one duty and nothing else applies. If it isn't directed from there then it's mislabeled when it shows up at my door. There are no apologies or explanations I have to give or make. I can apologize for being stupid enough to put myself in some people's hands and I can explain that none of the things on offer are important enough to me to go through what it takes to appease people's profit motives and control freak imperatives. That's about it. If you want to be cynical about things working out and if you have no faith in the cosmic plan then you might as well go to work for the people who are victimizing you because absent the one plan you become an automatic member of the other. Big time deceptions and small time deceptions only vary by degree and being actual pathways; the smaller eventually runs into the other Just as all water eventually reaches the sea. I'm going to keep on believing because I have come too far to take that exit into a world of doubt, manipulated by faith killers who've created an economy out of it.

End Transmission.....

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Teenager 'bludgeoned parents then hosted party'

Title: Teenager 'bludgeoned parents then hosted party'

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:47 AM (GMT)

Teenager 'bludgeoned parents then hosted party'

Police say Tyler Hadley, 17, killed his parents with a hammer, hid their bodies in a bedroom and then invited friends over for party guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 19 July 2011 09.43 BST

http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/1...dgeoned-parents

A 17-year-old boy in Florida has been accused of bludgeoning his parents with a hammer, then holding a party with dozens of friends while their bodies lay in the bedroom, according to police.

Tyler Hadley of Port St Lucie is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, which authorities say took place on Saturday. He is being held without bond at a juvenile detention centre.

Blake and Mary-Jo Hadley were believed to have been struck in the head and torso with a hammer sometime after Tyler had posted on Facebook, around 1.15pm on Saturday, inviting friends to an evening party at his house, about 50 miles (80km) north of West Palm Beach.

Investigators believe the parents were attacked outside their master bedroom, and that their bodies were then moved into the bedroom and the door locked.

As many as 60 people attended the party that night, according to Port St Lucie police spokesman Tom Nichols. They were loud enough to prompt a noise complaint and a visit by police officers. When police arrived at 1.30am on Sunday to warn about the noise, the party was already breaking up, Nichols said.

The police then received a tip that murder may have taken place and returned to the home at 4.20am, where they found the bodies covered with towels, files, books and other household items, and the hammer between them.

Mary-Jo Hadley, 47, was an elementary school teacher. Blake Hadley, 54, worked for Florida Power and Light.

Autopsies were under way, but police believe they died of blunt-force trauma. They said the motive behind the killings was unknown.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: ANTI-NUCLEAR AGENDA FOR DEPOPULATION AND GREED

Title: ANTI-NUCLEAR AGENDA FOR DEPOPULATION AND GREED

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 06:35 PM (GMT)

Japan disaster: Germany halts nuclear extension plan

The German government's decision to extend the lives of nuclear plants has aroused deep hostility

14 March 2011 Last updated at 17:28
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-12737396

Germany has responded to the Japanese nuclear crisis by suspending for three months a plan to extend the lives of its ageing nuclear power stations.

Chancellor Angela Merkel's coalition government announced last year that the country's 17 power stations would close around 12 years later than planned.

The government has faced growing calls for the extension to be scrapped.

The two oldest plants that had been due to shut in the next three months are now likely to be closed after all.

The EU has called an emergency meeting on Tuesday to review safety measures at nuclear reactors across Europe.

In a statement, the EU said it wanted to assess the Japanese situation and the EU's state of preparedness "in case of similar incidents". It said the aim was to get "first-hand information on contingency plans and safety measures in place".

The Swiss government also announced on Monday that it was suspending its nuclear plans because safety was its first priority.

Switzerland currently has four nuclear plants with five functioning reactors and the country's regulatory authorities have now frozen the regulatory process for a further three sites.

However, Polish Prime Minister Donald Tusk said his country would go ahead with its plans to build two new plants, noting that Poland did not have the same risk of earthquakes as Japan.
Protests

The German decision to suspend the controversial extended life policy for 17 power stations came after growing political pressure.

Tens of thousands of people took part in demonstrations in Germany at the weekend against the Berlin government's nuclear policy.

They formed a 45km (27mile) human chain in the south-western state of Baden-Wuerttemberg from Stuttgart to one of the power plants affected by the nuclear extension policy, at Neckarwestheim.

German voters go to the polls in Baden-Wuerttemberg later this month, and Chancellor Merkel's Christian Democrats are faring badly in opinion polls.

After Chancellor Merkel's announcement on Monday, Environment Minister Norbert Roettgen said two plants that dated back to the mid-1970s would be shut down regardless of whether the extension was renewed in three months' time.

The Biblis A plant will be phased out by the end of May and the Neckarwestheim plant will also close in the coming months.

Senior officials from all of Germany's federal states are due to discuss nuclear issues with the chancellor and top ministers on Tuesday.

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 06:36 PM (GMT)

Right on cue as I said would happen. They wish to demonize Nuclear energy in favour of locking you into oil and coal where by they can claim peaks and charge you the Earth. Also they can charge carbon tax type tariffs upon these etc. Crafty swines I assure you but you'll never see them pushing cold fusion etc.

CommanderKeen - March 14, 2011 06:44 PM (GMT)

This is the continuation of the Morgenthau Plan. They want to destroy Germany as an industrialized and therefore wealthy nation. Energy prices in Germany are already insane and companies here stop producing just because of that. And now this will make it even worse. Also the anti-nuclear movement has been proven to be financed by the agent of the City, George Soros.

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 10:40 PM (GMT)

Koeberg begins routine shut down

Mar 14 2011 08:42
http://www.fin24.com/Companies/Industrial/...down-20110314-2

Johannesburg - Koeberg nuclear power station on Monday began a planned shut down of its unit two, Eskom said.

"The unit was disconnected from the power grid at 1:30, however the unit takes several days to cool down sufficiently for the workers to access the necessary areas," spokesperson Hilary Joffe said.

The shut down was expected to last about 55 days, and the station would be running again in early May.

This was to enable routine refuelling, maintenance and statutory inspections.

Eskom conducted these shut downs during spring, summer and autumn, as in winter the demand for power was higher and hence shut downs were kept to a minimum.

Unit one would continue to operate at full power, Joffe said.

Residents in the area were advised that steam would issue from the unit during the shut down process, but this was no cause for alarm.

"Given the events in Japan, we want to assure the public that perfectly clean steam will issue from next to the reactor during the routine shut," spokesperson Tony Stott said.

He said that this was part of the cool down process of unit two.

The unit would take two to three days to cool down enough for it to be opened for workers to begin the refuelling, maintenance and inspections.

Stott said that valves, pumps and high pressure components were among items scheduled for maintenance. One third of the fuel in the reactor would be replaced.

Once the unit had been reconnected to the power grid, it would take about four days to begingenerating electricity. In about a week, the unit would be back up to full power.

At various stages of the power up, tests would be conducted to ensure all was working correctly.

Stott said unit two provided between 2% and 2.5% of South Africa's energy capacity.

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 10:44 PM (GMT)

Japan's blasts cast doubt on nuclear renaissance

Japan's explosions cast doubt on nuclear renaissance as Swiss, Germans suspend atomic plans

Angela Charlton and John Heilprin, Associated Press, On Monday March 14, 2011, 6:33 pm
http://finance.yahoo.com/news/Japans-blast...2.html?x=0&.v=3

PARIS (AP) -- Switzerland freezes plans to build new nuclear plants, Germany raises questions about its nuclear future, and opposition to atomic reactor construction mounts from Turkey to South Africa.

Will explosions and other worries at a tsunami-stricken Japanese nuclear plant halt what has come to be known as the nuclear renaissance?

Fears about nuclear safety that took a generation to overcome after the accidents at Chernobyl and Three-Mile Island are resurfacing around the globe. They are casting new doubt on a controversial energy source that has seen a resurgence in recent years, amid worries over volatile oil prices and global warming.

"Europe has to wake up from its Sleeping Beauty slumber" about nuclear safety, Austria's Environment Minister Nikolaus Berlakovich told reporters in Brussels. He suggested an EU-wide stress test for nuclear plants, much like European banks have been tested for their ability to cope with financial shocks.

Yet some experts and officials say those fears are overblown, given the exceptional nature of Japan's earthquake and ensuing tsunami. The Japanese blasts may slow the push for more nuclear plants, but appear unlikely to stop it, given the world's fast-growing energy needs.

The governments of Russia, China and Poland said they are sticking to plans to build more reactors. Even earthquake-prone Chile says it won't discard a nuclear option. Spain warned against hasty decisions.

Japan's nuclear plant explosions come as the U.S. government looks to expand its nuclear energy industry by offering companies tens of billions in financial backing. Administration officials said the U.S. would seek lessons from the Japanese crisis but said the events in Japan would not diminish the United States commitment to nuclear power.

"It remains a part of the president's overall energy plan," White House spokesman Jay Carney said. "When we talk about reaching a clean energy standard, it is a vital part of that."

In Atlanta, the CEO of Southern Co. said Monday he does not expect Japan's problems to delay construction of two more nuclear reactors in Georgia, at the first nuclear plant in the United States to break ground in a generation.

Elsewhere, governments began questioning their vision of a nuclear-energized future amid rising threats of a meltdown at one Japanese reactor.

Switzerland ordered a freeze on new plants or replacements "until safety standards have been carefully reviewed and if necessary adapted," Energy Minister Doris Leuthard said. The decision put on hold the construction of nuclear power stations at three sites approved by Swiss regulatory authorities.

Switzerland now has five nuclear power reactors that produce about 40 percent of the country's energy needs. It also has nuclear research reactors.

In Germany, the government said it is suspending for three months a decision to extend the life of its nuclear power plants. That also means that two older nuclear power plants will be taken off the grid shortly -- at least for now -- pending a full safety investigation, Chancellor Angela Merkel told reporters.

A previous government decided to shut all 17 German nuclear plants, but Merkel's administration last year moved to extend their lives by an average 12 years.

"The pictures from Japan show us that nothing, even the worst, is unthinkable," EU Energy Commissioner Guenther Oettinger told Germany's Deutschlandfunk radio.

The European Union called a meeting Tuesday of nuclear safety authorities to assess Europe's preparedness in case of a nuclear emergency.

Individual EU members including Britain, Bulgaria and Finland also urged a nuclear safety review.

Meanwhile, opposition voices rose up in Turkey and Sweden to renounce or scale back governments' nuclear expansion plans. And anti-nuclear groups staged rallies around France, the world's most nuclear-dependent country, as the government sought to reassure the public that the risks remain minimal.

Environmental group Earthlife Africa said it wants South Africa, the only African country with an existing nuclear plant, to follow Germany's example. But South African government officials want to expand nuclear power.

German popular opinion continues to favor non-nuclear sources of energy. But elsewhere in Europe, people have become increasingly open to using nuclear power as memories fade of the accident in Chernobyl, Ukraine -- the world's worst nuclear accident, 25 years ago next month. Eastern Europe sees nuclear energy as a way of gaining a measure of independence from Russia's burgeoning gas and oil empire.

Statistics from the International Atomic Energy Agency show there are 442 nuclear reactors in operation worldwide, with 65 new facilities under construction. Construction last year was started on 14 new reactors -- in China, Russia, India, Japan and Brazil. In 2005, in comparison, ground was broken for only three reactors.

Boosters have argued that new-design reactors pose fewer safety risks, and that nuclear-produced electricity doesn't emit the pollution that causes global warming.

Even as Japan's damaged reactors were beginning to deteriorate Friday, Chilean President Sebastian Pinera told state television that "the new so-called smart technologies, are technologies that are absolutely earthquake-proof in terms of security. And that's why we are studying this option, because Chile can't categorically reject any alternative in energy generation."

Pinera is planning to sign a nuclear energy accord with the U.S. during President Barack Obama's visit to Santiago next week.

The head of the Ukrainian Chernobyl Union called for setting up nuclear safety squads of professionals trained to respond to nuclear accidents who could be rapidly dispatched to any accident site.

"Nuclear accidents will continue happening as nuclear energy develops," Yuri Andreyev told the AP.

Experts said it was too early to evaluate all the consequences of the Japanese explosions.

"This is a massive earthquake, followed by a massive tsunami," said Physics Prof. Paddy Regan of the University of Surrey at Guildford. "Imagine if this would have been next to a chemical plant or a gas plant that would have exploded. ... There is a risk here but we have to keep the fears rational."

Heilprin reported from Bern, Switzerland. Geir Moulson and Juergen Baetz in Berlin, George Jahn in Vienna, Raf Casert and Gabriele Steinhauser in Brussels, Maria Danilova in Kiev, Donna Bryson in Johannesburg, Federico Quilodran in Santiago, Chile, contributed to this report.

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 10:47 PM (GMT)

This could be one way to end the Iranian nuclear plans and force the World against Iran if they continue. It only takes a few brainwashed green idiots to do this with Government propaganda to alter populaces mind frames. So demonize nuclear power Worldwide then all the idiots being depopulated by lack of nuclear energy will detest Iran and demand its attacked. This is depopulation at its best a-la Memorandum 200 by Heinz Kissinger, DVD/ KNIGHT OF MALTA.

TheUnhivedMind - March 15, 2011 01:14 AM (GMT)

Japan crisis fuels fears over Europe's nuclear revival

By Adrian Croft and Daniel Fineren
LONDON | Mon Mar 14, 2011 2:38pm GMT
http://uk.reuters.com/article/2011/03/14/u...14?pageNumber=2

(Reuters) - Japan's nuclear crisis in the wake of a huge earthquake is likely to increase opposition to plans for a major nuclear expansion in Europe and focus attention on the vast potential costs of a nuclear disaster.

The crisis will reignite concern over nuclear safety as Japan fights to avert a meltdown at crippled nuclear reactors, describing the quake and tsunami, which may have killed more than 10,000 people, as its biggest crisis since World War Two.

The disaster is a setback to the nuclear industry, which is enjoying a renaissance as public fears over nuclear safety have faded along with memories of the 1979 Three Mile Island accident in the United States and Ukraine's 1986 Chernobyl disaster.

Many countries plan new nuclear power plants, regarding nuclear as a clean alternative to expensive and dwindling oil and gas and saying new technology should allay safety fears.

But anti-nuclear campaigners around Europe have seized on the Japanese accident as evidence of the dangers of nuclear power and said governments should rethink plans for new plants.

"I think it will make a lot of governments, authorities and other planners think twice about planning power stations in seismic areas," said Jan Haverkamp, European Union policy campaigner for environmental group Greenpeace, which opposes new nuclear reactors and wants existing ones phased out.

French reactor maker Areva (CEPFi.PA) and nuclear power producers EDF (EDF.PA) and GDF Suez (GSZ.PA) are important industry players. France's Alstom (ALSO.PA) and Schneider Electric (SCHN.PA) are also active in the sector, as are Switzerland's ABB (ABBN.VX) and Germany's Siemens (SIEGn.DE).

MERKEL UNDER PRESSURE

Chancellor Angela Merkel, whose government last year extended the operating lives of Germany's nuclear reactors, said the government was consulting with nuclear experts and watching the situation in Japan closely.

The Japanese radiation leak comes at a difficult time for Merkel, whose conservatives face three state elections in March where nuclear safety fears could help her opponents.

On Saturday, tens of thousands of anti-nuclear protesters formed a 45-km (27 mile) human chain from Stuttgart to a nuclear power plant that will be kept running longer because of the new policy. The protest was planned before the Japanese earthquake.

EU Energy Commissioner Guenther Oettinger plans a meeting in the next few days to discuss lessons from the accident with nuclear safety authorities, nuclear operators and constructors.

In Britain, which plans a major nuclear building programme to replace ageing plants, Energy Secretary Chris Huhne said on Sunday he had asked the chief nuclear inspector to report on the implications of the Japanese crisis.

He said that while there may be lessons on operator safety, Britain had different reactors to those in Japan and stressed that Britain is not in an earthquake zone.

British Green lawmaker Caroline Lucas said the Japanese accident strengthened the case against new nuclear construction.

"You will never be able to completely design out human error, design failure or natural disaster," said Lucas, whose party backs energy efficiency and renewables to meet Britain's energy and climate change goals.

Walt Patterson, associate fellow at London's Chatham House thinktank, said that, while the Japanese crisis would affect public perceptions of the nuclear industry, the financial damage could also be severe.

"Somebody is going to wind up paying the bill and it will probably be the Japanese public one way or another," he said.

"That is undoubtedly going to filter back to the debate in Europe as a further factor in the very dubious economics of these plants," he told Reuters.

Italy, one of the few European countries prone to earthquakes, is the only Group of Eight industrialised nation without a nuclear power plant.

Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi wants a quarter of the country's electricity to be nuclear in future and the leader of Berlusconi's PDL party in the lower house said Italy would not change its plans because of the Japanese disaster.

Events in Japan are likely to loom large in voters' minds however when Italy holds a referendum within the next three months on whether to build nuclear power plants.

France, the second biggest nuclear energy producer after the United States, said it would discuss ways of securing its 58 reactors that provide most of the country's electricity.

Areva, EDF and GDF Suez had no comment.

COMPELLING NEED

The compelling need to reduce dependence on oil, gas and coal, along with the climate-warming carbon they produce, mean Japan's disaster is unlikely to derail Europe's multi-billion-dollar nuclear new build plans, sources said.

"In the heat of the moment, this will of course stir calls to end nuclear power generation, but over the longer term governments have to think rationally about rising power needs and CO2 emissions," said an industry source, asking not to be named.

"Nuclear power is an unavoidable element of the energy mix."

Another French industry source said the Japanese nuclear accident would create a "premium on safety" and support the case for building third generation reactors.

That source said third-generation reactor models such as the 1,650-megawatt EPR and the 1,100-MW Atmea, both manufactured by Areva, offered the possibility of confining the core of a melting reactor, which was not necessarily the case with the Fukushima Daiichi reactors built over 30 years ago.

"I cannot see how what's happening in Japan could call Britain's programme into question given the country's power needs," the second nuclear source said.

"Of course this will raise additional questions on safety but I don't think this will delay the certification process or the investment decisions."

TheUnhivedMind - March 15, 2011 01:15 AM (GMT)

UK launches nuclear safety review as Japan crisis continues

Chris Huhne says UK must learn lessons from blast at earthquake-hit Fukushima nuclear power plant

By Jessica Shankleman
14 Mar 2011
http://www.businessgreen.com/bg/news/20337...ng-japan-crisis

Energy and climate change secretary Chris Huhne has launched an official investigation into how the UK can learn from the ongoing crisis at the Fukushima nuclear power plant in Japan and improve safety across its own nuclear reactor fleet.

The UK government's chief nuclear inspector Dr Mike Weightman has been asked to compile a thorough report on the implications of the nuclear accident in Japan and any lessons that can be learned, Huhne announced yesterday.

Despite efforts by engineers and rescuers over the weekend to prevent a nuclear catastrophe, Japan's Nuclear and Industrial Safety Agency (NISA) reported a second explosion at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear plant today at 11:01am local Japan time (10.01pm GMT), following an initial explosion at the Unit 1 reactor on Saturday. Officials said the reactor core is still intact and are playing down any risk of radiation, but fears remain that such leaks could occur.

"I am asking our own nuclear regulator, or safety authorities, to look very carefully at the Japanese experience to learn any lessons that we can, both for our own existing nuclear reactions and for any new nuclear programme, because safety is absolutely the number one priority for us in all our energy sources, and that has to be the case with this one as well," Huhne told the BBC's Politics Show yesterday.

The accident in Japan will undoubtedly raise fresh concerns about the safety risks posed by nuclear power, as the UK government prepares to roll out a new fleet of reactors having earmarked eight sites as potential locations for new power plants.

However, Huhne played down concerns that public opposition to nuclear power will escalate as a result of the Japanese crisis, insisting the investigation will identify any necessary improvements, and will also highlight the differences between Japan and the UK. For example, the UK does not use the same nuclear reactor as the one which caused an explosion on Saturday at Fukushima and the UK faces significantly lower risk of earthquakes compared to Japan.

"Public opinion obviously is going to be very influenced by the investigation. And the investigation is absolutely crucial. So we must not put the cart before the horse," Huhne said.

"They key thing is to get to the bottom of what has gone on, to understand any and all of the lessons that there may be from what has gone on in Japan for the UK. Clearly there may be some in terms of operator safety and so forth."

Green Party MP Caroline Lucas welcomed the announcement of the review, but she also reiterated her opposition to the UK's new nuclear programme.

"It appears that the Fukushima Daiichi complex was affected not by the quake per se, but the failure of grid electricity and backup diesel electricity supply for cooling, and that could easily happen elsewhere," she said.

"Nuclear power carries inherent risks, and is particularly vulnerable to the potentially deadly combination of human error, design failure and natural disaster. Given that there are cheaper, quicker and, crucially, safer ways of meeting our energy needs and emission reduction targets, it is particularly perverse here in the UK to launch the building of a fleet of new nuclear power stations."

TheUnhivedMind - March 15, 2011 01:20 AM (GMT)

China May Consider Japan Nuclear Accident in Drafting Future Energy Plans

By Bloomberg News - Mar 13, 2011 5:38 AM GMT+0000 http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-13/c...ergy-plans.html

A blast at a nuclear facility in Japan after a record earthquake may become a factor in China's drafting of future energy plans, a top planning official said.

China may consider the effects of the nuclear accident as it finalizes its energy plans for the 2011-2015 period, Xie Zhenhua, vice chairman of the National Development and Reform Commission, said in Beijing. Radiation at the Fukushima Dai-Ichi plant exceeded Japanese limits after an explosion yesterday destroyed the wall of the reactor building and injured workers following Japan's strongest earthquake on record.

"Evaluation of nuclear safety and the monitoring of plants will be definitely strengthened," Xie said today, while attending the closing of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

China, the world's biggest polluter, is building more nuclear reactors than any other nation in an effort to cut emissions and protect its environment while trying to maintain economic growth. The country is tripling the number of reactors, building 27 units to add to the 13 that are already operational, according to the London-based World Nuclear Association.

“China will become more cautious while developing nuclear- power plants but is unlikely to alter its long-term nuclear development plans,” Dave Dai, a Hong Kong-based analyst at Daiwa Securities Capital Markets Co., said by phone today. “The accident in Japan may trigger increased public concerns over building atomic plants.”
Nuclear Accident

An explosion at Tokyo Electric Power Co.’s Fukushima Daiichi No. 1 reactor, which had begun venting radioactive gas after its cooling system failed, injured four workers yesterday. The utility reported no damage to the building housing the reactor. It began flooding the reactor with sea water and boric acid today to prevent a meltdown and eliminate the potential for a catastrophic release of radiation.

China won’t change its plans to develop nuclear power after the Japanese earthquake, Zhang Lijun, vice minister of environmental protection, said yesterday.

Global expansion of nuclear power may draw more scrutiny and skepticism as the world watches Japan struggle to prevent a meltdown at the reactor damaged by the earthquake, said Peter Bradford, a former member of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

There are 442 reactors worldwide that supply about 15 percent of electricity, the World Nuclear Association said. There are plans to build more than 155 additional reactors, most of them in Asia, and 65 reactors are currently under construction, the association said on its website.
Emission Cuts

China has pledged to cut carbon emissions by switching to clean energy such as nuclear and wind power. It wants at least 15 percent of its energy mix to come from non-fossil fuels by 2020 and is building more atomic plants to help meet that goal.

The government may approve 10 additional nuclear power projects during the 12th five-year plan which covers the period from 2011 through 2015, the China Daily reported Jan. 26, citing Zhang Guobao, former director of the National Energy Administration. China is expected to raise its 2020 target for nuclear power generation to 86 gigawatts, accounting for 5 percent of China’s total power generation, the newspaper reported, without citing anyone.

The country is also studying specific measures to control total energy use and conduct carbon-trading trials during the next five years, Xie, who is also the nation’s top climate negotiator, said today, without elaborating.

- Wang Ying. Editors: Allen Wan, John Liu

To contact the Bloomberg staff on this story: Wang Ying in Beijing at ywang30@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: John Liu at jliu42@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - March 16, 2011 03:57 AM (GMT)

May I remind you that Georgetown University is really the power of the United States controlled by the Society of Jesus also note how Kristine Marcy and many other really influential people all get trained at Georgetown and yes its FOREIGN POLICY not American.

QUOTE

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/7qF7gc3Q4V8?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/7qF7gc3Q4V8?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 16, 2011 04:48 PM (GMT)

GE $1 Billion Nuclear Unit at Risk as Nations Mull Atomic Future

By Rachel Layne - Mar 16, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-16/g...try-future.html

General Electric Co. (GE)'s goal of broadening its $1 billion nuclear service-and-parts business with sales of new reactors risks stalling as world leaders reconsider the future of atomic energy.

Governments from Germany to India are reassessing the technology after Japan's March 11 earthquake and tsunami crippled a power plant and raised the threat of a meltdown. China today halted nuclear project approvals and plans safety inspections of new facilities.

Political doubts after the Japan disaster may signal dwindling appetite for new plants, and the reactors that Chief Executive Officer Jeffrey Immelt has said he wants to pursue. Three reactors at the Fukushima Dai-Ichi plant use a GE design, including the damaged No. 1 unit that began operating in 1971.

“We want to look at, just like the whole industry, the details of what happened here,” GE Power & Water CEO Steve Bolze said yesterday in an interview. “There is going to be a lot of discussion, and we’re part of that process.”

Tokyo Electric Power Co. operates and maintains the Dai- Ichi plant complex. Fairfield, Connecticut-based GE operates its nuclear business through a 60-40 venture with Hitachi Ltd. (6501) everywhere except Japan, where Hitachi has 80 percent ownership. Services and parts produce most of the revenue for GE-Hitachi.

GE’s portion of those sales makes up less than 1 percent of the parent company’s $150.2 billion in 2010 revenue. A possible loss of sales for GE’s latest reactor design to customers such as India or for parts and service wouldn’t cause much harm, according to analysts such as JPMorgan Chase & Co. (JPM)’s Stephen Tusa and Matt Collins of Edward Jones.
‘Relatively Minor’

“GE-specific exposure is relatively minor and, even if there were an earnings impact, we do not believe that it’s material to the intrinsic value of GE stock,” Tusa wrote in a March 14 note. The New York-based analyst recommends buying GE.

It’s the future scope of nuclear power that may be in question, scholars and analysts said. About 15 percent of global electricity comes from nuclear power, according to London-based World Nuclear Association.

A large radiation release reaching the Japanese public would be “a big step backward,” James Bartis, a senior research analyst at the Santa Monica, California-based public policy group Rand Corp., said yesterday in an interview.
Political Reaction

As France reaffirmed its backing this week for nuclear power, Germany halted production of 25 percent of its nuclear- generated electricity for a safety review and Switzerland put renewal of three atomic stations on hold.

Shreyans Kumar Jain, chairman of the Nuclear Power Corp. of India, said in Mumbai that Japan’s disaster may be a “big dampener” on the nuclear program in the country, which has planned $175 billion in spending by 2030.

“There’s going to be some immediate slowdown,” Richard Lester, head of the department of nuclear science and engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said yesterday in an interview.

Immelt is concentrating on building other areas within the $37.5 billion GE Energy business, including solar, wind, biogas and natural gas-fired turbines, in part because it can take a decade or more to complete a nuclear power plant.

GE has produced nine versions of a boiling water reactor design. The latest one in operation is the Advanced Boiling Water Reactor, sold to the Japanese in 1996. A new version, the Economic Simplified Boiling Water Reactor, is awaiting final certification from the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Design Defended

GE's Bolze defended the design used at the Dai-Ichi site, saying it operated as expected even under stresses beyond the criteria set by Japanese regulators. GE has assembled 1,000 reactor specialists, including retirees, at an emergency center in Wilmington, North Carolina, where GE-Hitachi is based.

On-the-ground information from Japan is flowing from Tokyo Electric and the Washington-based Nuclear Energy Institute, which represents reactor owners and builders, Bolze said.

The company is offering aid, including 10 truck-mounted gas turbines being flown to the Dai-Ichi plant to help restore power. Authorities in Japan have said the tsunami knocked out backup generators needed to cool the reactors.

'Peculiar Spot'

GE "is in a peculiar spot," Michael Levi, a senior fellow for energy and environment at the Council on Foreign Relations in New York, said in an interview. "It's not good to have your company's name mentioned repeatedly next to 'large nuclear accident,' regardless of the safety potential of your current offering."

While GE's shares fell 3.7 percent to $19.61 from March 11 through yesterday, the worst drop among the 30 companies in the Dow Jones Industrial Average, the company is shielded from legal liability in the disaster by Japan's so-called channeling laws. The shares slid 50 cents, or 2.6 percent, to $19.11 at 11:08 a.m. in New York Stock Exchange composite trading.

The protections are "rock solid," Omer Brown, a Washington-based lawyer who is a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency's International Nuclear Liability Expert Group, said in an interview. Japan assigns nuclear-accident liability to plant operators.

For GE, any pullback in global nuclear demand would be tempered by the prospect of adding sales of other power- generating equipment, according to Edward Jones's Collins, who rates GE as "hold" and is based in Des Peres, Missouri.

"GE is actually stronger in those areas than it is in nuclear, so it could largely offset any nuclear decline," Collins said yesterday in an e-mail.

GE and competitors including Germany's Siemens AG (SIE), France's Alstom SA and Japan's Mitsubishi Corp. (8058) may benefit in the near term from sales of gas-fired turbines, Citigroup Inc.'s Deane Dray wrote March 14.

Immelt, who has been in talks to sell reactors in India, said during a visit to New Dehli on March 14 that it's too early to forecast the future of nuclear power in that country or elsewhere.

"We just have to let discovery take place," he said. "Let people and countries reach their own conclusions."

To contact the reporter on this story: Rachel Layne in Boston at rlayne@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Ed Dufner at edufner@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - March 18, 2011 11:11 PM (GMT)

NRC to review safety of all US nuclear plants

Mar 18 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...262681304a13406

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission will conduct a "comprehensive review" of the safety of all U.S. nuclear plants following what U.S. officials are calling the dangerous and complicated situation at Japan's damaged Fukushima Dai-ichi reactors.

President Barack Obama took the rare step and called upon the independent commission to conduct the review.

"When we see a crisis like the one in Japan, we have a responsibility to learn from this event and to draw from those lessons to ensure the safety and security of our people," Obama said Thursday.

Obama's statement came as he tried to reassure a worried nation that "harmful levels" of radiation from the Japanese nuclear disaster are not expected to reach the U.S., even as other officials conceded it could take weeks to bring the crippled nuclear complex under control.

Meanwhile, the first evacuation flight of U.S. citizens left Japan, the State Department said.

"We've seen an earthquake and tsunami render an unimaginable toll of death and destruction on one of our closest friends and allies in the world," Obama said in brief remarks at the White House after a visit to the Japanese Embassy to offer his condolences.

There are 104 nuclear reactors in the United States, providing roughly 20 percent of the nation's electricity. "Nuclear energy is an important part of our own energy future," Obama said.

A leading industry group agreed with the review.

"A review of our nuclear plants is an appropriate step after an event of this scale, and we expect that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission will conduct its own assessment," said Marvin Fertel, president of the Nuclear Energy Institute. "The industry's highest priority is the safe operation of 104 reactors in 31 states and we will incorporate lessons learned from this accident..."

In the U.S., Customs and Border Protection said there had been reports of radiation being detected from some cargo arriving from Japan at several airports, including ones in Chicago, Dallas and Seattle.

Radiation had not been detected in passengers or luggage. And none of the reported incidents involved harmful amounts.

Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano said the agency was screening passengers and cargo for "even a blip of radiation."

Obama said he knows that Americans are worried about potential risks from airborne radiation that could drift across the Pacific. "So I want to be very clear," he said. "We do not expect harmful levels of radiation to reach the United States, whether it's the West Coast, Hawaii, Alaska or U.S. territories."

Gregory Jaczko, chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, told reporters at a White House briefing it could be some time before the crisis is brought under control as crews work to cool spent-fuel rods and get the damaged Japanese reactors under control. The activity could continue for days and "possibly weeks," Jaczko said.

He said the U.S. recommendation that American troops and citizens stay 50 miles away from the nuclear complex was "a prudent and precautionary measure to take." But he also said "basic physics" suggested there was little risk to anyone in the United States or its Pacific territories.

Daniel B. Poneman, deputy secretary of energy, told the briefing that a "very dangerous situation" remains in Japan. Information at the nuclear plant is "genuinely complex and genuinely confusing," he said.

As the officials spoke, Japanese emergency workers sought to regain control of the dangerously overheated nuclear complex, dousing it with water from police cannons, fire trucks and helicopters to cool nuclear fuel rods that were threatening to spray out more radiation.

The U.S. Energy Department said it had conducted two separate aerial tests to measure how much radioactive material had been deposited in Japan. Those data, Poneman said, were consistent with the recommendation for Americans to evacuate a 50-mile radius around the plant.

The U.S. officials declined to criticize the Japanese call for a smaller evacuation zone.

"We're analyzing the information, and we're sharing it with the Japanese," said Poneman. "The preliminary look has indicated that the measures that have been taken (by the Japanese) have been prudent ones. And we have no reason to question the assessment that has been made or the recommendation that has been made by the Japanese authorities."

At his visit to the Japanese Embassy Thursday, Obama signed a condolence book and said: "We feel a great urgency to provide assistance to those ... who are suffering."

In the book he wrote, "My heart goes out to the people of Japan during this enormous tragedy. Please know that America will always stand by one of its greatest allies during this time of need."

White House spokesman Jay Carney said the fact that Obama had taken the rare step of asking the NRC — an independent regulatory agency that is not under the president's control — to undertake a review of U.S. reactor safety in light of the Japanese disaster "only adds to the urgency of that mission."

Representatives of the nuclear energy industry said Thursday that operators of U.S. reactors already had begun taking steps to better prepare for an emergency in this country.

While it will take some time to understand the true dimensions of the nuclear disaster in Japan, "we will learn from them, we will get that operating experience, we will apply it and try to make our units even safer than they are today," said Anthony Pietrangelo, senior vice president of the Nuclear Energy Institute, a Washington-based industry lobbying group.

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 12:14 AM (GMT)

Hugo Chavez calls off Venezuela's nuclear energy plans

Mr Chavez and Russian President Dmitry Medvedev agreed the nuclear deal last October

17 March 2011 Last updated at 08:10

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-latin-america-12768148

Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez says he is freezing plans to develop a nuclear energy programme in the light of the crisis in Japan.

Venezuela signed a deal with a Russian company last year to develop a nuclear power plant over the next decade.

But Mr Chavez said events in Japan showed the dangers of developing nuclear power were too great.

Chile has said it still aims to sign a nuclear accord with the US next week despite the crisis in Japan.

Countries around the world have been reconsidering their nuclear policies in the face of the crisis at Japan's Fukushima nuclear complex triggered by last week's huge earthquake and tsunami.

President Chavez said he was calling off Venezuela's plans to build a nuclear plant.

"It is something extremely risky and dangerous for the whole world," he said.

"Despite the great technology and advances that Japan has, look at what is happening with some of its nuclear reactors."

Mr Chavez added that global concerns about the safety of nuclear power would boost demand for Venezuela's oil exports.

Chile option

In Chile, President Sebastian Pinera said he would go ahead with a nuclear co-operation deal with the US that is due to be signed during President Obama's visit next week.

Mr Pinera said Chile had to keep the option of nuclear power open to fuel its growing demand for energy despite anxieties over the nuclear disaster in Japan.

"Chile needs to learn about nuclear energy, and that is why we have signed accords with France and Argentina and we will sign another with the US," he said after meeting the Japanese ambassador to express his condolences.

Like Japan, Chile is on the Pacific "Ring of Fire" of seismic activity and is prone to earthquakes and tsunamis.

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 12:18 AM (GMT)

Japan drives EU atomic revision

Pallavi Aiyar / Brussels March 18, 2011, 0:03 IST
http://www.business-standard.com/india/new...evision/428971/

Only a few weeks earlier, the Lithuanian government announced it was in talks with Japan to help build a new nuclear reactor to replace its Soviet-made Ignalina facility, shut last year to comply with European Union commitments. Japan's "very high standards of nuclear safety" were cited by the Lithuanian energy minister as proof that EU environmental norms would be met.

A devastating earthquake, tsunami and nuclear disaster later, Japanese technology provides cold comfort when it comes to safety standards and is instead raising alarm across the EU with the bloc's till-now pro-nuclear energy chief, Günther Oettinger, calling for a debate on the possibility of a nuclear energy-free future for the region.

Europe was already a continent deeply divided on the use of nuclear energy. Following the 1986 catastrophe at Chernobyl (Ukraine, in the then Soviet Union), the public in many European countries developed a deep mistrust of this source of power. Austria, for example, has a total ban on nuclear energy; Italy had until recently suspended its nuclear energy programme and popular disapproval of nuclear power remains high in Germany, which has a freeze on new reactors.

On the other hand, nuclear energy is extensively used in France and Britain. More, given the increasing concern with fossil fuels and their impact on global warming, Europe had recently been witnessing something of a nuclear revival. The fears unleashed by Chernobyl were fading with time, and nuclear energy offered a clean and dependable alternative to the oil and gas.

Thus, Italy was about to embark on constructing its first nuclear plant, with Rome aiming to generate a quarter of the country's future electricity from nuclear sources. New reactors were slated for construction in several eastern European states like Bulgaria and Lithuania. The UK had announced plans to build four new plants by the end of the decade. Even in nuclear-sceptic Germany, Chancellor Angela Merkel had recently announced her government's decision to keep the country's 17 nuclear plants open for an average of 12 extra years.

Japan effect
But the ongoing crisis at Japan's Fukushima reactor has thrown a weighty spanner in Europe's nuclear works. The most dramatic announcement came from Germany, with Merkel making a sharp U-turn on her own new policy of extending the lifespan of the country's nuclear plants. She also ordered seven of the oldest plants to be temporarily shut, declaring the events in Japan to be "a turning point for the whole world". As much as 26 per cent of Germany's electricity is produced from nuclear sources, with the seven older reactors accounting for about a third of that percentage.

In Italy, citizens are scheduled to vote between April 15 and June 15 on whether they support the government's policy of bringing nuclear plants back, after a referendum almost 25 years before had decided to scrap the facilities. Unlike many other European countries, Italy is prone to earthquakes, and pro-nuclear government officials have been promoting the safety of nuclear plants by taking Japan as an example on how such facilities can be suitable even in areas of seismic activity. Given the new situation, it is likely that Rome's nuclear plans will not meet with the requisite popular approval.

Earlier this week, European energy chief Oettinger announced plans for stress-testing all the EU's 143 nuclear installations. The tests would be designed to ensure their safety against natural disasters like earthquakes and tsunamis, as well as acts of terrorism.

Dependence
Nuclear power produces around a third of the electricity and 15 per cent of the energy consumed in the EU. A total of 17 reactors in the region use boiling-water reactor technology, similar to those affected in Japan.

France and the UK are also hastening to calm fears and advising against "knee jerk" reactions to Japan's crisis. In Britain, government officials have been pointing to the low level of seismic activity.

But regardless of ruling out a nuclear-free future for their countries, both France and the UK have set up inquires into the safety of their plants.

Europe is clearly shaken by events in Japan. Unlike Chernobyl, it is not the proximity of the disaster that is the main worry, but the fact that unlike Chernobyl, located in the poor Soviet Ukraine, Fukushima is in rich, first-world, Japan. And, if something could go wrong in Japan, it proves that Europe, for all its technology and safety norms, is vulnerable, too.

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 04:45 AM (GMT)

Nuclear propagandists lies exposed and debunked

Sunday, March 13, 2011
http://davidrothscum.blogspot.com/2011/03/...xposed-and.html

There are a number of lies about nuclear energy being promoted by the industry, and I figured I'd make myself useful by taking a look at them.

Lie #1: Nuclear energy poses no threat, because your exposure to radioactivity through the eating of Bananas is higher.

First we start with the simplest. The "Banana equivalent dose". As explained by Wikipedia:

A banana equivalent dose (BED) is a concept occasionally used by nuclear power proponents to place in scale the dangers of radiation by comparing exposures to the radiation generated by a common banana. Many foods are naturally radioactive, and bananas are particularly so, due to the radioactive potassium-40 they contain. The banana equivalent dose is the radiation exposure received by eating a single banana. By comparing the exposure from these events to a banana equivalent dose, a more intuitive assessment of the actual risk can sometimes be obtained. The average radiologic profile of bananas is 130 Bq (3 520 pCi/kg), or roughly 19,2 Bq (520 pCi) per 150 g banana. The equivalent dose for 365 bananas (one per day for a year) is 36 •Sv (3.6 mrems). Bananas are radioactive enough to regularly cause false alarms on radiation sensors used to detect possible illegal smuggling of nuclear material at US ports. (Link)

Yes, people actually use this argument. An example can be found here:
Shortly after the partial meltdown at Three Mile Island in 1979, antinuclear activists claimed they had found radioactive Iodine in cows milk at nearby farms. This immediately caused a fear of a poisoned food supply. However, when put it terms of Banana Equivalent Dose, this radio-iodine wasn't nearly as scary. There was only 20 picocuries per liter of radio-iodine in the cows milk. That equals just 1/75th BED. So you would need to consume 75 liters of that scary nuclear milk to equal the radiation dose of eating just one banana. Of course, no mortal man could possibly drink 75 liters of any cows milk without developing unfathomable, non-nuclear side effects.(Link)
The Banana equivalent dose concept is also used in other places, on Reddit for example by a a "nuclear-trained submarine officer":
Speaking of radiation, there are far more sources of it than you probably realize. Things as simple as taking a long flight, inhaling cigarette smoke, eating a banana, and even living in brick houses in some areas can significantly contribute to radiation exposure for individuals. Although prudence dictates keeping away from all known sources of radiation, it seems that even continuous exposure to very low levels is not dangerous. (Link)
Another example on Reddit:
There are ways to help put radiation exposure into perspective for people so it's less scary. I suggest banana equivalent doses.(Link)
The fact of the matter is that not all types of radiation are created equal. The body carefully regulates the amount of Potassium-40. It's explained here:

The problem is that this system implies that all radioisotopes are created equal—That there's no difference between 520 picocuries of Potassium-40 and a similar intake of, say, radioactive iodine. And that simply isn't true. I contacted Geoff Meggitt—a retired health physicist, and former editor of the Journal of Radiological Protection—to find out more.

Meggitt worked for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and its later commercial offshoots for 25 years. He says there's an enormous variation in the risks associated with swallowing the same amount of different radioactive materials—and even some difference between the same dose, of the same material, but in different chemical forms.

It all depends on two factors:
1)The physical characteristics of the radioactivity—i.e, What's its half-life? Is the radiation emitted alpha, beta or gamma?
2) The way the the radioactivity travels around and is taken up by the body—i.e., How much is absorbed by the blood stream? What tissues does this specific isotope tend to accumulate in?

The Potassium-40 in bananas is a particularly poor model isotope to use, Meggitt says, because the potassium content of our bodies seems to be under homeostatic control. When you eat a banana, your body's level of Potassium-40 doesn't increase. You just get rid of some excess Potassium-40. The net dose of a banana is zero.

And that's the difference between a useful educational tool and propaganda. (And I say this as somebody who is emphatically not against nuclear energy.) Bananas aren't really going to give anyone "a more realistic assessment of actual risk", they're just going to further distort the picture.(Link)

When you hear someone bring up Bananas in an argument about nuclear energy, you know you have to ignore them. Mr. Meggitt is right, but there is more to the story. The type of isotope you're exposed to is very important. As Mr. Meggitt mentions, it is for example important to know what types of tissue the particles accumulate in, if it accumulates at all.

When dealing with radioactive material we have to keep in mind that the body has a natural mechanism to repair radioactive damage. When a cell is damaged by a radioactive particle it starts to repair itself, a process which is followed by duplication. During this time period, the cell is far more vulnerable to any new mutation, because it can't repair this new mutation. This is why a burst of radiation that is followed within a few hours by another burst of radiation is more dangerous to a cell than two exposures to radiation days or weeks apart. This is called the "second event" theory.

It is important because it means that not all types of radioactive particles are created equally. A particle that decays only once may not be even close to half as dangerous as a particle that decays once, only to decay again a few hours later. In normal circumstances it is extremely unlikely for a cell to be mutated by radiation twice, within the time frame of a few hours. With radioactive particles trapped in your body that decay multiple times within the time frame of a day, this is of course more likely to happen.

This is the Second Event Theory by Chris Busby. Busby explains the second event theory as following:

The Second Event theory proposes a radiobiological mechanism explaining how low doses of radiation from some man-made radionuclides and anthropogenic forms of natural radioactive substances are significantly more likely to cause genetic mutations leading to a range of diseases than radiation from natural sources.

It is a serious challenge to the present model of radiation risk at the kind of doses involved in environmental contamination from industrial processes.
Its predictions easily accommodate phenomena such as the Seascale leukaemia cluster, which the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment fails to ascribe to known radioactive pollution.

It is now well established that living cells in vitro respond to sub-lethal radiation damage by proceeding into cell-cycle arrest which involves the setting up of an irreversible sequence of chromosomal DNA repair, followed by a forced replication.

This repair-replication cycle, which lasts for 8 - 15 hours, is known to contain a period which is exquisitely susceptible to radiation damage. In the last ten years the existence of such a critical period has been used to explain a number of anomalous low dose effects involving split or protracted doses. In addition, and in support of the existence of a critical phase, the very earliest reearch shows that dividing cells are much more susceptible to radiation than cells in G0 or quiescent phase.

Since 1945 there have existed on earth a number of novel beta emitters which have sequential decay pathways. Examples of such isotopes are the series
Strontium-90 - Yttrium-90
Tellurium-132 - Iodine-132

The Second Event theory argues that when such isotopes are incorporated and immobilised in body tissue their initial decay is capable of initiating cell cycle repair/ replication sequences, during which the second decay damages the repair at some critical point. The repair sequence is irreversible, and sub-lethal damage sustained during the sequence will be passed on to one or both daughter cells and to their progeny.

At natural background levels of radiation (NBR) cells receive on average one hit per cell per year. Calculations using simple probability theory show that the chances of NBR intercepting the critical window in a replicating cell are very low, but that dose for dose, internal radiation from incorporated sequential emitters is thousands of times more likely to cause the two event hazard.(Link)

To get back to the banana, and the radioactive Potassium it contains. Is Potassium-40, the radioactive type of potassium found in bananas, likely to cause such a problem? As explained on the LLRC website, Potassium-40 only decays once, in other words, our cells have a perfect mechanism to cope with Potassium-40:
ECRR's biophysical hazard factors address physical aspects. Thus external exposures such as Xrays carry a hazard weighting if they are repeated within 24 hours. This is to compensate for the possibility of intercepting the cell repair cycle. Sequential emitters like Strontium-90 and Tellurium-132 when inside the body carry weightings of between 20 – 50 depending on the number and spacing of their decays. By contrast the natural isotope Potassium-40 only decays once and therefore has a weighting of 1. Internal insoluble particles like Plutonium and Uranium Oxide have hazard weightings between 20 and 1000, depending on activity and particle size.(Link)
Hence the radioactive Potassium found in our body does not pose a major risk. This is very important to remember because we will come back to this issue multiple times.

Lie #2: Coal plants emit more radioactivity than Nuclear power plants.

Example of the lie:
Over the past few decades, however, a series of studies has called these stereotypes into question. Among the surprising conclusions: the waste produced by coal plants is actually more radioactive than that generated by their nuclear counterparts. In fact, the fly ash emitted by a power plant—a by-product from burning coal for electricity—carries into the surrounding environment 100 times more radiation than a nuclear power plant producing the same amount of energy. * [See Editor's Note at end of page 2] (Link)
This of course ignores a whole bunch of issues. It ignores the fact that during the mining of uranium, radiation is released into the environment as well. Another article that makes the same claim is a little fairer when it gives us the number of the whole process:
For comparison, according to NCRP Reports No. 92 and No. 95, population exposure from operation of 1000-MWe nuclear and coal-fired power plants amounts to 490 person-rem/year for coal plants and 4.8 person-rem/year for nuclear plants. Thus, the population effective dose equivalent from coal plants is 100 times that from nuclear plants. For the complete nuclear fuel cycle, from mining to reactor operation to waste disposal, the radiation dose is cited as 136 person-rem/year; the equivalent dose for coal use, from mining to power plant operation to waste disposal, is not listed in this report and is probably unknown.(link)

There a bit of a difference between 136 rem per year and 4.8 rem per year. But even that pales in comparison to the "Editor's note" at the end of page 2.
In response to some concerns raised by readers, a change has been made to this story. The sentence marked with an asterisk was changed from "In fact, fly ash—a by-product from burning coal for power—and other coal waste contains up to 100 times more radiation than nuclear waste" to "In fact, the fly ash emitted by a power plant—a by-product from burning coal for electricity—carries into the surrounding environment 100 times more radiation than a nuclear power plant producing the same amount of energy." Our source for this statistic is Dana Christensen, an associate lab director for energy and engineering at Oak Ridge National Laboratory as well as 1978 paper in Science authored by J.P. McBride and colleagues, also of ORNL.

As a general clarification, ounce for ounce, coal ash released from a power plant delivers more radiation than nuclear waste shielded via water or dry cask storage.
This is where the cat comes out of the bag. They're comparing coal ash released from a power plant with nuclear waste that is properly being shielded. This is of course comparing apples and oranges. First of all nuclear waste isn't properly shielded. Nuclear waste gets into the environment all the time.

For example, The Herald reported recently:
A nuclear power station has been sent a final warning letter after radioactive waste leaked into the sea.

Around 2600 litres of low-level waste was discharged from Hunterston B into the Firth of Clyde because of a problem with a valve. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) said the leak did not cause an environmental issue, but it issued the Ayrshire power station with a final warning letter because procedures were not followed.(Link)

In other words, the claim that nuclear waste is less radioactive than coal waste assumes that the waste is properly stored behind water which absorbs the radiation, whereas in reality, the nuclear waste often is released into our environment, where it will enter the food chain, our atmosphere, and eventually settle into our bodies. This means that the article is dealing with a hypothetical situation that will never occur in reality. The author is very much aware of this I am convinced.

However, 95% of people will simply see the headline and perhaps read the first few paragraphs of his article before moving on and will never question it. They will just remember "coal plants are 100 times more radioactive than nuclear power plants". They won't question the facts and assumptions made to arrive at this conclusion and make up their minds on the basis of a cheap one-liner.

Second, radioactive nuclear waste is inherently more dangerous than the natural isotopes we get from coal. I have brought this argument up earlier, and it is true for this case as well. For example, we have about three times the plutonium waste than was earlier estimated in the United States alone. (Link) Plutonium is a second event emitter. The waste created by nuclear power plants is chemically toxic as well. The artificial isotopes created by nuclear power plants are not comparable to the isotopes in coal emissions. All of this increases the complexity of comparing different types radioactive material.

Then there is the fact that when nuclear power plants blow up, they release far more nuclear waste than coal plants have in all of recorded history. In fact, the Chernobyl accident is estimated to have released 25–50 million curies (1–2 exabecquerels) (IAEA estimations), whereas the collective radioactivity resulting from all coal burning worldwide between 1937 and 2040 is estimated to be 2,700,000 curies or 0.101 EBq). In other words the Chernobyl accident alone released ten times as much radiation as all coal burning worldwide between 1937 and 2040 did. The disaster currently unfolding in Japan shows us that meltdowns are still possible. However, it must again be mentioned that the artificial isotopes released in the Chernobyl disaster are hard to compare to the natural radioactive isotopes in our environment, because some of them are Second event emitters.

Then, there has to be a final point made. Nobody ever said that coal plants are safe either. The argument made here is comparable to the argument that "it is safe to smoke cigarettes, because injecting heroin is 100 times as lethal as smoking a cigarette". Even coal plants cause deaths and birth defects. China's main coal producing province has the highest birth defect rate in the entire country for example.(Link) Dirty coal ought to be rejected in the same manner that nuclear power should be.

However, the overwhelming evidence points towards coal plants still being nowhere near the danger that is posed by nuclear power plants, because all coal plants on the planet still released less than 10 times the amount of radiation released during the Chernobyl disaster.

Lie #3: Low levels of radiation are actually good for you, because they trigger a protective response in your body.

Example of the lie:

Many things that are toxic at high concentrations are beneficial at low concentrations. Radiation may be one of those things, Google “radiation hormesis” for the details. Radiation hormesis was considered a crackpot theory 10 years ago but there is a growing body of scientific evidence supporting it.
If radiation hormesis is valid the Chernobyl accident may actually extend more lives than it shortens. I believe that within ten years regulatory bodies will take a neutral position in which the LNT assumption is cutoff at levels where hormesis is detected.

(Link)
This is a mistake that is reached because there is a non-linear dose response relationship. It works as following (in very simple terms): No radiation means no deaths. A little radiation means a lot of deaths. Some radiation means some deaths. A lot of radiation means a lot of deaths.

What the proponents of this idea do is compare exposure to a little radiation to exposure to some radiation. Because they see a decrease in deaths, they assume it means that raising the radiation exposure for everyone on the planet would be a good thing.

An example can be seen in the number of leukemia deaths when looking at the amount of radiation the public is exposed to.(link)

What we see is that an increase in exposure leads to an increase in leukemia deaths. However, when the dose becomes high enough, there is a decline again. This is what is misinterpreted as being a hormesis effect. The explanation is simple. As we move to the right, the fast-dividing cells are mutated, which leads to leukemia. However, as we move further to the right, the fast-mutating cells die due to the increasing radiation dose, because cells vulnerable to mutation are also vulnerable to die due to the radiation. This means that the cells that would cause the leukemia don't cause leukemia because they die due to the radiation. As the dose increases further however, the damage because so severe that the organism dies nonetheless.

This is also what was seen in the children exposed in the Chernobyl disaster.(link) A low dose meant no leukemia, a moderate dose meant a high risk of leukemia, and a high dose meant a low risk of leukemia:

I hope this clarifies how people come to the erroneous conclusion that a small amount of radiation is good for you. Because varying levels of radiation have varying results, it's very easy to come to the wrong conclusion, namely, that radiation from power plants is not a health threat at all. For example, if you are studying the effects of radiation on animals and your control cases happen to be exposed naturally to a level of 0.1mSv, and your exposed cases are exposed to a level of 0.5 mSv, what would you notice? A moderate decline in leukemia. There might be other sorts of health effects arising, but you would certainly notice a decline in leukemia.

This principle is well known. This is why radioactive iodine when released into the environment will cause thyroid cancer in people and animals, but why radioactive iodine can also be used to treat thyroid cancer, because it is absorbed by the thyroid where it will proceed to kill the cancerous cells. Of course this will mean that other people will be exposed to the radioactive iodine used to treat the thyroid cancer patient, and possibly develop thyroid cancer as a result of that, but the radioactive iodine may nonetheless save the thyroid cancer patient, as least, for the time being.

Another issue that needs to be mentioned is that low dose studies in humans tend to find an increased cancer risk.(link) With this issue behind us, we can move on to...

Lie #4: Nobody ever died due to nuclear power, except in the Chernobyl accident.

An example of the lie:

"No member of the American public has ever been killed by commercial nuclear power — a record unmatched by other fuels," wrote Alexander, a Tennessee Republican, along with Theodore Rockwell, a fellow of the American Nuclear Society and a vice president of Radiation, Science and Health Inc.

Considering the history of incidents like Three Mile Island and the deadly Chernobyl disaster in the Ukraine, we decided to take a closer look at the history of commercial nuclear power plants, and see if, in fact, no one has ever been killed by commercial nuclear power in the United States.

In order to help narrow our search, we decided not to count a death from a workplace hazard, for example slipping and falling. We're specifically looking at the workers in plants who are killed from the process of creating nuclear power.

Alexander's staff told us the senator got his facts from the American Nuclear Society Web site, which states in a "Myths and Facts" section that "No member of the public has ever been injured or killed in the entire 50-year history of commercial nuclear power in the U.S."

We confirmed that with David Decker, congressional analyst for the government's Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the federal agency in charge of nuclear plants.

"I believe that the senator's statement was that there have been no deaths due to nuclear-related accidents at commercial nuclear power plants. From our perspective, this would be true," Decker said. (Link)

Another example of the lie:

Apart from Chernobyl, no nuclear workers or members of the public have ever died as a result of exposure to radiation due to a commercial nuclear reactor incident. Most of the serious radiological injuries and deaths that occur each year (2-4 deaths and many more exposures above regulatory limits) are the result of large uncontrolled radiation sources, such as abandoned medical or industrial equipment. (There have also been a number of accidents in experimental reactors and in one military plutonium-producing pile - at Windscale, UK, in 1957, but none of these resulted in loss of life outside the actual plant, or long-term environmental contamination.)(Link)
This is simply not true. People who live closer to a nuclear power plant have a higher risk of leukemia. From GlobalResearch:

Leukemia death rates in U.S. children near nuclear reactors rose sharply (vs. the national trend) in the past two decades, according to a recent study. The greatest mortality increases occurred near the oldest nuclear plants, while declines were observed near plants that closed permanently in the 1980s and 1990s. The study was published in the most recent issue of the European Journal of Cancer Care.(Link)

Seventeen studies done on leukemia rates near nuclear reactors have found an increase in leukemia rates:

The Mangano/Sherman report follows a 2007 meta-analysis also published in the European Journal of Cancer Care by researchers from the Medical University of South Carolina. That report reviewed 17 medical journal articles on child leukemia rates near reactors, and found that all 17 detected elevated rates.(Link)

Infant mortality rates near nuclear power plants become higher when they are opened, and remain elevated:
In the United States, utility companies have recently begun ordering new nuclear power reactors, the first such orders in the country since 1978. One potential site would be the Grand Gulf plant near Port Gibson, Mississippi. In 1983-1984, the first two years in which the existing Grand Gulf reactor operated, significant increases were observed in local rates of infant deaths (+35.3%) and fetal deaths (+57.8%). Local infant mortality remained elevated for the next two decades. These changes match those experienced in the same five local counties during atomic bomb testing in the 1950s and 1960s. This report examines potential reasons why an indigent, largely African American community may be at higher risk than other populations from exposure to an environmental toxin such as radiation. It also considers potential health risks posed by new reactors at Grand Gulf.(Link)
Infant mortality rates decline when nuclear plants close in areas in the vicinity of the nuclear power plants when the power plants close, however, they do not decline in areas outside of the vicinity of nuclear power plants. Furthermore, the decline in birth defects was especially strong:
Subsequent to 1987, 8 U.S. nuclear plants located at least 113 km from other reactors ceased operations. Strontium-90 levels in local milk declined sharply after closings, as did deaths among infants who had lived downwind and within 64 km of each plant. These reductions occurred during the first 2 yr that followed closing of the plants, were sustained for at least 6 yr, and were especially pronounced for birth defects. Trends in infant deaths in proximate areas not downwind, and more than 64 km from the closed plants, were not different from the national patterns. In proximate areas for which data were available, cancer incidence in children younger than 5 yr of age fell significantly after the shutdowns. Changes in health following nuclear reactor closings may help elucidate the relationship between low-dose radiation exposure and disease.(Link)

A significant childhood cancer cluster was found near a nuclear plant in Germany too:
Between February 1990 and December 1995, professionals diagnosed six cases of childhood leukemia among residents of the small rural community of Elbmarsch in northern Germany. Five of these cases were diagnosed in only a 16-mo period between February 1990 and May 1991. All cases lived in close proximity (i.e., 500-4,500 m) to Germany's largest capacity nuclear boiling-water reactor. We calculated standardized incidence ratios and exact 95% confidence intervals for a 5-km-radius circular area around the plant. The standardized incidence ratio for the time period 1990-1995 was 460 (95% confidence interval: 210, 1,030). The analysis was restricted further to the years 1990 and 1991, and the standardized incidence ratio increased to 1,180 (95% confidence interval: 490, 2,830). Presently, this cluster of childhood leukemia cases cannot be explained in terms of established and putative risk factors--including radiation from medical sources--for childhood leukemia.(Link)

In other words, we can establish that people living near nuclear power plants have an increased risk of having children that will die due to leukemia or birth defects. Of course something has to happen to the nuclear waste as well. Unfortunately, people living near the nuclear waste reprocessing plants have an increased risk of Leukemia too:
The observed number of cases of leukaemia in the study region as a whole was consistent with the expected value (SIR=1.03; 95%CI: 0.73, 1.41). No cases were observed on Alderney. The SIR in the Beaumont-Hague electoral ward was 2.17 (95% CI: 0.71, 5.07). The highest SIR was observed in the 5 to 9 years age group (SIR=6.38; 95%CI: 1.32, 18.65). This consists in acute lymphoblastic leukaemia cases.

This study indicates an increased incidence of leukaemia in the area situated at less than 10 km from the plant. Monitoring and further investigations should be targeted at acute lymphoblastic leukaemia occurring during the childhood incidence peak (before 10 years) in children living near the La Hague site and may be other nuclear reprocessing plants.(Link)

People living near nuclear waste dumps have a higher risk of cancer:

It emerged on Thursday that the number of leukaemia cases in the area surrounding the Asse dump had risen. Between 2002 and 2009, there were 18 cases of leukaemia – cancer of the blood or bone marrow – according to figures confirmed by Wolfenbüttel district authorities.
Men in the area have twice the rate of leukaemia cases as the rest of Germany. Among women, there was a tripling of the rate of thyroid cancer between 2002 and 2009.(Link)
In the general area of Three Mile Island, an increase in infant mortality happened after the disaster there.(Link) People living near the uranium mines suffer from an increase in cancer and birth defects as well.(Link)

Lie #5: Nuclear energy is a cost efficient method of energy generation

In reality, the Nuclear industry keeps lying to us about the price of nuclear energy. For example, the Congressional Budget Office reported in May 2008 that the actual costs of building 75 of the existing nuclear power plants in the U.S. exceeded industry quoted estimated by more than 300 percent.(link)

After Fifty years, nuclear energy is still dependent on government subsidies. More than 30 subsidies have supported every stage of the nuclear fuel cycle, from uranium mining to long-term waste storage. Added together, these subsidies often have exceeded the average market price of the power produced.(link)

The only reason such a thing as nuclear energy exists is because the governments of the world keep it alive through subsidies.
Lie #6: An event like happened in Chernobyl can never happen again.

Examples of the lie:
In a US reactor a coolant loss automatically shuts down the reactor's chain reaction and automatically limits the consequences of the accident. There is no graphite or other combustible material in the reactor, so there is nothing to catch fire. The severe consequences of Chernobyl were mainly a result of the smoke distributing the radioactive material. This cannot happen without smoke, and with nothing to burn there cannot be smoke.(Link)
BrianDunning, author of a science podcast Skeptoid, explains: "Fukushima nuclear plant does NOT have a combustible graphite core like Chernobyl. A total meltdown should flow into underground containment.(Link)

Chernobyl had a graphite moderated core that caught fire spreading radioactivity as a result of the fire. Fukushima has a water moderated and cooled core. There would be no fire. The core might be damaged, but even if water levels within the vessel fell below the top of active fuel, significant steam cooling would still occur.(Link)
The fact of the matter is, that this is just not true. It can still happen. The mechanism may differ, but the amount of radioactive pollution released can still be similar.

First of all the story that the graphite was responsible for the spread of the radiation is unsubstantiated. To continue on with nuclear power something had to take the fall and it seems it was decided by some to blame the graphite in the core that exists as a neutron moderator.

The fact of the matter however is that the Graphite in Chernobyl does not appear to have been responsible for the disaster at all. From the General Atomics website:

It is often incorrectly assumed that the combustion behavior of graphite is similar to that of charcoal and coal. Numerous tests and calculations have shown that it is virtually impossible to burn high-purity, nuclear-grade graphites. Graphite has been heated to white-hot temperatures (~1650°C) without incurring ignition or self-sustained combustion. After removing the heat source, the graphite cooled to room temperature.
Unlike nuclear-grade graphite, charcoal and coal burn at rapid rates because:
They contain high levels of impurities that catalyze the reaction.
They are very porous, which provides a large internal surface area, resulting in more homogeneous oxidation.

They generate volatile gases (e.g. methane), which react exothermically to increase temperatures.
They form a porous ash, which allows oxygen to pass through, but reduces heat losses by conduction and radiation.
They have lower thermal conductivity and specific heat than graphite.

In fact, because graphite is so resistant to oxidation, it has been identified as a fire extinguishing material for highly reactive metals.

The oxidation resistance and heat capacity of graphite serves to mitigate, not exacerbate, the radiological consequences of a hypothetical severe accident that allowed air into the reactor vessel. Similar conclusions were reached after detailed assessments of the Chernobyl event; graphite played little or no role in the progression or consequences of the accident. The red glow observed during the Chernobyl accident was the expected color of luminescence for graphite at 700°C and not a large-scale graphite fire, as some have incorrectly assumed.(Source)

And from world-nuclear:
There are also several referrals to a graphite fire occurring during the October 1957 accident at Windscale Pile No. 1 in the UK. However, images obtained from inside the Pile several decades after the accident showed that the graphite was relatively undamaged.(Source)
Thus we can so far establish the following. Nuclear propagandists need an excuse to be able to claim that Chernobyl could never happen again in modern reactors. For this they need a design element of the Chernobyl reactor to take the blame, and they choose the neutron moderator used in the reactor, graphite. They claim that the supposed graphite fires spread the radiation. Evidence points to this not being the case.

But let us not stop here. Let us look at some expert opinions. An Israeli professor has the following to say about the disaster at the light water reactor in Japan:

Hebrew University Professor Menachem Luria, an expert on air quality and poisoning, told Channel 2 on Saturday: "This is very worrying. There is no doubt that we have not seen anything like this in years, perhaps ever since nuclear experiments were conducted in the atmosphere in the 1950s. From what we can gather, this disaster is even more dangerous than Chernobyl, both from the standpoint of the population's exposure to radioactive material and the spread of radioactive contamination in the area."

Luria continued: "Once there is an uncontrollable heating up, the nuclear fuel undergoes a metamorphosis into the gaseous phase. Since we are talking about metals and solid items, they turn into particles that are capable of traveling great distances. They can wander thousands of kilometers."

If these gases are indeed emitted into the atmosphere in large quantities, the wind regime could carry them all the way to China, South Korea, and eastern Russia, or in the other direction, toward Hawaii and the west coast of the United States. The likelihood of this happening, though, is not high.(link)

A theoretical physicist has the following to say about the Fukushima disaster currently unfolding:

A theoretical physicist today calls the Japan reactor explosion a "Chernobyl in the making."

Speaking to ABC News, theoretical physicist Michio Kaku said, "This could be a Chernobyl in the making. We are now going into uncharted territory, we are thinking the unthinkable."

These inflamatory statements came after hydrogen released from the super-hot nuclear rods ignited, creating an explosion at the plant that was disabled after the 8.9 earthquake and tsunami.(Link)

Further evidence by US experts indicates that Chernobyl scale events are still possible. In testimony before Congress in 1986, NRC Commissioner James Asselstine stated the following:

While we hope that their occurrence is unlikely, there are accident sequences for U.S. plants that can lead to rupture or bypassing of containment in U.S. reactors which would result in the off-site release of fission products comparable or worse than the releases estimated by the NRC staff to have taken place during the Chernobyl accident. (Link)

A report mandated by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in 1982 concluded that events can still happen at all US nuclear power plants that will lead to thousands of direct deaths in the first year and thousand of cancer deaths later. The authors also concluded that changing some of the criteria for data gathering would actually increase the number of early fatalities by a factor of 3 to 4 depending upon circumstances.(Link) Anyone who tries to convince you that Chernobyl was an incident that could never be repeated is lying to you.

Lie #7: At most a few thousand people died from the Chernobyl disaster.

Examples of the lie:

Kucik, who studies the effect of radiation on cardiovascular disease, says though the Chernobyl explosion was devastating, there have been surprisingly few long-term health effects.

"There did not seem to be a significant increase in birth defects and, so far, the incidence of cancer is not significantly elevated," he says. "However, there has been an increased incidence of cardiovascular disease."

Research over the years has shown that prolonged exposure to radiation, including that from cancer treatment, excessive occupational exposure and atomic bombs, is associated with increased risk of developing plaque in the arteries, Kucik says. This likely explains the incidence of heart disease in those in the Chernobyl fallout zone.(link)

The nuclear disaster at Chernobyl almost 20 years ago has so far claimed fewer than 50 lives, according to a study by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the UN Development Programme and the World Health Organisation.

But about 4,000 people could eventually die from exposure to radiation released when a reactor caught fire in the Ukrainian forest and showered Europe with a plume of radioactive particles.

Scientists have released a three-volume, 600-page report on the accident and the death, disease and economic ruin that became its legacy in Ukraine, Belarus and Russia. "This was a very serious accident with major health consequences, especially for thousands of workers exposed in the early days, who received very high radiation doses, and for thousands more stricken with thyroid cancer," said Burton Bennett, chairman of the Chernobyl Forum, which released the study.

"By and large, however, we have not found profound negative health impacts to the rest of the population in surrounding areas, nor widespread contamination."(Link)

In reality, the increase in cancer, birth defects, cardiovascular disease, infertility and other ailments has been horrific. The genetic integrity of the people of Belarus and Ukraine has forever been destroyed and will never be recovered. A better estimate of the effects is given below:

* Thyroid Cancer: Thyroid cancer in children has increased since the disaster, particularly in the Gomel region of Belarus. The World Health Organization predicts that, in this region, 50,000 children will develop the disease during their lifetime. Throughout Belarus, the incidence of this rare disease in 1990 was 30 times higher than in the years before the accident. (3)
• Leukemia: In the Gomel region of Belarus, incidence of leukemia has increased 50% in children and adults. (4)

• Other Diseases in Children: In addition to thyroid cancer and leukemia, UNICEF reports that between 1990 and 1994, nervous system disorders increased by 43%; cardiovascular diseases by 43%; bone and muscle disorders by 62%; and diabetes by 28%. UNICEF cautioned that it is difficult to prove whether these increases were caused by radiation or another unknown factor.
• Other Cancers: Swiss Medical Weekly recently published findings showing a 40% increase in all kinds of cancers in Belarus between 1990 and 2000. (5) Some tumor specialists fear that a variety of new cancers may emerge 20-30 years after the disaster. (6) Cases of breast cancer doubled between 1988 and 1999. (7)
• Birth Defects: Maternal exposure to radiation can cause severe organ and brain damage in an unborn child. Five years after the disaster, the Ukrainian Ministry of Health reported three times the normal rate of deformities and developmental abnormalities in newborn children, as well as in increased number of miscarriages, premature births, and stillbirths. (4)
• Genetic Mutations: Hereditary defects in Belarusian newborns increased in the years after the disaster. (8) Scientists have observed that congenital and hereditary defects have passed on to the next generation, as young people exposed to radiation grow up and have their own children. (9)
• Cardiac Abnormalities: Heart disease in Belarus has quadrupled since the accident, caused by the accumulation of radioactive caesium in the cardiac muscle. (10) Doctors report a high incidence of multiple defects of the heart – a condition coined “Chernobyl Heart.”(Link)
It's not easy to put a number on what happened to Belarus and I'm not going to try to. I'll leave it at this for now.

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 05:23 AM (GMT)

New York Attorney General Demands Earthquake Study On Nuclear Plant

Indian Point Near New York City Hasn't Fixed 18-Year-Old Leak

By HANNA SIEGEL and SENIBOYE TIENABESO
March 18, 2011
http://abcnews.go.com/Blotter/ny-officials...ory?id=13170006

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman demanded Friday that federal nuclear regulators investigate the earthquake readiness of a nuclear power plant just north of New York City before they renew its license to operate. The Indian Point Energy Center, 24 miles from the city in Buchanan, N.Y., has been leaking water from a safety lining since 1993.

"It is beyond troubling that at the same time the federal government acknowledges increased seismic safety risk at some nuclear power plants in this country, it refuses to fully and openly assess these specific risks to Indian Point as part of its relicensing process," said Schneiderman at a press conference Friday, a week after a massive earthquake damaged nuclear reactors in Japan. "While the possibility of an intense earthquake is low, the potential for harm is so catastrophic that it has to be taken into account. . . . We are adamant that the relicensing of Indian Point not go forward until seismic risks are evaluated."

In 2007 Entergy, the Louisiana-based company that runs Indian Point, applied for a 20-year license extension for its operating reactors. The decision from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) is expected in 2013. In a letter to the NRC, Schneiderman declared that the agency must amend its regulations to include seismicity in the scope of its licensing review.

Entergy says the site can withstand a 6.0 quake. Two fault lines intersect just north of Indian Point, but the biggest earthquake in New York in the past 70 years measured 5.8 and occurred near the Canadian border.

Both Schneiderman and his predecessor as attorney general, current New York governor Andrew Cuomo, have been harsh critics of the plant because of the potential danger it poses to those living nearby. More than 20 million people live within 50 miles of its two operating reactors. Cuomo ordered a state safety review of the plant Thursday.

In a move that may complicate the relicensing, the state has denied a request for water-quality certification of the plant, saying that the cooling plants "do not and will not comply with existing New York State water quality standards."

Schneiderman said he is also concerned about the spent fuel rods that are currently in a decommissioned reactor on site. "We know from Japan that there is long-term risk from nuclear waste stored at Indian Point," said Schneiderman.

An NRC spokesperson declined to comment to ABC News about Schneiderman's statements, but said that the agency would respond to the Attorney General's letter after reviewing it.

Fed Official: 'Insane' To Have Reactors So Close To NYC

Indian Point, where the first reactor was licensed in 1962, has been controversial for decades. In 1979, Roberty Ryan, director of the NRC's Office of State Programs, told a presidential commission, "I think it is insane to have a three-unit reactor on the Hudson River in Westchester County, 40 miles from Times Square, 20 miles from the Bronx. "

"I'm sorry," said Ryan. "I just don't think that that's the right place to put a nuclear facility."

More than 30 years later, Indian Point has become the focal point of government and scientific community pressure to repair or shut many of the nation's aging and leaking plants. Indian Point is one of dozens of U.S. plants with licenses scheduled to expire by 2015.

On Thursday, the Union of Concerned Scientists called new attention to the leak at Indian Point , which is in a lining in the refueling cavity that is meant to stop leakage of radioactive materials in the event of an earthquake.

"NRC inspectors at Indian Point recently found that the liner has been leaking 2 to 20 gallons per minute since at least 1993 and that the plant owner has not yet delivered on repeated promises to fix the leak," said the activist group in a report. "That means the device installed to prevent leakage after an earthquake is leaking before an earthquake even occurs."

"By allowing this reactor to continue operating with equipment that cannot perform its only safety function, the NRC is putting people living around Indian Point at elevated and undue risk," the report says.

A spokesperson for Entergy said the container that is leaking is only filled during refueling, which occurs every two years, and leakage from the structure is captured and pumped out.

"This is something we have been aware of and the NRC is aware of, and there are no safety issues with it," the spokesman said. "There is no leak of fuel."

Indian Point Safety Issues

But Indian Point's safety issues have not been confined to a single leak. In 2005, Entergy reported leakage in the spent fuel pool of reactor two, resulting in the emission of strontium and tritium. There was leakage from the spent fuel pool in reactor one in 2008.

In 2009, 100,000 gallons of water contaminated with trace amounts of tritium leaked out through a broken pipe. Indian Point is one of about two-dozen plants in the U.S. that have reported tritium leaks. The NRC noted that the amount of tritium was well below the level allowed to be released.

In 2010, the state denied Entergy's request for water-quality certification at the plant, saying that Indian Point's two operating units violate state law and the federal Clean Water Act because they kill close to 1 billion marine organisms annually, including an endangered sturgeon, while consuming 2.5 billion gallons of water per day.

Even skeptical scientists acknowledge, however, that so far, the environmental concerns at Indian Point and other aging reactors around the country fall short of the potential for catastrophe.

"The chances of a disaster at a nuclear plant are low," the Union of Concerned Scientists noted. "When the NRC finds safety problems and ensures that owners address them -- as happened last year at Oconee (Georgia), Browns Ferry (Alabama), and Kewaunee (Wisconsin) -- it keeps the risk posed by nuclear power to workers and the public as low as practical. But when the NRC tolerates unresolved safety problems -- as it did last year at Peach Bottom (Pennsylvania), Indian Point, and Vermont Yankee -- this lax oversight allows that risk to rise. The more owners sweep safety problems under the rug and the longer safety problems remain uncorrected, the higher the risk climbs."

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 05:24 AM (GMT)

US and Chile sign nuclear deal amid Japan fears

Sebastian Pinera is to welcome Barack Obama to Chile early next week

18 March 2011 Last updated at 18:57
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-latin-amer..._medium=twitter

The United States has signed a long-awaited nuclear accord with Chile despite growing misgivings about the safety of nuclear power in Chile.

The Chilean Government has stressed the deal was about training nuclear engineers and not building a reactor.

But it comes amid fears over a radiation leak at the Fukushima nuclear plant in Japan following last week's huge earthquake.

Chile suffered its own devastating earthquake last year.

Many environmental groups in Chile have criticised the decision to invest more in nuclear energy as other countries are scaling back their nuclear plans.
'Closed doors'

The deal was due to be signed by President Barack Obama in a high profile ceremony with his Chilean counterpart, Sebastian Pinera, on his visit to Chile early next week.

But the agreement was signed behind closed doors by Chilean Foreign Minister Alfredo Moreno and US ambassador to Chile Alejandro Wolff.

Mr Moreno reiterated that Chile is not able to produce nuclear energy.

"Chile is not in a condition to have nuclear energy and what has happened in Japan has done nothing more than underline that situation," he said.

But it comes after Chile signed a similar nuclear agreement with France last month.

Environmental groups in Chile are concerned that the government appears to be pursuing a nuclear agenda despite moves elsewhere in the world to review nuclear plans.

Earlier this week, Germany ordered its oldest nuclear plants to be shut down for urgent safety checks.

The Venezuelan President, Hugo Chavez, also announced he was suspending a nuclear deal with Russia following the disaster in Japan.

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 03:08 AM (GMT)

Chris Huhne: Britain may scale back nuclear plans after Japan disaster

Britain may scale back its plans to build a new generation of nuclear plants in the wake of the Japanese disaster, the Energy Secretary indicated on Sunday.

By Robert Winnett, Deputy Political Editor 6:10PM GMT 20 Mar 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/newsbys...n-disaster.html

Chris Huhne said that the meltdown at Japan's Fukushima nuclear plant had "undoubtedly" cast a "shadow over the renaissance of the nuclear industry".

The Government has ordered an urgent review of the safety of Britain's nuclear power plants, to be conducted by the chief nuclear officer.

The review will report in May.

In an interview on Sunday, Mr Huhne appeared to raise the spectre of scaling down or even abandoning the country's new nuclear programme.

Despite being opposed to nuclear power before entering the Government he has recently been a cheerleader for the need for new plants.

However, he said on Sunday: "I am not ruling out nuclear now. There are a lot of issues outside of the realm of nuclear safety, which we will have to assess. One is what the economics of nuclear power post-Fukushima will be, if there is an increase in the cost in capital to nuclear operators."

He added: "Globally, this undoubtedly casts a shadow over the renaissance of the nuclear industry. That is blindingly obvious."

The Government has drawn up plans for five new nuclear plants with at least 10 new reactors over the next decade. The shift to nuclear is a key part of meeting Britain's pledge of cutting carbon emissions by 80 per cent by 2050.

However, Mr Huhne said: "We can do the 80 per cent reduction in emissions by 2050 without new nuclear, but it will require a big effort on carbon capture and storage and renewables."

Any move to scale back the nuclear programme is likely to be opposed by the Conservatives. Last week, David Cameron said that nuclear power should be "part of the mix in future" as planned.

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 06:58 PM (GMT)

UK nuclear plants must go ahead, says EDF

EDF said its UK plants had demonstrated "good and robust safety"

20 March 2011 Last updated at 12:38
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-12799322

The nuclear crisis unfolding in Japan will not affect the plans of French power giant EDF to build new reactors in the UK, the company's boss has told the BBC.

Vincent de Rivaz said lessons had to be learned but, following years of debate, the new reactors "have to go ahead".

He said the company had already reviewed back-up systems and emergency plans at its existing UK plants.

Some countries are reviewing nuclear strategy in light of events in Japan.

Last week, China said it had suspended approval for new nuclear power stations following the accident at the Fukushima Daiichi plant in north east Japan.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel has also announced a "measured exit" from nuclear power after shutting down seven of the country's oldest reactors.
'Robust safety'

The UK government has commissioned a report into the lessons of the Japanese disaster, the initital findings of which will be published in May.

Some campaigners have called on the government to go further, with Greenpeace arguing that the approval process for new nuclear sites should be suspended until the report is published.

But Mr de Rivaz, speaking on the BBC's The Andrew Marr show, praised what he called the "clear-headed and calm reaction" of the government, regulators and local communities in the UK to the Japan nuclear crisis.

He said the lessons from Japan had to be put into practice in the new plants in the UK, but said the circumstances in the two countries were very different.

He said that it was very important to be sure that nuclear plants were safe, and that EDF's existing UK plants had demonstrated "good, robust safety".

"Nuclear is not a single solution [to the UK's energy needs], but there is no solution without nuclear," he concluded.

TheUnhivedMind - March 22, 2011 03:54 AM (GMT)

Japan Nuclear Crisis Prompts EU Calls for Atomic-Power Plant Stress Tests

By Ewa Krukowska and Jonathan Stearns - Mar 21, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-21/j...ress-tests.html

European Union energy ministers will seek agreement on “stress tests” for the region’s nuclear plants at an emergency meeting today called in response to Japan’s atomic accident.

Nuclear power stations owned by companies including Electricite de France SA and Germany’s RWE AG (RWE) produce a third of the electricity in the EU, which wants to draw up common criteria to gauge the safety of the region’s 143 atomic plants. The risk of a nuclear meltdown in Japan after a March 11 earthquake and tsunami triggered public protests in Europe against atomic power and prompted Germany to order a temporary halt to the country’s seven oldest reactors.

“Every country must be responsible for its activities, but we need common rules,” Mauri Pekkarinen, Finnish minister of economic affairs who is also responsible for energy policy, told reporters in Brussels on his way into the EU meeting. “The most important thing is to go through all circumstances in all plants and try to find common solutions.”

Countries led by Germany are calling for a deeper alignment of Europe's rules on nuclear safety, which is a shared responsibility between national and EU authorities. German Chancellor Angela Merkel has urged uniform standards across the EU and said she will raise the issue at a March 24-25 meeting of the bloc's leaders.
German Moratorium

Merkel decided last week that Germany will keep its seven oldest nuclear reactors offline as part of the nationwide safety review to run through June. Reactor owners intend to take another five plants offline by May to complete a safety review within the terms of a moratorium ordered by the government, newspaper Die Welt reported today.

EU Energy Commissioner Guenther Oettinger said last week that member states and power companies including German utility E.ON AG (EOAN) backed his idea of voluntary tests on nuclear-power plants as soon as possible to reassess safety standards.

The criteria in such tests should include a plant's vulnerability to floods and earthquakes, the availability of backup power-supply systems and the type and age of the reactor, according to the European Commission, the EU's regulatory arm.

French Prime Minister Francois Fillon said checks and tests that will be carried out on French nuclear plants will probably force EDF to invest more in safety systems.

"If a plant were to show the smallest risk, it would be immediately shut," Fillon said on France 2 television on March 17. "The idea that we can make do without nuclear power doesn't make any sense," he said, adding that it would take 30 years to "exit from nuclear" if that decision were to be made.
Low-Carbon Economy

Atomic energy helps the EU diversify its energy mix and plays an important role in the bloc's transition to a low-carbon economy, according to the commission. The bloc wants to cut greenhouse-gas discharges by 20 percent in 2020 and between 80 and 95 percent in 2050.

It's up to EU governments to decide whether to use nuclear power, which is produced in 14 member countries. EU governments in 2009 set their first common standards for the construction and operation of atomic reactors, saying the industry's growth requires steps to ease public anxiety about the risks. A draft law last year would broaden EU safety oversight by setting bloc- wide standards for nuclear-waste disposal.

To contact the reporters on this story: Ewa Krukowska in Brussels at ekrukowska@bloomberg.net; Jonathan Stearns in Brussels at jstearns2@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Stephen Voss at sev@bloomberg.net;

James Hertling at jhertling@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - March 22, 2011 12:54 PM (GMT)

Indian Jesuit Urges Government to Stop Nuclear Production

21 March 2011
http://www.jesuit.org/index.php/2011/03/21...ear-production/

Jesuit Father Ambrose Pinto, principal of St. Joseph's College in Bangalore, India, has suggested that India should drop the idea of relying on nuclear power for energy production and instead use natural sources.

Fr. Pinto's recommendation was prompted by the catastrophe in Japan, which is raising fears of a nuclear meltdown. "Let us unite to tell the government that we do not feel safe with a nuclear program in India," he said.

There are 20 nuclear reactors operating in six plants in India, and another five centers are under construction.

Pinto said nuclear power plants cannot withstand earthquakes and other natural disasters. Despite all possible developments, we cannot dominate nature, he added.

"Having seen the death and destruction in Japan, there is an urgent need to reopen and re-examine the nuclear issue in India," Pinto said. He is in favor of increasing solar, wind and tidal energy. [ucanews.com]

TheUnhivedMind - March 22, 2011 05:39 PM (GMT)

Safety breaches reported at UK nuclear reactors

Inspectors criticise EDF Energy for electricity failures and 'unplanned shutdowns' at its reactors in East Lothian last year

Rob Edwards
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 22 March 2011 11.07 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/environment/2011...safety-breaches

EDF Energy, the company that runs Britain's nuclear power stations, has been reprimanded by government inspectors after a series of safety blunders at reactors in Scotland.

Two reactors at Torness in East Lothian have suffered failures in electricity supplies, several "unplanned shutdowns", and a seaweed blockage. It was the loss of power caused by the earthquake and tsunami that triggered the still unfolding nuclear disaster at Fukushima in Japan.

The revelations have reignited concerns about the safety of Britain's nuclear stations. French-owned EDF Energy admitted that it had not followed the correct procedures, but insisted that there had been no danger to the public.

A report posted online by the UK government's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) discloses that there were two significant safety "events" at Torness in the last three months of 2010. "Correct operational procedures appear not have been observed," says the report.

In one incident, an equipment malfunction cut off the electricity supplied to a gas circulator. Gas circulators are critical components because they ensure that air is kept moving to cool reactor fuel and prevent it from overheating.

The second incident also involved problems with electricity supply, though this time to a radioactive fuel dismantling facility at Torness. According to EDF Energy, the two events, which both occurred last September, were "entirely unconnected".

The NII report says: "The events included contributions from operators not complying in full with the instructions provided to ensure safe limits and conditions are observed during plant operations."

Nuclear inspectors have written to EDF Energy requiring more information about the incidents, and have received a response. The NII is satisfied there is "no immediate safety issue" but has left open the possibility of taking enforcement action in the future.

The report, which covers the final three months of 2010, also reveals that one Torness reactor had "several unplanned shutdowns, requiring action to correct adverse conditions which affected operation of the reactor". This happened after the reactor had restarted after a planned maintenance shutdown.

In addition, the second reactor at Torness had to be manually shut down because the screens that take in seawater for cooling were blocked by a large mass of seaweed. Inspectors identified "a number of areas where further enhancement may be possible" in the safety arrangements for dealing with seaweed.

"These are all events that should ring very loud alarm bells," said Pete Roche, an Edinburgh-based nuclear consultant and editor of the no2nuclearpower.org.uk website. "As we've seen with Three Mile Island, Chernobyl and now Fukushima, a combination of unexpected events all happening at once can quickly lead to a serious accident because of the highly dangerous nature of the fuel used to power these reactors."

The Scottish Nationalist MSP, Shirley-Anne Somerville, said: "EDF Energy must confirm that these issues have been resolved and that they have every measure in place to make sure there are no further problems at the plant."

She added: "The SNP's opposition to nuclear power has been long held and while there are nuclear power stations operating in Scotland we must take every possible step to ensure their safety."

EDF Energy, which owns British Energy, operates eight nuclear power stations across Britain. It is also the lead company bidding to build a new programme of nuclear power stations in England.

The director of Torness, Paul Winkle, argued that the company had a good safety record and welcomed input by the NII. The problems with electricity supplies to the gas circulators occurred because "one piece of a group of equipment failed", he said.

"While power to one gas circulator was removed, others operated as normal, as they are designed to do, and there was, therefore, no possibility of losing cooling."

The issue with power supplies to the radioactive fuel dismantling facility was reported to the NII because "we hadn't followed procedure exactly as we should", he added.

According to Winkle, the seaweed blockage had been predicted by "sophisticated monitoring systems". None of the incidents had caused any danger to staff, plant or the public, he insisted.

TheUnhivedMind - March 22, 2011 06:26 PM (GMT)

At California Nuclear Plant, Earthquake Response Plan Not Required

17 3 11
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/03/16/c...e_n_836751.html

As the world's attention remains focused on the nuclear calamity unfolding in Japan, American nuclear regulators and industry lobbyists have been offering assurances that plants in the United States are designed to withstand major earthquakes.

But the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant, which sits less than a mile from an offshore fault line, was not required to include earthquakes in its emergency response plan as a condition of being granted its license more than a quarter of a century ago. Though experts warned from the beginning that the plant would be vulnerable to an earthquake, asserting 25 years ago that it required an emergency plan as a condition of its license, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission fought against making such a provision mandatory as it allowed the facility to be built.

Officials at Pacific Gas and Electric Company, the utility that operates Diablo Canyon, did not respond to calls seeking comment before the story was published. After publication, a spokesman for the company said the plant does have an earthquake procedure that had been implemented during a 2003 earthquake near the facility, and that staff are trained to respond. The company did not provide further details upon request.

As Americans absorb the spectacle of a potential nuclear meltdown in Japan -- one of the world's most proficient engineering powers -- the regulatory review that ultimately enabled Diablo Canyon to be built without an earthquake response plan amplifies a gnawing question: Could the tragedy in Japan happen at home?

Experts who recall how the California plant came to be erected offer a disconcerting answer: Yes. And some are calling for more urgent government action to review safety at nuclear plants across the country.

"What they're displaying now is exactly what was wrong in the past with the nuclear establishment, which is that they didn't have their priorities right," said Victor Gilinsky, who served on the Nuclear Regulatory Commission during the Diablo Canyon debate and agreed with the call for greater attention to earthquakes in emergency plans. "They're more concerned about the protection of the plants, and installation of further plants, than they are about public safety. The president should be saying, 'I want every single plant reviewed.'"

Back when the California plant was being finalized in the mid-1980s, local activists and environmental lawyers sued the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in an effort to slow the project, arguing that the clear risks from earthquakes nearby required additional planning.

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 04:57 PM (GMT)

Navy to axe 'Fukushima type' nuclear reactors from submarines

Reactors sharing similar design to ones at Japanese plant to be dropped because they fail to meet safety standards

Severin Carrell Scotland correspondent guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 23 March 2011 11.24 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/uk/2011/mar/23/n...uclear-reactors

The Royal Navy is to drop a dangerous type of reactor used in its existing nuclear submarines because it fails to meet modern safety standards, defence ministers have disclosed.

A safer type of reactor is expected to be used in the submarines that will replace the Trident fleet, as the existing design shares very similar features to the nuclear reactors involved in the Fukushima Daiichi disaster in Japan.

Liam Fox, the defence secretary, told MPs there was a "very clear-cut" case to use the new type of reactor because it has "improved nuclear safety" and would give "a better safety outlook".

A heavily censored Ministry of Defence report disclosed earlier this month by the Guardian and Channel 4 News said the current reactors are "potentially vulnerable" to fatal accidents, which could cause "multiple fatalities" among submarine crews.

The report, written by a senior MoD nuclear safety expert, Commodore Andrew McFarlane, said the existing type compared "poorly" with those in the most modern nuclear power stations because it relied on a vulnerable type of cooling system, falling "significantly short" of modern best practice for nuclear reactors.

McFarlane warned that the naval reactors are "potentially vulnerable to a structural failure of the primary circuit". An accident could release "highly radioactive fission products", posing "a significant risk to life to those in close proximity and a public safety hazard out to 1.5km [1 mile] from the submarine".

Known as the PWR2, this type is used in the four Trident submarines based at Faslane, near Glasgow, and six Trafalgar-class ones now being taken out of service. Like the Fukushima power station north of Tokyo, the PWR2 relies entirely on back-up power supplies to provide emergency cooling in the event of an accident.

Despite the anxieties about its safety, PWR2s are also being fitted in the seven Astute-class submarines being built. These vessels will also be based at Faslane.

There have been debates within the MoD and the navy about whether the PWR2 should be used if a replacement to Trident is finally approved – or if a safer type, PWR3, should replace it. The PWR3 uses "passive" cooling, which makes it far less reliant on back-up power, and has additional methods of injecting coolant into a reactor.

The PWR3 is widely used in modern US nuclear submarines. The debate has delayed a decision on what type of reactor to install by 18 months, McFarlane's report disclosed, and has cost a further £261m.

Fox was questioned in the Commons on the reactor's safety by Angus Robertson, the Scottish National party's defence spokesman, after the disclosure of the report. Fox said: "The government's view is that that is the preferred option, because those reactors give us a better safety outlook. That is a debate on both sides of the Atlantic, but we believe that in terms of safety, the case is very clear-cut."

Robertson said: "This still raises concerns about the currently operational and incoming nuclear submarines, which don't satisfy acceptable safety standards. The UK should give up its nuclear obsession."

John Ainslie, from the Scottish Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, who uncovered the original McFarlane report, said the new reactor would push up costs for the Trident replacement fleet by billions of pounds, since it would need designing and testing.

"There is another option: they should completely abandon their plan to squander billions on new nuclear submarines," he said.

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:10 AM (GMT)

Meltdown-or-Not Future for Nuclear Fuel Seen in Refrigerator-Sized Reactor

By John Lippert and Jeremy van Loon - Mar 22, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-22/m...e-reactors.html

Nuclear engineer Jose Reyes jolted awake at 4:45 a.m. on March 11 when his son called to warn him that a massive earthquake had unleashed a tsunami that rocked Japan. Giant waves were heading for the Oregon coast, about an hour from Reyes's Corvallis office.

As news poured in during the next 12 hours that the cooling system at a Tokyo Electric Power Co. nuclear plant had been damaged, Reyes's anxiety grew. People were using the words "potential meltdown" with alarming frequency.

Reyes, 55, who founded NuScale Power Inc. in 2007 to design a slimmed-down, 45-megawatt reactor, contemplated the blot on the already beleaguered nuclear industry -- and the prospects for his nascent company, Bloomberg Markets magazine reports in its May issue.

"We've been hard-pressed but not crushed," he says. "Stopping the progress being made would be a mistake."

Convinced that today's large nuclear projects are burdened by too much financial risk, NuScale is designing and testing a 60-foot-high (18-meter-high) reactor encased in a thermos-like metal sheath. It would cost about $200 million and could be used to light and heat villages, desalinate ocean water or be strung together side by side to form a midsize power plant -- virtually free of carbon emissions. With some investors on board, Reyes plans to ask the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission for a license in late 2012.

“More and more people see small nuclear as a green technology,” he says.
Nuclear Revival

Decades after accidents at Three Mile Island and Chernobyl poisoned attitudes and the environment, Reyes and a cadre of scientists, engineers and investors have been betting that small-scale reactors can spark a nuclear revival.

Hyperion Power Generation Inc. in Santa Fe, New Mexico, is working on 25-megawatt, refrigerator-sized designs for $50 million each that could power remote locations or be used in hospitals and factories. By 2020, Russian nuclear company Rosatom Corp. expects to sell seven barges equipped with twin 35-megawatt reactors for the Arctic and Africa. In Argentina, the government of President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner is clearing ground in the central grasslands for a 25-megawatt prototype planned for 2014.

Microsoft Corp. (MSFT) co-founder Bill Gates is backing a more powerful, 500-megawatt reactor designed by TerraPower LLC in Bellevue, Washington. Its traveling-wave technology uses uranium-238 to fuel a reaction in what functions like a 13-foot-tall candle.
‘Valuable Offering’

“If it works, it’s hard to think of a more valuable offering in the energy space,” says Izhar Armony, a partner at Waltham, Massachusetts-based Charles River Ventures, which invested in TerraPower.

As improbable as it may sound amid the devastation in northeastern Japan, the nuclear accident may increase the appeal of innovative, small-scale reactors, says Chris Gadomski, a Bloomberg New Energy Finance analyst in San Francisco.

“We’re seeing a knee-jerk reaction saying, ‘get rid of nuclear,’ but that’s not going to happen in the long run,” he says. “There is no other good solution if you want to decarbonize the energy sector. As far as small reactors go, these events in Japan will strengthen their hand as opposed to weakening it.”

U.S. Energy Secretary Steven Chu, who won the Nobel Prize in physics in 1997 for using lasers to study atomic particles, has requested $97 million for small-reactor development in fiscal 2012, which begins on Oct. 1. Chu said on March 16 that President Barack Obama’s administration will press ahead with efforts to expand loan guarantees for new reactors.
Nuclear and Coal

Maurice Gunderson, a partner at San Francisco-based CMEA Ventures, invested in NuScale four years ago. He predicts he’ll raise an additional $200 million by June 1, even after the Japanese disaster.

Anti-nuclear sentiments inflamed by leaking radiation at the Fukushima plant may subside over time, he says. More crucial, he says, is that the world has few good options to replace the one-seventh of its electricity that's produced by nuclear reactors.

"Powering a society as large as the one we have means using nuclear power and coal," he says. "Nothing else we have at the present time is big enough to do it in a sustained way. And coal means lopping off mountaintops, air pollution and mining deaths. It's tremendously hazardous."

Burning petroleum spews carbon into the air, and rising prices ripple through the global economy. From Dec. 17, when riots erupted in Tunisia and spread to oil-rich nations in the region, Brent crude for May settlement surged 26 percent to $115.70 a barrel in London on March 22.
No Pumps, External Power

Reyes says his preliminary data show that his reactor would have survived the Japanese earthquake -- and held up under one that shook the ground even harder. NuScale's reactor core is housed inside a vessel that's 10 times stronger than the one in Japan, he says, and that's placed in a pool of water and buried underground.

More important, his design doesn't require pumps or external power to cool the reactor. Fukushima Dai-Ichi reactors, of which Toshiba Corp. (6502) was among the builders, overheated when power sources failed and pumps couldn't deliver cooling water.

NuScale's design relies on so-called passive safety systems that take advantage of natural circulation created by the heating and cooling of water inside and outside the reactor. NuScale's design, which uses about 5 percent of the amount of fuel of the big models, produces less heat after it's idled.

"Keep your core covered with liquid -- that's the rule of thumb," Reyes says.
Last Bit of Hope

The accident in Japan is hurting Toshiba. The company's shares have dropped 17 percent in the days after the earthquake and tsunami to 406 yen on March 22. On March 16, China suspended approval of new nuclear projects and said it would conduct safety inspections of all plants under construction. China has chosen the AP1000 from Toshiba's Westinghouse unit as its flagship, with the first one set to go online in 2013.

Mycle Schneider, a Paris-based nuclear industry analyst who has advised the governments of Belgium, France and Germany on atomic energy, says small reactors would have been vulnerable to the twin forces of Japan's earthquake and tsunami.

"The industry has lost the last remaining bit of hope," he says. Nuclear proponents can't recover by painting rosy views of a carbon-free atomic future, Schneider says. "This was a big one for the nuclear industry," he says.
Consuming Nuclear Waste

New reactor models will arrive too slowly to make a dent in global warming, while used fuel stored in pools of water is a prime terrorist target and safety risk, he says. Permanent waste disposal solutions mean digging into granite or salt and leaving radioactive material for thousands of years.

In the face of such dire predictions, nuclear power has been growing as countries strive to slake mankind's appetite for energy.

The world has 441 reactors, including those at Japan's Fukushima Dai-Ichi facility, with a total of 375,000 megawatts of capacity, the United Nations International Atomic Energy Agency said in September 2010. That provided about 14 percent of the world's power last year. Another 60 reactors are in the works, and output may reach 445,000 megawatts by 2020, the IAEA says.

By 2025, the world could add 36 small reactors, each with 400 megawatts of capacity or less, according to the IAEA. Of the 38 reactors of this size operating today, 34 were built before 1990 and use traditional technology rather than new designs.
TerraPower

TerraPower, the company Gates is backing, aims to build a sodium-cooled reactor by 2020. It would consume spent fuel from conventional plants and generate less waste of its own, addressing a problem that has dogged the industry. TerraPower has spent tens of millions of dollars on research and will need several billion dollars more for a prototype, CEO John Gilleland says.

Toshiba is planning a 10-megawatt model that, if approved, may supply the Alaskan village of Galena. Older, larger Toshiba reactors overheated amid the earthquake when backup systems failed to keep them cool. Toshiba declined to comment on the impact of the accident on its small-scale program.

Babcock & Wilcox Co., Reyes's main competitor in small models, has lined up a customer -- a crucial step before seeking NRC approval for its technology. The Tennessee Valley Authority, a federally owned utility in seven states, may build six small Babcock reactors to provide power for 4,800 Department of Energy researchers in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, says Andrea Sterdis, TVA senior manager for nuclear expansion. Terry Johnson, a TVA spokesman, says it's too soon to say how the Japanese accident may affect small-scale reactor development.
Babcock and TMI

Babcock, which supplied boilers for New York's first subways, also built the reactor for the stricken Three Mile Island nuclear facility near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. In 1979, a commission appointed by U.S. President Jimmy Carter criticized the company for, among other things, failing to notify customers that the kind of coolant valve that caused the Pennsylvania accident had already failed nine other times. Babcock declared bankruptcy in 2000 as a result of legal claims for exposure to asbestos in its power-generating equipment. The company emerged from bankruptcy six years later.

Babcock's new, 125-megawatt reactors would cost about $500 million each and become available as early as 2018, says Christofer Mowry, CEO of Babcock's B&W Modular Nuclear Energy unit. He declined, through a spokesman, to comment on the Fukushima accident.
'Icing on the Cake'

Ben Landy, an analyst at Baltimore-based T. Rowe Price Group Inc., says that Babcock already builds reactors for the U.S. Navy and that the company's boilers and pollution-control equipment for coal plants are competitive strengths.

"If small reactors become a big market, that's icing on the cake," Landy says.

With 14.4 million shares, T. Rowe Price is Babcock's biggest investor. Babcock shares rose 52 percent from Aug. 2, when the company was spun off from McDermott International Inc. (MDR), to $35.09 on March 10, the day before the earthquake. The stock has dropped 9.8 percent since then, to $31.65 on March 22.

Landy says negative publicity over Fukushima may impede large U.S. reactors already fighting to raise money. Buyers may view Babcock's small models as safer, partly because they're buried in the ground, he says.
NRC Gears Up

The NRC has been marshalling resources for when applications for mini-reactors start rolling in, NRC Chairman Gregory Jaczko says. The commission has 50 people who will determine whether the models need the same personnel, security and insurance as big designs and whether operators should pay similar licensing, disposal and decommissioning fees.

The NRC is familiar with NuScale's basic design and is likely to certify it, BNEF's Gadomski predicts. Hyperion's 8- foot-tall models present a tougher security challenge because they're intended for remote locations. Common thieves probably couldn't steal them, but a rogue government could -- and then may convert the uranium into weapons, he says.

Even as Republicans in Congress attacked Obama's energy plan, they left most nuclear programs intact. After Japan's woes, Democrats may be less likely to support the administration's nuclear agenda.

The day after the earthquake, Representative Ed Markey, a Democrat from Massachusetts, called for a moratorium on new plants in seismically active areas until additional safety reviews could be completed. Senator Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, an independent who heads the Senate's Homeland Security Committee, sought a pause until the Japan accident could be analyzed.

Evaluating Risk

The U.S. nuclear industry is already growing more slowly than those of China, Russia and India. Nuclear generating capacity may jump by 77 percent in the Far East, including China, by 2020 compared with 12 percent in North America, the IAEA says. Capacity in Western Europe may drop 24 percent in that period, the agency says.

Most U.S. utilities still see too much risk. Constellation Energy Group Inc. (CEG) abandoned a five-year quest in October for a third big reactor in Lusby, Maryland. Chicago-based Exelon Corp. (EXC), the largest U.S. nuclear operator, with 17 reactors, is reassessing a $3.65 billion plan to raise output at its nuclear plants because the company expects safety reviews by the NRC, CEO John Rowe said on March 16. Marilyn Kray, vice president of nuclear development, says if utilities need power, and can be convinced that small reactors are cost-effective, they may build them at existing nuclear or coal sites, which already have transmission lines and permits.

1,000 Alarms

That thinking meshes with Reyes's plans for NuScale.

Seated in his office near Oregon State University, where two paintings by Austrian artist Friedensreich Hundertwasser lean, unhung, against the wall, Reyes recalls how living through the worst U.S. nuclear accident taught him about scale.

He was working as a safety analyst at the NRC during the partial core meltdown at General Public Utilities Corp.'s Three Mile Island plant in 1979. He studied how operators of the Babcock reactor were baffled by 1,000 alarms going off simultaneously. Today, a plant's key diagnostics fit on one computer screen, he says.

"Simplicity matters," Reyes says.

Reyes began forming his idea for NuScale after he got a DOE grant to develop reactors for emerging markets. He built a mock power plant that resembles a 12-foot-tall chimney to troubleshoot his designs in a four-story garage at Oregon State, where he's on leave from his job as a tenured professor. He decided to commercialize the technology and filed 18 patent applications.

'Right Way to Go'

Reyes, who holds a Ph.D. in nuclear engineering from the University of Maryland, used similar equipment to convince the NRC in 2005 that a $6 billion, 1,117-megawatt behemoth designed by Toshiba's Westinghouse unit was safe partly because, like NuScale's, it relies on passive safety systems. China later adopted Toshiba's design for its future reactors.

“After reviewing all these events in Japan, people may decide that these passive plants might be the right way to go,” Reyes says.

Reyes had been struggling to raise money even before the Japanese crisis. His woes worsened in January, when the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission filed a lawsuit against his biggest backer, Francisco Illarramendi, claiming that Illarramendi transferred money among investment accounts without telling clients.

Worth Billions

Illarramendi, principal owner of Michael Kenwood Group LLC in Stamford, Connecticut, pleaded guilty in March to what the SEC described as a multiyear Ponzi scheme. He could face up to 70 years in prison, prosecutors say. John Gleason, his attorney, declined to comment.

In January, when the lawsuit temporarily froze NuScale’s bank account, CEO Paul Lorenzini fired 30 of 100 employees and hundreds of contractors and cut pay by as much as 50 percent.

One potential investor, Ray Rothrock, who works in Palo Alto, California, for venture firm Venrock Associates, says he passed on NuScale because no one can predict whether or when the NRC will approve its design. The Fukushima accident magnifies the uncertainty, he says.

“This will slow things down, cost money and require the regulatory people to opine on it,” Rothrock says. If NuScale passes its regulatory hurdles, he says, the company will be worth billions of dollars.

Nuclear Batteries

About 1,450 miles (2,333 kilometers) from Reyes’s Oregon lab, in Santa Fe, Hyperion CEO John Deal has been working on what he calls “nuclear batteries” that hospitals, remote communities and oil companies can use for power and heat. Each reactor is designed to run for eight years before Deal retrieves it and drops off a new one.

Deal, 47, worked at Los Alamos National Laboratory, where he says he got the idea to commercialize small nuclear technology, as “resident entrepreneur.” By 2020, Hyperion aims to have a prototype that can operate at 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit (538 degrees Celsius), 400 degrees hotter than water-cooled designs. Hyperion’s lead-bismuth model and sodium-cooled versions from other companies could generate electricity as well as heat for refining bitumen into crude oil or for warming the maternity ward of a hospital.

Deal says his “batteries” offer advantages over the reactors in Japan. They’d spread out power generation rather than concentrating it; they’d be a fraction the size of traditional models; and they’d be buried inside reinforced bunkers designed to withstand earthquakes. Cooling would work by gravity, without pumps.

'Get Out of Berkeley'

"If there is a worst, worst, worst case, all contamination, if any, should be very local and remain in the ground inside the vault," Deal says.

People are likely to accept such security, especially if lack of power means they don't have basic necessities such as clean water, Deal says.

"You have to get out of Berkeley to realize how badly people need electricity," he says, referring to the California college town that has long been a protest hotbed. If the NRC moves too slowly to license his reactor, Deal says, he'll build it overseas.

The planet has 40 years to slice carbon emissions in half or suffer a deadly rise in temperatures, according to the International Energy Agency, which advises the governments of 28 countries, including the U.S.

Nuclear proponents say meeting this challenge requires a cascade of inventions, including reactors that are smaller, safer and cheaper -- even after the crisis in Japan.

"There is still a need for clean energy and for getting away from fossil fuels," Reyes says. "That part of the equation doesn't change."

To contact the reporters on this story: John Lippert in Chicago at jlippert@bloomberg.net Jeremy van Loon in Calgary at jvanloon@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Michael Serrill at mserrill@bloomberg.net or Susan Warren at susanwarren@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - March 27, 2011 10:57 PM (GMT)

US Stores Spent Nuclear Fuel Rods At 4 Times Pool Capacity

Spent fuel pool at the top of a nuclear reactor

By Rady Ananda - Contributing Writer
March 27th, 2011
http://theintelhub.com/2011/03/27/us-store...-pool-capacity/

In a recent interview with The Real News Network, Robert Alvarez, a nuclear policy specialist since 1975, reports that spent nuclear fuel in the United States comprises the largest concentration of radioactivity on the planet: 71,000 metric tons. Worse, since the Yucca Mountain waste repository has been scrapped due to its proximity to active faults (see last image), the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission has allowed reactor operators to store four times more waste in the spent fuel pools than they're designed to handle.

Each Fukushima spent fuel pool holds about 100 metric tons, he says, while each US pool holds from 500-700 metric tons. A single pool fire would release catastrophic amounts of radioactivity, rendering 17-22,000 square miles of area uninhabitable. That's about the size of New Hampshire and Vermont – from one pool fire.

In a March 25th interview, physician and nuclear activist Dr Helen Caldicott explains that "there's far more radiation in each of the cooling pools than there is in each reactor itself…. Now the very short-lived isotopes have decayed away to nothing. But the long-lived ones, the very dangerous ones, Cesium, Strontium, Uranium, Plutonium, Americium, Curium, Neptunium, I mean really dangerous ones, the long-lived ones – that's what the fuel pools hold."

Nuclear waste, in the form of tiny pellets, are loaded into metal rods, that are then bundled into a "fuel assembly." The assemblies are stored inside casements that are then submerged in cooling pools that are located at the top of a nuclear reactor, as the following images reveal:

UO_2
Pellet
Fuel
Rod Fuel Assembly

The image at the top of the article shows an entire pool filled with these assemblies. There are millions of these rods around the planet, reports Reuters.

As a Senior Scholar at the Institute for Policy Studies, Alvarez was part of a multidisciplinary international team that looked at possible terror attacks on nuclear facilities, focusing on the spent fuel storage pools. In 2003, they released a report, Reducing the Hazards from Stored Spent Power-Reactor Fuel in the United States, which calls for transferring the spent fuel from the pools into dry-cask storage. (Summary here.)

The report recommends that 75% of the spent rods be removed from each of the pools and stored in ultra-thick concrete bunkers capable of withstanding aerial impact. The project would take about ten years and would “reduce the average inventory of 137Cs (radioactive cesium) in U.S. spent-fuel pools by about a factor of four.”

The NRC attempted to suppress the IPC report, Alvarez says. “The response by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and nuclear industry was hostile.” But the National Academy of Sciences agreed that a fire in an overloaded fuel pool would be catastrophic. The NRC attempted to block the Academy’s report, as well.

The NRC serves industry, not the public, and by controlling the purse strings, Congress has forced the NRC to “greatly curtail its regulatory programs,” says Alvarez.

Engineer Keith Harmon Snow couldn’t agree more. He recently lambasted the NRC and mainstream media for downplaying the ongoing catastrophe in Japan. He notes that, “The atomic bomb that exploded at Hiroshima created about 2000 curies of radioactivity. The spent fuel pools at Vermont Yankee Nuclear Plant (U.S.) are said to hold about 75 million curies.” [emphasis added]

And that’s just one US nuclear plant, out of 104, not to ignore the undisclosed number of research sites. Then consider that several nuclear plants sit on geologic faults, as this image by Public Integrity reveals:

Also see this global map of earthquake activity and nuclear power plant locations.

Nuclear waste is a serious, deadly and growing problem that the industry refuses to address, preferring to externalize disposal costs onto the public (even suing the US government to clean up its mess for them, under a 1998 law it no doubt favored).

Unless the radioactive waste is laser-launched toward the sun, we're stuck with waste that will contaminate the biosphere for thousands of years, for the measly prize of 25-30 years of electricity, as nuclear activist and mathematician Gordon Edwards so eloquently explained. The risk far outweighs the benefit; this energy choice exemplifies the insanity of the nuclear industry and its government protectors.

TheUnhivedMind - March 27, 2011 10:57 PM (GMT)

http://www.japanquakemap.com/today

TheUnhivedMind - March 31, 2011 11:34 PM (GMT)

Deputy PM Nick Clegg casts doubts over nuclear new build in Cumbria

By Chris Story
Last updated at 13:18, Wednesday, 30 March 2011
http://www.newsandstar.co.uk/news/deputy-p...ferrerPath=news

Fall-out from the Japanese tsunami could throw a potentially devastating blow to hopes of building a new nuclear reactor in west Cumbria.

Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg has reportedly indicated that constructing new atomic plants could be too expensive in the wake of the disaster in Japan.

It has been suggested today that a review into Britain's existing nuclear plants ordered after the explosion at the Fukushima power station could recommend higher and more costly safety standards.

And Mr Clegg is said to have insisted that no extra Government money would be found to need extra costs and has suggested that energy firms would struggle to raise investment as a result of the problems in Japan.

Securing a new generation nuclear reactor is a key plank of economic plans in Cumbria, with up to three electricity-producing reactors planned on 470 acres of farmland outside the existing licensed site at Sellafield.

Government ministers have said that a new generation of plants are needed as part of the energy mix to cut carbon and ensure energy security in the future.

Last year, the green light to eight sites for new nuclear power plants.

But the reported suggestions from the Liberal Democrat leader – perhaps alarming some of the coalition's Tory partners – appear at odds with the views of the Government's former chief scientist.

Professor Sir David King said: "Despite the terrible events in Japan, the economic, safety and carbon case for a new build programme in the UK has never been stronger."

According to a report out yesterday

But the report warned that the industry in the UK was not set up for new nuclear build – and a "holistic" approach was needed which dealt with the legacy of old power plants alongside a new generation of nuclear reactors.

Sir David said: "Currently the UK has a window of opportunity to deal with its nuclear material and spent fuel management and to maximise the value of its existing assets. The renaissance in new nuclear build creates an advantageous way of using these legacy materials as fuel for new nuclear power plants."

Earlier this year, the Government launched a consultation into what to do with plutonium currently stored at Sellafield and Dounreay, including the possibility of recycling it into new fuel.

According to the report, the costs of recycling nuclear materials would be offset to an extent by the value of the new fuels produced, but the costs of disposing of used nuclear fuel would fall to the Government, and therefore the taxpayer.

There is "no cheap, do nothing option", the report warns.

The reuse of materials, and the infrastructure needed for doing so, could increase energy security by generating electricity from existing stocks, save carbon by reducing mining for uranium, increase employment and improve nuclear security, the report said.

First published at 11:26, Wednesday, 30 March 2011
Published by http://www.newsandstar.co.uk

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:24 AM (GMT)

Risk of airplane attack could keep German nuclear plants shut

Mar 31, 2011, 10:51 GMT
http://www.monstersandcritics.com/news/eur...ear-plants-shut

Berlin - German nuclear reactor checks are to consider the risk of terrorist attacks using hijacked planes, the head of a government-appointed panel said Thursday, increasing the likelihood that the country's oldest reactors remain switched off.

Nuclear safety experts think Germany's seven oldest reactors - built before 1980 - would not be able to withstand a direct plane crash, while the cost of reinforcing their hulls would be prohibitive.

Rudolf Wieland, the head of the reactor security commission appointed by Chancellor Angela Merkel, said their tests would consider the speed, impact angle and consequences of a kerosene fire on nuclear power stations.

Environment Minister Norbert Roettgen said the ultimate risk assessment would be a political decision.

'You cannot calculate, using theories of probability, how likely it is that a civilian plane will be hijacked by terrorists and used as a weapon against a nuclear reactor,' Roettgen said.

Wieland said the tests would focus primarily on natural events such as flooding, earthquakes and drought, as well as the risk of power cuts, following Japan's March 11 earthquake and tsunami which damaged Fukushima nuclear reactor.

The team of experts is to present its first report on May 15, a month before the end of a three-month nuclear 'moratorium' announced by Merkel, to assess risks and decide how to proceed with Germany's nuclear programme.

The move - which has temporarily shut down eight of Germany's 17 reactors - puts on ice last year's government decision to extend nuclear power generation by up to 14 years beyond 2022.

More than 300 academics on Thursday demanded an accelerated exit from nuclear technologies in an open letter to Merkel, who is herself a trained physicist.

They wrote that renewable energies and energy-saving technologies could make up for the resulting shortfall in power generation, and that this could save billions of euros by the year 2050.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:25 AM (GMT)

Merkel aide confirms Germany may speed up nuclear shutdown

Mar 30, 2011, 11:27 GMT
http://www.monstersandcritics.com/news/eur...uclear-shutdown

Berlin - An aide to German Chancellor Angela Merkel confirmed Wednesday that her party is likely to speed up the timetable for shutting down all of the country's nuclear power stations, despite warnings that the costs may be massive.

Merkel has attributed the dramatic loss in voter support for her Christian Democratic Union (CDU) in favour of the anti-nuclear Green Party in recent elections to public dismay over the Fukushima nuclear disaster in Japan.

Hermann Groehe, the general secretary of the CDU, told the daily newspaper Die Welt: 'The heads of the coalition government completely agree on the objective: speeding up the closedown. But key details have yet to be decided.'

A new survey by Forsa pollsters shows 21 per cent of Germans would vote Green, a rise of 6 percentage points since the disaster began.

German legislation requires all nuclear power stations to gradually close by 2036. Groehe did not say how much sooner the reactors could be shut down.

The CDU was ousted from power in an election Sunday in a longtime fief, Baden-Wuerttemberg. It has reacted by switching to a nuclear-sceptic stance.

The previous day, the general secretary of the CDU's governing coalition partner, Christian Lindner of the Free Democrats (FDP), said that eight of Germany's 17 nuclear plants currently idled should never be started up again.

Senior officials say that the problem of ending nuclear power within a decade would be the cost, estimated at hundreds of billions of dollars. This would be needed to build overland lines to carry power from vast new wind-turbine farms to main cities.

A tax on nuclear power was supposed to pay for the new grid, but a rapid closedown would mean minimal proceeds from such a levy.

Hans-Peter Keitel, president of the German Industry Confederation (BDI), warned that hiking power bills to pay for the grid could cripple Germany.

'We have to watch out in this debate about nuclear energy that our economic success does not slip out of the picture,' he told Stern magazine in an interview.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:26 AM (GMT)

Bomb at Swiss nuclear industry office injures 2

31 Mar 2011
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/2011-03...land-bomb_N.htm

GENEVA (AP) — A letter bomb has exploded at an office of the Swiss nuclear power industry in the northern city of Olten, injuring two people, police said Thursday.

The explosion happened shortly after 8 a.m. as staff were opening the morning's post in the fourth-floor office of Swissnuclear, said police spokeswoman Thalia Schweizer.

Swissnuclear is a lobby group representing national power companies Axpo, Alpiq and BKW.

Schweizer said the two staff members had been taken to a hospital but their injuries appeared to be superficial.

Opponents of nuclear power in Switzerland have become more vocal in recent weeks as images of the stricken Fukushima reactor in Japan appear on the evening news bulletins daily.

Switzerland has five nuclear reactors currently in operation.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:35 AM (GMT)

German FDP now favours shutting 7 reactors for good

Tue Mar 29, 2011 10:34am GMT
http://af.reuters.com/article/energyOilNew...T00612420110329

BERLIN, March 29 (Reuters) - Germany should permanently shut the seven nuclear plants built before 1980 that the government temporarily idled earlier this month, the deputy leader of Free Democrats said on Tuesday.

Christian Lindner, general secretary of the FDP that is junior coalition partners to Chancellor Angela Merkel's Christian Democrats, said after a Sunday election defeat that the FDP now favours permanently shutting the seven reactors.

Germany has a total of 17 reactors. Merkel's government passed legislation last year to extend the lifespan of the 17 nuclear plants by an average of 12 years beyond a previous 2022 cutoff date. The FDP has been strongly pro-nuclear until now.

(Reporting by Thorsten Severin; writing by Brian Rohan and Erik Kirschbaum)

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 01:04 AM (GMT)

Cuba's Only Nuclear Reactor Is Crumbling

Posted: 03/28/11
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/yoani-sanche...r_b_841058.html

In our little room, he told us that morning about the time he had spent in the USSR. He'd only been in Havana a few hours, after an Aeroflot plane had brought him back from his long sojourn in the land of Gorbachev. The gothic letters on his diploma showed he'd graduated from the university in some kind of engineering my childish mind couldn't understand. It was the first time I'd heard about the Juraguá nuclear reactor, which was built in Cienfuegos in 1983. The recent arrival's voice described an enormous VVER 440 reactor located in central Cuba as if it were a live dragon breathing its whiffs on us. Hundreds of young people, trained in research centers nearly 6,000 miles from home, would work there as atomic scientists. Millions and millions of rubles arriving from the Kremlin helped to construct what would be the pinnacle of our "tropical socialism," the fundamental pillar of our energy independence.

Later I learned that this young enthusiast never worked as a nuclear engineer. The Soviet Union was dismembered just as the first of two planned reactors was 97% complete. Grass covered a good part of the site, and exposure to the elements broke down everything from pieces of the core, to the steam generators, the cooling pumps and the isolation valves. Juraguá became a new ruin, a monument to the delusions of grandeur left us by Soviet imperialism.

With his graying temples, while cutting metals in his new career as a lathe operator, the one-time expert told me now, "It was lucky we didn't start it up." According to what he and his colleagues had calculated, the chances of an nuclear accident at Juraguá were 15% more than at any other nuclear plant in the world. "We would have ended up with the island cut in half," he said dramatically. I imagined a piece of the nation here and another over there, while a stubbornly smoking hole changed our national geography.

Now that the plant in Fukushima is spreading its residues, and with them fear, I can't but rejoice that the Cienfuegos reactor has not awakened, that under the concrete sarcophagus a nuclear reaction hasn't started. Thinking about all that has happened, all of our current problems seem small to us, insignificant trifles compared to the horrifying spread of radioactivity.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 04:50 PM (GMT)

Nuclear energy firm RWE sues German state of Hesse

Closing the Biblis nuclear power plant was unjustified, RWE said

1 April 2011 Last updated at 10:45
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-12933596

German energy giant RWE is taking legal action against the state of Hesse after being ordered to shut down a nuclear power plant for three months.

The order came soon after an earthquake and tsunami caused a nuclear emergency in Japan.

RWE said the reactors were safe so the state had no reason to disrupt its energy generating activities.

The company also said the state of Hesse had no legal authority to order it to close the Biblis nuclear plant.

"According to RWE's legal interpretation, the government has no grounds to its legal basis to take measures according to paragraph 19 of nuclear law," RWE said in a statement.

The Biblis plant was shut down as part of an industry-wide moratorium after German Chancellor Angela Merkel ordered additional safety checks on Germany's seven oldest nuclear power plants following the crisis in Japan.

The EU has also reached agreement on "stress tests" of all European nuclear facilities.

E.On, a rival to RWE, said it would not challenge the decision.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 06:17 PM (GMT)

Cover-up of Japan knowledge based on Chernobyl it would seem:

QUOTE

French seek to drop probe into Chernobyl fallout

Mar 31 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...09a53ceaf667bb1

PARIS (AP) — A French prosecutor wants to drop a decade-long investigation into the fallout in France from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident, citing lack of proof that it caused health problems.

The prosecutor argued in a Paris hearing Thursday that the probe has been inconclusive and should be abandoned, according to a judicial official. The official was not authorized to be named because the hearing was closed to the public.

The hearing came amid global worries about the risks of fallout from Japan's nuclear disaster, as Japanese authorities struggle to contain radiation from reactors destroyed by the earthquake and tsunami earlier this month.

Investigators said that the head of the French radiation safety agency at the time of the Chernobyl accident deliberately misled the public by minimizing the health risks in France from the radioactive cloud it produced.

The safety agency chief, Pierre Pellerin, is the only person who has been handed preliminary charges in the case. He has insisted on his innocence, and the prosecutor said there was no evidence he misled the public on purpose.

Researchers and cancer victims accuse the government of downplaying the effects of the Chernobyl explosion, partly to protect France's powerful nuclear industry. A few dozen people, including thyroid disease victims, staged a protest Thursday near the courthouse.

French authorities have been widely ridiculed for insisting after the Chernobyl accident that the radiation did not reach France, though neighboring countries all said it passed through their skies. Other European countries pulled milk from shelves or recommended that children take iodine tablets to reduce radiation risks, while France took none of these steps.

French government agencies have adjusted some of their initial radiation estimates since the accident, but deny any intentional deception.

The Paris appeals court will decide Sept. 7 whether to abandon the investigation. Until that decision is made, the probe is effectively frozen.

Since the Japanese nuclear troubles began, French nuclear safety authorities have taken pains to soothe the French public about potential risks, holding daily press conferences for two weeks after the tsunami.

The court hearing comes amid renewed questions about the safety of nuclear plants, and second thoughts by many countries about re-investing in nuclear energy. France is the world's most nuclear energy-dependent country, with more than 70 percent of its electricity coming from nuclear reactors and has been at the forefront of a recent so-called nuclear renaissance.

TheUnhivedMind - April 5, 2011 05:17 PM (GMT)

UK nuclear plans on hold after Fukushima

A programme of nuclear power stations will be delayed by at least three months awaiting report on Japan disaster

Rob Edwards
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 5 April 2011 17.39 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/environment/2011...-plan-fukushima

The government's plans to build a new programme of nuclear power stations in England will be delayed by at least three months so that lessons can be learned from the accident at Fukushima in Japan.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and the Environment Agency (EA), which are jointly assessing the safety of proposed reactor designs, have said this year's deadline for completing the assessments will now not be met.

The two regulatory agencies said that they would not come to any conclusions in June as had been promised. Instead they will wait for a final report on the implications of Fukushima, by the chief nuclear inspector, Mike Weightman, due in September.

Weightman has been asked by the energy and climate change secretary, Chris Huhne, to examine the lessons that could be learned from the Japanese accident, triggered by an earthquake and a tsunami last month. Until now it had not been clear how this would impact on the "generic design assessment" of reactors which the HSE and EA have been working on since 2006.

In a joint statement, the two agencies said: "Safety and protection of people and the environment will always be our top priority. It is important that we take the necessary time needed to ensure that we learn any relevant lessons emerging from the events in Japan, and implement any improvements that might be required to the new reactor designs." New reactors cannot be built until the regulators are satisfied they are safe.

A spokesman for the Department of Energy and Climate Change said the Weightman's recommendations should be taken into account.

"It's too early to say exactly what impact this will have on the overall timeline. We're continuing with our facilitative actions to encourage investment to come forward as soon as possible," he said.

But this was in marked contrast to a statement by the climate change minister, Greg Barker. He was quoted by Bloomberg as saying that Fukushima would cause no "material delay" to Britain's nuclear power programme.

The French company that wants to build its EPR design of power station, EDF Energy, has been previously quoted as saying that any delays due to Fukushima would be "minimal". The US firm, Westinghouse, is bidding to build differently designed AP1000 reactors.

Last October the UK government gave the initial go-ahead for new nuclear stations at eight sites around the coast of England and Wales. Last week, the Guardian revealed that ministers were being taken to court over allegations that cancer risks had not been properly evaluated.

The Nuclear Industry Association, which represents UK nuclear companies, said that the regulators' announcement was "correct". A spokesman said: "We should take time to review and learn the lessons of the Japanese crisis, while at the same time recognising that new nuclear development is essential for the UK."

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 04:05 PM (GMT)

Poland determined to build nuclear power stations

Poland's centre-right government wants first two nuclear reactors to produce a tenth of the country's energy

Julia Kollewe in Warsaw
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 5 April 2011 16.54 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/0...clear-programme

Poland is determined to push on with plans to build its first generation of nuclear power stations over the next decade despite the Japanese reactor crisis sparking a global reassessment of the controversial energy source.

In an interview, Treasury minister Aleksander Grad told the Guardian: "Of course it's time to review and analyse [safety] carefully but it wouldn't be right to make a rash decision, a 180 degree turn."

"Poland is not at risk of earthquakes and tsunamis. The problem in Japan was not the power plants themselves, but the earthquake. We need to make a decision based on rational analysis and not emotions."

The nuclear disaster in Fukushima has sparked public debates about the future of nuclear power around the world and Germany temporarily shut down seven of its oldest reactors pending a safety review.

Grad said the centre-right government wants Poland's first two nuclear reactors to produce a tenth of the country's energy. Most of it comes from coal and gas, as well as renewables such as wind farms.

Poland is in the middle of privatising some of its biggest energy companies, as part of a privatisation spree that started 20 years ago and transformed Poland's socialist state to a market economy. Many banks were privatised in the 1990s, and the Polish telecoms group TPSA was sold to France Telecom in 2000.

More than 800 companies were put on the privatisation list in 2008 and so far 440 have been privatised. The list includes large companies such as the airline Lot which could be sold by the end of the year, as well as hundreds of smaller firms.

The Treasury minister, who is in charge of the sell-offs, said: "The scope of the privatisation programme is unprecedented in the whole region of central and eastern Europe. We carried on throughout the crisis even though some projects were put on hold."

However, the government has run into some problems recently. Last Friday it abandoned plans to sell a 51% stake in Enea, Poland's third-largest energy group, after bidders, which included France's EDF, did not meet its requirements.

Price was not an issue, said Grad, but pointed to the government's condition not to break up the company and corporate governance requirements. "When the time is right, we will relaunch the process," he said.

Poland aims to raise some 15bn zloty (£3.25bn) from sell-offs of state assets this year. It needs the privatisation proceeds to cut its budget deficit, which amounts to nearly 8% of GDP. The government of prime minister Donald Tusk has also reined in public spending but ruled out tax hikes, which would be embarrassing given his 2007 election promise to lower taxes.

Some 20 companies, mainly in the energy and infrastructure sectors, will remain in state ownership, including PGE, Poland's bigger power group, which will build its nuclear reactors. Grad expressed some impatience with the speed of the privatisation programme, after a slowdown under the two previous Polish governments.

"After 20 years of transformation we should have this process behind us," he said. "When I look at the small and medium-sized businesses, these are sectors the Treasury should have exited many years ago. Not every government sees this as a priority. There was a period when the process stalled, but the past three years have been quite successful."

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:37 PM (GMT)

Nuclear Power Plant Plans in Turkey Angers Neighbors

April 2, 2011 6:24 PM
By Laura Phillips

http://www.thirdage.com/news/nuclear-power...ghbors_4-2-2011

Nuclear power plant plans in Turkey close to an earthquake-prone area are angering neighboring countries who fear that the plant could be a risk to the whole Mediterranean region.

Dismissing claims that a new plant near fault lines could create a similar situation to Japan's current crisis, Turkish officials insist the plant is a safe and will be necessary to keep the country's strong economy going. Greece and Cyprus say the plan is a gamble and want the European Union to scrutinize the idea.

The EU is reassessing the whole 27-nation bloc's energy policy and questioning the role of nuclear power on land where the 1986 Chernobyl disaster still haunts its habitants.

Turkey is standing by its plans to build three nuclear power plants in the coming years, including one at Akkuyu on the Mediterranean coast, close to the Ecemis Fault, where experts say a 7-magnitude earthquake is possible.

"Nuclear power for us is not an option because we are in a highly seismically active region," Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou said in Brussels last week. "The EU will ask for stress tests to be carried out at existing and planned facilities in neighboring countries — and we stressed the fact that Turkey is planning to build a nuclear site at Akkuyu."

Turkey says the 1,200-megawatt Russian pressurized water reactor, the VVER-1200 — a new model yet to be operated anywhere in the world — will be quake-proof and meets the highest nuclear safety standards.

Turkey has already signed a deal with Russia's Rosatom agency for the plant's construction, which has yet to begin, and hopes the completed facility will start producing electricity in seven years.

Turkish Energy Minister Taner Yildiz says the high-end technology used in the construction of the Akkuyu plant will make it safer than Fukushima, which began operating in 1971. At Fukushima, nuclear engineers scrambled to prevent a total and simultaneous reactor meltdown at three reactors while dealing with overheating fuel rods in a damaged storage pool at a fourth reactor.

"I would not say 'yes' to anything that I was not comfortable about," Yildiz said.

Hundreds of protesters against the nuclear plant plans have marched in Istanbul, holding banners that read: "Don't let Akkuyu become Fukushima."

Greek President Karolos Papoulias agreed with protesters saying "the irrational insistence of Turkey to build a nuclear plant in a highly seismic region" endangers the safety of everyone in the region and "must be answered directly."

Others disagree, saying fears of a strong earthquake near the nuclear power plant may be exaggerated.

"It is possible, but with low probability," said professor Mustafa Erdik of the Istanbul-based Kandilli Quake Research Institute and Observatory, who has studied the fault line near the plant. "I don't think there will be any problem regarding the location and quake-design of the nuclear plant."

Erdik did add that there was need for further scientific study since he last examined the site in 1987.

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:40 PM (GMT)

Thousands demonstrate in Germany over nuclear power

Apr 2, 2011, 15:44 GMT
http://www.monstersandcritics.com/news/eur...r-nuclear-power

Berlin - More than 10,000 people demonstrated across Germany on Saturday against the continued use of nuclear power, in the wake of Japan's ongoing nuclear emergency.

Police counted more than 6,000 demonstrators in the city of Bremen, as well as 3,000 in Essen, where nuclear plant operator RWE is based, and 1,000 people in the southern city of Regensburg.

A further 1,000 protesters gathered at a nuclear waste depository in Gorleben, in the north of the country.

The demonstrators demanded not only that reactor security must be checked in lights of events in Japan, where radiation has leaked from a facility damaged after a March 11 earthquake and tsunami, but also called upon the government to re-evaluate the safety of sites selected to store nuclear waste.

Most Germans oppose nuclear power generation, and the issue played a key role in state elections last weekend, which dealt a blow to Chancellor Angela Merkel's centre-right coalition.

Following events in Japan, Merkel ordered the suspension of activity at Germany's oldest reactors and extensive tests at all 17 nuclear generators before re-evaluating the future use of the technology in Germany.

Many Germany feel these steps do not go far enough, and demand an immediate phaseout of nuclear power.

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:41 PM (GMT)

All ready for when the U.S. becomes the World's biggest oil producer and exporter shortly. See what they're doing?

QUOTE

Germany turns power importer after nuclear freeze

FRANKFURT/HANOVER | Mon Apr 4, 2011 6:55am EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/04/04/...E7331M820110404

(Reuters) - Germany has become a net importer of power mainly from France and the Czech republic since its nuclear moratorium, which involves seven old reactors been shut for at least three months, utility industry association BDEW said on Monday.

With France deriving more than 80 percent of its electricity and the Czech Republic around a quarter from nuclear sources, it is ironical that Germany is replacing its politically-inspired aversion to nuclear with power imports from those two countries.

BDEW at meetings during the Hanover industrial fair said since the March 17 order by the government to close nuclear units of around 7,000 megawatts (MW) capacity, the country had turned a net importer of 50 gigagwatt hours (GWh) a day.

Prior to this, a scenario typical of March had been in place, involving net exports of 70 to 150 GWh a day.

"Power imports from France and the Czech Republic have doubled, those into the Netherlands and Switzerland have halved," it said.

In addition to the seven units built before 1980 and two Vattenfall Europe reactors which had been down since 2007, E.ON's Grafenrheinfeld nuclear plant is also shut for routine maintenance.

Wholesale prices of German quarterly power in 2011 have risen by 12 percent, as has the benchmark contract for round-the-clock power supply in 2012, BDEW said.

Carbon emissions prices have also risen by 10 percent.

BDEW added the current scenario may change.

"In the medium term, other strategies may be used, for example greater exploitation of existing, conventional domestic capacity (coal and gas-based)," it said.

"This will depend among other things on the central European merit order," it added. Merit order is a market mechanism whereby the first plants to be brought online are those with the lowest marginal costs.

(Reporting by Vera Eckert; editing by James Jukwey)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: White House operative heading 'birther' smear

Title: White House operative heading 'birther' smear Description: Campaign?

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

White House operative heading 'birther' smear campaign?

Former Fannie Mae chief allegedly manages 100-strong attack team from Pennsylvania Ave

Posted: July 19, 2011
By Jerome R. Corsi
http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=323913

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bohemian Grove mystery broken down

Title: Bohemian Grove mystery broken down

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:18 AM (GMT)

Bohemian Grove mystery broken down

Published: 19 July, 2011, 01:34 http://rt.com/usa/news/bohemian-grove-broken-woods/

It’s nestled among the Redwoods in the woods of California. 2,700 acres of pristine land broken down into dozens of camps

And for two weeks every July since the 1880s, they have been filled with some of the most wealthy and powerful men in the world.

Many of them arrive on their corporate jets at the nearby Sonoma County Airport. Others arrive in fancy cars which fill the on-site parking lot. At its height, there is said to have been more than 2,000 men who attended and, as you can imagine, they are well protected by a trove of police. Access is by invitation only, and most pay more than $15,000 to attend.

For more than 35 years, protesters have stood at the entrance gates.

"Our concern is not what's going on inside the Grove, but what's happening outside the Grove with the people that are in here," Brian Romanoff, a picketer, tells The History Channel.

According to several reports, this is where for the idea for the Manhattan Project was conceived back in 1942. It’s also where every Republican president since the 60s has spent time before actually becoming the nominee.

“We know for sure that Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan sat down and had conversation about who was going to run for president when and they made a deal,” said Sonoma State University sociology professor Peter Phillips.

Phillips wrote his dissertation on the Bohemian Club in 1994 and was invited to attend for four days. He witnessed first-hand the opening event — the Cremation of Care, where the power elite leave their cares behind in a symbolic ceremony beneath Mollock the Owl.

Jed Jenkel said he was a paid employee of the Grove and drove the horse and buddy that carried a casket during the ceremony.

“The casket represented their cares and they would actually burn it along the lake with music,” said Jenkel.

Mary Moore, co-founder of Bohemian Grove Action Network, unearths a photograph from the summer of 2007, when a talk was given called “Afghanistan, the unexpected upside.” Seven months later, President Obama called for 20,000 new troops to be sent overseas.

There are other connection to be made as well, between the lakeside talks and public policies that follow.

There are rumors of extreme drunkenness, prostitutes and homosexual activities by members. But for the most part, it is the secret back room agreements critics say should be brought to light.

For Mary Moore, who has been researching Bohemian Grove for more than three decades, what happens inside here is symptomatic of a much larger problem.

“We're all told that we elect representatives…they go to Washington, we have total influence of them and they make decisions that are in the best interests of us,” says Moore.

“Then we start growing up and if we pay any kind of attention we find out that none of this is true.”

Despite the protests, the rich and powerful elite continue to make their way to the woods of California for the annual retreat. And who has found their way to Bohemian Grove this year? Radio host Alex Jones infiltrated the camp-out in the past and says that his insiders are revealing a who’s who in America.

“You’ve got more and more of the leadership of Google, Yahoo, Microsoft and Apple . . . at the Grove, and more and more of the establishments counting on their technocracies,” says Jones.

This year, he said, in addition to corporate big-wigs and political powerhouses, names like Tom Cruise and Mark McGuire sign their name to the guest book. With 1,000 plus people from all walks of the rich coming to Sonoma County, however, you won't see the media reporting on it.

"These are the power brokers," says Jones. "And they want to be left alone."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Restore America Plan (T.R.A.P.)

Title: The Restore America Plan (T.R.A.P.)

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:18 AM (GMT)

The Restore America Plan (T.R.A.P.)

http://www.governamerica.com/dailydialecti...l&id=1303239792

Roger Mundy can be contacted at the following e-mail address:
roger(at)governamerica(dot)com
[Note: Address spelled out to foil spammers. Replace words in parentheses with the appropriate symbols.]

By Roger Mundy
Coalition to Govern America
April 19, 2011

What is called ‘ The Restore America Plan (T.R.A.P.) is occurring in meetings across America in order to collect signatures (and thumbprints) on forms entitled:

“Declaration of Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power”. (The ‘Declaration’)

Sui juris;
"of one's own right"

Liberty and Justice for All

Affirmed; Declaration of Independence
July 4, 1776

Ad Astra per Aspera
"To the Stars with Difficulty"

Declaration of Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power

In The Beginning Almighty God created all men equal; that they are created with Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights. A free state is established when one people join together in a common unity to secure their natural God-given rights and sovereignty. To secure their sovereignty and right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; to be exercised by elected officials as surrogate power for the free state.

When surrogate power officials assume the rights of sovereign Indigenous Power as supreme; a free state inverts into a state which usurps the sovereignty of the people and they become mere subjects of mandatory conformity, victims of suppression of natural rights and tyranny. Corrupted surrogate power has no indigenous authority of its own, therefore, I declare by Almighty God in peaceable One People Assembly:

Covenant Affirmation

I am created equal to all men with Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power. I solemnly affirm, publish and declare; I am absolved from all political allegiance foreign to these free and independent united States of America. With a firm reliance on the protection of Divine providence, in One People Assembly; I affirm:

I am local to _____ free state Settlement; lawfully settled in _____ County (free state lawfully settled in) (County Settlement)

Settlement and in Order to form a more perfect free state, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common Defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty for our Posterity and free state; I consent to uphold and keep the Peace or delegate power of Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power by county and free state Settlement Constitution for the lawful Protections, Freedoms, and Rights of the sovereign people in these free and independent united States of America. In support to this Declaration, with a firm reliance on Divine Providence we mutually pledge our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor. By autograph signature under Witness Protection my Declaration of Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power is supreme.

(Seal – Put your Right Thumb ink print at the end of last name)

Please write legibly.

Autograph Signature	First Middle Last (No unusual punctuation)	Date
Printed Name	First Middle Last (No unusual punctuation)
Address		City, State
Phone		Email
Witness #1 Autograph Signature	Full Name (No unusual punctuation)	Date
Witness #2 Autograph Signature	Full Name (No unusual punctuation)	Date
Witness #3 Autograph Signature	Full Name (No unusual punctuation)	Date

The Declaration of Sovereign Rights for Indigenous Peoples that attendees are required to sign as a condition to attend subsequent meetings. If they don't sign, they can't attend. The form is a legal contract, complete with three witnesses and a place to affix the signer's thumbprint.

Once signed and “registered” with the World Court, the legal standing of those who sign is fundamentally degraded, and at a minimum, their right of property ownership is placed in the hands of that court.

The Trap [a dialectic]

The T.R.A.P. has two jaws that snap shut on the victim once it is triggered by signature. These jaws are the legal terms: “surrogate” [thesis] and “indigenous” [antithesis] that have meanings entirely different in the eyes of the court from the meanings instilled in the minds of the signers. These alternate meanings are instilled in the minds of those targeted for signatures by facilitators at the meetings and by literature distributed by them The result is the people sign something that means something entirely different than they believe.

The Jaws of the Trap:

“Indigenous” [antithesis]

The meaning of ‘indigenous power’ instilled into the minds of those targeted for signatures is basically the concept of the power that the people should have over their ‘servants’ in a republican form of government.

The people are deceived into believing they are declaring themselves as full members of the ‘sovereign’ entity called “these free and independent united States of America.” What they are actually declaring is that they are full members of “indigenous” peoples in “settlements” that are in specific counties and “local to” specific states.

These ‘terms’ are immediately recognizable by the court as a declaration of legal standing virtually identical with that held by Native American tribes – who hold their “Sovereign Rights” “by Indigenous Power”.

Native Americans hold the title of their lands as a “mere possession not specifically recognized as ownership and may be extinguished by federal government at any time” (Black’s Law Dictionary, 6th ed. 3- under “Indian Title”)

“Surrogate” [thesis]

The meaning of ‘surrogate power’ that is instilled into the minds of those targeted for signatures is the concept of representative government – whose members are meant to be the servants of the people.

Those who sign the ‘Declaration’ are led to believe they are taking a stand against corrupt government that abuses the power delegated to them by the people. They believe that by signing and registering these ‘Declaration’(s) with the world court they will gain a kind of legal force against that corruption.

What they are actually signing in the eyes of the court (along with their standing as conquered peoples – like the Indians) contains many elements in relation to surrogate. The court recognizes 'surrogate' as a synonym for 'probate', and therefore "surrogate power" as "probate jurisdiction"; and "surrogate power officials as "probate jurisdiction judicial officers."

"Surrogate" – "The name given in some states to the judges or judicial officer who has jurisdiction over the administration of probate matters…wills…estates…appoint guardians…liquidating assets."

(Black's Law Dictionary, 6th ed.; see 'surrogate' & 'probate')

The first use of 'surrogate' in the 'Declaration' is crafted to show a description of "the just powers" of government identifiable as the original 'these united States of America". Followed by a semi-colon is a definition of "The United States". This second definition describes the United States coming to exercise the powers of the original 'these united States of America" 'by elected officials' in probate jurisdiction on behalf of "the free states".

This statement of the probate nature of the federal government towards "these united States of America" is the main theme [thesis] of the 'Declaration'.

It becomes more obvious in the next section that the Declaration is not meant to be understood by its signers, because of the outrageous statement that the United States overthrows 'the free state' and creates tyranny when they uphold Native American rights "as supreme". This has never happened, but it tells the court that the signers know they are accepting an inferior legal standing.

In the section that contains their oath they rescind their former 'political allegiance' (legal standing) to the entity called 'the United States', while retaining allegiance to "these United States", not as full members of "these united States", but as Native Americans.

What follows in the 'Declaration' is what is required of all conquered peoples – a Surety of Peace:

"Surety of the Peace"

A species of preventative justice, and consists in obliging those persons whom there is probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not take place, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior." (Black's law – 6th ed.)

All aspects of a 'surety of the peace' are found in the 'Declaration':

-" ….give full assurance to the public …" is found in many 'assurances' leading up to and especially including "I consent to uphold and keep the Peace..."

-"by finding pledges and securities…" is found in the fact that every 'new' Native American signs the Declaration.

-"securities" is found in - "I consent to …delegate power of Sovereign Rights held by Indigenous Power by country and free state Settlement Constitution."

This clause is the very heart of the 'Declaration' – it is the purpose of the effort to get signatures. It is permission to 'subrogate' the title of their property into different hands than 'the United States; and it is why the 'Declaration' is in terms of probate.

"Subrogate"

"The substitution of one person in the place of another with influence to a lawful claim, demand or right so that he who is substituted succeeds to the rights of the other in relation to the debt or claim, and its rights, remedies, or securities".

(Black's Law 6th ed.)

Since Native American tribes hold the title of their property 'as a mere possession not … ownership …(that) may be extinguished by federal government at any time'. The World Court may subrogate the title of these new properties to others. This is part of the liquidation of assets held by the United States, which follows the failure of the reorganized bankruptcy of the United States.

The Trigger [synthesis]

The trap is sprung with the signing of the 'Declaration'. Meeting attendees are told they will not be invited to the next meeting, unless they sign. Perhaps a few more signatures mean bigger commissions for those who facilitate these meetings. I have a feeling the World Court was ready to rubberstamp these 'Declaration'(s) even before The Restore America Plan was launched. Perhaps there will be another series of meetings to make it easier to round up these new Native Americans to relocate them to their new reservations.

Possible Scenario

If there are enough signatures produced by the trap, is it possible that some higher authority will construe the 'Declaration'(s) as the voice of the people in representative assembly – and we all find ourselves under the presumption that we are Native Americans waiting to be relocated? This idea is certainly in keeping with The 'Rewilding of America': America rewilded and all of its inhabitants as Native Americans relocated to reservations run by FEMA. This would more truly "Restore America" but not to 1787, or 1776, but closer to 1492 – when European conquerors first planted their flags here. In their eyes, all they saw before them was wilderness and 'Indians."

The Source of the Trap

A man called Clive Cleveland, the main speaker at a local meeting of T.R.A.P.; who is a partner of Seminar Crowds, Inc. has taken the blame for the glossy magazine "Common Sense Revisited" – which can be purchased and was available at the meeting. It is a printed form of the dialectic used to instill the alternative meanings of "surrogate" and "indigenous" into the minds of those targeted for signatures.

However, he is not the source of these concepts. Item 16 on the "References" page states: "The concept of indigenous and surrogate power attributed to Glenda Green."

An Internet search produced much about Glenda, whom I have nicknamed 'Glenda the Good Witch'. Her website, www.lovewithoutend.com, describes "Her spiritual writings and teaching… have come from inspired collaboration with 'Jeshua, " (Jesus)'."

"Jeshua first appeared to Glenda in 1991, manifesting from a field of light … subsequently they began to enjoy daily communion."

Part of what Jesus said to her: "The moment surrogate power assumes the rights of indigenous power, corruption will begin…Under such oppressive conditions nothing works better than a declaration of sovereign rights held by indigenous power" (Love Without End, Jesus Speaks, Glenda Green 1999)

Glenda is a bishop of the Spiritis Church. The 'Declaration' reflects the Gnostic doctrine of the Spiritis Church. Here I invite researchers to investigate the admitted ties that the priesthood of the Spiritis Church has with: Mind Control, High Masonry, Catholic Orders, etc. (www.OriginalChurch.org)

To those who have signed the 'Declaration of Sovereign Rights Held By Indigenous Power', there is a way to un-spring the trap. It is found only in God's sovereignty. Sovereignty has been defined as supreme, absolute, unaccountable, and uncontrollable power. Sovereignty belongs to God alone. All other sovereignties are surrogates without authority.
For Further Research:

Spiritis Church Bio page showing Glenda Greene and her husband, Larry Jensen, as "key officials"

Larry Jensen's website bragging that "he was a consultant to Jose Silva of Silva Mind Control"

Clyde Cleveland was a speaker at the meetings where the forms are presented for signatures. This bio on the official Common Sense Revisited website, states that he is the author of the "Common Sense; Revisited" document, and he is also co-founder and President of a "marketing" group. He also is involved in financial services and insurance industries. The page also says he was a delegate to the Continental Congress '09, held by Bob Schulz' We The People Foundation. When asked about the purpose of the Continental Congress, Schulz admitted to being a "a facilitator" on the Govern America radio broadcast. A "facilitator" is a paid change-agent whose job is to dialogue opposing groups into a pre-determined consensus. For more on this, see the "Delphi Technique". For more on info on Schulz, see "An Open Letter to Bob Schulz"

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Man's call for Obama assassination is free speech,

Title: Man's call for Obama assassination is free speech,
Description: not crime, court rules

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:17 AM (GMT)

Man's call for Obama assassination is free speech, not crime, court rules

July 19, 2011 | 4:27 pm
http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/lanow/2011...ourt-rules.html

A La Mesa man who posted racial epithets and a call to "shoot" Barack Obama on an Internet chat site was engaging in constitutionally protected free speech, a federal appeals court ruled Tuesday in overturning his criminal conviction.

Walter Bagdasarian was found guilty two years ago of making threats against a major presidential candidate in comments he posted on a Yahoo.com financial website after 1 a.m. on Oct. 22, 2008, as Obama's impending victory in the race for the White House was becoming apparent. Bagdasarian told investigators he was drunk at the time.

A divided panel of the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals overturned that conviction Tuesday, saying Bagdasarian's comments were "particularly repugnant" because they endorsed violence but that a reasonable person wouldn't have taken them as a genuine threat.

The observation that Obama "will have a 50 cal in the head soon" and a call to "shoot the [racist slur]" weren't violations of the law under which Bagdasarian was convicted because the statute doesn't criminalize "predictions or exhortations to others to injure or kill the president," said the majority opinion written by Judge Stephen Reinhardt.

"When our law punishes words, we must examine the surrounding circumstances to discern the significance of those words' utterance, but must not distort or embellish their plain meaning so that the law may reach them," said the 2-1 ruling in which Chief Judge

Alex Kozinski joined but Judge Kim McLane Wardlaw dissented.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Military-Industrial Journalism

Title: Military-Industrial Journalism

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:08 AM (GMT)

Military-Industrial Journalism

Wednesday, July 20th, 2011
http://commonwonders.com/media/military-in...ial-journalism/

Rupert Murdoch's specialty has been the practice of journalism in cynical mockery of our thirst for knowledge.

Suddenly it's clear to everyone.

Hacking a missing teenager's cell phone? Deleting calls, interfering with the desperate search for her whereabouts? Tapping the phones of terrorist victims, dead soldiers? What kind of newsroom culture could possibly value the intimate tidbits of unbearable worry and sorrow thus obtained? What kind of organization would call it "news"?

Even those of us long, long, long disgusted with the Murdoch brand had our moment of shock at this new low in cynicism and pandering. Something felt torn open and exposed as the details rushed out: not just a lack of ethics but an ethical void, absolute in its contempt for our lives. And this contempt is the foundation of a media empire.

Murdoch isn't just a sleaze peddler. He's one of the wealthiest and most powerful people on the planet — and he has a political agenda that matters more to him, I imagine, than a random billion in cash here or there. The silent virulence of his influence on public events, more than the sensational headlines and lurid scandal-mongering he inflicts on us, is my real concern.

Big as Murdoch is in the U.S., with his 24-7 rightwing propaganda network called Fox News, in Great Britain he's bigger than the royal family. "He's often referred to as the country's permanent Cabinet member," Beth Fouhy wrote recently for Associated Press. Since the days of Margaret Thatcher, he's been the godfather of British prime ministers, able to make them offers they can't refuse.

Since the hacking scandal hit the fan, David Cameron, the current prime minister, has been struggling to disentangle himself from his ties to Murdoch. But there's no escaping the fact that Cameron's former communications director, Andy Coulson, had been the editor of News of the World before joining the prime minister's team and is one of 10 people arrested in the mess.

I don't know if the Murdoch empire, News Corp., will emerge from the scandal intact and virulent as ever or have to be renamed News Corpse (one can only hope). But the blowing open of its operations is a stunningly teachable moment, a chance to rethink the role of journalists and the meaning of news.

As a starting place, I place side by side the two extremes of Murdoch's exaggerated influence on our lives, our politics and our self-awareness. The spark that ignited the scandal was the revelation, by Guardian reporter Nick Davies, that News of the World staffers hacked the phone of Milly Dowler, a 13-year-old girl who was abducted near London on her way home from school in 2002. Months later, her body was discovered; she'd been murdered. Before this discovery, when there was nothing but unbearable dread and wild hope on the part of Milly's loved ones, Murdoch minions were mining the tragedy for its titillation value, ferreting for bits of "human interest" to parade in their newspaper.

This is journalism utterly devoid of human sympathy — journalism, I would say, on the wrong side of the human race. It has zero interest in contributing to an informed society or creating social cohesion. It's toxic junk food, a creepy sort of "reality" entertainment purveyed to bored and isolated readers for no purpose except to keep them consuming the product. It has made Murdoch rich beyond measure.

Here's the other extreme, from Fouhy's AP story describing Murdoch's influence on British politics: "Murdoch eventually switched his allegiance to Tony Blair, the Labour prime minister from 1997 to 2007. Blair telephoned Murdoch repeatedly before committing British troops to the Iraq war in 2003, which was strongly endorsed by Murdoch's newspapers across the world."

To my mind, this magnifies the scandal a millionfold. Here's a democratically elected head of state conferring with his secret benefactor for the purpose of bringing war to the planet. This is military-industrial journalism, colluding in war for profit, bending politicians to its interest on the strength of its financial success at peddling sleaze. Murdoch's ethical void isn't limited to his trashy media empire. He's a player in war and peace.

This is journalism run amok — the precise opposite of the ideal of my profession.

Rather than standing in adversarial relationship to power and representing the interests of those on the outside, it stands in adversarial relationship to common humanity. In Murdoch World, we are all abstractions, whether we have a name (Milly Dowler) or merely a mass identification label (the Iraqis).

Journalism can drift upward toward power, become its lapdog and even, as the News Corpse revelations have demonstrated, become power itself, a behind-the-scenes dictator of events, manipulating the world for its own interests.

But real journalists scatter power by telling the truth, as Davies and the Guardian have led the way in doing in the News of the World revelations. This scandal, finally, is not about Murdoch but about everyone who practices the craft of journalism. The time has come to ask ourselves: Where does our allegiance lie?

Robert Koehler is an award-winning, Chicago-based journalist, contributor to One World, Many Peaces and nationally syndicated writer. His new book, Courage Grows Strong at the Wound (Xenos Press) is now available. Contact him at koehlercw@gmail.com or visit his website at commonwonders.com.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Murdoch Media Misdirection

Title: Murdoch Media Misdirection

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:03 AM (GMT)

Murdoch Media Misdirection

20 July 2011 19 Comments
By Greg Hunter's USAWatchdog.com
http://usawatchdog.com/murdoch-media-misdi...ncial-meltdown/

Yesterday, there was a UK hearing featuring father and son executives Rupert and James Murdoch over alleged phone hacking. The spectacle was covered wall-to-wall by most cable news outlets. Channel surfing, I realized that at one point, CNN, HLN, FOX News, FOX Business, MSNBC, CNBC and Bloomberg were all running the testimony. The coverage was highlighted by a disgruntled protester attempting to hit the senior Murdoch with some sort of foam pie. The phone hacking saga is all over the internet too. Even the FBI is investigating whether or not News Corp. employees did illegal information gathering on victims' families of 9/11. I guess the FBI is all through investigating the crimes of mortgage fraud, securities fraud of sour mortgage debt that was packed into Fannie and Freddie, ratings fraud and foreclosure fraud. I don't remember seeing a single indictment of a major Wall Street banker that caused the multi-trillion dollar meltdown of the economy. Oh well, must not be anything there. It's all one big unfortunate accident that will be funded by tax payers for decades.

In the face of a new monumental financial meltdown on both sides of the Atlantic, I find the Murdoch story nothing more than a mainstream media misdirection of the nation's real problems. This story is just a tawdry tale of a fall from grace of one of the world's biggest media moguls. For nearly 100% of the people, it will not matter what happens to the Murdoch Empire, but the effects of debt implosions and debt ceiling defaults will dramatically change the lives of most—especially in America.

After flipping through the above mentioned channels, I turned to C-SPAN and listened to debate on the "cut, cap and balance" bill (HR 2560). It is basically a Republican plan to cut spending and move toward a balanced budget amendment for the federal government. It was passed yesterday mostly along party lines, but not before some rigorous and partisan debate. Both sides accused the other of “killing jobs.” Republicans say the nation has a “spending problem, not a revenue problem.” The Democrats say spending cuts in Medicare and Social Security are just “slash and burn politics.” Many Democrats in the House have vowed not to cut spending and, likewise, the majority of House Republicans have promised not to raise taxes. The best line came from one Congressman who said something like, “Bees can’t make honey and sting at the same time, and we are just 435 stingers.”

I think both sides agree that a debt default will be a disaster. Interest rates would spike, meaning mortgage and credit card payments would follow. Inflation would also jump, meaning even more increases to food and energy prices. I think both parties are quietly calculating which party will get most of the blame if the worst happens? I hope my gut is way off, but both parties will share the blame because they both got us to where we are now.

There is no way the Republican sponsored “cut, cap and balance” bill will make it through the Democratically controlled Senate. Obama’s veto pen won’t even get close to it, but yesterday’s debate was not totally meaningless. What I got out of watching it was how far apart the Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives really are. They might as well have been debating across the Grand Canyon, instead of the aisle on the floor of Congress.

There is some hope for a bi-partisan agreement over in the Senate, and even the President likes the proposal. Bloomberg reported yesterday, “President Barack Obama embraced a $3.7 trillion debt-cutting plan by a bipartisan group of senators that would combine tax increases and spending cuts, saying it could offer a way out of the congressional deadlock over raising the U.S. borrowing limit. “We now are seeing the potential for a bipartisan consensus,” Obama said today at the White House. He called the proposal by the so-called Gang of Six “broadly consistent” with what he has sought and “a very significant step” in so far fruitless negotiations between Republicans and Democrats over boosting the nation’s $14.3 trillion borrowing authority before a threatened default on Aug 2.” (Click here for the complete Bloomberg story.)

Just like a bill that comes from the House has to have Senate approval, a bill from the Senate has to have House approval. Good luck on getting something with both tax increases and spending cuts through the House of Representatives. Even if a bill is passed in both houses of Congress, it will be very difficult to get something done to avoid the August 2nd default deadline. If the country actually defaults, the problems of Mr. Murdoch will seem trivial.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Raging Inequality May Cause Unrest and Violence In

Title: Raging Inequality May Cause Unrest and Violence In Description: America and the Rest of Western World

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:02 AM (GMT)

Raging Inequality May Cause Unrest and Violence In America and the Rest of Western World

Submitted by George Washington on 07/19/2011 13:42 -0400 http://www.zerohedge.com/article/raging-in...t-western-world

Preface: While conservatives are against redistribution of wealth and liberals want to tax the affluent, conservatives and liberals, the affluent and the less well-heeled should all agree that we have to stop the surge in inequality from rising further:
As Robert Shiller said in 2009: And it's not like we want to level income. I'm not saying spread the wealth around, which got Obama in trouble. But I think, I would hope that this would be a time for a national consideration about policies that would focus on restraining any possible further increases in inequality.
And it's not like we want to level income. I'm not saying spread the wealth around, which got Obama in trouble. But I think, I would hope that this would be a time for a national consideration about policies that would focus on restraining any possible further increases in inequality.
The father of modern economics - Adam Smith - didn't believe that inequality should be a taboo subject
Warren Buffet, one of America's most successful capitalists and defenders of capitalism, points out, "There's class warfare, all right, but it's my class, the rich class, that's making war ...."
Conservatives - as well as liberals - are against rampant inequality. But all Americans underestimate the amount of inequality in our country

And while I am not calling for violence, I wonder if this is like South Africa at the end of the Apartheid era, where those in power had to hand over the reins to the majority to prevent violence.

Raging inequality was largely responsible for the Great Depression and for the current financial crisis.

I noted in January:

Egyptian, Tunisian and Yemeni protesters all say that inequality is one of the main reasons they're protesting.

However, the U.S. actually has much greater inequality than in any of those countries.

Is there any way that the growing inequality could cause unrest in America or the rest of the Western world?

Initially, the Greek and Spanish riots have grown out of bailouts and other windfalls for the big banks and hedge funds (see this, this and this), and austerity for the working stiff. So in a sense, they are about inequality.

Moreover, I pointed out in February:
Agence France-Press reports today:

The International Monetary Fund stands ready to help riot-torn Egypt rebuild its economy, the IMF chief said Tuesday as he warned governments to tackle unemployment and income inequality or risk war.

Forbes reported in February:

Harvard economist Kenneth Rogoff, co-author of a best-selling book on financial crises, “This Time It’s Different,” told Forbes today in an exclusive interview, that the high unemployment rate and high levels of debt in the U.S. will sooner or later trigger serious “social unrest from the income disparities in the U.S.”

The Obama administration has “no clue,” he told me what do about this terrible disparity in the economy that is bound to erupt sooner or later, he feels.

“I don’t understand why people don’t wake up to the crisis they are creating,” he said to me just minutes after appearing at a Council on Foreign Relations round-table on “Currency Wars.”

And I wrote in June:

CNN's Jack Cafferty notes that a number of voices are saying that - if our economy continues to deteriorate (which it very well might) - we are likely headed for violence, and civil unrest is a growing certainty.

Watch the must-see CNN viewer comments on this issue:

Newsweek wrote two weeks ago:

Reality is beginning to break through. Gas and grocery prices are on the rise, home values are down, and vast majorities think the country is on the wrong track. The result is sadness and frustration, but also an inchoate rage more profound than the sign-waving political fury documented during the elections last fall.

***

In search of the earthly toll of this outrage, NEWSWEEK conducted a poll of 600 people, finding vastly more unquiet minds than not. Three out of four people believe the economy is stagnant or getting worse. One in three is uneasy about getting married, starting a family, or being able to buy a home. Most say their relationships have been damaged by economic woes or, perhaps more accurately, the dread and nervousness that accompany them.

Could these emotions escalate into revolt?

Why Are People So Angry?

Why are people so angry?

Well, as the Newsweek article points out:

Corporate earnings have soared to an all-time high. Wall Street is gaudy and confident again. But the heyday hasn't come for millions of Americans. Unemployment hovers near 9 percent, and the only jobs that truly abound, according to Labor Department data, come with name tags, hairnets, and funny hats (rather than high wages, great benefits, and long-term security). The American Dream is about having the means to build a better life for the next generation. But as President Obama acknowledged at a town-hall meeting in May, "a lot of folks aren't feeling that [possibility] anymore."

By way of background, America - like most nations around the world - decided to bail out their big banks instead of taking the necessary steps to stabilize their economies (see this, this and this). As such, they all transferred massive debts (from fraudulent and stupid gambling activities) from the balance sheets of the banks to the balance sheets of the country.

The nations have then run their printing presses nonstop in an effort to inflate their way out of their debt crises, even though that effort is doomed to failure from the get-go.

Quantitative easing by the Federal Reserve is obviously causing food prices to skyrocket worldwide (and see this, this and this).

But the fact is that every country in the world that can print money - i.e. which is not locked into a multi-country currency agreement like the Euro - has been printing massive quantities of money. See these charts.

Moreover, the austerity measures which governments worldwide are imposing to try to plug their gaping deficits (created by throwing trillions at their banks) are causing people world-wide to push back.

As I warned in February 2009 and again in December of that year:

Numerous high-level officials and experts warn that the economic crisis could lead to unrest world-wide - even in developed countries:

Today, Moody's warned that future tax rises and spending cuts could trigger social unrest in a range of countries from the developing to the developed world, that in the coming years, evidence of social unrest and public tension may become just as important signs of whether a country will be able to adapt as traditional economic metrics, that a fiscal crisis remains a possibility for a leading economy, and that 2010 would be a “tumultuous year for sovereign debt issuers”.
The U.S. Army War College warned in 2008 November warned in a monograph [click on Policypointers’ pdf link to see the report] titled “Known Unknowns: Unconventional ‘Strategic Shocks’ in Defense Strategy Development” of crash-induced unrest:The military must be prepared, the document warned, for a “violent, strategic dislocation inside the United States,” which could be provoked by “unforeseen economic collapse,” “purposeful domestic resistance,” “pervasive public health emergencies” or “loss of functioning political and legal order.” The “widespread civil violence,” the document said, “would force the defense establishment to reorient priorities in extremis to defend basic domestic order and human security.” “An American government and defense establishment lulled into complacency by a long-secure domestic order would be forced to rapidly divest some or most external security commitments in order to address rapidly expanding human insecurity at home,” it went on. “Under the most extreme circumstances, this might include use of military force against hostile groups inside the United States. Further, DoD [the Department of Defense] would be, by necessity, an essential enabling hub for the continuity of political authority in a multi-state or nationwide civil conflict or disturbance,” the document read.
The military must be prepared, the document warned, for a “violent, strategic dislocation inside the United States,” which could be provoked by “unforeseen economic collapse,” “purposeful domestic resistance,” “pervasive public health emergencies” or “loss of functioning political and legal order.” The “widespread civil violence,” the document said, “would force the defense establishment to reorient priorities in extremis to defend basic domestic order and human security.” “An American government and defense establishment lulled into complacency by a long-secure domestic order would be forced to rapidly divest some or most external security commitments in order to address rapidly expanding human insecurity at home,” it went on. “Under the most extreme circumstances, this might include use of military force against hostile groups inside the United States. Further, DoD [the Department of Defense] would be, by necessity, an essential enabling hub for the continuity of political authority in a multi-state or nationwide civil conflict or disturbance,” the document read.
Director of National Intelligence Dennis C. Blair said:"The global economic crisis ...

already looms as the most serious one in decades, if not in centuries ... Economic crises increase the risk of regime-threatening instability if they are prolonged for a one- or two-year period," said Blair. "And instability can loosen the fragile hold that many developing countries have on law and order, which can spill out in dangerous ways into the international community."

"Statistical modeling shows that economic crises increase the risk of regime-threatening instability if they persist over a one-to-two-year period."

“The crisis has been ongoing for over a year, and economists are divided over whether and when we could hit bottom. Some even fear that the recession could further deepen and reach the level of the Great Depression. Of course, all of us recall the dramatic political consequences wrought by the economic turmoil of the 1920s and 1930s in Europe, the instability, and high levels of violent extremism.”

Blair made it clear that - while unrest was currently only happening in Europe - he was worried this could happen within the United States.

[See also this].

"The global economic crisis ... already looms as the most serious one in decades, if not in centuries ... Economic crises increase the risk of regime-threatening instability if they are prolonged for a one- or two-year period," said Blair. "And instability can loosen the fragile hold that many developing countries have on law and order, which can spill out in dangerous ways into the international community."

"Statistical modeling shows that economic crises increase the risk of regime-threatening instability if they persist over a one-to-two-year period."

“The crisis has been ongoing for over a year, and economists are divided over whether and when we could hit bottom. Some even fear that the recession could further deepen and reach the level of the Great Depression. Of course, all of us recall the dramatic political consequences wrought by the economic turmoil of the 1920s and 1930s in Europe, the instability, and high levels of violent extremism.”

Blair made it clear that - while unrest was currently only happening in Europe - he was worried this could happen within the United States.

[See also this].

Former national security director Zbigniew Brzezinski warned "there's going to be growing conflict between the classes and if people are unemployed and really hurting, hell, there could be even riots."
The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff warned the the financial crisis is the highest national security concern for the U.S., and warned that the fallout from the crisis could lead to of "greater instability".
Others warning of crash-induced unrest include:

The head of the World Trade Organization
The head of the International Monetary Fund (and see this)
The head of the World Bank
Senator Christopher Dodd
Congressman Ron Paul (radio interview on March 6, 2009)
Britian's MI5 security agency
Leading economic historian Niall Ferguson
Leading economist Marc Faber and billionaire investor Jim Rogers
Leading economist Nouriel Roubini
Leading economist John Williams
Top trend researcher Gerald Calente
European think tank Leap2020
Unemployment is soaring globally - especially among youth.

And the sense of outrage at the injustice of the rich getting richer while the poor get poorer is also a growing global trend.

Countries worldwide told their people that bailout out the giant banks was necessary to save the economy. But they haven't delivered, and the "Main Streets" of the world have suffered.

As former American senator (and consummate insider) Chris Dodd said in 2008:
If it turns out that [the banks] are hoarding, you'll have a revolution on your hands. People will be so livid and furious that their tax money is going to line their pockets instead of doing the right thing. There will be hell to pay.

Of course, the big banks are hoarding, and refusing to lend to Main Street. In fact, they admitted back in 2008 that they would. And the same is playing out globally.

As I noted in February:

No wonder former U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski ... warned the Council on Foreign Relations that:

For the first time in human history almost all of humanity is politically activated, politically conscious and politically interactive. There are only a few pockets of humanity left in the remotest corners of the world that are not politically alert and engaged with the political turmoil and stirrings that are so widespread today around the world.

***

America needs to face squarely a centrally important new global reality: that the world's population is experiencing a political awakening unprecedented in scope and intensity, with the result that the politics of populism are transforming the politics of power. The need to respond to that massive phenomenon poses to the uniquely sovereign America an historic dilemma: What should be the central definition of America's global role?

[T]he central challenge of our time is posed not by global terrorism, but rather by the intensifying turbulence caused by the phenomenon of global political awakening. That awakening is socially massive and politically radicalizing.

It is no overstatement to assert that now in the 21st century the population of much of the developing world is politically stirring and in many places seething with unrest. It is a population acutely conscious of social injustice to an unprecedented degree, and often resentful of its perceived lack of political dignity. The nearly universal access to radio, television and increasingly the Internet is creating a community of shared perceptions and envy that can be galvanized and channeled by demagogic political or religious passions. These energies transcend sovereign borders and pose a challenge both to existing states as well as to the existing global hierarchy, on top of which America still perches.

***

That turmoil is the product of the political awakening, the fact that today vast masses of the world are not politically neutered, as they have been throughout history. They have political consciousness.

***

Politically awakened mankind craves political dignity, which democracy can enhance, but political dignity also encompasses ethnic or national self-determination, religious self-definition, and human and social rights, all in a world now acutely aware of economic, racial and ethnic inequities. The quest for political dignity, especially through national self-determination and social transformation, is part of the pulse of self-assertion by the world's underprivileged

***

We live in an age in which mankind writ large is becoming politically conscious and politically activated to an unprecedented degree, and it is this condition which is producing a great deal of international turmoil.

That turmoil is the product of the political awakening, the fact that today vast masses of the world are not politically neutered, as they have been throughout history. They have political consciousness.

[T]he central challenge of our time is posed not by global terrorism, but rather by the intensifying turbulence caused by the phenomenon of global political awakening. That awakening is socially massive and politically radicalizing.

It is no overstatement to assert that now in the 21st century the population of much of the developing world is politically stirring and in many places seething with unrest. It is a population acutely conscious of social injustice to an unprecedented degree, and often resentful of its perceived lack of political dignity. The nearly universal access to radio, television and increasingly the Internet is creating a community of shared perceptions and envy that can be galvanized and channeled by demagogic political or religious passions. These energies transcend sovereign borders and pose a challenge both to existing states as well as to the existing global hierarchy, on top of which America still perches.

***

That turmoil is the product of the political awakening, the fact that today vast masses of the world are not politically neutered, as they have been throughout history. They have political consciousness.

***

Politically awakened mankind craves political dignity, which democracy can enhance, but political dignity also encompasses ethnic or national self-determination, religious self-definition, and human and social rights, all in a world now acutely aware of economic, racial and ethnic inequities. The quest for political dignity, especially through national self-determination and social transformation, is part of the pulse of self-assertion by the world's underprivileged

***

We live in an age in which mankind writ large is becoming politically conscious and politically activated to an unprecedented degree, and it is this condition which is producing a great deal of international turmoil.

That turmoil is the product of the political awakening, the fact that today vast masses of the world are not politically neutered, as they have been throughout history. They have political consciousness.

Watch an excerpt:

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/qawPPSxbrYw" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 20 Signs That The Fabric Of American Society Is

Title: 20 Signs That The Fabric Of American Society Is Description: Coming Apart At The Seams

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:01 AM (GMT)

20 Signs That The Fabric Of American Society Is Coming Apart At The Seams

http://endoftheamericandream.com/archives/...rt-at-the-seams

There is wild disagreement about what is causing it, but what most people can agree on is that there is something fundamentally wrong with America. The fabric of American society just does not seem to be as strong as it used to. In fact, many would argue that society is coming apart at the seams. Corruption and decay seem to be everywhere. I spend a lot of time in my other articles blaming a lot of this corruption and decay on politicians, bureaucrats and business leaders, but the reality is that they are only part of the story. The truth is that those who are leading us are a reflection of what we have become as a nation. If you got rid of all of our corrupt leaders that would not suddenly "fix" this country. Millions of ordinary Americans have become deeply corrupt as well. The kinds of things that you are about to read about below were very rare in past generations. Society is falling apart all around us and we haven't even seen the complete collapse of the U.S. economy yet.

A lot of people like to blame the increasingly bizarre behavior of the American people on the economy, but the reality is that things are not nearly as bad as they are eventually going to be. Yes, the U.S. "Misery Index" recently hit a 28 year high. Tens of millions of American families are deeply suffering. Unemployment is rampant and unprecedented numbers of Americans have been getting kicked out of their homes.

But that is nothing compared to what is coming.

So what is America going to look like when true economic suffering comes along?

That is something to think about.

A lot of the items in the list below may seem easy to dismiss as "isolated incidents". But when you start examining patterns of behavior over an extended period of time, certain trends begin to emerge. America is become a very cruel place. The love of most people seems to be growing cold. What some people are willing to do for a little bit of money or just because someone has "pissed them off" is absolutely stunning. The America of today is fundamentally different from the America of past generations.

We have changed, and not for the better.

The following are 20 signs that the fabric of American society is coming apart at the seams.....

#1 A 17-year-old Florida teen is being accused of killing his parents with a hammer, hiding their bodies in the master bedroom, and then inviting dozens of people over for a massive house party.

#2 What is it with 17-year-olds? Another 17-year-old has been charged with putting a plastic bag over the head of his mother and choking her to death with a belt. His two brothers just stood by and watched while this happened. Apparently the 17-year-old was infuriated because his mother wanted them to play a game of Yahtzee with her.

#3 The largest school cheating scandal in the history of the United States was recently uncovered in the Atlanta area. Dozens of teachers and principles were involved according to a recently released 413 page report....

More than three quarters of the 56 schools investigated cheated on a 2009 standardized state test, with 178 educators implicated, including 38 principals. Eighty-two teachers confessed to erasing students' answers and correcting tests. The report says widespread cheating has occurred since at least 2001 and that orders to cheat came from the top.

#4 A Vancouver, Washington woman has been charged with trying to sell her newborn baby in front of a Taco Bell. Apparently she was hoping to get somewhere between $500 and $5000 for the baby.

#5 In the United States today, if you don't show cops "proper respect" there is a good chance that you are going to get tazed. Just check out this disturbing video of an incident that recently happened in Alabama.

#6 A 48-year-old woman in California was recently arrested after she drugged her husband, chopped off his manhood and threw it into the garbage disposal.

#7 In the Dallas area, five people (including a pregnant woman) were trampled while lying on the ground as thousands of desperate people madly dashed to get into line to get on a waiting list for rental assistance vouchers.

#8 A 35-year-old New York man that has been charged with "kidnapping, killing and dismembering an 8-year-old boy" says that he "hears voices" and he has been ordered to undergo a psychological evaluation.

#9 There has been a rash of car robberies in the Atlanta area recently. Just a couple of nights ago, more than 30 cars were broken into in a single night in south Buckhead.

#10 All over the United States this summer, thieves are stealing just about anything they can get their hands on. People are stealing air conditioners, copper wiring, restaurant furniture, metal drain covers and even hair extensions.

#11 In Woodstock, Georgia a 61-year-old man reportedly promised to give a 17-year-old boy money if he would do certain "things" for the man. Well, it turns out that the 61-year-old man ended up setting the teen on fire....

A 61-year-old man has been arrested on charges of aggravated battery, cruelty to children, false imprisonment, and solicitation of sodomy after he set a 17-year-old boy on fire in Woodstock.

#12 In Washington state, a 23-year-old woman is accused of dumping her newborn baby into a trashcan at the hospital. When a nurse finally found the plastic bag with the baby boy inside of it, the child was blue in the face from a lack of oxygen. Fortunately, the baby survived the ordeal.

#13 In another story from Washington state, a man that is being charged with producing child porn is being allowed to watch that porn all he wants while he is in prison because he is acting as his own lawyer and needs to have "access to the evidence"....

So because he's acting as his own lawyer, he gets full access to the evidence against him. Which means that as he prepares for trial, a private room has been set up in the jail where Gilbert can watch the full 30-hour archives of his own child porn collection.

#14 The National Retail Federation says that "inventory loss" for retail stores was up 11% last year. Most of the "inventory loss" is attributed to such things as shoplifting and employee theft.

#15 In Minnesota recently, a mob of teen girls brutally pummeled a mother and her two daughters until they were black and blue. Apparently the mob of teen girls was enraged over a pair of missing sunglasses.

#16 One of the hot new trends for young males is to play the "knockout game". In this "game", a group of young men picks out an innocent bystander and the first one to knock that person out is the "winner".

#17 Prior to 2011, most Americans had never even heard of "mob robberies". Today, they have made headline news all over the nation.

#18 In the San Francisco area recently, fire crews and police just stood on the shore and watched as a suicidal 50-year-old man slowly drowned to death in the San Francisco Bay.

#19 Meanwhile, the federal government continues to waste money on some of the most bizarre things imaginable. For example, the federal government actually gave money to the National Institutes of Health to study the effect that the size of "a certain part of the body" has on the sex lives of gay men. Can anyone think of a reason why the federal government would want to throw money away on such frivolous studies when millions of Americans can't even find jobs right now?

#20 Many believe that a big reason for all of this chaos in America today is the decline of the American family. In 1960, married couples accounted for 75 percent of all households in America. Today, they account for just 48 percent of all households.

Whatever your political or religious philosophy is, hopefully you can agree that America is in trouble. Every single day, there are more shocking revelations about the corruption and the decay that are spreading throughout this nation.

Sadly, instead of coming together to work on some solutions to our growing problems, Americans are becoming more divided than ever.

The mainstream media teaches us that our "opponents" are those that belong to political, social or religious groups that are different from our own. They love to divide us and play us off against each other. Everywhere you look in America, hate is growing.

But hatred is never the answer. Yes, we should always stand up for what we believe is right, but we can do that and still love one another at the same time.

Unfortunately, as America continues to come apart at the seams we are probably going to see this country become even more divided.

United we stand, divided we fall - you make the call America.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Wynn CEO Goes On Epic Anti-Obama Rant On Company

Title: Wynn CEO Goes On Epic Anti-Obama Rant On Company
Description: Conference Call

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:54 AM (GMT)

Wynn CEO Goes On Epic Anti-Obama Rant On Company Conference Call

Joe Weisenthal | Jul. 18, 2011, 6:51 PM | 532,536 | 556
http://www.businessinsider.com/wynn-ceo-st...pt-obama-2011-7

We certainly do, and as usual, Steve Wynn, the CEO of casino company Wynn Resorts, delivered on his company's quarterly conference call today.

Via Seeking Alpha, here's the crux of it:

I believe in Las Vegas. I think its best days are ahead of it. But I'm afraid to do anything in the current political environment in the United States. You watch television and see what's going on on this debt ceiling issue. And what I consider to be a total lack of leadership from the President and nothing's going to get fixed until the President himself steps up and wrangles both parties in Congress. But everybody is so political, so focused on holding their job for the next year that the discussion in Washington is nauseating.

And I'm saying it bluntly, that this administration is the greatest wet blanket to business, and progress and job creation in my lifetime. And I can prove it and I could spend the next 3 hours giving you examples of all of us in this market place that are frightened to death about all the new regulations, our healthcare costs escalate, regulations coming from left and right. A President that seems, that keeps using that word redistribution. Well, my customers and the companies that provide the vitality for the hospitality and restaurant industry, in the United States of America, they are frightened of this administration.And it makes you slow down and not invest your money. Everybody complains about how much money is on the side in America.

You bet and until we change the tempo and the conversation from Washington, it's not going to change. And those of us who have business opportunities and the capital to do it are going to sit in fear of the President. And a lot of people don't want to say that. They'll say, God, don't be attacking Obama. Well, this is Obama's deal and it's Obama that's responsible for this fear in America.

The guy keeps making speeches about redistribution and maybe we ought to do something to businesses that don't invest, their holding too much money. We haven't heard that kind of talk except from pure socialists. Everybody's afraid of the government and there's no need soft peddling it, it's the truth. It is the truth. And that's true of Democratic businessman and Republican businessman, and I am a Democratic businessman and I support Harry Reid. I support Democrats and Republicans. And I'm telling you that the business community in this company is frightened to death of the weird political philosophy of the President of the United States. And until he's gone, everybody's going to be sitting on their thumbs.

Later in the call, he rants again about how hard it is to visit America (due to Homeland Security and visa issues), and what that means for Chinese visitors.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: A Christian Response to Vampire Obsession

Title: A Christian Response to Vampire Obsession

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:51 AM (GMT)

A Christian Response to Vampire Obsession

By Hannah Goodwyn
http://www.cbn.com/entertainment/screen/go...-obsession.aspx

CBN.com - The Twilight Saga is unquestionably the biggest media phenomenon this decade, especially among young women. New Moon, the movie based on the second book in the four-book series, releases this Friday (Nov. 20). New Moon introduces new characters, including the Volturi, an ancient vampire "family" who ruthlessly polices their world.

For those who aren't aware of the Twilight frenzy, let me fill you in. If you just mention the name Edward to a teenage girl, she will immediately think of the 104-year-old teenage vampire from best-selling author Stephenie Meyer's Twilight books. Just say the name Jacob, and they will think of the werewolf best friend of Twilight's leading lady, Bella. They also will know what you mean when asked, "Are you on Team Edward or Team Jacob?"

This international craze warrants parents' attention. In fact, we should all understand the force behind the resurgence of vampires in pop culture. Twilight isn't merely the first novel in a four-book tale by Meyer; it was the catalyst for new vampire TV shows, movies, and novels marketed as Christian fiction. Before we get into how widespread the fetish with these mythical creatures has reached, let's take a look at what started it all.
The Twilight Effect

Meyer's Twilight series has a dedicated fan base, with more than 17 million books in print. The low-budget first movie made almost $200 million dollars at the box office.

With a new director at the helm and a bigger budget, New Moon is expected to rake in much more. The mostly unknown actors (Robert Pattinson, Taylor Lautner, Kristen Stewart) in the first film became instant celebrities; they can't go out in public now without being mobbed. And it's not just the kids who are into the books; it's moms too -- "Twi-Moms". Amazon.com labeled Twilight as the “Best Book of the Decade… So Far”. It also has been chosen as The New York Time Editor’s Choice and The American Library Association’s “Top Ten Best Books for Young Adults”.

Almost overnight, competing vampire stories have crept into our view in the form of new TV series and movies. This fall, the CW introduced a drama called The Vampire Diaries, which is based on novels published in the ‘90s. HBO premiered their own vampire drama, True Blood, to the delight of critics and viewers alike. The first season garnered wide critical acclaim and several prestigious awards, including an Emmy and a Golden Globe. Cam Gigandent, who plays James in Twilight, will star in another vampire flick, Priest (set to release in 2010). In January, Willem Dafoe and Ethan Hawke’s new film, Daybreakers, will give readers a taste of what mankind would be like if a plague transformed almost every human into vampires. Rumor has it, Hollywood will soon be working on a Buffy, the Vampire Slayer movie.

Each of these bloody tales glamorizes vampires to the point that many fans can think of nothing else. Since the beginning of the Twilight craze, more than 350 fan sites have shown up online. When discussing the first film (as recorded on www.twilightthemovie.com), producer Wyck Godfrey unintentionally hinted to the danger behind this modern-day love story.

"There's a huge amount of danger in this movie," Godfrey continues. "There's also just the excitement of a teenager doing things that are verboten. These are things that people connect to. And not just girls; I think that guys will discover it's dangerous, there's action, there's a thriller element to it, and then, ultimately, that it's cool to be a vampire."

Meyer based the story on what she saw one night in a dream. Brought up in the Mormon faith, Meyer built the books around the issue of teenage lust. Edward’s love settles so deep within that he must passionately resist his hunger for Bella. She too faces temptation – wanting to give into her desires. Readers discover some pretty reckless behavior on both their parts. Edward frequently sneaks into Bella’s bedroom to watch her sleep, and she consistently lies to parents in order to protect her relationship with her powerful, vampire boyfriend.
God and The Occult

The Christian market also is jumping on the bandwagon. WaterBrook Press recently released a new vampire book by Christian author Tracey Bateman. Thirsty is the story of Nina Parker, a recovering alcoholic who is convinced that something is hunting her. When animals begin to disappear from the reserve and then turn up slaughtered, Parker is faced with even more as she is tempted to quench her own thirst for alcohol. Bateman's novel is described as a tale that examines the inner battle between love and obsession. (I have based my synopsis of the book on information found online; I have not read this novel).

Vampire shows and movies aren't a new concept in entertainment. However, the Twilight characters have propelled this trend into a bigger phenomenon that should not be ignored. Its popularity begs the need for parents to pay attention to what their kids are reading and watching. Is a book burning session the answer? No. Instead, take this opportunity to share the Truth with your kids, family, and friends.

Through a web of complicated events, readers are faced with important lessons that many parents would want their kids to learn and adapt into their lives. These themes of love, sacrifice, and selflessness are all great pluses in the series. However, the occultism in this completely fictional story is overpowering. The Bible does not mention vampires, but it does refer to the significance of blood.

In fact, according to the law of Moses, nearly everything was purified with blood. For without the shedding of blood, there is no forgiveness. Hebrews 9:22 (New Living Translation)

Humans who propose to be "vampires" and drink blood are committing a grave sin against God.

When you follow the desires of your sinful nature, the results are very clear: sexual immorality, impurity, lustful pleasures, idolatry, sorcery, hostility, quarreling, jealousy, outbursts of anger, selfish ambition, dissension, division... Galatians 5:19-20 (New Living Translation)

You must abstain from eating food offered to idols, from consuming blood or the meat of strangled animals, and from sexual immorality. If you do this, you will do well. Acts 15:29 (New Living Translation)

Legend has that by drinking blood a person can gain power. This thinking is similar to what may have entered Eve's mind in the Garden of Eden.

The serpent told the Woman, "You won't die. God knows that the moment you eat from that tree, you'll see what's really going on. You'll be just like God, knowing everything, ranging all the way from good to evil." Genesis 3:4-5 (The Message)

Pride, a desire to become powerful -- even god-like, can cripple a person's soul. What's especially interesting is that an apple is aptly used as a symbol of temptation in Twilight.

The fate of "vampires" is addressed in The Twilight Saga as well. Edward feels he has no soul, no chance at redemption. In an effort to argue that there are more pros than cons to becoming a vampire, Bella tries to convince him that they must have a chance. In the end, she is resigned to live with Edward forever – an eternity void of God. There is no redemption outside of them. Besides, they are supposedly undead creatures, meaning they've basically missed their shot at choosing where they will spend eternity.

Parents of fans need to talk it out with their kids to make sure that this glamorized view of vampires isn't building a seed of doubt in God or a desire for the occult.

Hannah Goodwyn read the Twilight series -- so she knows of what she speaks.

She serves as a producer for CBN.com. For more articles, visit Hannah's bio page.

E-mail me!

For more stories like this one, sign up to receive Entertainment News from CBN.com in your email every Friday.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New Terror Report Warns of Insider Threat to Title: New Terror Report Warns of Insider Threat to Description: Utilities

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:42 AM (GMT)

New Terror Report Warns of Insider Threat to Utilities

By BRIAN ROSS, RHONDA SCHWARTZ and MEGAN CHUCHMACH
http://abcnews.go.com/m/story?id=14118119

Sabotage by an insider at a major utility facility, including a chemical or oil refinery, could provide al Qaeda with its best opportunity for the kind of massive Sept. 11 anniversary attack Osama bin Laden was planning, according to U.S. officials.

A new intelligence report from the Department of Homeland Security issued Tuesday, titled Insider Threat to Utilities, warns "violent extremists have, in fact, obtained insider positions," and that "outsiders have attempted to solicit utility-sector employees" for damaging physical and cyber attacks.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

244c1

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST HOMELAND DEPARTMENT AGENCY
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->WORLD CONTROL->Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

Pages: (14) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags
		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		9/11 NUCLEAR DEMOLITION OF THE WTC BY DIMITRI (Pages 1 2 3 ...19)	TheUnhivedMind	273	12,076	18th June 2011 - 06:28 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		THE DARKER SIDE OF 9/11 - THE FRENCH CONNECTION [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	218	17th February 2011 - 03:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		BBC: al Qaeda Does Not Exist [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	317	10th October 2010 - 01:57 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF STATE TERROR	TheUnhivedMind	0	666	13th September 2008 - 11:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics

		The New 9/11 Bait and Switch?	TheUnhivedMind	0	62	21st July 2011 - 04:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bill O'Reilly attacks 9/11 victim's son [Vd] [SICK INTELLIGENTSIA VERMIN]	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	21st July 2011 - 04:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		NYC Dept. of Buildings: No Records for Pre-9/11 WTC Elevator Rebuild, One of the “Larges	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	21st July 2011 - 04:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		THERMITE CUTTING VERTICAL STEEL - VALIDATED - EXPERIMENTALLY DEMONSTRATED [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	30	21st July 2011 - 04:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Post 9/11 Era and Radicalism	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	21st July 2011 - 03:29 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Indian Leader Suspects Mossad-CIA handiwork in Mumbi blasts	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	20th July 2011 - 03:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Kingdom and the Towers	TheUnhivedMind	0	28	20th July 2011 - 03:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		STAGED OIL RIG DISASTER PROVES BIGGER THAN FIRST (Pages 1 2 3 ...49) THOUGHT. POTENTIAL TO DESTROY OCEANS	craig-oxley	721	15,535	20th July 2011 - 01:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Silenced: TWA 800 and the Subversion of Justice [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	36	19th July 2011 - 02:43 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		TWA 800 - The Search For The Truth [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	19th July 2011 - 02:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		WTF Charlie Veitch??? [A SHILL]	TheUnhivedMind	7	248	18th July 2011 - 10:28 PM Last Post by: deadpeoplestuff
		Gun-smuggling cartel figures possibly were paid FBI informants	TheUnhivedMind	0	23	18th July 2011 - 03:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New doubts over crucial evidence in Lockerbie tria	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	18th July 2011 - 03:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CIA Knowingly Released False TWA 800 Video, Report Directly to President Clinton	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	18th July 2011 - 03:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 ANNOUNCEMENT: Long-awaited International Hearings Set for September 2011	TheUnhivedMind	0	21	18th July 2011 - 01:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 Survivors Will Not Be Allowed to Attend Ground Zero Commemoration	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	18th July 2011 - 12:02 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Report: Bin Laden Already Dead	TheUnhivedMind	0	55	16th July 2011 - 01:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Scientist Sues CIA for TWA Flight 800 Crash Documents	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	16th July 2011 - 01:34 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chinese Bank Helped Fund Hamas, Suit Says	TheUnhivedMind	0	25	15th July 2011 - 06:56 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Co-Chair of 9/11 Inquiry: American Government Covered Up State Assistance to Hijackers	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	15th July 2011 - 06:45 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CNN exposes 'terror expert' as a fraud	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	15th July 2011 - 06:29 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9-11 HOW THE TWIN TOWERS WERE DESTROYED AND HOW THEY COVERED IT UP [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	52	15th July 2011 - 03:50 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		BUBONIC E.COLI IS A SUPER BIOWEAPONIZED AGENT (Pages 1 2 3) ATTACK!	TheUnhivedMind	42	835	15th July 2011 - 01:53 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Iran explosives at centre of Cypriot intrigue	TheUnhivedMind	1	56	14th July 2011 - 04:57 PM Last Post by: golden_oil
		THE ORION EXERCISE HAPPENING IN THREE LOCATIONS IN (Pages 1 2) THE U.K. PREPARING FOR EARTHQUAKE	TheUnhivedMind	17	6,700	14th July 2011 - 12:09 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 And The Rise of The World Wolf State	TheUnhivedMind	0	27	14th July 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Nearly 3,000 victims of 9/11 don't show up as dead in Social Security records	TheUnhivedMind	5	137	14th July 2011 - 02:02 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		The NIST WTC 7 Report is False [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	14th July 2011 - 01:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Mumbai: Explosions shake India's financial hub [MI5 READY TO DO THIS IN WEST MIDLANDS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	13th July 2011 - 06:16 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Inside Job: More Proof of 9/11 Duplicity	TheUnhivedMind	0	34	13th July 2011 - 03:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 Truth Isn't Going Away	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	13th July 2011 - 03:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		USS Liberty Song "Please Can You Tell Me"	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	13th July 2011 - 03:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		ANYONE BELIEVING IN A CONSPIRACY ETC IS LABELLED A TERRORISM BY DEMOS THINK TANK U.K.	TheUnhivedMind	2	61	12th July 2011 - 01:09 AM Last Post by: Mark
		Source of terror threat is in UK Government, says a Police Principal Intelligence Analyst	TheUnhivedMind	0	42	11th July 2011 - 04:19 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Terror tots of the Taliban: Children as young as five traing for Al-Qaeda [BLAH BLAH BLAH	TheUnhivedMind	1	38	10th July 2011 - 11:12 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		911 - PLANE - MUST - HIT - STEEL!!!	Maximiliano	2	139	10th July 2011 - 06:25 PM Last Post by: Maximiliano
		Sarkozy Allows No Summer Vacations for Ministers [SETTING UP FOR SOMETHING?]	TheUnhivedMind	2	129	10th July 2011 - 04:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		V FOR VENDETTA; MARTIN McDAID; 7/7	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	10th July 2011 - 01:32 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Panetta in Kabul: Al-Qaeda Defeat 'Within Reach' [FLANNEL]	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	10th July 2011 - 12:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lyndon LaRouche: 9/11 Was a Total Inside Job [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	92	6th July 2011 - 01:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 kin: Troopers 'did nothing'	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	6th July 2011 - 01:19 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 Zadroga Health Care Law Goes Into Effect	TheUnhivedMind	0	32	6th July 2011 - 01:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ted Gunderson Former FBI Chief - Most Terror Attacks Are Committed By CIA/FBI [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	68	5th July 2011 - 01:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US strategy to narrow focus on home threat [DHS BULLSHIT]	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	4th July 2011 - 05:39 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Reply to James Fetzer Over No Plane Nonsense	TheUnhivedMind	0	49	4th July 2011 - 01:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dead in the Water - The Attack on the USS Liberty	TheUnhivedMind	1	29	4th July 2011 - 12:59 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fake terror, real sentence: FBI inspiration for 25 years in jail [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	4th July 2011 - 12:58 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The New Era of "All Natural" False Flag Disasters	TheUnhivedMind	0	54	3rd July 2011 - 03:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Inside 9/11 - Hijacking the air defense [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	28	3rd July 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Oklahoma City bombing case file too massive to search, FBI tells Utah judge	TheUnhivedMind	0	35	3rd July 2011 - 02:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 And The Length of a Meme	TheUnhivedMind	0	45	2nd July 2011 - 04:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Terror suspect 'plans Mumbai atrocity here' [ANOTHER HINT AT THEIR NEXT FALSE FLAG]	TheUnhivedMind	0	36	1st July 2011 - 06:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Teachers reluctant to discuss 9/11	TheUnhivedMind	0	57	1st July 2011 - 01:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CIA asset: 'Libyan opposition is al-Qaeda' [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	32	30th June 2011 - 10:05 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Former CIA agent: 'Libyan opposition is al-Qaeda' Obama has messed up	TheUnhivedMind	0	25	30th June 2011 - 09:58 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		EXCLUSIVE: THE LIST OF THE MOSSAD AGENTS OF TERRORIST ATTACK OF 9 / 11 2001	TheUnhivedMind	0	37	30th June 2011 - 09:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		GREY TERROR	TheUnhivedMind	0	32	30th June 2011 - 06:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DEMYSTIFYING 9/11	TheUnhivedMind	0	53	30th June 2011 - 01:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Setting Up Pakistan for the next false flag attack and war on Pakistan	TheUnhivedMind	0	34	30th June 2011 - 12:03 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Pakistan's Taliban vow attacks on West	kalongi	0	30	28th June 2011 - 10:56 PM Last Post by: kalongi
		Belarusian TV Accuses Russia of Organizing Revolution in Social Networks	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	28th June 2011 - 12:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New Paperback Demolishes Official WTC Story	TheUnhivedMind	0	79	27th June 2011 - 01:32 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		State Terrorism US Speciality	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	26th June 2011 - 11:36 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Hizbollah members 'confess to spying for CIA'	TheUnhivedMind	0	79	26th June 2011 - 04:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Richard Gage Talk at Royal Institute of British Architects Ignites Firestorm	TheUnhivedMind	0	36	26th June 2011 - 04:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 WAS AN INSIDE JOB HOW MANY LIES DO YOU HEAR? [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	52	25th June 2011 - 05:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. no longer mandating 100 percent screening of cargo containers [FALSE FLAG IMMINENT]	TheUnhivedMind	2	66	25th June 2011 - 11:36 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		United Kingdom False Flag Forecast, Summer 2011 [NOTE U.S. & U.K. NO SCREENING OF CARGO]	TheUnhivedMind	0	39	25th June 2011 - 02:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Piers Corbyn's Interview on Al Jazeera TV [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	63	25th June 2011 - 01:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cannabis, cocaine and opium production in decline [CARLOS HAS HIS HAND IN MANY PIES]	TheUnhivedMind	0	65	24th June 2011 - 04:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		False Flag Imminent 26 June 2011 LOOK OUT GERMANY WOMEN'S WORLD CUP	AntiSionist	0	155	23rd June 2011 - 08:12 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		9/11 Truth: What Happened to Building 7 [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	49	23rd June 2011 - 03:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Scientists say Fear of Terror Makes People Stupid	TheUnhivedMind	0	36	23rd June 2011 - 12:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 and the Orwellian Redefinition of "Conspiracy theory"	TheUnhivedMind	0	57	20th June 2011 - 09:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FBI NEVER CHARGE BIN LADEN FOR 9/11	TheUnhivedMind	0	44	20th June 2011 - 06:50 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Are Hacker Attacks False Flag Attacks to Justify a Crackdown on the internet	TheUnhivedMind	4	107	20th June 2011 - 05:33 AM Last Post by: snooze
		Introduction: 2011 Summer False Flag Forecast	TheUnhivedMind	0	99	19th June 2011 - 12:11 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SOUTH KOREA TARGET AND ALMOST SHOOT DOWN PASSENGER PLANE	TheUnhivedMind	1	110	18th June 2011 - 06:45 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		An Introduction to September 11	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	18th June 2011 - 03:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Living in the Shadows: A World of Black Ops and Cyber Wars	TheUnhivedMind	0	38	18th June 2011 - 03:32 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		9/11 Pentagon Budget conspiracy (& such) [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	17th June 2011 - 03:26 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CANADIAN NAVY WARSHIP SPOTTED IN MAINE WATERS [REMEMBER WHO DID 9/11!]	TheUnhivedMind	3	128	17th June 2011 - 02:09 AM Last Post by: baptizmo
		Image Comics' 'The Big Lie'asks some big questions	TheUnhivedMind	0	60	17th June 2011 - 01:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		German Atty Seeks TRO Against June 26 Nuke Terror Drills [I'VE TOLD YOU THIS BEFORE]	TheUnhivedMind	1	62	17th June 2011 - 01:29 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fake Revolutions: The debate is over; the revolutions are fake, the people behind	TheUnhivedMind	0	43	17th June 2011 - 12:54 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Pentagon Papers Whistleblower Daniel Ellsberg Says that the Government has ORDERED the medi	TheUnhivedMind	0	38	17th June 2011 - 12:29 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ayman al-Zawahiri appointed as al-Qaeda leader	TheUnhivedMind	0	39	16th June 2011 - 04:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Richard Gage Live on TV3 - The Masterplan Event [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	89	13th June 2011 - 03:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		E.coli And Radiation - Surprise! Surprise!	TheUnhivedMind	0	51	13th June 2011 - 03:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Alleged Cyber Attacks Are Setting The Stage For More Authoritarian Internet Controls	TheUnhivedMind	0	44	13th June 2011 - 12:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		High-Level American Officials Admit that the U.S Uses False Flag Terror	TheUnhivedMind	0	51	13th June 2011 - 12:19 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cities participating in Red Dragon Exercise	TheUnhivedMind	0	95	11th June 2011 - 12:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		RADES Radar - Aircraft Swap on 9/11 - Graphic/Vide Representation - Scene from 9/11 [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	71	11th June 2011 - 12:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The 3 Coming False Flags	TheUnhivedMind	0	127	10th June 2011 - 11:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Dead In The Water - The Sinking of the USS Liberty [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	41	9th June 2011 - 02:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Rand Meeting: The Long Shadow of 9/11: America's Response to Terrorism	TheUnhivedMind	0	35	9th June 2011 - 02:17 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

Showing 100 of 1382 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (14) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0572 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

51. Fake terror, real sentence: FBI inspiration for 25
52. The New Era of “All Natural” False Flag Disasters
53. Inside 9/11 - Hijacking the air defense [Vd]
54. Oklahoma City bombing case file too massive to
55. 9/11 And The Length of a Meme
56. Terror suspect 'plans Mumbai atrocity here'
57. Teachers reluctant to discuss 9/11
58. CIA asset: 'Libyan opposition is al-Qaeda' [Vd]
59. Former CIA agent: 'Libyan opposition is al-Qaeda'
60. EXCLUSIVE: THE LIST OF THE MOSSAD AGENTS OF
61. GREY TERROR
62. DEMYSTIFYING 9/11
63. Setting Up Pakistan for the next false flag attack
64. Pakistan’s Taliban vow attacks on West
65. Belarusian TV Accuses Russia of Organizing
66. New Paperback Demolishes Official WTC Story
67. State Terrorism US Speciality
68. Hizbollah members 'confess to spying for CIA'
69. Richard Gage Talk at Royal Institute of British
70. 9/11 WAS AN INSIDE JOB HOW MANY LIES DO YOU HEAR?
71. U.S. no longer mandating 100 percent screening of
72. United Kingdom False Flag Forecast, Summer 2011
73. Piers Corbyn's Interview on Al Jazeera TV [Vd]
74. Cannabis, cocaine and opium production in decline
75. False Flag Imminent 26 June 2011
76. 9/11 Truth: What Happened to Building 7 [Vd]
77. Scientists say Fear of Terror Makes People Stupid
78. 9/11 and the Orwellian Redefinition of “Conspiracy
79. FBI NEVER CHARGE BIN LADEN FOR 9/11
80. Are Hacker Attacks False Flag Attacks to Justify a

81. Introduction: 2011 Summer False Flag Forecast
82. SOUTH KOREA TARGET AND ALMOST SHOOT DOWN
83. An Introduction to September 11
84. Living in the Shadows: A World of Black Ops and
85. 9/11 Pentagon Budget conspiracy (& such) [Vd]
86. CANADIAN NAVY WARSHIP SPOTTED IN MAINE WATERS
87. Image Comics' 'The Big Lie'asks some big questions
88. German Atty Seeks TRO Against June 26 Nuke Terror
89. Fake Revolutions: The debate is over; the
90. Pentagon Papers Whistleblower Daniel Ellsberg Says
91. Ayman al-Zawahiri appointed as al-Qaeda leader
92. Richard Gage Live on TV3 - The Masterplan Event
93. E.coli And Radiation - Surprise! Surprise!
94. Alleged Cyber Attacks Are Setting The Stage For
95. High-Level American Officials Admit that the U.S
96. Cities participating in Red Dragon Exercise
97. RADES Radar - Aircraft Swap on 9/11 - Graphic/Vide
98. The 3 Coming False Flags
99. Dead In The Water - The Sinking of the USS Liberty
100. Rand Meeting: The Long Shadow of 9/11: America's

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

101. BARRY CHAMISH - F.B.I CHOREOGRAPHED CONSPIRACY [Vd
102. Mumbai-style terror plotter will be allowed to
103. 9/11 Was A Tell-A-Lie-Vision Movie [Video]
104. World Trade, Liberty St, Crater Outside South Towe
105. Remember Building 7 ad – and Poll Results
106. Terrorists 'will outsource attacks'
107. Fox News attacks Professor against 9/11 lies [Vd]
108. Susan Lindauer - Intel Agent On The Patriot Act,
109. US warns EU not to relax aeroplane liquids ban
110. Black Eagle Trust Fund
111. Bush caught lying about 9/11 [Vd]
112. Bin Laden raid gets little credence in conspiracy-
113. Musharraf seeks from US proof of Osama killing
114. Will There Be A New False Flag Attack In Chicago's
115. The Stage Is Set For a Nuclear False Flag
116. Arguments Regarding the Collapse of the WTC
117. Urban Shield Boston: Massive Terror And Emergency
118. Top Al Qaeda commanders with close links to Bin
119. SETTING UP THE US/UK FOR SMALLPOX ATTACK
120. New Al-Qaeda chief pledges major attack on London
121. "Creating Incidents" in Cuba: America's Design to
122. The bin Laden hunter: ex-CIA man had bin Laden in
123. Disturbing questions haunt anthrax killings inquir
124. EXCLUSIVE: New Details Emerge of Radical Imam's
125. 9/11 EXPLOSIVE EVIDENCE EXPERTS SPEAK OUT [Vd]
126. "Creating Incidents" in Cuba: America's Design to
127. US-Taliban Talks in Qatar, Germany Robert Dreyfu
128. Jury Rejects State Charges against 7/7 Ripple
129. ARE YOU READY FOR 9/11 PART II? THE SET-UP HAS
130. Ted Gunderson: 1993 World Trade Center was an FBI

131. Texas county official says "stupid" feds sparked
132. FBI investigating intruder at Oregon dam
133. US prosecutors seek access to IRA tapes
134. New 9/11 photos 'prove WTC exploded from inside'
135. Judge wants FBI to explain possibly missing
136. FORBES QUOTES RUPPERT IN BIN LADEN STORY -- AFTER
137. War of Terror is a Reichstag Fire False Flag Op
138. Red Alert: Help Stop False Flag Terror
139. Britain’s police and military rehearse plans to
140. Police north of Paris arrest 6 suspected members
141. 7/7 RIPPLE EFFECT [Vd] (FLASHBACK)
142. The CIA knew about the 9/11 attacks three years
143. 7/7 inquests: Emergency delays 'did not cause
144. Letters containing suspicious white powder and
145. WTF at WTC? Obama Has American Flag Removed From
146. Terrorist Group Setting Up Operations Near Border
147. GHOSTS OF SEPTEMBER 11TH [Vd]
148. Capt. Erick May: Chicago delenda est! Rahm the 149. Core of Corruption [Vd]
150. Israel grounds ALL its planes over contaminated

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

151. MORE PROPAGANDA OF MUMBAI ATTACK ON U.K.
152. Bush declines NYC invite
153. Top Government Insider: Bin Laden Died In 2001,
154. Juan Carlos to Take over the 911/Truth Movement
155. Russia 'ready' to boost terrorism cooperation with
156. Homeland Security Abandons Color-Coded Terror Aler
157. Final Report - Bombs were in the Building [Vd]
158. WikiLeaks accuses BBC of being part of 'possible
159. CHATHAM HOUSE CONNECTION TO 9/11
160. Guantánamo Bay files: Al-Qaida assassin 'worked
161. Nuclear bomb kaboom in europe if BinLaden captured
162. Strange Monolith Anamoly on Mar’s Moon Phobos
163. EXCLUSIVE: DHS Can’t Account for 10 Libyan Men It
164. 9/11 First Responders Now Considered Possible
165. No Arabs On The 4 Hijacked 911 Airliners
166. PNAC: A NOMINALLY AMERICAN CONSPIRACY [Vd]
167. Blown Reactor Buildings Stand...But Twin Towers
168. A collection of sound bytes from media reports of
169. WAC-OK Activists Hold Street Action During 16th
170. Architect Richard Gage Explains His 9/11 Theory
171. WAC Wisconsin Confronts 911 Spin Doctor Michael
172. Secret memos expose link between oil firms and
173. UK Crusader Challenges Elite Tyranny
174. Michael Scheuer: ‘US depended on tyrannies’ [Vd]
175. Airlines and Airport Security Agree to Pay $1.2
176. Special Master To Decide How To Divvy Compensation
177. GORDON DUFF: YEARS OF DECEIT: US OPENLY ACCEPTS
178. Former Director Of US ARMY War College: 9/11 Was
179. FIELD MCCONNELL - 9/11 THE LIVERY SNUFF FILM
180. Brazil school shooting kills 13

181. Tri-State Dirty Bomb Drill
182. Amidst Growing World Doubts About 9/11, Career
183. FEAR AL QAEDA WILL SHOOT DOWN A HOLIDAY JET
184. Khalid Sheikh Mohammed faces Guantanamo trial for
185. 911 IS IT LIVE OR IS IT LIVERY [Vd]
186. G4S Employee (WACKENHUT) found to have semtex
187. Threats Claim Nuclear Bombs Hidden All Over U.S.
188. Japan HAARP Tsunami connected to THE SETTLEMENTS?
189. Amidst Growing World Doubts About 9/11, Career
190. Rome's Knight of Malta Controlled DHS Prepares Los
191. Caribbean and Pacific TSUNAMI - National Level
192. Eiffel Tower cleared after phone warning
193. Our Own Private Bin Laden [Vd]
194. UK should talk to al-Qaeda says former head of MI5
195. CIA contractor Ray Davis freed over Pakistan
196. Still in the Dark About 9/11
197. Terror convictions since 9/11
198. New document supports Norman Mineta's testimony on
199. Homegrown terrorism: the threat of Homeland
200. Army, CIA, Canadians to train at Fort Leavenworth

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

201. Three to five big urban disasters could strike in
202. Rep. Peter King won't look into Loughner's
203. Justices Hear 9/11 Detention Case
204. Ex-FBI Informant, Claimed to Have Met Mohamed Atta
205. ATF Let Hundreds of U.S. Weapons Fall into Hands
206. 9/11 and the Conquest of Iraq
207. Activists bring 9/11 truth to Georgia Tech Demolit
208. THE POWER OF POLITICAL NIGHTMARES: THE WAR ON
209. 7/7 inquests: Half of ambulances 'not sent to help
210. Plague Kills U.S. Scientist After First Lab Illnes
211. Conspirator: Rumsfeld feigns dumb on Building 7
212. Posen stirs Bank of England row with another QE
213. Pakistan arrests US security contractor as rift
214. Gaddafi blames bin Laden for chaos
215. Saudi held on Texas terror charge
216. NUKES FOUND AT PORT OF SAN DIEGO [Vd]
217. 7/7 inquests: MI5 'could have identified ringleade
218. US Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner blasts UK's
219. 7/7 inquests: MI5 'not responsible for attack'
220. Oneonta 9/11 film producer arrested on heroin drug
221. WAC LA interrupts Bill Maher again [Vd]
222. Horowitz: 9/11 questions 'not what I do' [Vd]
223. American who sparked diplomatic crisis over Lahore
224. Libya: US accuses Britain of legitimising Gaddafi
225. MI5 accused of trying to gag justice at 7/7 inques
226. Curveball doubts were shared with CIA
227. German Foreign Minister: CIA Knew 'Curveball's'
228. FBI Translator Submitted Report Entitled "Kamikaze
229. Webster Griffin Tarpey: The Globalist Conquest of
230. Report Vindicates Questions In Anthrax Conspiracy

231. WTC 7 blew itself up out of sympathy [Vd]
232. Bill Moyers Bashes 9/11 Truth, Yet Still Says That
233. Cheney Confronted on 9/11 Standdown [Vd]
234. Vancouver 9/11 Truth Strikes Again [Vd]
235. Anthrax report casts doubt on scientific evidence
236. Embassies Closed Due to Terror Warnings
237. FDC NOTAM/TFR has been issued for San Francisco
238. NORAD to conduct training flights over DC area
239. FBI: 100 Percent Chance of WMD Attack
240. Russian foreign minister criticises the West for
241. Jihadi who helped train 7/7 bomber freed by US
242. Rumsfeld Warns of Iran, N. Korea Electromagnetic
243. FCC: Presidential emergency alerts to be tested
244. Evidence of 2002 Taliban Offer Damages Myth of
245. Man says ex-CIA agent Posada gave him explosives
246. GORDON DUFF: Elvis, Bin Laden, and Julian Assange
247. Sinn Fein's Martin McGuinness was due to take
248. WeAreChange New Jersey releases 100 never before
249. US terror threat 'at most heightened state' since
250. Is the Internet 9/11 Under Way?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network false flags

1351. MSNBC's Joe Scarborough breaks We Are Change
1352. NeoCon Douglas Feith Chastized for 9/11, WMD Lies 1353. UK in Joint Anti TERROR Military Exercise with 1354. Jewish Lobby Vetoes Candidate Over 9-11 Views 1355. What Was Mysterious Activity Going on in the 1356. Max Keiser speaks of WTC & Controlled Demolitions
1357. Sarah Palin Links Iraq to 9/11 Again
1358. Anthrax Links to 9-11
1359. Dion sacks Winnipeg candidate over 9/11 beliefs
1360. Internet attacks on 9/11 Truth intensify 1361. 9/11 Truth Norway: Why We Fight
1362. Truck bomber kills at least 40 at Islamabad hotel
1363. A Week Late, Al Qaeda Releases 9/11 Video 1364. A Modernized Taliban Thrives in Afghanistan
1365. Intelligence: Terror operation in U.S., Europe
1366. Key Witness to WTC 7 Explosions Dead at 53
1367. Key Witness to WTC 7 Explosions Dead at 53
1368. Germany: Stern.de exposes CIA link to "Islamic"
1369. AE911Truth Challenges NIST's WTC 7 Floor 12 Fire
1370. McKinney compares 9/11 truthers with civil rights 1371. Scott Forbes 9/11 power down: The Elephant In The 1372. It's the creepy plotters who rule us we should 1373. Former Syrian minister: US guilty for 9/11 attacks
1374. Nader Calls For New 9/11 Investigation
1375. 2005 film about the 9/11
1376. Pakistani intelligence aiding Maoist gangs in 1377. Global Poll: Less Than Half Believe Al-Qaeda
1378. Sarkozy's comic friend says sorry for 911 comments
1379. GCHQ recorded Omagh bombers, TV show to claim 1380. Russian Poll: 84% Say Truth About 9/11 Being

1381. OKC & WTC BOMBINGS by Bill Hughes
1382. Next US terror attack ‘could be by white Americans

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 NUCLEAR DEMOLITION OF THE WTC BY DIMITRI

Title: 9/11 NUCLEAR DEMOLITION OF THE WTC BY DIMITRI

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:08 PM (GMT)

9/11 Nuclear Demolition Of The WTC By Dimitri Khalezov

[dohtml]Part - 1:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/XZzwyPRgY9o"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/XZzwyPRgY9o" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 2:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/5U4pwJzK8Dk&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/5U4pwJzK8Dk&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 3:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/7xa8cErtJhY&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/7xa8cErtJhY&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 4:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/XZFoLRkg-K0&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/XZFoLRkg-K0&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 5:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Ddl4qsOc8po&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Ddl4qsOc8po&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 6:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/xRzPT8pZUjo&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/xRzPT8pZUjo&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 7:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/yKJksB3oTPA&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/yKJksB3oTPA&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 8:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/cyF6QgE3ufc&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/cyF6QgE3ufc&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 9:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/_3VqyUXEAPA& feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/_3VqyUXEAPA&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

Part - 10:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/pt_-qBVkTJk&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/pt_-qBVkTJk&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 11:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/D5DeeHCCROg&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/D5DeeHCCROg&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 12:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/n-TbpezpY0c&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/n-TbpezpY0c&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 13:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/JhgS17l-PZo&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/JhgS17l-PZo&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 14:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/JXk1-Ut7_ks&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/JXk1-Ut7_ks&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 15:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/kMXdWK3KTGY&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/kMXdWK3KTGY&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 16:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/cYf5-iw6vok&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/cYf5-iw6vok&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 17:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/mGHxFXB2Vew&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mGHxFXB2Vew&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 18:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/bto0KbFtqKs&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/bto0KbFtqKs&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 19:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/17H6sp-FyiA&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/17H6sp-FyiA&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 20:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/MW9CsWi2aDk&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/MW9CsWi2aDk&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 21:

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/_TYP8JHGRsE&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/_TYP8JHGRsE&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 22:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/x77s9lxt7t0&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/x77s9lxt7t0&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 23:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ZgClEUxLXRk&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ZgClEUxLXRk&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 24:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/FQDHAN3aQAg&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/FQDHAN3aQAg&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 25:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Y5q64FW0uiI&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Y5q64FW0uiI&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>
Part - 26:
<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/a0Wbh32W2uc&feature=channel"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/a0Wbh32W2uc&feature=channel" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:09 PM (GMT)

Part 1

1.

Starts off with giving background on Dimitri Khalezov.
2.

Show chart from FBI that shows Dimitri is on a terror list of some sort 3.

Talks about him being arrested for supplying passport in Bali Bombing…denies charge, never been convicted.

Part 2

1.

Talks about aluminum cannot penetrate steel structure. Even with speed.
2.

Talks about ‘live’ delay of 17 seconds or so, that aided in TV fakery, and how only one video of plane striking and later on more tapes came forward of the second plane, but nothing live, everything is courtesy of someone else.
3.

Show screen captures form supposed same camera that has different background colors, and the black frames.
4.

Talks about penetrating capabilities of the planes and why they would not penetrate the towers.
5.

Talks about how plane should have struck the outside of the building and instead of going in the building it would have been crumpled or broken up and fall to the street below.
6.

Talks about the video of the plane that the nose supposedly came out the side, and also that the angle that the plane was supposed to have hit would not match up with the nose coming out even if it was possible, the angle does not match with the actual angle of impact.
7.

Talks about TV fakery…..best evidence is from helicopter journalist who is looking directly at WTC when 2nd plane supposedly hits….People in the studio keep saying they saw a plane…the person on the ground level keeps saying he saw no plane and that it just exploded…the people in the studio tell him it came from the side he wasn't looking at…. absurd, then repeats it several time…..it just exploded.

Part 3

1.

Shows different footage of second plane coming in that the angle of the plane coming in do not match from one video to another, some have it coming in at one angle and others have it coming at other angles. Says this points to digital manipulation.
2.

Talks about the form of impact hole. Says that it does not match up with a plane hitting there.
3.

Talks about why the 9/11 commission had to report what they did. They had to invent a cover up story……this is explained why later in the interview.
4.

Talks about the official story, jet fuel, weakened steel, collapse…..and why it isn't true. Show the people standing in the impact hole, and if tower was burning hot enough to compromise the steel how was this woman, and others standing there holding on to steel beams?
5.

Talks about the jet fuel having been mostly burned off at impact….if there was an impact….maybe jet fuel was also planted with the bombs. ---------- not exactly so. I said in context of discussion that the fuel should have burn out by the time of the Tower's collapse. The interviewer said that IF there WERE planes? I answered – that it does not matter in this case – if it were planes, or the kerosene was simply brought in the Tower in barrels, irrespectively of the mode of its delivery, it should have been burned out by the time. That's what I meant.
6.

Pentagon was attacked by a Russian Granient Missile (not sure of spelling). Shows trajectory of missile to the pentagon. ---------- Granit (or Granite) or P-700 missile. You can check that one in Wikipedia.
7.

Talks about how a plane could not make the maneuver it was claimed to have….only a missile could have.
8.

Says missile would have been launched from Atlantic Ocean….probably 200 to 300 miles out.

1.

Says actions of US military prove that attack came from Atlantic because when jets were scrambled they were sent in the direction of the Atlantic.

9.

Says missile would be 7 tons and very thick. Flying tank. Speed over 2.5 mach.

1.

Exit hole is good evidence of missile. ---------- add here that I said that it was an antiship missile, because the way it behaved (attempted to strike the Pentagon at the waterline level) is a typical behavior of antiship missiles.

Part 4

1.

Says the warhead on the missile would be half megaton thermonuclear warhead.
2.

Says mechanics of attack and actions of the military prove it was a missile fired from a ship in the Atlantic.
3.

Talks about knowledge of nuclear demolition scheme in the Soviet Union, says he found out in 1994, that the WTC had the nuclear demolition feature. Purpose was because building code of NYC and Chicago in the 60's would not allow skyscrapers to be built unless the designer also submitted a plan to demolish the building in case it was ever necessary in the future. Side note….this actually makes sense to me from a codes standpoint. If you're going to build it you also have to tell us how you plan to bring it down. Seems logical to me.
4.

Talks about how in the 60's it was more acceptable to use nuclear reactions for civil reasons….power and such….so it is not so farfetched to think that the building codes people would accept this option….it was a demolition option and nothing more…..in the 60's people didn't look at nuclear devices like we do now.
5.

Talks about how crazy an idea this is, and that in Russia at the time it was a joke of sorts.
6.

Talks about a Treaty between US and Russia for peaceful nuclear explosions. And what they are sometimes used for and why we would have such a treaty.
7.

Talks of controversy in the 80's when someone found blueprints of the WTC and it showed the plans for the nuclear demolition option and this person took it to the press. Side note …. I wander if anyone else remembers this at all or if there is any proof of it. ---------- yes, they do. I encounter people quite recently, who also recollected this scandal. There was an argument over removal my article on nuclear demolition (not the WTC, but in general) from the Wikipedia and during heated argument I mentioned this particular point to my opponents. One guy from among the opponents also said that know he could also recollect that in the 80s or so there was some discussion on this topic in some US newspapers.

Part 5

1.

Talks about conversations between Putin and Condie Rice on the morning of 9/11 during the attacks…about a Russian missile, the missile that hit the pentagon. This missile had a nuclear warhead that did not explode…..Side note….this part not explained very well. ---------- yes, I think that was really the fault of the interviewer – he should have asked why? Then I will answer that the perpetrators intentionally rendered its detonator useless, because it was not their plan – to level Washington DC with a half-megaton explosion. But, at least, I explained it to you personally now.
2.

'Doomsday' plane – plane seen flying over White House….never explained officially. White House was evacuated … reported military aircraft but classified. Pentagon insists it is not a military aircraft…no mention in commission report.

1.

6:08 stamp…says US government had no involvement in attacks…was only a victim.

3.

Say doomsday plane was sent up to keep government operating…..as its was designed to do….was designed because of nuclear war. Interesting. ---------- I think I explained it clearly enough in the video. Perhaps, you simply missed the point. The Doomsday plane is a flying command post designed to direct a retaliatory nuclear strike against the Soviet Union, should the latter send its nuclear missiles first and damage stationary U.S. command posts designed to direct such a retaliatory nuclear strike. In case of a nuclear alert all 4 Doomsday planes in various locations of the U.S. must be scrambled at once in a couple of minutes time after receiving a notification of an upcoming nuclear attack against the United States. In no other case they may fly, unless for training/routing checking of their combat readiness only. By the way – strikingly 'white' color of this plane is nothing else than the so-called 'anti-flush white' designed to protect this aircraft as much as possible from being damaged by thermal radiations of multiple nuclear explosions. It is really a 'Doomsday plane' in the full sense of this word.

4.

Talks about underground bunker – atomic bunker…talks about how Cheney and Rice and Speaker of the House was ordered to bunker. Says that missile that hit pentagon was supposed to be nuclear and was but did not go off. ---------- again you missed the point. Cheney and Rice were simply grabbed by the Secret Service agents who broke into their offices and grabbed them both by their hands and by the trousers' belt (not sure what it was in case of Rice, since she is a woman), nearly lifting them from the ground, and quickly propelled them both downstairs towards the anti-atomic bunker under the White House. So, because of this quick action both – Cheney and Rice have about an extra minute to get to the bunker before the explosion due to occur. In case of the Speaker, he was approached by the Secret Service agents and ordered to run to a helicopter to be urgently re-located to another anti-atomic bunker outside D.C. However, due to that action should take about 4-5 minutes, he would have no chance to survive – because about the time he was leaving the White House and running to the helicopter pad, the missile struck the Pentagon and supposed to produce a half-megaton nuclear explosion.
5.

Tries to explain why doomsday plane has played a part in people saying the US was involved in the initial attacks and not just a cover up of certain events afterwards but failed to realize they were not a part of the attack but the US knew we were under nuclear attack and the government needed to move the skies in order to ensure the government would remain operating during and after a nuclear attack. ---------- this point you got well, but it appears to me that I didn't talk about this particular. But this is true what you say. The skies were cleared not because of planes hijackings, but because of nuclear attack. No doubt.
6.

Talks about underground bunker and how the door has supposedly never been closed was closed that day with the government people inside. Cheney and Rice were here and speaker of the house was ordered to another atomic bunker somewhere else because not all officials can be in the same secure location at once. ---------- again you missed the point. Cheney and Rice hid into an anti-atomic bunker under the White House. Speaker was flown into another anti-atomic bunker – outside D.C. However, the steel anti-atomic door that has never been closed in US history, except on the 9/11, with photo of it shown in that part of the movie, was of neither of the above anti-atomic bunkers. This is the door leading to the protected NORAD's command post located inside 'anti-atomic' Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado. Upon getting notification of upcoming nuclear attack, the then commander of NORAD, Gen. Ralf Eberhart, immediately left his peace-time unprotected command post and moved to his protected command post 12 miles away (he drove by car and unlikely had chance to survive would the real nuclear strike occur at that time) but in any case once he arrived there he ordered to close that door – and that happened for the first time in US history.

Part 6

1.

Talks about Fireman had no fear of collapse because they knew that the building would not collapse….needed assistance to get people out … but fires could be contained and put out. Plus the fact that fireman know that steel building do not collapse from fire, or planes hitting them.
2.

Says WTC's were 'pulled' by nuclear option because of fear of collapse by government after planes hit. Talks about how when he was investigating that the conclusion was that the US brought down the towers out of fear of collapse….but was informed that that wasn't the case because either type of collapse would have done about the same damage….this discovery is what lead to most of the rest of the discovery's. He set out to prove that the building were brought down by nuclear demolition because of knowledge he had from his position in the Russian military from years ago ---------- you missed the point. Because of my knowledge from military service I knew of the fact the nuclear demolition scheme did exist, but not of the fact that it was actually put to use on the 9/11 ----------, he did that….and then found out about the missing missiles and all the rest mostly as afterthought to his original plan. FBI received info that 3 nuclear warheads were used against US ---------- + info that 2 warheads were allegedly hidden inside the planes that stuck the Twin Towers (or hidden in whatever else that struck the Towers, because as you could notice I am a 'no-planes' man, and I guess the FBI follows the 'no-planes' version too, at least for their internal work) ----------. In order to avoid an atmospheric nuclear explosion that would have killed millions they brought the buildings down using our own secret nuclear demolition plan for the towers….this is what needed to be hidden along with the fact that 24 Russian missiles with nuclear warheads were missing. ---------- 22, not 24. Besides it was different issues – a headache to hide loss of the missiles was the headache of the Russians, not of the Americans. Americans had some headache of their own.

3.

Says FBI explanation is that 3 nuclear warheads were aim at US that day…1 one each plane that hit towers and 1 in the missile that hit pentagon. Says that the nuclear underground detonation was ordered because of fear that nukes at top of towers would go off and that would be much more catastrophic than using the built in nuclear demolition option.

1.

Reason given that is that atmospheric atomic explosion is more contaminous and destructive than underground detonation.
2.

Say if exploded at top would have destroyed Manhattan. ---------- entire New York, not Manhattan. It is half megaton (given that Hiroshima bomb was less than 20 kiloton you can imagine what 500 kiloton is and how much it would destroy).

4.

Say FBI says that he is correct about nuclear detonation, but he is incorrect on conclusion of why they brought down towers.
5.

Shows news coverage of reporter talking … 3 mins after 2 second explosion…..about how the fire chief of safety – Albert Turi -had told him how many firemen were in the building at the time and of explosions after the impact…..says fire chief thinks first explosion after impact was planted on plane..and second explosion after impact was planted in the building. ---------- what was planted in the plane was "secondary device" as he called it, not 'explosion', and the very same kind of "secondary device" was planted in the building, according to Turi.
6.

Live news footage from CNN that shows banner headline at 1003am saying "third explosion shatters world trade center in New York" 7.

Show CNN banner about Sears Tower in Chicago being evacuated…mentions to notice that Empire State Building was not being evacuated --- side personal note….empire state building was evacuated sometime between 945am and 1005a….I know this personally because I was working in that building on the 13th floor and descended the stairs to the street to 5th avenue and 33rd st. … and we watch the tower fall from that vantage point at roughly 1013am…I don't know what the point of mentioning that about the Empire State building really….because honestly everyone at that point had evacuated the tall high rise buildings on their own accord if not ordered to do so….I think he is tying in the fact that the sears tower supposedly has the nuclear demolition option as well….thats why they were evacuated. ---------- you did not miss the point, but perhaps you have wrongly interpreted it. The Sears Tower was evacuated because of some CENTRALIZED order, transmitted via channels of Civil Defense system. This was an EVENT. Evacuation of the rest of the building was just a gesture of a good will by their respective owners, perhaps after consultation with local security specialists. It can't be considered as an EVENT in the abovementioned sense. See the difference?
8.

At 1013am Breaking CNN news is that the third explosion has collapsed the first tower (but second tower hit)

Part 7

1.

Says it is not correct to use term nuclear weapon…weapons are designed to kill people this was a nuclear demolition device … but he does say 'still it was a nuclear device'
2.

He goes on to talk about how the device would have worked….he wrote an article for Wiki on how to demolish using nuclear device….he didn't mention WTC … but article was still taken down.
3.

He goes on to detail about the nuclear process …. www.nuclear-demolition-wikipedia.com

1.

Start explanation at 2:43 mark…..

4.

Explains difference between atmospheric explosion and underground explosion.

Part 8

1.

Cont. from atmospheric and underground nuclear explosion explanation of differences.
2.

Discusses how much nuclear force needed to destroy amounts of bedrock.
3.

Talks about largest allowed was 150 kiloton was maximum allowed under nuclear demolition treaty talked about in earlier part.
4.

Talks about how Russians used nuclear underground detonation to form I think he said 'glass holes'….but could not make out exactly. ---------- gas holders underground. To keep gas under pressure, because volcanic glass coating walls of underground cavity makes it very useful for that purpose.

Part 9

1.

Cont. to discuss specifics of what would happen to the blast area underground.
2.

Goes into talk about blast waves and why there would have been none and why people on the surface would not be injured by the blast.
3.

Talks about radioactive gases escaping to surface eventually…and why tests are done in remote places.
4.

Talks about how some radioactive particles would be filtered out by the time it reaches surface and says could still get radioactive exposure for two weeks after from an atomic underground blast at 500m underground with a 150 kiloton nuclear device. Says that the epicenter would continue to be radioactive for … deadly radioactive for 3 years. Says the epicenter would stay hot for 1 year with a 150kiloton device.
5.

Points out why the underground nuclear explosion is not comparable to Hiroshima.
6.

Points out that example given are for typical underground devices for test….
7.

Starts to go into details about specifics of WTC nuclear demolition.

1.

Says for WTC would be 50m under the tower foundation…explained in a min later that because of basements of 27m that the device would have been placed 77m from the ground surface.
2.

This would make tower lose its foundation and thus melt the steel of the foundation and bring down everything above.

Part 10

1.

Talks about how we would not hear anything on the surface when it was detonated, but would feel the ground shake.
2.

Richter scale measurement chart displayed…..5.5 on scale is a 80 kiloton explosion equivalent 3.

Displays quote of Battalion Chief Brian O'Flaherty who says of being in the Marriott Hotel "I hear a noise. Right after that noise, you could feel the building start to shudder, tremble, under your feet" then the tower came down.
4.

Shows Clip of tower shaking before the collapse….its the 12 second video that is focused on the damage zone….anyone who know 9/11 truth or otherwise has seen it….camera is on tripod….frames shake for several seconds and 10 seconds later the tower is crumbling.
5.

Goes into details of how the damage would have been created by the blast zone expanding..

1.

Damage zone – up to 350 meters from ground surface….says building would be damaged or broken up into smaller pieces.
2.

Immediately after that up to 300m from ground and everything in that zone would be turned to microscopic dust.
3.

This is explaining why there was little left of the towers the only part that would not have been affected by the blast is the very upper floors, about ? of the towers…everything else was reduced to dust.

Part 11

1.

Shows a good graphic to explain part 10 of actual damaged tower and what zones would have been turned to what and why the collapse looks like it did because of the way the towers were affected by nuclear device.
2.

2:55 mark discusses why they call it ground zero – 'the place on the earth's surface directly at, below, or above the explosion of a nuclear bomb. The American Heritage Desk Dictionary (edition 1981) Side note – merrian-webster still defines it this way as definition number one.

[link to dictionary.merriam-webster.com] ---------- however, this one added also a definition No.2 to dilute the clear original meaning. Before the 9/11 it was one single meaning.

3.

Shows example of how new dictionaries have changed the definition of the ground zero since 9/11. Uses Logan's dictionary, I have never heard of them, but it is a real example. ---------- not Logan, but Longman – it is a very famous dictionary company. About as famous as Webster or Oxford and perhaps more famous than the American Heritage. I am very surprised that you have never heard of it.
4.

Talks about how the definitions were changed after ward to talk about bombs and severe damage as to not remind people of its real pre-9/11 meaning.
5.

Talks about why the dust would not be radioactive. 8:20 mark. In atmosphere dust would become radioactive but not underground because it's the pressure of the nuclear device that turned the materials to dust not radiation blast.

Part 12

1.

Explains how radioactive vapors escaped after the collapse and the vapors that continued after the blast for several weeks was radioactive.
2.

Shows pictures of Fireman looking in the hole with the vapors coming out, and that they breathed it in and also had direct contact ---------- not direct contact by were subjected to direct radiation --------. Says health problems would arise, will talk about that in further parts.
3.

Says most of the dust was steel dust, and the rest would be concrete, office materials, wires, and people, but the majority of the towers were steel and that was the major component of the dust.
4.

Goes into temperatures….150 kiloton at 500m would take one year to cool, talks about vapors coming out 6-8 weeks later and is still red hot, 3 months later finding molten steel in the debris.
5.

Discredits thermite theory. Thermite could not sustain the high temps, and cannot turn steel to dust.
6.

Ask why more experts haven't come out to question commission report. Explanation is that it is physiological.

Part 13

1.

Talks about why people of knowledge agree to official story, even though they know from education that events could not have happened from plane crashes.

1.

The Second 'truth' about 9/11 – explanation given to experts who question 9/11 … all the 3 wtc buildings have been demolished by 'al-queda'using 3 stolen soviet made portable nuclear devices RA-115/Ra-116 (aka 'mini nukes') which the 'al-qaeda' had planted into the 3 wtc buildings in advance.
2.

Show quotes from Spanish article about how 3 mini nukes were used to destroy the wtc towers including tower 7….thus blaming even tower 7 on bin laden, and not from damage from debris from the twin towers.

2.

The 9/11 commission was advised to not report this to the people because of fear of public panic over mini nukes. Russia was said to have made 700 suitcase nukes and 100 were missing. The ones that the bin laden supposedly used were gotten from the Ukraine, according to this interview. ---------- not according to my interview, but according to Spanish "El Mundo" newspaper, article "Mi Hermano Bin Laden, Tragedia, Apocalipsis, New York" of 16 Sept 2001.
3.

Says that the US had to use the built in demolition option to bring down the towers because they were given info that the planes carried nukes that would detonate at the top of the towers, and the atmospheric blast would have destroyed Mahattan and surrounding and they really had no choice. Remember from earlier he says the US is a victim in 9/11 but because of public fear of the suitcase nuke they had to cover the real story. Basically.

4.

Talking about why firefighters would allow for a cover up. If nukes went off at top of building millions would have been killed. The firefighters, etc had to go with it, and the truth is only top officials would have even know of the nuclear option.
5.

Says thousands of people would have to keep secret.
6.

Talks about disagreements amongst experts …. Paid experts and non paid.

Part 14

1.

Talks about materials being shipped out without examination for investigation….partly out of radiation concerns. ---------- not in this sense, but in a sense as to prevent any independent study of the materials that could reveal radioactivity.
2.

1:25 starts to talk about WTC 7 and its collapse and omission from Commission report.
3.

Starts explanation of why WTC 7 collapse would look different from the twin towers.

1.

Explains blast zone and because 7 was smaller the dust zone reached to the top of WTC 7, so it did not have the top damage zone that the blast would create.

4.

Shows BBC live footage were the reporter says he has reports that the Solomon (sp? WTC7) has collapsed….this is not the famous footage of the women with WTC 7 behind her and the feed is lost, this is voice over from the male anchor in studio over live footage of Collapse areas. ---------- yes, this is indeed a different footage than the one with the woman, because the one with the woman would be at 5.07 PM EST, while this one was aired at 4.56 PM EST. By the way – woman also called the WTC-7 as “Salomon Brothers Building” in that famous clip you mentioned.

1.

Give report of warning from British foreign office to British citizens that there is a ‘strong risk of further atrocities in NYC.’ 24 mins after this is when the building actually collapsed. ---------- side note “atrocity” and “atrocious device” are jargon words in secret services’ jargon that are actually mean “mini-nuclear bombing” (usually reported to plebs as “truck-bombing” or “car-bombing” – like the one in Oklahoma or in Kenya and Tanzania cases), while “atrocious device” usually refers to a “mini-nuke” in the same jargon. It is just for you own reference. Just in case.

5.

Says WTC 7 housed the nuclear devices that were used to demolish all three.

1.

Tunnels from WTC 7 to 1 and 2 would be how the devices were delivered for detonation.

6.

Explains why first collapse was of second hit tower and second collapse was by first hit tower.

1.

Shows map of WTC complex…explains that WTC 2 is farther from WTC 7 and if they would have collapsed WTC 1 first then the blast wave for WTC 1 would have destroyed the tunnel over to WTC 2 from building 7. So tower 2 had to come down first, because had tower 1 come down first….tower 2 would probably still be standing today.

2.

WTC 7 was destroyed because if it wasn't then it would have been discovered about the nuclear demolition option for skyscrapers that was put into place decades earlier. The public couldn't find out about nukes being used for demolition.

7.

Concludes that the US is reacting to an attack and in response to that attack does something it needs to cover up (nuclear demolition of skyscraper, with people still in them btw, to save nuclear detonation in skyscraper that would get into the atmosphere and kill millions).

Part 15

1.

Why cover it up? The American people would not accept that killing 3000 people in order to save millions was acceptable. That could never be revealed to the public, even if it was done to protect millions. ---------- I did not mean this. In fact, the American public perhaps WOULD accept that it is better to kill the 3000 than to let be killed 6 million, because it is simply reasonable and the American public is not so devoid of any reason as might appear. I meant not this. I meant that the American public would never accept an idea that the nuclear devices did under the Twin Towers in the first instance. Because of bureaucrats from the Department of Buildings and because of stupid clause in the building code? That what I meant.

1.

Why then create 2 wars over the cover up? Explanation given by me….Rahm Emmanuel I believe said 'you can never let a disaster go to waste' or something to that effect. ---------- in fact, I explained why the wars should have taken place. In order to distract public attention from nuclear explosion in Manhattan to something else (wars). And I put an example –after the nuclear explosion in Beirut in 1983 (for plebs referred to as a "truck-bombing" of Beirut Marine barracks), the very next day the US Government launched Grenada invasion – just to distract the public attention from the nuclear blast in Beirut towards occupation of Grenada. But that one was a small mini-nuke explosion, so the war was smaller. Here were 3x 150 kiloton explosions, so wars should be bigger in scale – to distract public attention appropriately. That what I meant to say.

2.

Says WTC 7 was destroyed because it was the base of operation (and housed the devices) that would deploy the nuke device if it was ever needed, it was destroyed to hide that fact and that fact alone. The fact that Secret Service and many other government buildings were housed there is just a coincidence.
3.

Talks about alarm system that should be in place for this nuclear demolition option that should have been deployed that morning was disabled. Mentions a timeline that should take place from when the device are put in place and detonation.
1.

Side note…..the above point is not clear on the time line…and an interesting video edit is made right after Dimitri says he thinks that that part of the demolition is a conspiracy…and then edit. ---------- there was a special alarm system based on WTC-7 that was designed to produce alarm signals towards the WTC-1 and -2 should the nuclear demolition scheme of the Twins become activated (to my knowledge there should be at least 20 minutes, perhaps even 25 minutes, between the press of the Red Button and till the time of actual nuclear explosion. So, all this time some continuous alarm signal should have been transmitted towards the dangerous areas urging everyone immediately to get out. This system for some not so-clear reason was put in "test mode" very early in the morning of the 9/11 and so all signals produced by it (if any at all) should have been ignored. That is official information. So, when he asked me why would they disable the alarm system, I answered that in my opinion it was some kind of conspiracy. I didn't' specify, but I think that Larry Silverstein was a part of the 9/11 gang from the very beginning and it was his order to disable the alarm system. However, I don't have any proof of it. It is only a suspicion. So, I say it is in my opinion only.
4.

Talks of damage to a building behind WTC 7, Fiterman Hall, because of where the nuke device would have been placed because of the shape of WTC7, shows Google search and link that says that this building is being decontaminated. Then another that shows the building was demolished. Shows quotes from article about the building, EPA 'Fiterman's got to go'.

5.

Explains why post office and Verizon on either side of WTC7 were not damaged…because of placement of device and blast zone.
6.

Show where he believes nuke charges would have been placed under WTC 1 and 2 1.

Explains why some of the corner structures seemed to have 'survived'.

Part 16

1.

Explains why damage would look like it did based on location of device.
2.

Explains why the blast wave only affected the structure and didn't produce and 'outside' blast wave.
3.

Gives example of another French scientist who gave same equations he did about blast waves, but they differed on why and how….but the calculations were the same for the damage.

1.

French scientist says that there was a nuclear reactor under the WTC complex…this is where the two men disagree, Dimitri and the French Scientist.

4.

Shows article from 3 Dec. 2001, 12 weeks after, that says Deputy Chief Charles Biaich of New York Fire Department would not predict when the last fire might be extinguished.

1.

Says same hotspots were found under WTC 7

5.

Talks about the way the fires were extinguished in WTC1 and 2 were the same that had to be used to put out WTC 7 underground fires weeks later, says this proves that all 3 were brought down by the same method. ---------- also in the same interview with Blaich it is said that underground fires were not typical and represented a mass of mixed combustible materials as deep as 50 meters. Very important point that you have missed. Also you missed the point that in the same interview it was said that two apparent radioactivity absorbents were mixed into waters of firefighters and used to extinguish 'underground fires' under spots of the WTC -1, -2 and… -7.

Part 17

1.

Starts off with report from Pentagon where reporter is talking about small debris, and the collapse of the wall that happened 45 mins later. ---------- in this interview, in fact, the CNN reporter clearly explains that there was no plane in the Pentagon's case. Very clear.
2.

Goes into Russian missile he says is used for pentagon attack.

1.

Says Russian officials new missiles had been stolen but had to cover that up. ------- you perhaps mean "knew", not 'new'.
2.

Talks about missing submarine, also, im having trouble following this part and how it is all a part of this. I guess it background on where the missiles came from…..

3.

Shows article about nuclear powered vessel 'Kursk' and test it conducted with firing them. ---------- it seems that you completely missed my point here. What I meant that after salvaging the sunken submarine, the Russian officials made a kind of 'production' by claiming that missiles' silos can not be opened, because it was allegedly too dangerous – just in order to hide the fact that the missiles were no longer in their silos and the silos were empty. Then the Russians proceeded to cutting the silos 'as is' from the body of the submarine using welding and then, without opening the empty silos, brought them to some remote location and destroyed them with mini-nukes without opening – so to hide completely the fact that the missiles were stolen. Two Russian newspapers articles (with English translation of both) are provided that confirm this seemingly insane claim.

Part 18

1.

Talking about the missing Russian missiles, 22 or 24 total, interviewer asking what they are doing with the, he says breaking them down possibly because uranium and plutonium are very valuable, or expensive. ---------- the matter of expensive nuclear materials arises because of the question whether it would be reasonable to destroy the missiles and their warheads by 'mini-nuking' them, instead of disassembling and finding some other good use of the expensive nuclear materials inside the warheads. It seems you again completely missed the point.

1.

Side note….i still am confused about who stole or acquired the Russian missiles, and who actually deployed them against the US. I am following why he thinks its is underground nukes, but after 180 mins or so, I sure be clear on WHO attacked us….if it wasn't a self inflicted wound, was it the Russians? ---------- I didn't mention it in the interview, but only mentioned that it was not he Americans. But for you personally I can tell who it was. It was the Freemasons in collaboration with the Israeli Mossad.

2.

Talking about the missile test from the Kurst was to cover up the fact that 20 some Russian missiles were missing. 22 were missing, 1 was used on the pentagon, and that leaves 20 missing missiles with 500kiloton nuclear warheads on them. They are saying the US gov't knew this because Russia had told them under the nuclear agreements. ---------- no, I have never said that the Russians confessed to the Americans that the missile that stuck the Pentagon was stolen from Kursk. To the best of my knowledge until today the official interpretation of events is still different than my claims. The Russian claim (secretly of course) that these Granit missiles were stolen by some bad Russian guy from Ukrainian warehouse of the Black Sea Fleet and sold to Saddam Hussein. In fact, my claims about Kursk affair are extremely embarrassing for both – the Russians and the Americans, because they knock down the already established version of the 'truth'.
3.

Talking about how he has given all this info to the government and no one has even ask him anything, reason he says is because they already know it all. Says he is prepared to go to court and prove his position about 9/11 and the missing missiles that are caring the massive nuclear warheads.

1.

This is where a cover up comes into play. If the US knows this information and is not letting the public know. He is saying that the higher ups are not allowing the grunts to investigate his truthful claims because if they do they would discover what he has discovered.
2.

The interviewer says he believes that the US is ignoring his claims because the US knows he is correct AND that the US isn't worried about the missing 20 missiles because we know where they are.

Part 19

1.

Talking about why Americans or others can't buy that it is a nuclear device because there was no mushroom cloud, or massive reading of radiation. People expect Hiroshima when they hear about nuclear detonation, but that is above ground. The nuclear detonation is different above ground.
2.

They go into the timeframe of first impact, second impact, pentagon strike, and that a decision had to be made very quickly for the nuclear demolition, Dimitri says this does fit the time line because the US knows of the missing missiles and the possibility of nuclear detonation in the atmosphere so they decided very quickly to use the demolition option that was built in.

1.

Side note….Dimitri says the US was absolutely certain that the planes had the mini nukes on them….---------- not 'mini-nukes' but 500 kiloton thermo-nuclear warheads, akin to that found in the Pentagon ----------also much earlier it was discussed that planes could not 'penetrate' the WTC towers and cut threw them like butter, they should have impacted and basically fallen to the ground…..i remember the videos that show the plane that possibly had the 'pod' under it that makes a flash a micro second before it impacted…..maybe it had to shoot the device into the building because otherwise it would have fallen to the street level, most likely. ---------- yes, but this is MY PERSONSL opinion that planes were digital. However, at the 9/11 an OFFICIAL version of events was that there were planes (or missiles if not planes) that struck the WTC. So, for the FBI by then it sounded reasonable. Now, perhaps, they realized already it was just BS, but it is simply to late to change the story now.

3.

Shows clip of news report about safety Chief Albert Turi about devices planted in the building.

1.

Says this confirms that they were aware of bombs on the plane….and in the tower, because they knew of the nuclear demolition option.
2.

Side note – Dimitri says earlier that he believes the TV fakery angle as well, or evidence points to it, and possibly no planes at all, because there is evidence of that, like it or not, but now he talks about how the safety chief saying he believes the planes had bombs and the building had pre planted bombs…doesn't that contradict itself? I am a little confused on the stance here…..and how those could both be true, TV fakery and bombs on the plane. ---------- no, it does not contradict. Because it is MY PERSONAL opinion that there were no planes (and no warheads either). However, in opinion of the FBI officials then there were both – 'planes' and 'warheads' (another version – missiles, instead of planes, and warheads). It is simply because my personal opinion (as of today) is very different from the contemporary FBI opinion (as of the September the 11).

4.

Goes back to Sears's tower being evacuated and other events around 835 and beyond.

1.

They are talking about the sears tower being ordered evacuated at 1002a, 3 mins after the first collapse. They say the Empire State Building and Trump Towers and other building were not evacuated. This is not true, I know for a fact. I worked in the Empire State Building on 9/11 on the 13th floor facing the twin towers. I stated this above. Sometime around 940 am the building was ordered evacuated. An announcement came over the intercom that was building wide and said that everyone should evacuate the building…I believe it mentioned it was ok to use elevators, because I chose the stairs. I did not evacuate immediately, me and a co-worker stayed for a few mins longer and the announcement was made again.. we then took the stairs to the lobby where everyone from our office met in the intersection….the middle of the road….5th ave. and 33rd st. We could see the tops of the twin towers and after being there for not long…ten or fifteen mins the first tower came down…we could see the smoke rushing down the streets..even from that far away. So I don't know why they have mentioned this twice already, but it is not true, at least for the empire state building. It may not have made the news crawl but we were ordered evacuated. And actually the building was closed the next day…and for 2 weeks after that we were evacuated several times for bomb scares. ---------- and again, you have to distinguish by the scale of these events. Evacuation of the Empire State building was a local matter. Evacuation of the Sears Tower – by the centralized order, transmitted by channels of the civil defense system. See the difference? Just to make it easier to understand – in the 9/11 there were actually 2 distinctly different orders to ground all aircraft. One – by orders of respective airlines flight dispatchers (local matter) – because of fear of hijackings. The other – centralized order by the NORAD (centralized command SCATANA) – because of necessity to immediately clear all skies because of atomic alert and expectation of massive arrival of enemy missiles and enemy aircraft. That is about the same huge difference between the order to evacuate the Sears Tower and the order to evacuate the Empire State Building. While the second one was evacuated merely because of fear of possible terror actions, the first one was evacuated clearly in connection with implementation of a nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC. Hope, you realize how huge is the difference between these two events.

5.

Saying that Sear's tower was evacuated because it had the same built in design of nuclear demolition and they had to evacuate just in case it was also a target, to save lives. Again, this contradicts the TV fakery, unless there were pre planted bombs in the tower that were not nuclear that started the event, and to explain that they added the planes so mentally people would be able to handle the towers coming down. Unfortunately people are ignorant and they assume that a plane hitting a building would bring it down, its easy to deceive ignorant people. But I am still confused about how the TV fakery can also mesh with the bombs on the planes, etc. ---------- no, it does not contradict that. It was simply because it was so awful thing to do – to nuke the Tower with life beings still in it, that no normal person would allow other live beings to continue to remain in the Sears Tower with a similar 150 kiloton nuke underneath it just because no plane yet hit the Sears Tower. Just think about it from this point of view.
6.

Says he knows from his work experience that the twin towers for sure had the nuclear demolition option and heard rumors that the sears tower did as well, and on Sept. 11 when it was evacuated that is when he knew, because they were afraid that the sears tower was a target that day as well, thus they evacuated it in case they needed to bring it down. Side note… seems like they waited a long time to evacuate, when the first tower came down, if they knew they were a target because of the nuclear demolition option. ---------- about the last I can 't comment, because I don't know.

Part 20

1.

Talking about other government having known a nuclear device went off based on seismic readings and knows how to interpret those reading.
2.

Says that seismic readings are not that of the nuclear devices…..in short that it is bogus evidence that has been put out to distract or discredit the nuclear demolition theory. ---------- no, probably, you missed the point. These bogus seismograms clearly represented two mini-nukes explosions (perhaps 1 kiloton each in underground parking lots) and as such this bogus evidence was depicted to represent the same story as published by the Spanish "El Mundo" newspaper – that the Twins were nuked by Osama bin Laden, using stolen Soviet mini-nukes.
3.

Give quoted testimony of Bradley Mann, EMS, "Shortly before the first tower came down I remember feeling the ground shaking. I heard a terrible noise, and then the debris just started flying everywhere.'
4.

Says the seismic reading put out paired with the testimony of witnesses proves that the seismic reading are false because the ground wouldn't shake at a 2.2 it would take a 5-5.5 for the ground to shake or rumble.
5.

Give more quotes of ground shaking from Fire Patrolman Paul Curran 6.

Shows what people feel from different seismic level and what forces can cause seismic reading other than natural earthquake…or what an earthquake's equivalent man made force would be.

Part 21

1.

Going back to TV fakery….they show the video of the man on the street smoking and responding to the plane hitting the building. The question is 'Is he reacting to the plane hitting or is he reacting simply to an explosion that did not involve a plane?' I have to say even before the video slowed it down that has always been my reaction to him, he should have heard the plane coming in from that low well before he reacted. I know sound reaches us later than the event, but his reaction, to me, is that of only an explosion and no plane.
2.

Shows live footage of witnesses who are questioning a reporter saying it was a plane, the witness says it was a bomb, the reporter who is also right there….says it was a plane 'we saw it on tv'…..but the witness is adamant that it was a bomb. ---------- you missed the very first witness – a woman interviewed by Dick Oliver as shown by CNN, who clearly saw that the explosion was INSIDE, and she repeated it twice – INSIDE. Very important.
3.

Shows footage of President Bush news conference talking about how explosives were designed to go off where people above could not escape…..this may be somewhat misleading. When he is referring to the explosive going off higher point to prevent from escaping….his use of explosive could be referring to the planes being used as explosive…..not sure how much credence that adds … but it doesn't take any away.
4.

Says that the original planes with the people on them were ditched in the ocean. ---------- no, I said that the planes were empty of passengers, not full of them.
5.

Shows footage again with a witness on the phone…the tv is showing a plane coming in toward the tower ..no one is reacting to seeing this incoming plane…then the fire ball, then everyone reacts, studio people and live witness on the phone, never a mention of an incoming plane….the person on the phone then starts saying the building just blew up, never mentioning a plane. He is then put on 'pause' according the in studio voice over.

1.

The video points out that the 'live' shot from CNN indicates it is live by a red banner with the word LIVE in white capital letters…as the plane approaches the tower until the fireball the LIVE banner is there, then 12 frames (not seconds) of complete black screen, when the 'live' shot is returned the red 'LIVE' banner is now missing. When they come back to the 'live' feed the red banner is missing and replaced by a blue 'LIVE' banner. The middle missing 'live' banner may be because of a different camera being used….but when they return to the helicopter shot it appears to be from the original live shot with the red banner. This to me, as small as it is, says a lot. The devil is in the details. I know people hate the TV fakery part of this, and I don't know why, all angles should be safe for discussion, but this is a small little smoking pistol to me in that argument. ---------- thanks for noticing that.

6.

Shows live footage from helicopter to the in studio people, Charles Gibson I believe by the voice, in studio they see a plane, the witness says he does not see a plane.

Part 22

1.

Talking about the Shanksville crash site….Dimitri says that 2 of the planes were shot down. I'm confused about which other plane was shot down. They are saying a lot about United reporting to planes down but not saying where. ---------- I thought I made it clear – two planes were shot down – the one later assigned to the Pentagon and the Flight 93. Besides, I did not state that they were shot down, I said I suspect that they were shot down.
2.

Talks about cell towers and about how mobile calls would not have been able from high altitude flying planes.
3.

Talks about why he knows the trade center were nuclear demolitions, but his main research was not on the plane or no plane theory. Just that the building were ultimately destroyed by the nuclear demolition.

4.

Says United 93 was shot down by 'cannon' … I think they mean by bullets type projectiles and not missile type because US missile could not shoot down a friendly aircraft, it would have to be done by 'cannon'. Side note….they may not be saying cannon, it is hard for me to tell. ---------- yes, what I meant was 'cannon'.

Part 23

1.

Talking about hijackers and that some are alive and some have alibis, one was a Pakistan ISI agent, and one was a Christian.
2.

Says that if the 9/11 commission is reporting these 19 hijackers are responsible then the entire commission is false because some of the named and pictured hijackers are alive.
3.

Talks about the found passport, unburned and intact.
4.

Talks about Pakistan ISI and the $100000 wire transfer and why the FBI didn't look at ISI, considering the director was in the US during the attacks, he would have been easy to detain and question. --------- at least to question – even without detaining J 5.

Talks again that the US was a victim put in a desperate situation that it then had to cover up.
6.

Talks about how the US tried its best to tie Saddam Hussein and couldn't.
7.

Talks about how FBI has not evidence against bin laden. Only wanted for crimes outside the US which means he didn't have anything to do with 9/11

Part 24

1.

Talks about the blast crater and the temps again. What the hole would have been filled with since then. Side note – a problem I have with this nuclear theory is that the sub levels were not completely destroyed……the mall underground was intact for the most part. I think the Lauder Brothers movie showed footage of fireman walking around in the Mall area, and the Path station and subway station. If everything above ground was turned to dust from ground level to 300 meters up…. why wasn't the 27 meters of sub levels also turned to dust? Based on the graphics shown in the interviews everything from 27m underground up to 300 meters above ground should have been turned to dust….including the parking garages, mall, mechanical rooms, etc. But they weren't why is that? ---------- note my drawing in regard to the destruction zone around the WTC-7 – where I explained that it slightly touched the Fitterman Hall, but spared both – Verizon and the U.S. Post Office – despite of them being dangerously close to the WTC-7. As you can see from that diagram, the nukes were quite precise and both nukes produced similar destruction zones around the Twins, sparing the rest of environment. I don't see any contradiction at all.
2.

Talking about what should be found underground. Saying if they dug underground that we would find 'volcanic' glass. Testing would show radioactivity. ---------- but not the radioactivity of volcanic glass. Volcanic glass does not retain any atomic structure, nor radioactivity. It is former plasma now set solid. What might retain atomic structure and radioactivity – is former liquid materials, apart of plasma. I think you have to listen to that what I said again.
3.

Talks about a NYC detective that contracted leukemia and had a bone marrow transplant. Bone marrow is the first part affected by radiation. He had worked at ground zero and freshkills landfill, an article written about him brings up question of why certain FBI agents would come dressed in full HazMat protection and everyone else had simple face masks.

4.

Talks about some Dr.'s assigned to these cases would have to have signed a non disclosure agreement because they would know that these people had been exposed to radiation.

Part 25

1.

Talking about how people are subject to radiation and how long it would take for them to feel sick. Describes how much radiation it would take for it to affect you immediately or later on.
2.

Talking about how the levels subsided over a few months. Explains how the body absorbs radiation and the government knew they needed to take measures to make sure people were not overexposed.
3.

Talks about reports of radiation tests being done daily at ground zero….when workers would show levels above what they wanted he was removed from the pile and reassigned.
4.

Says levels workers were exposed to would have taken some time to manifest into symptoms.

Part 26

1.

Talks about how Dr.'s would explain blood diseases and such as reactions from asbestos and other toxins from the office materials burning.
2.

Talks about how there were not 'fires' underground, but extremely hot molten materials.
3.

Says the vapors would continue to escape as long as the material was still hot. Once cooled the hole would have been filled with something to reduce any further seepage of radiation.
4.

Talks about how residents would be affected…..but not as badly because they were kept away for six months. Side note – we don't know the effects of residents, they are not tracked like the firefighters.
5.

Talks about why Dr.'s should be able to know something was wrong because residents were coming with problems…but again Dr.'s would not look for radiation poisoning, but would look for asbestos and other materials.
6.

Talks about images of vapors from spaces….points out the hotspots where the detonation would have been placed and thermal images prove this.
7.

Talks about other experts who came to same conclusion as him and they didn't know what he knew about the nuclear demolition option.

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:10 PM (GMT)

dimitris original wiki article:
http://www.nuclear-demolition-wikipedia.co...-wikipedia.html

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:14 PM (GMT)

I haven't watched this yet but I;m very much open to the use of micronukes and have been in the past thanks to the work of assassinated Joe Vialls. I would strongly suggest that you try to download this probably most important video asap as I don't think Youtube will keep it up for too long if its what I think it is. Dean Warwick spoke about Sonar weapons and we've heard talk of molecular disassociation weapons too. It would seem you have to be a friend to watch these videos.

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:16 PM (GMT)

This is also on Vimeo and others:

http://vimeo.com/12431332
http://www.livevideo.com/video/C2BE98E0B84...lear-demol.aspx

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 11:22 PM (GMT)

GOOD NEWS: thanks to one nice American guy, now a real 'conventional' DVD with the 9/11thology movie (a/k/a WTC nuclear demolition or The Third Truth by Dimitri Khalezov) is available - you can play it on any home DVD-player; no computer is required. You can download its ISO image via any torrent client and burn the DVD out of this ISO file using any standard DVD-recording program. The DVD was re-coded into NTSC (the American TV standard). The ISO file size is 4.34Gb, so it may take some time to download! If you need to get this movie urgent - consider downloading smaller separate video files in MPEG4 format or in WMV format mentioned on the previous page. Besides, it is highly recommended to download and watch first two small additional video clips that are separate from this DVD. You can find download links to these two additional clips on either of these two pages: here or here.

For your convenience the DVD ISO image was cut into 42 parts ~100Mb each. Once you get all 42 parts you have to place them into one folder (directory), run the first file and follow the on-screen instructions. Once the contents are extracted you will see a new folder with the ISO image and instructions on how to burn the DVD. You can download these 42 parts either via bit-torrent (click here to get the torrent file - and if you choose to download these via bit-torrent, please, help us to seed and to promote this torrent!), or from either of these download links (parts downloaded from separate hostings are all inter-compatible).

Download links for DVD parts directly from www.911-truth.net site and from file sharing services. Please, try your best to use file-sharing services rather than direct download links as much as possible - to reduce overloading on the www.911-truth.net site. Please, use direct links only when you can't get the files from file-sharing services such as "rapidshare", "depositfiles" or "share.cx". To let links open in a new window use right-click->Open in New Window, instead of left click):

:

Part 01 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/7yguuujx3

http://rapidshare.com/files/408066924/911t...part01.exe.html

http://www.share.cx/files/718953323472/911...part01.exe.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part01.exe

Part 02 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/pra7pdb0t

http://rapidshare.com/files/408070719/911t...part02.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/858699842962/911...part02.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part02.rar

Part 03 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/esasxbbdc

http://rapidshare.com/files/408223526/911t...part03.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/952629131595/911...part03.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part03.rar

Part 04 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/qwfjl4km6

http://rapidshare.com/files/408225616/911t...part04.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/308096490905/911...part04.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part04.rar

Part 05 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/xhets7fqc

http://rapidshare.com/files/408231451/911t...part05.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/182660521292/911...part05.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part05.rar

Part 06 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/ngrvnq04y

http://rapidshare.com/files/408235504/911t...part06.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/831683690425/911...part06.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part06.rar

Part 07 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/vsa03xhq3

http://rapidshare.com/files/408242789/911t...part07.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/822097042366/911...part07.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part07.rar

Part 08 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/mel7bjmhd

http://rapidshare.com/files/408242855/911t...part08.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/627497685825/911...part08.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part08.rar

Part 09 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/xqf18w4d6

http://rapidshare.com/files/408247574/911t...part09.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/614614029866/911...part09.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part09.rar

Part 10 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/jkdacy1pw

http://rapidshare.com/files/408252581/911t...part10.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/119400361999/911...part10.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part10.rar

Part 11 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/uoc8upqyw

http://rapidshare.com/files/408257252/911t...part11.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/268841888591/911...part11.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part11.rar

Part 12 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/m0zgnacja

http://rapidshare.com/files/408261230/911t...part12.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/792079569058/911...part12.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part12.rar

Part 13 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/87kle5txa

http://rapidshare.com/files/408419424/911t...part13.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/418754695091/911...part13.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part13.rar

Part 14 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/fvj3hnrud

http://rapidshare.com/files/408422805/911t...part14.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/899971003486/911...part14.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part14.rar

Part 15 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/ua5p20r3d

http://rapidshare.com/files/408426449/911t...part15.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/434548413887/911...part15.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part15.rar

Part 16 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/ou58anh4b

http://rapidshare.com/files/408430086/911t...part16.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/295361982562/911...part16.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part16.rar

Part 17 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/7sakqwljg

http://rapidshare.com/files/408434048/911t...part17.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/433694991032/911...part17.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part17.rar

Part 18 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/i0ffspb03

http://rapidshare.com/files/408438131/911t...part18.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/514907085352/911...part18.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part18.rar

Part 19 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/4x879p5c1

http://rapidshare.com/files/408441571/911t...part19.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/521750034428/911...part19.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part19.rar

Part 20 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/hxmaiu69e

http://rapidshare.com/files/408445342/911t...part20.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/582145874271/911...part20.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part20.rar

Part 21 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/3vbwq9bt7

http://rapidshare.com/files/408448827/911t...part21.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/369563134393/911...part21.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part21.rar

Part 22 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/2sws1seqi

http://rapidshare.com/files/408452325/911t...part22.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/897097828300/911...part22.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part22.rar

Part 23 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/nitz5qo7g

http://rapidshare.com/files/408456013/911t...part23.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/958870001926/911...part23.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part23.rar

Part 24 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/f1nw31ssm

http://rapidshare.com/files/408460046/911t...part24.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/047534433996/911...part24.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part24.rar

Part 25 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/lrzygv6lq

http://rapidshare.com/files/408463744/911t...part25.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/097758548540/911...part25.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part25.rar

Part 26 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/nlczzz586

http://rapidshare.com/files/408467129/911t...part26.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/618371376998/911...part26.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part26.rar

Part 27 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/i0orhmfoo

http://rapidshare.com/files/408470667/911t...part27.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/877422700104/911...part27.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part27.rar

Part 28 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/39gc3aqsg

http://rapidshare.com/files/408474114/911t...part28.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/819570410077/911...part28.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part28.rar

Part 29 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/08ywjab5x

http://rapidshare.com/files/408477001/911t...part29.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/254719127493/911...part29.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part29.rar

Part 30 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/bs8fa0s0s

http://rapidshare.com/files/408479686/911t...part30.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/465048309834/911...part30.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part30.rar

Part 31 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/gdn4ma1sy

http://rapidshare.com/files/408482322/911t...part31.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/385914515554/911...part31.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part31.rar

Part 32 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/rxchf873s

http://rapidshare.com/files/408484834/911t...part32.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/285474410595/911...part32.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part32.rar

Part 33 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/kkvjdfy63

http://rapidshare.com/files/408487328/911t...part33.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/644409273605/911...part33.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part33.rar

Part 34 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/gg1xspcr4

http://rapidshare.com/files/408489675/911t...part34.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/806986630314/911...part34.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part34.rar

Part 35 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/0dnm5xkol

http://rapidshare.com/files/408491879/911t...part35.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/679099334451/911...part35.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part35.rar

Part 36 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/631ib13ab

http://rapidshare.com/files/408494528/911t...part36.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/779085482438/911...part36.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part36.rar

Part 37 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/ja6g3hm37

http://rapidshare.com/files/408496639/911t...part37.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/988876811538/911...part37.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part37.rar

Part 38 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/0l6mpugf1

http://rapidshare.com/files/408498441/911t...part38.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/391944387203/911...part38.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part38.rar

Part 39 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/2yx1eqd81

http://rapidshare.com/files/408500293/911t...part39.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/288996746644/911...part39.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part39.rar

Part 40 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/i9m5v069l

http://rapidshare.com/files/408502279/911t...part40.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/152154204293/911...part40.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part40.rar

Part 41 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/29ygh3tjb

http://rapidshare.com/files/408503847/911t...part41.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/492342526564/911...part41.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part41.rar

Part 42 (of 42) - http://depositfiles.com/files/2o2yrafy7

http://rapidshare.com/files/408505516/911t...part42.rar.html

http://www.share.cx/files/347627913075/911...part42.rar.html

http://www.911-truth.net/911thology_Dimitr...arts.part42.rar

OPTIONAL:

Crypted links through Linksave.in:

http://linksave.in/210698404c49c492c0143

http://linksave.in/170880884c670e61a07a6

bovvered - September 18, 2010 09:15 PM (GMT)

Re-exploding the WTC Nuclear Demolition Myth – The Mysterious Dimitri Khalezov by Andrew Johnson

UPDATED 20th May 2010 - WITH RESPONSE FROM DIMITRI - SEE BOTTOM
May 19th 2010

Part 2 - Here

Recently, much exposure has been given to Dimitri Khalezov and his detailed presentation about the supposed "nuclear demolition" of the WTC buildings on 9/11. A number of websites seem to be linked to this: http://www.3truth911.com (currently returning "Bandwidth Limit Exceeded"), http://www.911thology.cn/ and http://www.nuclear-demolition.com/.

Dmitri also has a YouTube channel: http://www.youtube.com/user/911thology . This was how Dmitri contacted me – through YouTube – inviting me to watch his video series (why did he contact me specifically? Though I have an interest in the destruction of the WTC, I am not connected to the military, nor do I have any official standing. Myself I rarely spend much time searching for other YouTube users who have similar interests or videos on their channel – I simply don't have the time!)

Dmitri has also contacted a couple of other people I know who are studying 9/11 and he also been posting on the GLP forum. He seems to keep himself quite busy and has achieved significant exposure for his flawed conclusions which cannot explain the evidence.

In the videos (apparently now made private on his channel), Dimitri comes across very well and seems very sincere and polite. Sadly, he cannot explain the available evidence concerning what actually happened at the WTC on 9/11. I have written about this quite some time ago, though Dimitri claims (see below) that the nuclear device was positioned 77 metres below ground and spends quite some time explaining why the normal nuclear effects, which I and others have pointed out, were not seen or not obvious. One problem is that, Dimitri does not explain how or when the nuke was planted and he cannot explain why the WTC bathtub was undamaged (except with very precise positioning of the nuke (how, exactly?)

Once again, people I know seem to have "fallen" for this new posting as if it is some kind of super-duper new explanation – when in reality it is not. Please see below for

1) My notes on his youtube video sequence (which now seems to have been deleted)

2) My correspondence, via YouTube messaging, which took place in 2010. Please note where he says he cannot explain the evidence.

Rough Notes on YouTube presentation
I haven't had the time to type all this up and I only got to Part 11 out of 26. However, here are my rough notes…

He states he has some kind of link with Al Qaida terrorists – so presumably he is in hiding?

Table of contents of video (for times and which part of the video see original table here)

Edna Cintron

Doesn't explain what caused the fire and why Edna citron was there and not burned

Granite Missile for pentagon 7 ton missile 2.5 mach – thermonuclear warhead! The US didn't detect a nuclear missile??

Demolition feature – built in nukes??? (1984) AN IDEA or an implementation Controlled Demolition Inc thought up the idea in the 60's?

"In the 60's nuclear bombs weren't as bad" – umm Cuban Missile Crisis??

Plan accepted – built in feature "from the beginning"

Nuclear demolition treaty not secret early on

According to someone at the FBI, the reason was: someone claimed there were 3 nuclear warheads sent to America that morning. One of them hit the pentagon and it was found to be nuclear – that means it was - it was really hard proof and a very convincing thing. They claimed that the other two were inside planes which hit the world trade centre. So they say that the American officials were in fear that these 2 things up on top of the tower will produce the real nuclear explosions. So they decided to collapse the tower just to minimise the damage(s) because at ground level the damage will be very (much) less than at 3 or 400 metres above the ground.

Interviewer: If they exploded at level or floors 78 and 99…

DK: Oh it will destroy the entire New York probably because it's a half megaton…

News broadcast used to suggest secondary device on the plane – yet previously he discussed video fakery saying the plane crash was impossible. This is confusing.

Wikipedia discussion and deleted article.

90% x-rays - http://www.fas.org/nuke/intro/nuke/thermal.htm

Assumes solid rock. 100m radius, 150 KT nuke

What about the hole or plug from where the device was put in?

When was it put in?

Zones of damage – greater than 100m wide presumably.

Pulverised dust is underground – pressure of gases – but no gas – you mean vaporised rock?

No thermal radiation because underground – so no heat…

Stays hot for 1 year…. No evidence of this was brought forward 77m below ground. Tower starts to melt into the explosion (but then the cavity is exposed to the air!! Out comes the heat! This did not happen!

Bathub would've been breached (it wasn't) and flooded the whole area – steam explosions, boiling water etc

You claim the tower fell into the hot zone and melted, yet the video clip shown shows the top of the WTC tipping over slightly and turning to dust! What you described in your diagram IS NOT WHAT IS SEEN!

Dmitri cannot explain Hurricane Erin's presence, nor the silent disappearance of the WTC. Look at his diagram of a "nuclear furnace" created beneath the WTC which it "melted down into"! This is pure nonsense! We saw the steel turning to dust!! Anyway, here is some of the exchange I had with him.

Correspondence with Dmitri Khalezov/911Thology
To:911thology

Re:invitation

Hello,

Thanks for your message and invitation. I may try to watch the video, but I am intrigued to know if it addresses these basic points of evidence, discussed here, in this e-mail exchange:

http://www.checktheevidence.com/cms/index....d=167&Itemid=60

Also, do you have any connection or have you communicated at all with Ed Ward MD.

In relation to the WTC destruction, 40+ points of explanation need to be addressed:

http://www.drjudywood.com/wtc/#AA2

Finally, what legal or similar challenges will you or your associates be making or initiating based on what you know?

Thanks!

Andrew

9:59

911 - The Key Evidence - 1/2

[There is 1 mistake in one of the captions in this video - it is stated that Erin was a Category 5 Hurricane - this is incorrect. It was a category 3, but by some measures, Erin was as big as Hurricane Katrina.] ==========

911thology

Re: Re:invitation

Re: Re:invitation

Dear Andrew.

To answer your questions. Yes, I read attentively your mail excange and yes, I could assure you that you will not feel sorry for spending your precious time to watch the discussed movie. Don't forget that those whom you call 'nukers' are merely conspiracy theorists that are not much different from 'thermitters' or 'nano-thermitters'. They simply guess without actually knowing anything. Here you have totally different approach. You deal with a former officer of the Soviet nuclear intelligence who is firstly a specialist (at least to a certain extent) in actual underground nuclear explosions, who could easily explain to you all their properties, secondly - who is an eye-witness who can confirm (even could confirm under oath in front of a court of law) that in-built nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC and that of the Sears Tower existed long before it was implemented on 9/11, thirdly - who could satisfactorily explain mechanics of the Tower's collapses (including that of the WTC-7 and Marriott Hotel and even that of the Fiterman Hall), and who could satisfactorily explain mechanics of WTC steel beams pulverization (so far no mortal in This World could do so satisfactorily, in my humble opinion). See the difference?

Regarding the next part of your suggestion - about following guidelines described in 'AA2. Some of the principal data that must be explained:'. I agree with some points of that 'must' and I do explain it in the proposed movie in the most satisfactorily manner. However, being a specialist (really a specialist) I can't agree with all points that are listed in the above 'must' list, so, instead of confirming them, I preferred to disprove them - by not leaving a stone standing of some of those points. But in no case they are ignored. They are either confirmed, or disproved. I am a 'black-and-white' kind of man, I don't like to leave any 'grey' areas unadressed.

Regarding the last part of your question - what legal challenges could I bring? It is difficul to answer. Being a non-American (I am a Russian) I do not have any legal right to demand any justice on behalf of others, perhaps only on behalf of myself. And when it come to me personally, yes, I am planning to sue the US Government one day for their attempt to link me to the 9/11 perpetrators and to the 2002 Bali bombers (since they accused me personally in 2003 of supplying fake passports to non-existent 9/11 hijackers and to several top figures of Al Qaeda and Jamaya Islamiya terrorist organizations, which were absolutly groundless accusations, though registered in some courts of law and easily verifieble). However, since I knew from my former service (the Soviet nuclear intelligence) of the existence of the in-built nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC (which existed from the beginning of the 70s, being designed by the 'Controlled Demolition Inc.'), I could testify that before the court of law, if anyone asks me to do so. Besides I could testify to some other sensitive details of the 9/11 perpetration, because I personally knew some of its top planners from the Mossad (I mean personally, not by hearing some rumors about them). I could provide also some legal documents regarding some top Mossad figures' participation in the 9/11 and regarding how some US officials and French secret services managed to cover them up. In case it helps, I could do it.

Finally - just watch the movie. It is all there. I realize that you are a busy person, but this movie worth seeing, by no means you will feel sorry for spending your time watching it. But there is one warning - you have to watch it very attentively and all the 26 parts.

Thank you for your kind attention.

Sincerely yours,

Dimitri.

(block user)

(mark as spam)

Reply Delete

Mar 28, 2010

==========

To:911thology

Re:Re: Re:invitation

Thanks for your detailed response. I will try to get through some of your video.

I wonder at what point you will explain the upturned cars, presence of hurricane erin and how cold, silent nukes - giving of no light turned WTC steel to dust.

I wonder where you explain the earth's magnetic field anticipating the first "plane crash" by about 20 minutes.

I wonder where you explain how the holes were made...

I guess I'll have to watch and note the time codes where you explain this evidence.

To deny or ignore evidence is to deny truth:

"Any conclusion about anything can be reached - but the value of such a conclusion is inversley proportional to the amount of evidence ignored."

I hope your conclusion is "high in value"!!

Regards

Andrew Johnson

UK

10:32

"Magnetic UFO" - 11 April 2008 - Part 1

From Jaime Maussan's 2009 Presentation - this is an incredible close range film, with an interview with the person who filmed it. Part 2 gives the analysis - http://www.youtube.com/watc..

Delete

Mar 29, 2010

==========

911thology

Re: Re:Re: Re:invitation

Re: Re:Re: Re:invitation

Thanks, Andrew.

Looking forward for your comments. As I noticed from you movies, you are close to Judy Wood? Actually, I have sent her an invitation to watch my movies to, but she did not reply. Hope it you find it interesting and worth attention you can invite her? Regarding cars, I did not talk about them in the interview, but I explained it in my book. The problem is that the 3 WTC buildings was demolished by 150 kiloton (3ps) underground nuclear explosions with hypocenters located 77 meters below the ground surface. In this situation no thermal radiation would be available to half-burn cars in typically 'atomic' manner (typical for atmospheric nuclear explosions). However, some cars in the immediate vicinity to the demolition site came into zone of high temperatures and were somehow either burned or even melted. But this by no means would be a kind of 'half-burns' - typical to atmospheric nuclear explosions. Hope you understand what I mean. So, after they demolished the WTC with their own 150 kiloton nukes, the U.S. officials did not know how to explain it to public - so they attempted to blame it to alleged 3 mini-nukes Soviet made - that Osama allegedly bought from some bad guys from Ukraine and planted in the Towers' basements. So, in order to support further this version, the FBI operatives were quickly dispatched around the WTC with tourch-lamps and hammers to smash and 'half-burn' some cars in typically 'atomic' manner. I guess some of them also overturned some cars to imitate effects of allged 'air-blast wave'. This is planted evidence - not different that 'landing gear' of 'planes' or a 'passport' of alleged hijackers. Simply don't pay attention to it. If you need more details on this particular, let me know, and I will send you more detailed explanation. But hope you see the movie first.

Ha. just tonight one of my visitors sent me link to some extremely intereisting photo - it makes sense if combined with my movie. Here is the link: http://i79.photobucket.com/albums/j131/xtr...testing_svg.png

Have fun.

Sincerely yours,

Dimitri.

(block user)

(mark as spam)

Reply Delete

Mar 29, 2010

==========

Re:Re: Re:Re: Re:invitation

HI there,

Interesting - cars are planted evidence? What an achievement! 1400 cars planted!

Also, the people levitated by nuclear explosion effects without being burned! Amazing stuff!

These nukes you speak of must've been amazing tech - wonder how they were planted 77 meters down - maybe they tunnelled out through the subway system to plant them? Who planted them? And documentation or non-anonymous whistleblower testimony??

Amazing that no seismic signatures were recorded from these explosions!

I'll have to look at your explanation for these things!

Yes, I am associated with Dr Judy Wood - she is very busy with her own projects etc so you are unlikely to get a response on these matters - because most if not all the points you raise have already been explained and pretty much pinned down - and there is also a tie in "field effects" with Hurricane Erin too - which nukes bear no relation to -however deep they were planted...

But if I pick up anything interesting from your presentation, I'll let you know!

Thanks!

Delete

Mar 30,

==========

911thology

Re: Re: Re: Re:Re: Re:invitation

Re: Re: Re: Re:Re: Re:invitation

Hi, Andrew.

You know, the problem is that I am in Thailand, not in America and, unlike you, I don't have much access to information (could you imagine that not too many piece of info are accessible from Bangkok, except only the Internet - they don't even have any archive of American newspapers in National Library here...). So, I couldn't afford much. However, 3 basic points that I based my explanation upon are:

1) I was indeed an officer of the Soviet nuclear intelligence and I indeed know from my former service about existence of emergency nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC. This is a matter of fact.

2) Due to my understanding of typical properties of underground nuclear explosions, I think I could explain phenomena of steel pulverization from purely mechanical point of view.

3) I knew from reliable source (from one of the 9/11 planners personally) what was the name of the missile that strucke the Pentagon and how they managed to obtain the missile.

The rest is simply a product of my observations/contemplations/conculsions and nothing more than that - so I could easily be mistaken in the rest, but not in any of the 3 points mentioned above.

What about the bathtub - it also surprises me that it was not damaged, but I guess it was because of well-calculated positioning of the nukes, though, to be honest, in my humble opinion, position of a nuke under the North Tower/Marriott Hotel was dangerously close to the neares slurry wall - I do admit it and it remains a puzzle to me which I could only explain by a very carefull calculation of the positioning of the nuke. In any case, I don't think the nuke's explosion would produce huge zones of horizontal destruction, due to major parts of its 'crushing' ability was directed upwards, as you can see from my explanations - due to the fact that everything always goes by the way of least resistance and the way of least resistance in this case was the way upwards. This, perhaps, is the very 'directed energy weapons' you and Judy Wood suspected in your research. That is what I think about it. But in any case, don't forget that I am a simply human with quite limited abilities and I can't do absolutely ALL - I did my best in explaining at lease what I could explain. For example, I believe I successfully explained true causes of the Fiterman Hall damages (you will see it later in series 16). I think I successfully explained strange behavior of the USG which made decision to knock down the WTC for otherwise unexplainable reason - based on the info kindly given to my by the FBI agent. About naming the guy with whom I had that informal discussion - sorry, I can't name him, it would be against my rules. Could you imagine what his superiors would do with him? But I am thankful to him for giving me an idea that the USG believed there were 2 nuclear warheads on top of the Tower that were about to explode and the nuke in the Pentagon was just a tool to convince them to this effect. If not that FBI person I would not get this idea even if I consumed all hashish and all LSD availble in Thailand. Hower, as you see, this idea, despite being bizzare, explains otherwise unexplainable behavior of the USG....

That is what I could say in reply to your letter.

Sincerely yours,

Dimitri.

(block user)

(mark as spam)

Reply Delete

Mar 31, 2010

20th May 2010 - Dimitri wrote a longish letter to me (click here for Doc file)

===

-----Original Message-----

From: Dimitri A. Khalezov [mailto: dkhalezov@gmail.comThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it]

Sent: 20 May 2010 14:32

To: ad.johnson@ntlworld.comThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it

Subject: from Dimitri see attached

Dear Andrew.

I sent you some letter in a form of attached Word file.

Please, receive.

Thanks.

Dimitri Khalezov.

--

Best regards,

Dimitri mailto: dkhalezov@gmail.comThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it

===

Dear Andrew.

This is 'The Mysterious Dimitri Khalezov' who would like to disturb you once more regarding a web page on http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/Cognoscence/message/4555 recently published by you (or by someone who pretends to be you).

I would like to thank you for being so polite towards my mysterious humble person and for your abstaining from outright insults (which are not uncommon in a society of the US Government-appointed shills and full-time Internet forum-trolls earmarked to fight all dangerous conspiracy theories on various forums). I found you article indeed unusually polite which betrays in you an intellectual person.

Nonetheless, despite of your article being written in a seemingly polite manner and despite of the fact that it does not contain any outright insults, it is still insulting due to some reasons which are described below.

The point is that there are three distinctly different groups of people who could claim things in regard to the 9/11 (as well as in regard to other similar high-profile events):

1) eye-witnesses who are not experts (or who are not necessarily experts);

2) experts who are not necessarily eye-witnesses;

3) conspiracy theorists who are not necessarily experts and who are definitely not eye-witnesses.

Judging from the point of elementary logic (I guess you are a logical person, after all), you can argue against claims of the third group by implying that they are wrong in their presumptions (which could still be polite – depending on how you would construct and word your actual criticism). You could also argue against claims of the second group by challenging their technical/scientific conclusions and still you could do that without actually insulting them personally (because to argue in such a manner is the way of life in scientific circles and no scientist could feel offended for being criticized on account of his claims). I hope you understand what I mean.

However, when it comes to arguing against the first group, it is not so easy to argue with them without actually insulting them (as you try to do in your article). Unlikely you could challenge a testimony of an eye-witness without insulting such an eye-witness personally. Because, unlike an expert or a conspiracy theorist (or a scientific theorist) an eye-witness technically can not be ‘right’ or ‘wrong’ in his testimony. There are only 2 states of affairs when it comes to an eye-witness: he could only be a genuine witness who says the very truth, or a fake witness who intentionally lies to the court. In the first case he honestly performs his duty. In the second case he commits nothing less than a crime which is punishable by imprisonment. By challenging my testimony (not my technical explanation of the WTC pulverization or burned cars or undamaged bathtub wall I mean but my claims that I knew back in the 80s about the WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme) you call me nothing less than a criminal. Let’s call a spade a spade. All your sweet words you used in the article and your seeming ‘politeness’ towards my mysterious person can not hide the main point behind your challenge: you claim that I am a false eye-witness, i.e. you blatantly accuse me of being a criminal.

Then it is very unfair to use such a ‘polite’ manner of describing alleged ‘merits’ of my video presentation and alleged ‘polite’ nature of my humble mysterious person as you did. Because a false witness is a criminal first of all and, in fact, it is quite a disgusting kind of a criminal. It does not matter in this light if he is personally ‘polite’ or not and it does not matter in this case if his presentation is plausible to any extent or not. It is just part of the crime and nothing less than that. So, I suggest you re-write your article and to change the priorities. You have to go to the main point: call me an impostor, not a ‘new conspiracy theorist’. Challenge not the point that I can’t satisfactorily explain why the bathtub wall was not collapsed (which I have no obligation to explain in any case). You have to challenged, instead, my claims that I used to serve as a commissioned officer in the Soviet nuclear intelligence and I learned still back in the 80s about existence of the WTC emergency demolition scheme.

You have to say plainly:

“This mysterious person claims that he allegedly knew in the 80s about the alleged WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme while allegedly being a commission officer in the alleged Soviet nuclear intelligence. But I don’t believe this impostor. I state he is a liar.”

This will be an honest conduct from you.

You see, Andrew, I acted in this case in a minimum of 4 capacities in the same time:

1) I was indeed a former officer in the Soviet nuclear intelligence for 5 years. I knew back in the 80s about existence of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme. I could go to any court of law, lay my palm on the Holy Bible and testify that before the judge, adding, if necessary, that “may The Most High punish me right on the spot if I lie”.

2) I indeed personally knew chief 9/11 organizer. To the extent that I even drank wine with him in the early breakfast of September 12, 2001 while discussing some sensitive details of the 9/11. (Which is also well known fact to the American FBI, by the way, therefore they even attempted to obtained extraditions of both of us to America in 2003). I could also testify about this before any court of law revealing A LOT of details (for example details of stealing of nuclear-tipped missiles from “Kursk” submarine, etc.).

The abovementioned are two of my capacities as an eye-witness. You can't challenge them by mildly calling me 'wrong' or 'incompetent' because it is not the way to deal with eye-witnesses. An eye-witness can not be 'wrong' or 'incompetent'. He could only be an honest eye-witness, or a liar, a criminal. Moreover, to be honest with you, you can not even challenge me from merely technical point of view to the two abovementioned points because I have a lot of documentary proof to confirm either point. So, even if you want to call me liar, you still have no chance. If this case comes to the court I will prove what I claim.

Then, I attempted to add here two additional capacities as an expert/conspiracy theorist:

3) Because unlike many others I knew very well physical properties of underground nuclear explosions, I presumed that I could provide more than satisfactory explanation why the WTC buildings were 'dustified' before their collapses. Which I did. In this case I assumed an additional role of a technical expert (again ADDITIONAL role, not a primary role of a technical expert). You might not like my explanation, but I do not care, to be honest. Firstly, because I have no obligation to explain it neither to you, nor to others. It was just my gesture of good will. If you don't like it – then don't take it. It was optional in any case. Primary was not this explanation, but my statement that I knew about the WTC nuclear demolition scheme back in the 80s. So, if you don't like my technical explanation on nuclear demolition effects – don't hesitate to challenge it and to offer your own explanation on nuclear demolition effects. I am very easy person and I might agree with you if I find your explanation on nuclear demolition effects more plausible than my own.

4) Because I spent a lot of time studying various details of the 9/11 (not less than 5 years I think) I could also feel like I possess not only some expert knowledge of physical properties of underground nuclear explosions, but also some expert knowledge in the 9/11 details (such as some important facts in the 9/11 timeline, the media coverage, slips of tongues of various officials, various discrepancies in official documents, and various other irregularities). Therefore I assumed an additional role of a 9/11 conspiracy theorist (again ADDITIONAL role). Because sometimes ago I learned from the FBI that the real reason to demolish the WTC was (you know what, I will not repeat it), I also attempted to construct a harmonious whole theory which I called in scientific manner '9/11thology' that attempted to explain the 9/11 in its entirety, not each aspect of the 9/11 in isolation from the rest of its important aspects. Which I guess was successful explanation.

In any case you can challenge me in a common way (as you would challenge any other conspiracy theorist) only those aspects of my presentation which are covered in the above clause 4) (i.e. my capacity as a 'conspiracy theorist').

To a certain extent (within frames of undeniable fact of the 'WTC nuclear demolition' only) you may try to challenge also my technical explanations in regard to the WTC 'dustification' – i.e. you can challenge me in my capacity of an 'expert' as covered in the above clause 3). Which means that you could offer your own explanations of the nuclear demolition technical details, instead, but without denying the actual fact that the WTC nuclear demolition has indeed taken place.

In both of these cases you could still exercise you trade-mark politeness and 'objectivity'. Moreover, you are even welcome to challenge these, because you might offer some better points than mine and it will bring us all closer to the truth.

However, you have absolutely no chance to encroach upon my mysterious humble person in my capacity of an eye-witness - as covered by above clauses 1) and 2) without actually insulting me by implying that I am an impostor, a false-witness and therefore a criminal.

Hope you have gotten my point now and will re-write your abovementioned article accordingly.

Copy of this my letter to you will be sent to some of my followers and friends and also to some followers of Judy Wood – just to inform you in advance.

Sincerely yours,

Mysterious Dimitri Khalezov.

P.S.

I would like also to remind you that despite of all your seeming 'objectivity' you always try your best to avoid discussing one of the main points and 'smoking guns' of the WTC demolition – the pre-9/11 definition of the 'ground zero' term in old English dictionaries, along with the desperate attempt of the US Government to re-define this term and/or to 'broaden' its definition in all post-9/11 English dictionaries. I think it would be truly objective of yours, if you stop avoiding it and pay some serious attention to this particular point.

Some beginning of a ‘raw’ version of my book that also deals with the ‘ground zero’ term’s manipulations by the US authorities is enclosed below for you reference (it starts from the next page below).

My response:

-----Original Message-----

From: Andrew Johnson [mailto: info@checktheevidence.co.ukThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it]

Sent: 20 May 2010 17:56

To: 'Dimitri A. Khalezov'

Subject: RE: from Dimitri see attached

Hi there Dimitri,

Thank you for your letter. I am sorry you were insulted by my pointing out where you could not explain the evidence - but hey, that's what my website does in various places - about various topics.

I skimmed through your letter to the end. I found your focus on the term "ground zero" very interesting, so I will attempt to address that here. (I will post your letter under my article (as I often do), along with this response.)

The use of the term "ground zero" is not really 9/11 related evidence in of itself. It is merely a "label" which was attached to the zone where the destruction took place.

Indeed, I believe the term may even have come from the "air burst" nuke where, as I understand, in Hiroshima or Nagasaki, some parts of buildings actually remained standing because the explosive force was downwards on top of them rather than lateral. So I have indeed thought about this.

Giving something a particular name such as "ground zero" or "the 911 truth movement" can be a useful ploy in creating misconceptions and starting people thinking in a certain way. Find out, for example who coined the term "cold fusion".

Also, I spoken on 2 or 3 podcasts etc about the NUCLEAR EFFECTS - as the Hutchison Effect seems to affect things at both a molecular and a nuclear level, so there is indeed evidence in this area to be explained.

The fact remains, the use of nuclear explosives does NOT explain the available evidence - and the use of field effect based (some call it "scalar weaponry") explains ALL of the evidence that I am aware of.

However, as I have no official standing and what we discuss is "way off the radar screen" for most people (whereas nukes are not), it doesn't take a genius to work out which story most people will believe.

Regards

Andrew Johnson

UK

P.S. A 1983 photograph from Beirut showing a mushroom cloud has nothing to do with what happened on 9/11 at the WTC - indeed, a mushroom cloud was not even seen in NYC anyway...

-----Original Message-----
From: Dimitri A. Khalezov [mailto: dkhalezov@gmail.comThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it]
Sent: 20 May 2010 20:47
To: Andrew Johnson
Subject: Re: from Dimitri 2

Hi Andrew,

I am not personally offended - considering that I am a hardened criminal with at least 4 times behind bars it will not change anything if one more person would call me a 'criminal'. It is more a matter of principle, not of being personally offended. As you can see I am quite a funny person and I take things very easy. However, myself is myself, but the truth is the truth. When someone tries to encroach upon the truth in disguise of encroaching upon my person, I have no chance than to put up some appropriate defence. The truth must be defended in any case.

I agree with you that I can't 100% satisfactorily explain any and every small technical detail of the 9/11 perpetration, but look - I am just a private person with limited physical abilities, moreover, I was in Bangkok, not in New York all this time. What do you expect from me?
Am I a Lord God to know everything? All I know is that the WTC nuclear demolition scheme indeed existed and I stuck to this testimony of mine
- I could confirm it in any legal proceedings if necessary. But it does not mean that I have an obligation to provide technical explanation to its effects whether real, alleged or planted. It would be just simply too much to demand it from my humble person.

Regrading 'ground zero' term. I am of very different opinion. This term has no other meaning before the 9/11 than 'a place of a nuclear or a thermo-nuclear explosion'. It has never been a kind of 'label' to label anything before the 9/11. It was only a 'label' to label some particular places: places of nuclear explosions. Whether you like it or not. And if the WTC demolition place was accidentally called 'ground zero' without any sinister allusion, then how would you explain the US Government's attempts to re-define this term in all post 9/11 dictionaries with a view to 'broaden' its meaning at least a little bit? When you see a person who secretly tries to hide traces of crime it does not mean, of course, that this is the very person who committed the crime, it could be just a relative or an accomplice of the actual culprit, but the mere fact that he is hiding evidence of a crime at least points to the fact that the crime too place. Isn't it?

Regarding the mushroom cloud from the 1983 Beirut Barracks bombing. I have never said that it and the WTC demolition in 2001 have anything in common (except only the 'ground zero' name). Therefore it is unnecessary to point it out to me that in the 9/11 case there were no mushroom cloud. I know it very well. Because the 1983 Beirut Barracks bombing was an atmospheric nuclear explosion with all typical properties of an atmospheric nuclear explosion (the mushroom cloud inclusive). While the WTC demolition was a DEEP underground nuclear explosion which should not have any mushroom cloud by definition. So, I don't see any contradiction at all.

Best wishes.
Dimitri.

Part 2 - Here

craig-oxley - September 19, 2010 01:35 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

> I wonder at what point you will explain the upturned cars, presence of hurricane erin and how cold, silent nukes - giving of no light turned WTC steel to dust.

Oh come on do you expect to see a bleeding flash with a nuke underground explosion? Why bother this Dimitri man with comments like these. You only see the flash on an above or atmospheric detonation anyone knows that. Interesting how its a Russian missile and assassinated Joe Vialls blamed Russia amongst others for the attack.

craig-oxley - September 20, 2010 06:17 PM (GMT)

Bruce Cathie - Calculating an Atomic Bomb Test

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NlBXVewibHo

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/NlBXVewibHo?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/NlBXVewibHo?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

bovvered - September 24, 2010 02:57 AM (GMT)

http://www.drjudywood.com/wtc/key.html

> QUOTE
>
> Some of the principal evidence that must be explained:
>
> 1. The Twin Towers were destroyed faster than physics can explain by a free fall speed "collapse."
> 2. They underwent mid-air pulverization and were turned to dust before they hit the ground.
> 3. The protective bathtub was not significantly damaged by the destruction of the Twin Towers.
> 4. The rail lines, the tunnels and most of the rail cars had only light damage, if any.
> 5. The WTC underground mall survived well, witnessed by Warner Bros. Road Runner and friends. There were reports that "The Gap" was looted.
> 6. The seismic impact was minimal, far too small based on a comparison with the Kingdome controlled demolition.
> 7. The Twin Towers were destroyed from the top down, not bottom up.
> 8. The demolition of WTC7 was whisper quiet and the seismic signal was not significantly greater than background noise.
> 9. The upper 80 percent, approximately, of each tower was turned into fine dust and did not crash to the earth.
> 10. The upper 90 percent, approximately, of the inside of WTC7 was turned into fine dust and did not crash to the earth.
> 11. One file cabinet with folder dividers survived.
> 12. No toilets survived or even recognizable portions of one.
> 13. Windows of nearby buildings had circular and other odd-shaped holes in them.
> 14. In addition to the odd window damage, the marble facade was completely missing from around WFC1 and WFC2 entry, with no other apparent structural damage.
> 15. Fuzzballs, evidence that the dust continued to break down and become finer and finer.
> 16. Truckloads of dirt were hauled in and hauled out of the WTC site, a pattern that continues to this day.
> 17. Fuming of the dirt pile. Fuming decreased when watered, contrary to fumes caused by fire or heat.
> 18. Fuzzyblobs, a hazy cloud that appeared to be around material being destroyed.
> 19. The Swiss-Cheese appearance of steel beams and glass.
> 20. Evidence of molecular dissociation and transmutation, as demonstrated by the near-instant rusting of affected steel.
> 21. Weird fires. The appearance of fire, but without evidence of heating.
> 22. Lack of high heat. Witnesses reported that the initial dust cloud felt cooler than ambient temperatures. No evidence of burned bodies.
> 23. Columns were curled around a vertical axis like rolled-up carpets, where overloaded buckled beams should be bent around the horizontal axis.
> 24. Office paper was densely spread throughout lower Manhattan, unburned, often along side cars that appeared to be burning.
> 25. Vertical round holes were cut into buildings 4, 5 and 6, and into Liberty street in front of Bankers Trust, and into Vesey Street in front of WTC6, plus a cylindrical arc was cut into Bankers Trust.
> 26. All planes except top secret missions were ordered down until 10:31 a.m. (when only military flights were allowed to resume), after both towers were destroyed, and only two minutes (120 seconds) after WTC 1 had been destroyed.
> 27. Approximately 1,400 motor vehicles were towed away, toasted in strange ways, during the destruction of the Twin Towers.
> 28. The order and method of destruction of each tower minimized damage to the bathtub and adjacent buildings.
> 29. More damage was done to the bathtub by earth-moving equipment during the clean-up process than from the destruction of more than a million tons of buildings above it.
> 30. Twin Tower control without damaging neighboring buildings, in fact all seriously damaged and destroyed buildings had a WTC prefix.
> 31. The north wing of WTC 4 was left standing, neatly sliced from the main body which virtually disappeared.
> 32. For more than seven years, regions in the ground under where the main body of WTC4 stood have continued to fume.
> 33. The WTC1 and WTC2 rubble pile was far too small to account for the total mass of the buildings.
> 34. The WTC7 rubble pile was too small for the total mass of the building and consisted of a lot of mud.
> 35. Eyewitness testimony about toasted cars, instant disappearance of people by "unexplained" waves, a plane turning into a mid-air fireball, electrical power cut off moments before WTC 2 destruction, and the sound of explosions.

36. Eyewitness testimony of Scott-pack explosions in fire trucks and fire trucks exploding that were parked near the WTC.
37. There were many flipped cars in the neighborhood of the WTC complex near trees with full foliage.
38. Magnetometer readings in Alaska recorded abrupt shifts in the earth's magnetic field with each of the events at the WTC on 9/11.
39. Hurricane Erin, located just off Long Island on 9/11/01, went virtually unreported in the days leading up to 9/11, including omission of this Hurricane on the morning weather map, even though that portion of the Atlantic Ocean was shown on the map.
40. Sillystring, the appearance of curious cork-screw trails.
41. Uncanny similarities with the Hutchison Effect, where the Hutchison Effect exhibits all of the same phenomena listed above.

* Is it possible that such a technology exist? Since invention of the microwave for cooking in 1945 and lasers in 1955*, commercial and military development of directed-energy technology has proceeded apace, so use of directed-energy technology is likely to exist -- and the data tells us it does exist.

QUOTE

What explanations have been suggested to explain these phenomena?
Seven explanations have been identified:

a. Natural causes such as earthquakes and hurricanes
b. Arson
c. The official theory of airplane impact, fires and weakened steel collapsing
d. Conventional demolition with explosives such as RDX, dynamite, etc.
e. Demolition via thermite or its variants
f. Fission or fusion nukes (and clean bombs)
g. Beam weapons, energy weapons, directed-energy weapons (DEW)

(CCD-BiB) = "Conventional Controlled Demolition" with "Bombs in the Building"

QUOTE

Beam Weapons, Energy Weapons, and Directed Energy Weapons (DEW):

We have used the terms "beam weapons" and "directed energy weapons" to refer to unconventional weapons (exotic weapons) that are energy weapons. We broadly define DEW as Energy that is Directed and is used as a Weapon. The full range of these weapons is classified information, so we make no limits or distinction of categories within the realm of energy weapons, as doing so would imply specific knowledge of all that is available. In the following paragraph, we have listed some of the possibilities we are aware of.

Our critics have accused us of insisting that beam weapons did their damage from outer space, yet we make no claim about whether the directed energy weapon operated from a space-, air-, or ground-based platform. Nor do we make any claim about what wavelength(s) was used, what the source(s) of energy was, whether it involved interference of multiple beams, whether it involved sound waves, whether it involved sonoluminescence, whether it involved antimatter weapons, whether it involved scalar weapons, whether it was HAARP (more here and here), whether it involved a nuclear process (e.g. NDEW, more info), whether it involved conventional directed energy weapons (cDEW), whether it involved improvised directed energy weapons (iDEW), nor what kind of accelerator was used, nor do we claim to know what the serial numbers of the parts that were in the weapon(s).

What we do claim is that the evidence is consistent with the use of energy weapons that go well beyond the capabilities of conventional explosives and can be directed.

QUOTE

"When you have eliminated all which is impossible, then whatever remains, however improbable, must be the truth."

9/11 - The New Hiroshima - Pt 1 (50mins) - Dr Judy Wood
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-7892004186194307613

9/11 - The New Hiroshima - Pt 1 (1hr 33mins) - Dr Judy Wood
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=6714196008143117547

craig-oxley - September 25, 2010 02:00 PM (GMT)

Dimitri and others debunk Judy Wood quite easily it seems.

craig-oxley - September 25, 2010 04:36 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/COYYDfk4JGc?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/COYYDfk4JGc?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

bovvered - September 26, 2010 12:24 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE (craig-oxley @ Sep 25 2010, 02:00 PM)
>
> Dimitri and others debunk Judy Wood quite easily it seems.

Not at all.

The "9/11 truth movement" has dismissed Dr Wood as a disinfo agent, encouraged people not to go to her website and review the evidence for themselves, misrepresented her work and pushed disinfo (e.g. thermite) on the alternative not-at-all-sheeple. Alex Jones has played a significant role in all that, and in promoting others such as Steven E Jones, who is connected to Cold Fusion research, yet he has ridiculed the idea of directed energy weaponry, and totally misrepresented what it actually is i.e. lied about what Dr Wood says.

And how many people in the "truth movement" have filed legal cases in an attempt to bring the perpetrators to justice, as Dr Wood has? - and the truth movement will not discuss these legal cases, at all.

http://www.drjudywood.com/articles/NIST/NIST_RFC.html http://www.drjudywood.com/articles/NIST/Qui_Tam_Wood.html http://www.drjudywood.com/articles/short/whistleblower.shtml

> QUOTE
>
> Dmitri cannot explain Hurricane Erin's presence, nor the silent disappearance of the WTC. Look at his diagram of a "nuclear furnace" created beneath the WTC which it "melted down into"! This is pure nonsense! We saw the steel turning to dust!!

Figure 36. Steel columns disintegrate into steel dust with WTC7 and water tower in the foreground.

The mini-nuke theory fails to explain various pieces of evidence, much of which is listed above (in the 41 pieces of principal evidence from Dr Wood's website), including phenomena associated with the Hutchison effect.

But even if the evidence is all laid out, you can't stop people ignoring all of it and simply dismissing everything by saying that it's been "debunked".

Interesting that Daniel Estulin, the guy who was allowed to give a presentation to the European Parliament about the Bilderberg Group, is pushing this mini-nuke disinfo.

Have you looked through Dr Wood's website and watched this presentation:

9/11 - The New Hiroshima - Pt 1 (50mins) - Dr Judy Wood
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-7892004186194307613

9/11 - The New Hiroshima - Pt 2 (1hr 33mins) - Dr Judy Wood
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=6714196008143117547

And if so, who has "debunked" it all, and how?

bovvered - September 26, 2010 01:15 AM (GMT)

WTC Nuke theory - Self Contradiction - WTC is Melted and Turned to Dust at the same time.
By Andrew Johnson – 1 June 2010

In a follow-up to the earlier posting, I felt I needed to add this, since being sent a link to another copy of Khalezov's video series.

Those watching Khalezov's analysis can be easily be taken in by the authoritative-looking diagrams and presentation. However, a little scrutiny reveals basic contradictions within the analysis itself and with other available photographic evidence.

On this page, there is a re-posting of Dimitri's analysis. In part 10 of the analysis we start getting to his rather detailed description of what happened when the supposed 150 kiloton nuclear device exploded. I have saved a couple of still shots below. Here we see his description of the nuke explosion being forced up into the tower.

Here, Dimitri describes the sequence of events during the first few milliseconds of the nuke explosion and how the rock around the exploding nuke becomes crushed or damaged. He posits that the damaged zone extended "up into the tower" to a height of 300 metres:

He claims that this caused the building to turn to dust (as shown in the above diagram). However, it is important to realize that this contradicts what he said in part 9, as shown below:

Here, in part 9, he says that a kind of “nuclear furnace” was created and the building kind of “melted down” into it – this is my own interpretation of what he shows in the diagram above – please watch his presentation to make sure I am not misquoting him. So, the contradiction is – how can the building “melt down” into the furnace, yet also turn to dust?

Additionally, the idea that the heat and melting would solely be confined to the structure of the WTC is rather difficult to swallow – such intense heat would radiate out into the surroundings

Also, as we can see in the photos below, the basements survived! At no point did they form part of a “nuclear furnace”.

See: http://www.drjudywood.com/articles/DEW/StarWarsBeam6.html

Figure 4•1 - GZ workers descend into the subbasements below WTC2. While there is extensive damage, there is little building debris at the bottom of the hole. There is no sign of molten metal. A worker in the distance walks along a massive core column.
(photofiled 9/18/01) Source

Figure 4•2 This photo was taken inside the mall. The store sign "innovation" is visible on the left.
(photo filed 9/19/01) Source

See below – how were the people able to walk around in there, and not be irradiated or burned or both, so soon after the event? Look at thee 2nd photo – where is the evidence of such high heat? This alone completely negates the validity of this latest variant of the “WTC Nuke” theory.

More E-mail Flim-Flam

I was contacted again by Abraham Hafiz Rodriguez, who also had an exchange with Dimitri Khalezov – some of this exchange in posted below.

Mr Rodriguez notes:

> QUOTE

> Within this recent reply, there are MAJOR contradictions in what he says.
>
> For example, in one part of his reply, he says "I could explain the undamaged Bath Tub satisfactorily, but I will save us both time by not explaining it to you since you would not believe me anyway".
>
> Then, later in the message, he writes, "I am an eye-witness, not an expert, and to be honest, I don't even know what is the 'BathTub'".
>
> So, we have him contradicting himself in the same letter, saying that "he can explain the BathTub just fine, but won't explain it to me because he thinks I have closed my mind off to him", and then a few paragraphs later, he admits that he doesn't even know what the BathTub is, even though he says he can explain why it wasn't damaged!

Also of note here is Mr Khalezov's statement from his e-mail of Thurs 20th May:

> QUOTE
>
> The point is that yesterday Andrew Johnson opened a new Internet page here:
>
> http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/Cognoscence/message/4555
>
> where he attempted to criticize me and my work (which was especially strange due to the fact that after long hesitation he admitted that I was right and actually surrounded his former position on alleged DEW).

This is a lie. So now we see the "object of the exercise" more clearly – to use up our time, muddle things up and go round and round in exchanges like this. The problem is that if we are seen to completely ignore flawed analyses like these, we are accused of not telling the truth.

See emails here.

craig-oxley - September 26, 2010 01:16 AM (GMT)

What you going on about mini-nukes for now? Dimitri does not talk at all about mini nukes which usually yield around one kiloton. Dimitri talks of proper nuclear devices in the one hundred and fifty kiloton range. Again can you tell me what else can cause two hundred plus atmospheres of pressure and a heat range of up to one hundred thousand degrees? I don't know what Estulin speaks of and I know Ed Ward spoke on mini-nukes. Ed Ward picked up on micro-nuclear devices from the work of Joseph Vialls from Australia. Joseph always believed the Twin Towers had been nuked but he spoke too much about micro nukes which aren't all that amazing in fact quite weak for real big explosions like the Twin Towers and Sumatra nuke etc. So you put down information on thermite but tell me what put diagonal cuts into the thick steel then to add with the rest of the demolition process?

Of course there may be some molecular disassociation frequency weapons out there but I believe its just the most simplest of weapons like a big fat dirty thermonuclear weapon. Let me put something to you and hope you ponder upon it. Remember all the hype about fancy aliens and all sorts ruling the World? We know that its simply boring old men wearing dresses, capes, maritime military uniforms and aprons. Nothing fancy and nothing mysterious and a fantasy. Now think about Judy's fancy weaponry and well might it just be a boring old thermal nuke instead. Especially if its true that these nukes have been sitting in these locations including the UN Building and Sears Tower since creation known to all parties in the nuclear treaty system? We also know that CIA Queen Melusina (Hillary Clinton) can't wait to get her hands on CIA Viktor Bout and have him whacked if she gets him off the Russians from Thailand. Why is this I wonder? What does she and the Richard Armitage cretinous clans have to hide?

bovvered - September 26, 2010 01:48 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE
>
> What you going on about mini-nukes for now? Dimitri does not talk at all about mini nukes which usually yield around one kiloton. Dimitri talks of proper nuclear devices in the one hundred and fifty kiloton range.

I should have said nukes, not mini nukes. I was just reading something on a different website that mentioned mini-nukes.

> QUOTE
>
> Again can you tell me what else can cause two hundred plus atmospheres of pressure and a heat range of up to one hundred thousand degrees?

No, but that's not relevant to the events of 9/11.

> QUOTE
> So you put down information on thermite but tell me what put diagonal cuts into the thick steel then to add with the rest of the demolition process?

Thermite may have been used to put diagonal cuts in a few remaining pieces of steel after 80+% of the steel turned to dust, but thermite certainly didn't turn the steel to dust.

And finding the "ingredients" of thermite within the wreckage is insignificant - see Questioning "Active Thermitic Material Discovered in dust from the 9/11 WTC Catastrophe":
http://www.checktheevidence.co.uk/cms/inde...d=224&Itemid=60

> QUOTE
> Of course there may be some molecular disassociation frequency weapons out there but I believe its just the most simplest of weapons like a big fat dirty thermonuclear weapon.

Well when you look at all of the evidence on Dr Judy Wood's website, you will know that nukes cannot explain it. I've already posted some of it here.

> QUOTE
> Let me put something to you and hope you ponder upon it. Remember all the hype about fancy aliens and all sorts ruling the World? We know that its simply boring old men wearing dresses, capes, maritime military uniforms and aprons. Nothing fancy and nothing mysterious and a fantasy. Now think about Judy's fancy weaponry and well might it just be a boring old thermal nuke instead. Especially if its true that these nukes have been sitting in these locations including the UN Building and Sears Tower since creation known to all parties in the nuclear treaty system?

Dr Wood explicitly says in the 2-part presentation posted before (the Google Video) that she did not know about directed energy weaponry before she investigated 9/11, but the evidence told her that it existed. Then she found out about John Hutchison and the Hutchison Effect, and this effectively confirmed that it was used on 9/11.

Elsewhere she has given the analogy that if someone who had never seen or ever heard of a gun found a dead body with some bullet holes in it, they would have to conclude that a gun exists, despite the fact that they had never seen or heard of one before. The evidence tells you that it must exist.

What you're saying sounds like a variation of an Occam's Razor argument. Basically, you either look at all of the available evidence or you don't. When you do, you know that it wasn't nukes, it was directed energy weaponry.

John Hutchison was basically experimenting with things that Tesla had experimented with i.e. field effects and the interference and interaction of fields. It is likely that Tesla's work was continued at the time and/or after Tesla's death, decades before John Hutchison started his work.

I would speculate that they knew they could "dustify" the twin towers before they were even built.

craig-oxley - September 26, 2010 01:10 PM (GMT)

How can you say that my figures of two hundred atmospheres of pressure and up to one hundred thousand degrees of heat are irrelevant? This is the only normally known way to turn steel to dust as what happened with the World Trade Center.

craig-oxley - September 26, 2010 02:17 PM (GMT)

Suspected arms dealer pleads with Medvedev and Putin for help

Published 23 September, 2010, 15:28
http://rt.com/Top_News/2010-09-23/bout-let....html?fullstory

Russian businessman Viktor Bout, who is awaiting extradition to America in a Bangkok jail, has asked Russian President Medvedev and Prime Minister Putin for help, saying he does not believe in a fair trial in the US.

“I ask you to render feasible legal assistance to me and my family in this unequal fight. I do not believe in [a] fair American trial,” reads his letter as quoted by Interfax news agency.

The letter was read out by Bout’s mother at a press conference in Moscow on Thursday.

“I have never sold arms. My business was absolutely legal,” Bout says in his letter.

He added that if the Russian leadership examines the facts of the case, they will find “valid ground” to help him return to Russia.

Bout’s wife Alla has written her own address to President Medvedev, which was also made public at the press conference.

“If my husband is extradited to the US, he will be sentenced to life. I ask you as a head of the state and a guarantor of the constitution to help our family in our distress,” Alla Bout’s address reads.

Viktor Bout was arrested in Bangkok in March, 2008, on the request of American law-enforcement agencies. The US is accusing him of illegal arms dealing and he has been on Interpol’s wanted list since 2002.

In August 2010, Thailand’s Court of Appeal ruled to extradite Bout to the US, overturning a lower court's ruling that was handed down in August 2009. But the extradition was suspended after the US side issued new charges against Bout, and then tried to withdraw them.

Therefore, Viktor Bout will not be extradited to the United States until the new hearing, which is scheduled for October 4.

Furthermore, according to the Thai law, the final decision about extradition must be made by the country’s government.

Viktor Bout, nicknamed “The Merchant of Death”, has repeatedly denied all charges against him.

QUOTE

'Merchant of Death' Viktor Bout Will Never Be Extradited to U.S., Expert Says

By Ed Barnes
Published September 22, 2010
http://www.foxnews.com/world/2010/09/22/me...test=latestnews

EXCLUSIVE: When an appeals court in Thailand ruled late last month that Viktor Bout, the alleged illegal arms dealer dubbed the “Merchant of Death,” could be extradited to the United States to face charges, American diplomats and intelligence officers popped open the champagne.

They hadn’t expected to win the last great spy battle of the Cold War, which pitted Russians looking to keep Bout’s secrets away from the Americans against the Americans who are seeking to shut down the vast illegal arms network he allegedly created and force him to reveal some of the Kremlin’s darkest secrets.

But the celebration was premature, says Robert Amsterdam, an attorney deeply involved in both Russian and Thai politics. The extradition, he says, simply “isn’t going to happen.”

Bout is accused by the Department of Justice of conspiring to provide material support or resources to a terrorist organization, conspiring to kill Americans, conspiring to kill U.S. officers or employees and conspiring to acquire and use an anti-aircraft missiles, as well as other charges. He'll have his day in an American court -- if the U.S. finally succeeds in getting him there.

But Amsterdam says two elements virtually guarantee that the two-year battle to bring Bout to America will fail.

One is Bout’s close connection to Igor Sechin, the Russian deputy prime minister who is widely regarded as the third most powerful man in the Kremlin, and who is a close ally of Prime Minister Vladimir Putin, The other is the corruption that is rampant in Thailand.

“The stakes are too big to have him extradited,” Amsterdam says.

The U.S. and Russia have been angling to control Bout's fate since an American "sting" operation led to his arrest two years ago in Thailand's capital, Bangkok. In tapes made during a meeting with Drug Enforcement Agents posing as members of members of FARC, a Colombian guerrilla group, Bout allegedly promised to supply them with advanced surface-to-air missiles.

The fact that Bout could get his hands on those missiles convinced American intelligence officials that the deal was sanctioned by the Russian government, that Bout worked for Russian intelligence operations and that the deal was payback for America's sale of Stinger missiles to Afghanistan that forced their withdrawal in 1989. As the Moscow Times pointed out, those weapons are so devastating that it took only 200 Stingers to end the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

Since then, the stakes have been huge. Russia has made Bout's release a keystone of its foreign policy -- Vladimir Kozin of the Russian Foreign Ministry has warned American officials that the "reset' of Russian-American relations won't happen if Bout is sent to America.

The Russians also have tied the outcome of the case to their promises to send cheap oil and fighter jets to Thailand. In Russia, Bout has become a regular topic on TV, where he is depicted as a modern folk hero unjustly held by Russia's old Cold War enemy.And tomorrow Bout's wife will hold a press conference in Moscow claiming her husband is innocent and asking the Russian government to intervene directly in the case.

The U.S., meanwhile, has played a similar game, matching Russia's arms offers and pressuring the Thai government to make sure Bout's extradition is approved.

According to California Rep. Ed Royce, ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Terrorism, Bout has funneled weapons to wars on three continents -- but it was the discovery of one of his planes delivering weapons to Al-Shabab, an Al Qaeda-linked terror group in Somalia, that makes his capture and prosecution critically important. Al-Shabab is seen as one the most dangerous terror groups in the world.

"His operation is still running, and if we can learn its details and shut it down it will eliminate an important source of weapons for terrorists," Royce said.

The Russians won the first round in their tug of war with the U.S. for Bout in August 2009, when a Thai lower court ordered Bout's extradition halted. But as the deadline neared for a decision from Thailand's Court of Appeals, American and Canadian diplomats mounted a broad effort to corner Thai diplomats around the world and impress upon them just what was at stake. According to American defense analysts, the Thai ambassador was called in for a special meeting in Washington that had only one topic -- Bout -- and the final sale of helicopters to the Thai military was hastily approved.

As the Russians and the Americans squared off, Thai politicians also intervened. A Thai newspaper reported that a high ranking Thai official visited Bout days before the court's decision and promised the case would go his way if he accused Thailand's former prime minister, Thaksin Shinawatra, of arms smuggling. The official admitted he met with Bout in prison, but he denied trying to make a deal. The government is locked in a struggle with Shinawatra, whose supporters staged protests in the streets in March that left 88 dead.

No one is sure what influenced the appeals court's decision to allow the extradition, but the success of the U.S. effort — the ruling cannot be challenged further -- was met with a dire and surprising warning from Russian Foreign Minister Serge Lavrov. He quickly announced that Russia would do "everything necessary to push for Bout's return to the homeland," and he charged that the case was "political and unlawful."

"The decision won't stop the Russian efforts to get him back,' said Jeff Abramson, deputy director of the Arms Control Association, a nonpartisan Washington-based group that studies arms proliferation around the world. "They will find a way to continue to let him go."

Beyond the scope of Bolt's operations, American intelligence is eager to know just how available surface to air missiles are; the involvement of Bulgaria, an European Union member, in illicit arms sales; and the techniques Bolt used to circumvent restrictions of arms sales, says Matt Schroeder, a senior analyst with the Federation of American Scientists.

But Amsterdam and intelligence sources say it is Bout's connection to Sechin that ensures that the case is far from over -- and that Bout ultimately may never be sent to the United States. Sechin, they say, has quietly led the old guard Kremlin faction whose base was the military and security services that was overshadowed by President Demitri Medvedev's faction in the energy sector during the economic boom years. Now, they say, the man once called the "Richelieu of the Kremlin" is emerging from the shadows, challenging Medvedev's influence and becoming a likely contender to become Putin's heir. He is not about to show weakness or let Bout, his friend, down.

According to a recent report by Stratfor, a private American intelligence analysis company, both Bout and Sechin have a long history together. Both studied Portuguese early in their careers, served as intelligence officers in Angola and Mozambique during the civil wars there in the 1980s, and it is widely believed that Sechin protected Bout's operations and allowed him access to stockpiled Russian weapons.

"He is not about to let the man who knows his secrets fall into American hands," Amsterdam said.

bovvered - September 26, 2010 06:41 PM (GMT)

QUOTE (craig-oxley @ Sep 26 2010, 01:10 PM)

How can you say that my figures of two hundred atmospheres of pressure and up to one hundred thousand degrees of heat are irrelevant? This is the only normally known way to turn steel to dust as what happened with the World Trade Center.

Because there wasn't heat of up to one hundred thousand degrees on 9/11, obviously.

There are pieces of unburned paper all over the place, and people too.

Why are you ignoring the available evidence?

craig-oxley - September 26, 2010 10:39 PM (GMT)

QUOTE (bovvered @ Sep 26 2010, 06:41 PM)

> QUOTE (craig-oxley @ Sep 26 2010, 01:10 PM)
>
> How can you say that my figures of two hundred atmospheres of pressure and up to one hundred thousand degrees of heat are irrelevant? This is the only normally known way to turn steel to dust as what happened with the World Trade Center.
>
> Because there wasn't heat of up to one hundred thousand degrees on 9/11, obviously.
>
> There are pieces of unburned paper all over the place, and people too.
>
> Why are you ignoring the available evidence?

Pressure is more important than heat.

bovvered - September 27, 2010 12:08 AM (GMT)

I see.

You should look through Dr Wood's website and see the evidence for yourself. All of it.

Don't let other people convince you that's it's been "debunked", especially the likes of Alex Jones.

I've already posted a list of 41 pieces of principal evidence from her website, and nukes can't explain many of them.

If you're having to selectively fit certain pieces of evidence to a theory, and omit all the inconvenient facts, then you know that the theory is likely to be wrong.

But you already know that.

craig-oxley - September 27, 2010 12:49 AM (GMT)

I don't listen to bleeding Alex Jones, who're you too attack me with a belittling comment like this. Watch yourself around me.

bovvered - September 28, 2010 02:22 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE (craig-oxley @ Sep 27 2010, 12:49 AM)
>
> I don't listen to bleeding Alex Jones

I didn't think you did.

I only meant that Alex Jones is an example of those who are encouraging people not to look at Dr Wood's research, albeit a highly conspicuous one.

This work is extremely important because ultimately it is about free energy. That's why they can't have people finding out about it, and that's why "the truth movement" is smearing Dr Wood and pretending that her work has been "debunked", which of course it hasn't. Most people don't even know what her evidence actually is, despite the fact that it's been freely available on her website for around 4 years.

Alex Jones is probably the most obvious example of those smearing Dr Wood and encouraging people not to even look at the evidence, but he isn't the only one. The entire authorized 9/11 half-truth movement is doing it.

Aurora025 - September 30, 2010 08:03 PM (GMT)

by TBFWS

(The Battle For World Supremacy Website)

April 4, 2010

Updated May 9, 2010

Dimitri Khalezov, a former officer of the Soviet nuclear intelligence, expressed his knowledge about the September 11, 2001 so-called terrorist attack on the United States.

In what appears to have been a 'revenge attack', which was organized by an elite man with grievances against some of the things the United States has done. What Americans saw on their televisions as the 911 reporting unfolds were attacks contrived by U.S. officials in high places when the plan became known to them so that the 'revenge attack' that the elite man had organized could to be masked and explained away by a scripted televised show.

The footage that everyone saw showing the plane crashing into the World Trade Center (WTC) was digitally put together by the team working for the elite man and fed to the U.S. television stations on September 11.

No planes crashed into the WTC; the terrorist attack was all make-believe. And that the U.S. officials were the ones who used the situation to begin launching fake wars in the Middle-East.

Read transcription excerpts below for more information regarding Dimitri's revelation interviews.

The Third Truth, by Dimitri Khalezov

"I seem to be the only person on this Planet who was able to provide satisfactorily explanation in regard to the WTC-1, 2 and 7 pulverizations, plus satisfactorily explanations regarding the Pentagon attack, anthrax letters, doomsday plane, the true nature of the 9/11 cover-up, and the rest of strange things that happened on that day.

My explanations have no flaws and I can answer any and every question about 9/11 that no other 'conspiracy theorist' could ever answer. I know the entire truth about 9/11 whether you like it or not.

To answer the second part of your questions:

Yes, I know the Chief Organizer (of 9/11) personally. Also before the 9/11. Moreover, I was so close to him that he did not invite anyone else but me alone to his early breakfast on the 12th of September 2001 (in Bangkok, while in the United States it was still the 11th of September) and there he shared a bottle from his collection of wines with me to celebrate the 9/11 event.

The chief organizer of 911 invites YOU and YOU only to a breakfast to celebrate the 911 attacks?

To continue answering your questions. Yes, it was only me alone who was invited and no one else, but it is not the main point of my story at all. The main point is that I know why the WTC was pulverized during its collapse and I can explain the process in precise detail, as well as explain in exact details any other parts of the 9/11 attack, including all seeming 'inconsistencies' which no one else could satisfactorily explain so far.

To be honest, I could tell you that a larger half of the Arab and Pakistani communities in Bangkok, not to mention Russian, Serbian, Iranian and others were openly celebrating the 9/11 event because it was love from first sight. The 9/11 attack was ugly judging from the point of view of the American people and from their obedient allies, but when it comes to the rest of the bipeds the 9/11 attack seems a bit beautiful in performance.

The US officials knew perfectly well who did the 9/11 and they even know WHY they were punished in such a manner. But they can not do anything against the real culprits, because it was them - the US officials, who did the most of the actual crimes related to the 9/11 event.

So, there is nothing to complain about.

What the chief organizer (Mike Harari) thinks about you now? I think he does not give a ####, neither do I. As I have told you the Americans can not even bring him (Mike Harari) to the court, because he did not do much in reality.

All he did was this: He rented offices on the necessary floors of the WTC twin towers and had explosives installed to imitate plane impacts and holes, plus he arranged for cameramen to film the 'planes' (he means the scenes with stand-in actors where the planes would then be digitally inserted into the video later, TBFWS Editor), plus he arranged for a missile with broken detonators to be fired into the Pentagon. Nothing more than that.

The US officials did the rest.

* they shoot down two planes (with people onboard to publicly account for the WTC two explosions)

* they brought remains of one plane to the Pentagon site

* they demolished the twin towers (with human beings still inside and around)

* moreover, they demolished the WTC-7 building

* they sent unprotected workers to clean up 'ground zero'

* they sent anthrax letters implying that they were sent by Saddam Hussein emissaries, etc, etc, etc...

Just compare the amount of guilt of the real 9/11 organizers and that of the US officials.

So, the real 9/11 organizer does not give a #### really. Because all the high-ranking US officials know who did it anyway and my book would not add to their knowledge. It would only add to the knowledge of the general public.

If you think I know the entire 9/11 story, of course I do not know the entire chain of events in precise details (such as, for example, the exact details of the plane 'hijackings' or the names of the low-ranking Freemasons involved in the setup, or the exact details of how exactly they pressed the red buttons and who exactly convinced them to do so and on which minute and second of the day)."

(TBFWS Editor: The 'red button' is a reference to the trigger device built into the World Trade Center foundation just incase the building had to be demolished at a future date. After the chief planner of 911 gave the orders to set off the explosives in both of the WTC top floors, orders were later given by U.S. officials to press the red button to bring down the buildings.)

Who Did 911?

"I also would like to remind you that I am a specialist in nuclear weapons, unlike many of you. It was my profession for several years. (Who did 911?) It is not so simple as you might think.

Because the Mossad did it firstly, but not alone, and secondly not in its entirety. It was only certain individuals from the Mossad, not the entire Mossad. And it is quite complicated, indeed, so it is not so easy to explain it in a few lines.

Besides, the Mossad did only the minor part of the job. French secret service, for example, did much more than the Mossad.

Besides, all those 'cameramen' and 'witnesses' who 'saw' planes were not Mossad operatives, they were members of the Freemasonic sect. As well as 'passengers', pilots, stewardesses and many other actors involved. (TBFWS Editor: He is referring to people who were part of the script during the 9/11 operation.)

It is really a very complicated operation and I don't know even 5% of its details.

Though I know some people from the Mossad and from the French secret services who were involved. I don't know for sure who exactly fired the missile and from what kind of ship it was fired from.

But I can assure you that this was done by the Freemasons."

The man who planned 9/11, his name is Mike Harari (now 82 or 83 years old) who is a retired counterintelligence specialist and former Deputy Chief of the Mossad; a former friend of the U.S. President Bush Senior and the former Deputy General Manuel Noriega - the Dictator of Panama.

Nuclear Device For Building Demolition

Many years ago Rayelan Allen of RumorMillNews was told by her former husband Gunther Russbacher a CIA agent that a nuclear device was built into the United Nations foundation for its eventual demolition.

(And here we have Dimitri Khalezov of Russia revealing that it is standard policy in the United States to use such a device when constructing very large buildings.)

Dimitri replied:

"About the nuclear device under the U.N. building, I did not know that before, but it sounds reasonable to me. Because since the Controlled Demolition Inc. has patented nuclear technique for demolition, it would be reasonable to expect that they would promote it to get more contracts to secure more work for the future. This is capitalism, after all and everyone is after profits...

It should be noted that the nuclear weapons manufacturers are not 'commercialized' and to use nuclear devices on some commercial projects is a rare opportunity for them to get into some commerce too. So, why not use such an opportunity? So, I would not be surprised at all if this is true as reported by Russbacher.

Moreover, since the publication of my 9/11 movie, I've read even stranger news on the Internet regarding a Japanese architect who claimed that at least two skyscrapers in Japan also have nuclear devices installed under them by the Controlled Demolition Inc. (not surprising, considering that the initial architect of the WTC was a Japanese guy and he understandably brought this kind of idea back to Japan).

It looks awful, to be honest... I do remember that the U.N. building was promptly evacuated on 9/11 and it was also reported on television as a piece of important news."

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:09 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/7W0-W582fNQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/7W0-W582fNQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:18 AM (GMT)

It is explained there that the WTC demolition had nothing to do with any ADM, mini-nuke or anything of this kind. It was three old good 150 kiloton hydrogen charges that would destroy bigger part of New York if exploded above surface. Someone who pasted description of 1.5 kt nuke explosion above can't realize that there is a huge difference between a REAL underground nuclear explosion, a SHALLOW underground nuclear explosion and an atmospheric nuclear explosion. Besides, there is a huge difference between soft soil of Nevada desert and hard granite rock in Manhattan. Well calculated explosion of 150 kiloton in granite rock would only make a cavity of 100 meters in diameter and nothing more than this. No crater at all, no mushroom cloud at all. And the very same explosion of 150 kiloton above surface, or slightly sub-surface would totally wipe entire Manhattan from the map and, additionally destroy a big part of New York around and burn out the remaining part of New York (given that Hiroshima bomb was less than 20 kiloton you can imagine what is 150 kiloton). See the difference?

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri A. Khalezov

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:22 AM (GMT)

How come the fragile windows aren't turned to dust and blow out?

Lie. All 'fragile windows' of the WTC Twin Towers and those of the WTC-7 in areas affected by 'crushing wave' were completely pulverized, i.e. 'turned to complete microscopic dust'. Glass dust was available along with steel dust, furniture dust, carpet dust, human beings dust, concrete dust, and all other kinds of dust.

How come nothing in the area experienced the same nuclear shock wave?

Because if you watched my movie attentively enough you will notice that the 'crushing wave was directly straightly upwards along the targeted Tower's body and to nowhere else, except this. Even some lower parts of the Twin Towers corners that came within a kind of 'dead space' were spared by pulverization. So, why should it affect anything else if it was not directed there? All you have to do it to watch the video material attentively and you will get answer to all your questions.

It just conviently went right up thru the core of 3 buildings without every touching it's surroundings?

Yes. Watch parts 10, 15 and 16 of the movie for more details.

Again, it didn't even affect the windows.

lie. It did. All windows were pulverized along with steel, carpets, furniture, concrete floors and the rest of materials everywhere where such windows occurred on the way of propagation of the 'crushing wave'.

His theory falls apart.

I think it is your poor attempt to assault on my theory 'falls apart', not the actual 'theory'.

Looks like a classic demolition to me with regular explosives.

I suggest you read my web site www.nuclear-demolition.com for detailed explanation on why it is not possible to demolish a modern steel-framed building with conventional explosives. It is explained very clearly. It will take not more than 20 minutes reading that explanation.

Not nukes.

It is up to you. I am not going to insist, neither to argue any more over this subject.

Thanks for your attention.
Dimitri Khalezov.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:24 AM (GMT)

The fact NOTHING has been built there after all of these years. It seems so weird.

What are you suggesting? Radiation still? Yeah....does seem rather non-opportunist for prime real estate/location.

It is difficult to answer. There are many considerations why it is difficult to build anything there. 1) Purely moral aspect - many consider this place as being a mass grave that should retain the status of a 'cemetery'. 2) It could be a technical problem because of former cavities left by underground nuclear explosions might not allow constructing any high-rise buildings even if we presume the cavities were somehow filled with concrete. 3) Fear of exposing the ‘awful secret’ if mass construction works would be allowed in the area. Many construction workers would wonder what happened with former bedrock in these areas; many others might bring Geiger counters with them and measure radiation (while now this is under strict control). Besides, it is possible that during drilling for a reason of making foundations of a new building some volcanic glass, or, worse, highly-radioactive materials would be discovered. 4) It could be also a combination of the above three.

Thanks for your attention.
Dimitri Khalezov.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:26 AM (GMT)

...I'm sorry for the way i present my thoughts - i worked across St Paul's Chapel from May 2002 approximately for 13 months and now i'm sort of dying from some unknown illness, almost unable to talk and bedridden, and home bound - the most disturbing effect being suffocation. The disease itself started in 2004. I never checked what happened to my co-workers (especially older ones, - I was in good health at that time) and frankly i'm a bit afraid to.

Oh, well what else, thanks and hail to Dmitri! I still want the book to be published, but probably it will never happen, at least in my lifetime i guess.

Hi. I am very sorry to hear that. But I suggest you don't be afraid to go to see doctors immediately. Sooner you do it sooner your treatment will start. It is very much possible you inhaled radioactive gases and have some sort of particles irradiating you from inside with alpha-radiation (typical chronic radiation sickness that shows cumulative effect and reveals itself in a couple of years time). The picture you described matches chronic radiation sickness. I suggest you don't go to general doctors, but try to find doctors who are specialists in radiation sickness and tell them straight away - you worked on ground zero and suspect you inhaled some radioactive materials with alpha-radiation. At least you will immediately get proper attention and appropriate treatment. I suggest you suing the US authorities too - as many ground zero responders do. At least, it will get you some quick compensation for your suffering.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:27 AM (GMT)

Another question I have is why don't you mention the USGS report about Strontium and Barium being present in the dust samples they took from WTC area? This would seem to be very excellent supporting evidence of a nuclear event.

I don't want to look 'very scientific' - it will scare ordinary people off without proving any thing at all to them. Look at that French scientist who published his fairly scientific report on nuclear explosions on ground zero on www.nucleardemolition.com He practically has no attention from general public. However, my videos are made especially primitive and easily understandable for general public. So they have much more attention compare to his report. I think it is very easy for common people to understand consequences of crushing wave, presented in illustrative way, than imaginary fission sequence of Uranium or other scientific stuff of this kind. Don’t forget that majority of people are not scientists.

Sincerely yours,

Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:29 AM (GMT)

Dimitri, one last question and I thank you for your time:

The Mariott Hotel was also directly above one of the devices that went off. Why not did the compression waves take down the hotel at the exact same time in the exact same way? (or did it?)

The Marriott hotel was completely pulverized (at least its half that was close to the South Tower). It was reduced to complete microscopic dust - exactly as the WTC-7 would do later. That is why they don't talk about the Marriott hotel and there are no videos available of the Marriott hotel's collapse. No photos, no official witness testimonies. Though there are unofficial witness testimonies who all said that the Marriott Hotel was instantly pulverized to their amazement. The French guy who published his 'Nuclear Demolition' book on www.nucleardemolition.com also claims the same thing, by the way – that the Marriott Hotel was instantly pulverized.

Anyone with a video of the Marriott going down at the exact same time as WTC North (and in the same way) would absolutely prove the compression wave theory. After all, a building completely intact suddenly turns to dust? Surely, someone has accidentally captured this in the periphery of a shot somewhere. Hope someone can find it.

WTC-7 is nearly the same evidence except they claim there were major fires inside (still and insult to our intelligence).

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:32 AM (GMT)

Marriott Hotel

This picture is wrongly named. It is named 'WTC-1' now. It should have been named 'WTC-2' (North Tower), because what this picture shows is the right half of the Marriott Hotel (it was a very long building) and the remaining part of the North Tower still standing behind it. The WTC-1 (South Tower) is to the left of the Marriott Hotel in this picture. The entire left half of the Marriott Hotel that was close to the South Tower was completely pulverized (therefore it is absent in the picture you gave link to). As you can see this picture shows only the right half of the Marriott heavily damaged by debris. It does not show any left half of it, simply because it instantly ceased to exist simultaneously with pulverization of the South Tower (WTC-1) to the left of it. For more understanding about WTC buildings positioning and destruction areas caused by the two nukes, please see part 15 of my video - the drawing I am talking is shown between 9.00 and 9.30.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:34 AM (GMT)

FITERMAN HALL

It seems that the small part of the Fiterman Hall was within destruction circle of the nuke behind the WTC-7 (see part 16 of the movie for more details), but, perhaps, it was just on the brink of the 'crushed zone', perhaps, within very narrow area that I call 'damaged zone' - which I made green in all my drawings. That is why it was not pulverized, but 'damaged'. But in accordance with official claims it was allegedly damaged by falling WTC-7 debris. However, if you see the WTC complex map you will see how far was the Fiterman from the WTC-7 to be reached by any debris, add here that the WTC-7's upper part was completely pulverized and did not produce any 'debris' at all. The pile of some debris found on the spot of the WTC-7 did not belong to its upper part, but to the lowest part of its perimeter exclusively, which was spared by pulverization. By no means could any debris from the WTC-7 reach the Fiterman Hall. So, you don't have to doubt that damages of the Fiterman (along with its 'contamination') were caused by the fact that the destruction circle of the WTC-7's nuke slightly touched the Fiterman Hall.

I order for Fiterman to receive a compression wave the BOTTOM part of it must receive it first, however, as you can see it the picture the bottom is intact.

You either have to explain this or retract the part about Fiterman receiving part of the compression wave from WTC-7.?

I agree that the lowest part of the Fiterman seems more or less intact, while the upper part seems damaged. I don't have any explanation to this phenomenon right now. Have to think first. In any case the most of explanations in regard to demolition mechanics I got by using my brains rather than by exact knowledge of details. My exact knowledge is only of the fact that the WTC nuclear demolition scheme did exist. The rest is just conclusions.

Fiterman, after picture.

Question on this...it does not look pulverized, only dumped on....?

Ok, I will buy that. It was on the very edge of the damage zone of the circle, or possibly we are seeing bits of WTC-1 and 2 fall on it.

No, by no means could the Fiterman have been damaged by falling debris of the WTC-1, not to say about the WTC-2. It was firstly too far from the Twins. Secondly, it was shielded from the Twins by the still standing WTC-7 in between. There is no way it could have been damaged by any debris - neither from the Twins, nor from the WTC-7. It was damaged by subterranean shock of the nuke behind the WTC-7 and there is absolutely no doubt about it. Especially considering that certain 'decontamination' was required in regard to the Fiterman Hall, while no 'decontamination' was required in regard to the Verizon and the U.S. Post Office buildings. The only task to find explanation why the upper parts seem damaged, while lower parts seem not. Have to think about it.

There was a pre-collapse of parts of the roof of wtc-7 2 seconds before the full collapse, does this give any hints?

You have to have blueprints of both - the WTC-7 and the Fiterman Hall in order to understand how the destruction wave could have been propagated - for example to see where vertical beams run through the entire building, how deep these beams went underground and many other details. Without knowning exact details it is very difficult to imagine what could happen.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:41 AM (GMT)

Can you point us to the article about the "scandal" in the 80's regarding the revealing of the nuke-demo scheme of wtc?

In order to find that article I have to spend in some big library perhaps a year sifting through piles of old newspapers from a few years period. I don't have a chance to do it in Bangkok (there is no US newspapers here even in the National Library of Thailand). And if I could find that article, then the US Governemnt by now would be blown up, I guess. Do you think it is just so simple - to reach to my drawer to get that old newspaper and to post it to this Forum in a five minutes after receiving your request? It is not so easy, unfortunately.

All we are asking for is the name of the newspaper and the year if you can remember it. You present it as part of your video, so we think you may know how to POINT us to it, and we can take it from there.

I would like to give you here some clue. There was discussion on Wikipedia some time ago over removal of my article on nuclear demolition of skyscrapers. This discussion is still avaialble on the Internet. Here is the link:
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Art...lear_demolition
During this discussion I mentioned the same thing. One guy who joined that argument concerning removal of my article also pointed out that he too remembered that mentioning in US newspapers of nuclear demolition. You can still find his words on the abovementioned page. Here I quote him: '... And I too recall certain newspapers commenting on a nuclear demolition....'. Just go there and try to find that guy and contact him. Perhaps he remembers newspaper name or at least a year it was mentioned. Try.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:42 AM (GMT)

Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of The World Trade Centre (PDF)
http://www.nucleardemolition.com/GZero_Sample.pdf

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:43 AM (GMT)

dimitri,

my question is how can you believe the fbi? there was all kinds of foreknowledge of this event, both in private and public positions. basically, the bush administration knew this was happening. gov bob kerry is on tape saying that this conspiracy was 30 years old. it seems those towers were built to tear down some day when it was most useful.

I don't actually believe the FBI, but when they suggested their version why the pressed the red button I simply found it the most plausible of all other versions. Besides, it is supported by claims of Albert Turi - the Chief of Safety for NY Fire Department, who told NBC's Pat Dawson that he believes there were 'secondary devices' in the planes and other 'secondary devices' planted into buildings. It does not actually mean that I 'believe the FBI'. I just took the most plausible one from all available explanations.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:44 AM (GMT)

Why did the FBI want you extradited in 2003?

Because the 'good guys from the Mossad' denounced me to the Americans claiming that I allegedly supplied the 'mini-nuke' to terrorists that they used in 2002 Bali bombing.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:45 AM (GMT)

how might this be related to the documented near instant oxidation (rusting) of metals in the immediate vicinity of the collapses.

I think this particular one is very easy to explain: there was extremely high temperatures around pile of debris on top of the hypocenters of nuclear explosions underground and it was in combination with intense streams of vapors ascending from underground. I think combination of high temperatures + vapors caused abnormal rapid oxidation (rusting). Pretty self-evident, I think.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:46 AM (GMT)

Question: Why would the windows not all blow out of the building from the ground upwards as the supposed crush wave travelled up through the building from below? Or did they utilized the delayed thermobaric vacummn created to suck everything inwards? Watch the video of the toppling cap of the tower evaporating into thin air very carefully and you will see falling I-beams do a mid-air reversal and get sucked back upward and back in toward the center of the collapsing tower. Now that's one h3ll of a vacummn!

Also, if a bottom up blast wave was used, what prevented it from blowing up through the roof of WTC-7? However if a thermobaric vacummn was ultized, that would not present a potential problem or possible give-away.

Also watch very carefully and through the smoke you can see the core of the first tower still standing for a few seconds after the external shell of the building collapses, with its top sheared off at the same point where the cap of the tower initially was demolished. The core then falls out of view (bottom first) at free fall speeds.

Also note that many underground waterlines and gas lines were reported ruptured or destroyed in an approximate 5-6 block radius around ground zero.

Also note that the delay between the huge underground explosion that shakes the cameras situated blocks away and the initiation of collapse is approximately the same amount of time (10 secs.) it takes for the tower to collapse at free-fall speed.

As I have already explained here, the windows should have been blown up if there were overpressure of air inside the Tower. But there were neither 'pumping' of any kind, nor any thermobaric- or another kind of conventional explosion, nor air-blast wave of any kind. Therefore, instead of being 'blown out' glass panes in the windows were simply pulverized - as it happened with steel, carpets, furniture, concrete floors, and the rest of materials. In this sense there is simply no difference between steel, concrete, glass, wood and human flesh. All was equally pulverized. The same consideration applies to the roof of the WTC-7. Why should it be 'blown up'? It was simply quietly pulverized by the compression wave that I call 'crushing wave'. I think it is very easy to understand.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

craig-oxley - October 1, 2010 12:47 AM (GMT)

one other thing. i believe it is quite certain that thermite was used in some capacity in this operation. the evidence is as solid as it gets with samples and all.

there had to be american government complicity. the armed services, the air traffic controllers, the speed with which all evidence was removed and disposed of, the strange behavior of the players that day and the fact that many were warned and out of town, both in new york and washington. condi rice is even said to have called someone on the west coast about not flying. warren buffet also appears to have known and told others. i knew day one, when bush came on from the oval office that night, he knew. the elementary school footage just cinched it.

you see, i was in the usaf. no way could those planes have made it to their targets. none whatsoever. i used to script and run training exercises. real world events are instantly caught by the people running the exercise.

americans have been taking it from behind and pounded so hard they obviously cant think any more.

I don't believe that thermite could have been used. First of all I don't see any logical reason for its use. You simply don't need it when you have nukes that would do the job. Second, I can't figure out any plausible scenario of its usage. How would you distribute it? How would you ignite it? (thermite is extremely hard to ignite). How would such an incredible ignition scheme look like? Thousands of kilometers of wires with zillions of high-temperature ignition devices at the end of each wire? Or how? It is simply ridiculous even to think about it. I don't believe any single grain of thermite has ever been found among the debris. This is pure 100% lie. Firstly, if it were true, then this should come out in somewhat 2002, not in 2009. Secondly, it is simply illogical - what the thremite could do among the dust/debris, if there is no any plausible scenario of its usage? Someone tomorrow might also claim that some alien scales of green color were found in the dust that points to reptilian-shaped aliens responsible for the WTC demolition. I think the easiest way is not to believe these cheaters but to believe your own eyes, instead. Look at the pre-9/11 dictionary, for example. Has the pre-9/11 definition of 'ground zero' term anything to do with thermite?

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE DARKER SIDE OF 9/11 - THE FRENCH CONNECTION

Title: THE DARKER SIDE OF 9/11 - THE FRENCH CONNECTION
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 17, 2011 03:15 AM (GMT)

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=51579

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: BBC: al Qaeda Does Not Exist [Vd]

Title: BBC: al Qaeda Does Not Exist [Vd]

craig-oxley - October 10, 2010 01:57 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed width="485" height="380" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=b3b7c93a3feaed60a13" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF STATE TERROR

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF STATE TERROR

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:41 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=3

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The New 9/11 Bait and Switch?

Title: The New 9/11 Bait and Switch?

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:33 AM (GMT)

The New 9/11 Bait and Switch?

by Zen Gardner
Wednesday, July 20, 2011
http://redactednews.blogspot.com/2011/07/n...and-switch.html

This clip below is from Vanity Fair, of all things. It claims that the ties of 9/11 to Saudi Arabia are not just notable, but makes the case that those connections were deliberately skirted by the Bush administration following the infamous false flag attack, throughout the investigation and that there could be something big to it.

Duh. But nice to see someone investigating this, and they do a pretty good job....maybe.

The MSM hardly EVER touches the fact that there are huge doubts about and gaping holes in the 9/11 NWO takeover exercise cover-up story. So what are they up to?

Take a look. The only time the MSM injects some truth is to direct, that is mis-direct, public attention from the real issue or culprit and to attempt to defuse growing discontent. Anyone doing any serious research on the events of 9/11 will come to the conclusion that it was carried out by an Israeli-American cabal--at the least, and that virtually nothing adds up to give any indication whatsoever that the official story has any basis in fact.

Talk about conspiracy theory. The powers that be take the cake. Every time.

The Kingdom and the Towers
Was there a foreign government behind the 9/11 attacks? A decade later, Americans still haven't been given the whole story, while a key 28-page section of Congress's Joint Inquiry report remains censored. Gathering years of leaks and leads, in an adaptation from their new book, Anthony Summers and Robbyn Swan examine the connections between Saudi Arabia and the hijackers (15 of whom were Saudi), the Bush White House's decision to ignore or bury evidence, and the frustration of lead investigators—including 9/11-commission staffers, counter-terrorism officials, and senators on both sides of the aisle.

(Adapted from The Eleventh Day by Anthony Summers and Robynn Swan to be published this month by Ballantine Books; © 2011 by the authors.)

For 10 years now, a major question about 9/11 has remained unresolved. It was, as 9/11-commission chairmen Thomas Kean and Lee Hamilton recalled, "Had the hijackers received any support from foreign governments?" There was information that pointed to the answer, but the commissioners apparently deemed it too disquieting to share in full with the public.

The idea that al-Qaeda had not acted alone was there from the start. "The terrorists do not function in a vacuum," Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld told reporters the week after 9/11. "I know a lot, and what I have said, as clearly as I know how, is that states are supporting these people." Pressed to elaborate, Rumsfeld was silent for a long moment. Then, saying it was a sensitive matter, he changed the subject.

Three years later, the commission would consider whether any of three foreign countries in particular might have had a role in the attacks. Two were avowed foes of the United States: Iraq and Iran. The third had long been billed as a close friend: Saudi Arabia. Source
So Why Blame Saudi Arabia?
To now blame Saudi Arabia this late in the game, with millions having died and trillions spent on useless wars in Afghanistan, Iraq and throughout the Middle East, would seem to be pointless and counter-productive.

Unless:
1. 9/11 Truth is reaching critical mass, with the groundswell mounting even more with the further exposure of Israeli-Mossad involvement in worldwide murder, espionage and nuclear subterfuge activities, now reaching a crescendo with the Murdoch scandal likely to expose his Zionist/Mossad collusion. Or...

2. Will this be the excuse to now go after Saudi Arabia which is known to be on the NWO Middle East "hit list"? It wouldn't take much to arouse the already Islamophobic American populace to take another step into Arabia. They've secretly and not so secretly hated the perceived control and manipulation of energy crises for decades. Little do they know the oil barons and the Arabs are just more paid front men for their perfidy.

Same old same old...
Epilogue
As usual, the propagandists are spreading, or allowing to be spread, more partial, infected truths to pacify the opposition. Or so they think.

The 9/11 truth movement, if you will, is generally on the same page when it comes to the fundamental fact that someone engineered and allowed the 9/11 ritual to take place with the resultant worldwide militarization and fascist crack down under the guise of "security" against this enigmatic enemy called "terror".

If we're truly getting closer to "9/11 disclosure" we should be on guard against hijackers. A lot of disinfo is being bandied about, some infighting, back flips in attempts to dishearten or confuse like Charlie Veitch, or leavening misdirection such as this article.

The expression goes "a little leaven leavens the whole lump." The warning being, get sidetracked by an assumed assimilated wrong un-truth and partial truth and the whole loaf is off. While this article may contain some good, damning information, be careful where they're steering you.

Let's stay true and pure, and clear headed. The Truth will stand for itself, but it must get out there.
That's all of our jobs.

-Zen
www.zengarder.com
Source: http://beforeitsnews.com/story/840/658/The...and_Switch.html

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bill O'Reilly attacks 9/11 victim's son [Vd]

Title: Bill O'Reilly attacks 9/11 victim's son [Vd]
Description: [SICK INTELLIGENTSIA VERMIN]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:25 AM (GMT)

Bill O'Reilly attacks 9/11 victim's son

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/2IwIRNM5noY" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NYC Dept. of Buildings: No Records for Pre-9/11

Title: NYC Dept. of Buildings: No Records for Pre-9/11
Description: WTC Elevator Rebuild, One of the "Larges

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:18 AM (GMT)

NYC Dept. of Buildings: No Records for Pre-9/11 WTC Elevator Rebuild, One of the "Largest, Most Sophisticated" Ever

By Aidan Monaghan
July 20, 2011
http://theintelhub.com/2011/07/20/nyc-dept...sticated"-ever/

The New York City Department of Buildings (DoB) has reported within a June 6, 2011 Freedom of Information (FOI) response, that no records could be located regarding the following request for information pertaining to the massive elevator modernization project underway at World Trade Center buildings 1 and 2 until the very morning of September 11, 2001, one of the largest ever [1]. The DoB governs elevator construction and use within New York City.

An April 15, 2011 FOI appeal request sought:

"Permits or certifications provided by the NYC Department of Buildings regarding elevator modernization/renovation work performed at the former World Trade Center buildings 1 and 2 during the 1990s and 2000s."

The DoB's June 6, 2011 FOI answer reads as follows:

"BIS shows no elevator records for the time period in question."

The DoB's Building Information System (BIS) "is the Department of Buildings' main database. The database was put into production in 1984 and supports Department functions with respect to: … Application Processing (application submission …)" [2]

The DoB's description of its role regarding elevator installation and use within New York City: "The Department of Buildings' Elevator Division oversees the use and operation of New York City's elevators". [3] Such duties include the receipt and issuance of construction applications and permits:

"Applications and Permits; New Installations or Major Upgrades; File an Elevator Application (EA) to install a new device or perform a substantial upgrade, alteration, replacement or modernization to an existing device." [4]

The New York City building code regarding elevator construction reads as follows: "SUBCHAPTER 18 ELEVATORS AND CONVEYORS; § [C26-1803.1] 27-1001 Permit required. – No construction, alteration or removal shall be commenced until a written work permit therefor shall have been issued by the commissioner" [5]

NYC Buildings

Robert D. LiMandri
Commissioner

Janine A. Gaylard, Esq.
Assistant General Counsel
jgaylard@buildings.nyc.gov

280 Broadway
7th Floor
New York, NY 10007
nyc.gov/buildings

+1 212 566 3358 tel
+1 212 566 3843 fax

June 6, 2011

Aidan Monaghan
[redacted]
Las Vegas, NV [redacted]

Re: FOIL Appeal
One World Trade Center, New York, NY
Two World Trade Center, New York, NY

Dear Mr. Monaghan:

The New York City Department of Buildings ("the Department/DOB") is in receipt of your April 15, 2011 letter appealing the Department's February 28, 2011 letter that acknowledged receipt of your FOIL request letter and advised you that it was currently working to determine if it had any of the requested documents. DOB's letter further advised that it would notify you within 30 business days regarding the status of your request. You are treating this determination as a constructive denial based on the fact that the Department did not provide an update within the 30 days as stated, and that the Department is still working on your request.

Your FOIL request asked for the following DOB records:

"Copies of inspections and certifications records issued by the New York City Department of Buildings, pertaining to construction projects performed at the World Trade Center Buildings 1 and 2 between January 2000 and January 2002.

Permits or certifications provided by the NYC Department of Buildings regarding elevator modernization/renovation work performed at the former World Trade Center buildings 1 and 2 during the 1990s and 2000s."

According to the Department's Building Information System ("BIS"), there was a complaint registered on January 11, 2001 at 1 World Trade Center, but the Department did not inspect in view of a lack of jurisdiction. Nor are there records of the Department having inspected 1 World Trade Center during the time period in question for any other reason.

There are no records of complaints filed or inspections conducted at 2 World Trade Center for the period requested.

The Department of Buildings records show no violations issued during that period, so there would be no certification records.

BIS shows no elevator records for the time period in question.

Therefore, the Department has no records responsive to your request.

Therefore, the Department has no records responsive to your request.

This constitutes the Department's final determination.

build safe | live safe

NYC Buildings

Sincerely,

Janine A. Gaylard
Assistant General Counsel/Records Appeals Officer

cc: Juliet Neisser, Associate General Counsel
Angela Orridge, Records Access Officer
Robert Freemin, Committee on Open Government, Dept. of State

"Dear Mr. Monaghan

The New York City Department of Buildings ("the Department/DOB") is in receipt of your April 15,2011 letter appealing the Department's February 28, 2011 letter that acknowledged receipt of your FOIL request letter and advised you that it was currently working to determine if it had any of the requested documents.

DOB's letter further advised that it would notify you within 30 business days regarding the status of your request. You are treating this determination as a constructive denial based on the fact that the Department did not provide an update within the 30 days as stated, and that the Department is still working on your request.

Your FOIL request asked for the following DOB records:

"Copies of inspections and certifications records issued by the New York City Department of Buildings, pertaining to construction projects performed at the World Trade Center Buildings 1 and 2 between January 2000 and January 2002."

"Permits or certifications provided by the NYC Department of Buildings regarding elevator modernization/renovation work performed at the former World Trade Center buildings 1 and 2 during the 1990s and 2000s."

According to the Department's Building Information System ("BIS"), there was a complaint registered on January 11, 2001 at 1 World Trade Center, but the Department did not inspect in view of a lack of jurisdiction. Nor are there records of the Department having inspected 1 World Trade Center during the time period in question for any other reason. There are no records of complaints filed or inspections conducted at 2 World Trade Center for the period requested.

The Department of Buildings records show no violations issued during that period, so there would be no certification records.

BIS shows no elevator records for the time period in question.

Therefore, the Department has no records responsive to your request.

This constitutes the Department's final determination."

References:

[1] DRIVE TO THE TOP
http://www.elevator-world.com/magazine/arc...03-002.html-ssi
[2] The Buildings Information System http://www.nyc.gov/html/dob/html/bis/bis.shtml
[3] Elevators
http://www.nyc.gov/html/dob/html/applicati.../elevator_home….

[4] Elevators: Applications and Permits http://www.nyc.gov/html/dob/html/applicati.../elevator_appl….
[5] REFERENCE MATERIALS: 1968 New York City Building Code http://www.nyc.gov/html/dob/html/reference..._internet.shtml

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THERMITE CUTTING VERTICAL STEEL - VALIDATED -

Title: THERMITE CUTTING VERTICAL STEEL - VALIDATED - Description: EXPERIMENTALLY DEMONSTRATED [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:06 AM (GMT)

THERMITE CUTTING VERTICAL STEEL - VALIDATED - EXPERIMENTALLY DEMONSTRATED

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/LNOM_U5UM6Q" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:06 AM (GMT)

Dimitri Khalezov informs you that Thermite is disinformation.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Post 9/11 Era and Radicalism

Title: Post 9/11 Era and Radicalism

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:29 AM (GMT)

Post 9/11 Era and Radicalism

Posted on 20. Jul, 2011 by Asif H Raja in 9/11
http://www.opinion-maker.org/2011/07/post-...and-radicalism/

Despite spending billions of dollars in Afghanistan to make it pro-American, except for the beneficiaries in government, great majority of Afghans dislike America. They eagerly await their return. Pullout without accomplishing anything will cause a big setback to US prestige and reputation and will continue to haunt it for times to come.

By Brig Asif Haroon Raja

Dogma of New World Order (NWO) conceived by Zionists and neo-cons Richard Perle, Paul Wolfowitz and Dick Cheney in 1990 presented Islam as the chief threat to western capitalist system and the US uni-polarism after the fall of Soviet inspired communism. It envisaged giving USA sole proprietorship of nuclear weapons excluding Israel from effective nations. Pakistan's nuclear program figured out prominently; intense lobbying to prevent Pakistan from going nuclear had already been going on since mid 1970s. George W Bush senior and later Bill Clinton didn't take NWO seriously since they had other important issues to dwell upon. Bush senior however initiated First Gulf War and Clinton authorized use of force against Haiti, Bosnia and Kosovo which didn't satiate war mongers since NATO rescued Bosnian Muslims from marauding Serbs.

It therefore became necessary for the concept makers to select a man of their choice for the Oval Office to implement their agenda to emasculate Islam and to steal the resources present in Muslim world. Hence 2000 elections in USA were gerrymandered to make George W Bush junior the next president. While 9/11 was a false flag operation, both Afghanistan and Iraq were invaded and occupied on false grounds. Hidden motives were diametrically opposite to professed objectives. Ten-year war has virtually pushed the two occupied countries to Stone Age and Pakistan is being gradually ruined.

The US military's claim of turning the tide in Afghanistan in its favor is premature and illusory. After the commencement of thinning out of troops this month, things would become clearer which side has an edge over the other? Mere gaining of an edge will not be good enough for USA since it would still not allow it sufficient space to implement smooth withdrawal plan or post withdrawal political plan.

Irrespective of concerted efforts of US trainers to make the ANA battle worthy, performance of ANA will remain below expected standards. There has not been any drop in desertion and discipline cases including cases of firing upon foreign forces mainly because of their meager pay scale, economic hardships and insulting attitude of US-NATO officers and men. Indiscriminate firing by NATO resulting in heavy deaths of civilians' is another cause of their heart burning. Possibility of revolt within ANA cannot be ruled out particularly when larger numbers of Pashtun soldiers are now being recruited.

In its madness to completely overwhelm the two occupied countries and make them as its client states, till recent the US was spending $12 billion a month in Iraq. It is spending over $10 billion per month in Afghanistan which comes to $110 billion annually to maintain its nearly 100,000 troops. Military operations will cost $95 billion in the ongoing financial year. Cost of one US soldier comes to one million dollars annually. One meal cost $28 for a US soldier which is more than most Afghans earn in a month.

Pentagon pays average of $400 to put a gallon of fuel in a military vehicle or aircraft. The US military is making clandestine payments to Taliban in Afghanistan for safe passage of military convoys carrying fuel and other supplies. 25% of money the US pays for security is paid to Taliban. The US relies heavily on private military and security contractors in conducting military operations. In 2009, 218000 private contractors were employed by defence department. In May 2010, the US Centcom reported presence of 26000 in Afghanistan but actual strength is 80,000. Karzai regime has taken steps to drastically cut down strength of private contractors.

USA's defence budget is $633 billion. Thoughtless defence spending has increased the US federal debt by over 50% since 2006 due to collapsed economy and policy of bailing out banks. By end 2009, debt had risen to $12.3 trillion, but interest paid on it $383 billion was less than in 2006 ($406 billion) because interest rates had been pushed to extremely low levels. Interest now eats up half of government's income tax receipts, estimated at $899 billion for FY 2010/11. Of this, $414 billion will go to interest on federal debt.

Despite spending so much, the ISAF in Afghanistan has taken up a rearward posture and the combat troops are bunker based, relying only on air power. US air attacks have been stepped up in recent months as a result of which civilian casualties in Helmand, Kunar and Nuristan provinces have risen. As per reports of James Cogan, Human Rights Unit of UN assistance to Afghanistan (UNAMA), upsurge in reckless US-NATO aerial attacks have soared civilian casualties in Afghanistan by 24% since 2010. Despite taking preventive measures, fatalities of ISAF are continuing for which the US has no remedy. It has conveniently shifted the blame on Pakistan alleging that IEDs are manufactured in FATA and exported to Afghanistan.

Home pressure is increasing and election dates are drawing closer. Obama is anxious to achieve some sort of victory for face saving but see no scope for it. He feels it was imprudent on part of sacked Gen McChrystal to demand additional troops twice in a year and that too with zero results. Gen Petraeus till his last day in his last appointment kept insisting that US military is in a position to reverse the losing tide if the withdrawal is delayed but Obama didn't listen to him.

Setting aside the pressure built by Pentagon, Obama stuck to his December 2009 decision and announced the time schedule of troop withdrawal starting this month. Next two years and six months are critical for USA since in this intervening period it has to clear the mess piled up in ten years and make war-torn country stable and peaceful. Given the obtaining security environment, this is a tall order and seems next to impossible particularly when the US itself and its strategic partners governed by imperialistic mindset, lack political maturity and harbor ill intentions.

Euphoria of OBL is over since his departure has made no difference in growing radicalization and terrorism in the world in general and Middle East and Af-Pak region in particular. Conversely, OBL venture has begun to backfire since people suspect it to be a false flag operation. Many in USA doubt the veracity of claims made.

Despite spending billions of dollars in Afghanistan to make it pro-American, except for the beneficiaries in government, great majority of Afghans dislike America. They eagerly await their return. Pullout without accomplishing anything will cause a big setback to US prestige and reputation and will continue to haunt it for times to come. Historians will pen this mega event as another feather in the cap of Afghans and another black spot in US history. It will be a bigger miracle than the previous one since this time the Taliban have fought the war single-handed without the support of a super power or any other country.

Till this day the US is criticized for leaving Afghans in a lurch in 1989. The critics feel that had it stayed back for some time and helped in reconstruction and rehabilitation of Afghanistan, it could have avoided the present impasse. Anti-pullout lobbies are insisting that Washington must not repeat its blunder and warn that fallout of premature exit would be much worse than the previous one. Pro-pullout lobbies on the other hand are convinced that root cause of terrorism in Af-Pak region is the presence of foreign forces in Afghanistan and their meddlesome activities. They say that the heat of terrorism can now be felt in western countries and USA where radicalization and conversion to Islam has intensified in the aftermath of faked 9/11. The west is up against a new threat from within posed by white skinned Islamists and settlers. These fears have made war on terror highly unpopular and call for ending it is getting louder.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Indian Leader Suspects Mossad-CIA handiwork in Title: Indian Leader Suspects Mossad-CIA handiwork in Description: Mumbi blasts

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:56 AM (GMT)

Indian Leader Suspects Mossad-CIA handiwork in Mumbi blasts

http://www.bobtuskin.com/2011/07/19/indian...-mumbai-blasts/

New Delhi, July 17, IRNA – An Indian leader on Sunday suspected Mossad-CIA handiwork in Mumbai serial blasts that killed 20 people and injured more than 100.

In an exclusive interview with IRNA, Asif Mohd Khan, MLA of Delhi Assembly said: “Israeli and American intelligence agencies connections can’t be ruled out in coordinated bomb attacks at three different locations on Wednesday evening in India’s business capital, Mumbai”.

While explaining his suspicion, Indian lawmaker was of the view that Mossad and CIA wanted to derail the on-going dialogue process between India and Pakistan, which was stalled after 2008 Mumbai attack in which 166 persons were killed by 10 gunmen.

“They (Mossad-CIA) wanted to destabilize the region by driving India and Pakistan to war with each other. Somehow they have succeeded in destabilizing Pakistan and now wanted to create instability in India also,” Asif noted.

And thereby they want to drag India further into the deadly embrace of their imperialism, he added.

Indian leader while condemning the inhuman attacks, appreciated India’s stand through which the Mumbai bomb blasts will have no impact on the peace talks with Pakistan scheduled later this month.

Expressing grief at the incident and condoling the bereaved families of the victims, Asif urged the government to conduct a high-level inquiry into the blasts to bring the culprits to justice.

He also urged the peace loving nations not only to condemn this “inhuman act” in simple words, but stand up for a collective fight against the menace and the hegemonic policies of the US and Israel, which pose threat to the stability of the region in particular and the whole world in general.

Terror struck Mumbai on Wednesday evening when three near simultaneous blasts ripped through crowded areas killing at least 20 people and injuring more than hundred in a grim reminder of the deadly November 2008 Mumbai attack in which 166 persons were killed by 10 terrorists.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Kingdom and the Towers

Title: The Kingdom and the Towers

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:30 AM (GMT)

The Kingdom and the Towers

Was there a foreign government behind the 9/11 attacks? A decade later, Americans still haven't been given the whole story, while a key 28-page section of Congress's Joint Inquiry report remains censored. Gathering years of leaks and leads, in an adaptation from their new book, Anthony Summers and Robbyn Swan examine the connections between Saudi Arabia and the hijackers (15 of whom were Saudi), the Bush White House's decision to ignore or bury evidence, and the frustration of lead investigators—including 9/11-commission staffers, counterterrorism officials, and senators on both sides of the aisle.

By Anthony Summers and Robbyn Swan
August 2011
http://readersupportednews.org/off-site-op...ttack-us-on-911

TROUBLING LINKS From left: King Abdullah, Prince Naif, Osama bin Laden, Prince Bandar, and Prince Turki—Saudis all, as were 15 of the 19 hijackers of 9/11. Large photograph by Allan Tannenbaum/Polaris; bottom, from left, by Ludovic/REA/Redux, by Li Zhen/Xinhua/Landov, from Getty Images, by Hassan Ammar/AFP/Getty Images, by Hasan Jamali/A.P. Images.

Adapted from The Eleventh Day by Anthony Summers and Robynn Swan to be published this month by Ballantine Books; © 2011 by the authors.

For 10 years now, a major question about 9/11 has remained unresolved. It was, as 9/11-commission chairmen Thomas Kean and Lee Hamilton recalled, "Had the hijackers received any support from foreign governments?" There was information that pointed to the answer, but the commissioners apparently deemed it too disquieting to share in full with the public.

The idea that al-Qaeda had not acted alone was there from the start. “The terrorists do not function in a vacuum,” Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld told reporters the week after 9/11. “I know a lot, and what I have said, as clearly as I know how, is that states are supporting these people.” Pressed to elaborate, Rumsfeld was silent for a long moment. Then, saying it was a sensitive matter, he changed the subject.

Three years later, the commission would consider whether any of three foreign countries in particular might have had a role in the attacks. Two were avowed foes of the United States: Iraq and Iran. The third had long been billed as a close friend: Saudi Arabia.

• The Bushes and the Saudis (Craig Unger, October 2003)

• An oral history of Osama bin Laden (Peter Bergen, January 2006)

• Inside bin Laden’s terror operation (Peter Bergen, December 2001)

• How bin Laden lost (Peter Bergen, January 2011)

In its report, the commission stated that it had seen no “evidence indicating that Iraq cooperated with al-Qaeda in developing or carrying out any attacks against the United States.”

Iran, the commission found, had long had contacts with al-Qaeda and had allowed its operatives—including a number of the future hijackers—to travel freely through its airports. Though there was no evidence that Iran “was aware of the planning for what later became the 9/11 attack,” the commissioners called on the government to investigate further.

This year, in late May, attorneys for bereaved 9/11 family members said there was revealing new testimony from three Iranian defectors. Former senior commission counsel Dietrich Snell was quoted as saying in an affidavit that there was now “convincing evidence the government of Iran provided material support to al-Qaeda in the planning and execution of the 9/11 attack.” That evidence, however, has yet to surface.

As for Saudi Arabia, America’s purported friend, you would have thought from the reaction of the Saudi ambassador, Prince Bandar bin Sultan, that the commission had found nothing dubious in his country’s role. “The clear statements by this independent, bipartisan commission,” he declared, “have debunked the myths that have cast fear and doubt over Saudi Arabia.” Yet no finding in the report categorically exonerated Saudi Arabia.

The commission’s decision as to what to say on the subject had been made amid discord and tension. Late one night in 2004, as last-minute changes to the report were being made, investigators who had worked on the Saudi angle received alarming news. Their team leader, Dietrich Snell, was at the office, closeted with executive director Philip Zelikow, making major changes to their material and removing key elements.

The investigators, Michael Jacobson and Rajesh De, hurried to the office to confront Snell. With lawyerly caution, he said he thought there was insufficient substance to their case against the Saudis. They considered the possibility of resigning, then settled for a compromise. Much of the telling information they had collected would survive in the report, but only in tiny print, hidden in the endnotes.

The commissioners did say in the body of the report that the long official friendship of the United States and Saudi Arabia could not be unconditional. The relationship had to be about more than oil, had to include—and this in bold type—“a commitment to fight the violent extremists who foment hatred.”

It had been far from clear, and for the longest time, that the Saudis were thus committed. More than seven years before 9/11, the first secretary at the Saudi mission to the United Nations, Mohammed al-Khilewi, had defected to the United States, bringing with him thousands of pages of documents that, he said, showed the regime’s corruption, abuse of human rights, and support for terrorism. At the same time, he addressed a letter to then crown prince Abdullah, calling for “a move towards democracy.” The Saudi royals, Khilewi said, responded by threatening his life. The U.S. government, for its part, offered him little protection. F.B.I. officials, moreover, declined to accept the documents the defecting diplomat had brought with him.

In support of his claim that Saudi Arabia supported terrorism, Khilewi spoke of an episode relevant to the first, 1993, attempt to bring down the World Trade Center’s Twin Towers. “A Saudi citizen carrying a Saudi diplomatic passport,” he said, “gave money to Ramzi Yousef, the mastermind behind the World Trade Center bombing,” when the al-Qaeda terrorist was in the Philippines. The Saudi relationship with Yousef, the defector claimed, “is secret and goes through Saudi intelligence.”

The reference to a Saudi citizen having funded Yousef closely fit the part played by Osama bin Laden’s brother-in-law Jamal Khalifa. He was active in the Philippines, fronted as a charity organizer at the relevant time, and founded a charity that gave money to Yousef and Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the chief al-Qaeda planner of 9/11, during the initial plotting to destroy U.S. airliners.

When Khalifa returned to Saudi Arabia, in 1995—following detention in the United States and subsequent acquittal on terrorism charges in Jordan—he was, according to C.I.A. bin Laden chief Michael Scheuer, met by a limousine and a welcome home from “a high-ranking official.” A Philippine newspaper would suggest that the official had been Prince Sultan, then a deputy prime minister and minister of defense and aviation, today the heir to the Saudi throne.

In June 1996, according to published reports, while in Paris for the biennial international weapons bazaar, a group including a Saudi prince and Saudi financiers gathered at the Royal Monceau hotel, near the Saudi Embassy. The subject was bin Laden and what to do about him. After two recent bombings of American targets in Saudi Arabia, one of them just that month, the fear was that the Saudi elite itself would soon be targeted. At the meeting at the Monceau, French intelligence reportedly learned, it was decided that bin Laden was to be kept at bay by payment of huge sums in protection money.

In sworn statements after 9/11, former Taliban intelligence chief Mohammed Khaksar said that in 1998 Prince Turki, chief of Saudi Arabia's General Intelligence Department (G.I.D.), sealed a deal under which bin Laden agreed not to attack Saudi targets. In return, Saudi Arabia would provide funds and material assistance to the Taliban, not demand bin Laden's extradition, and not bring pressure to close down al-Qaeda training camps. Saudi businesses, meanwhile, would ensure that money also flowed directly to bin Laden.
Special Relationships

After 9/11, Prince Turki would deny that any such deal was done with bin Laden. Other Saudi royals, however, may have been involved in payoff arrangements. A former Clinton administration official has claimed—and U.S. intelligence sources concurred—that at least two Saudi princes had been paying, on behalf of the kingdom, what amounted to protection money since 1995. The former official added, "The deal was, they would turn a blind eye to what he was doing elsewhere. 'You don't conduct operations here, and we won't disrupt them elsewhere.' "

American and British official sources, speaking later with Simon Henderson, Baker Fellow at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, named the two princes in question. They were, Henderson told the authors, Prince Naif, the interior minister, and Prince Sultan. The money involved in the alleged payments, according to Henderson's sources, had amounted to "hundreds of millions of dollars." It had been "Saudi official money—not their own."

Before 9/11, American officials visiting Riyadh usually discovered that it was futile to ask the Saudis for help in fighting terrorism. George Tenet, who became C.I.A. director during Bill Clinton's second term, vividly recalled an audience he was granted by Prince Naif, the crown prince's brother. Naif, who oversaw domestic intelligence, began the exchange with "an interminable soliloquy recounting the history of the U.S.-Saudi 'special' relationship, including how the Saudis would never, ever keep security-related information from their U.S. allies."

There came a moment when Tenet had had enough. Breaching royal etiquette, he placed his hand on the prince's knee and said, "Your Royal Highness, what do you think it will look like if someday I have to tell the Washington Post that you held out data that might have helped us track down al-Qaeda murderers?" Naif's reaction, Tenet thought, was what looked "like a prolonged state of shock."

On a flight home from Saudi Arabia in the late 1990s, F.B.I. director Louis Freeh told counterterrorism chief John O'Neill that he thought the Saudi officials they had met during the trip had been helpful. "You've got to be kidding," retorted O'Neill, a New Jersey native who never minced his words. "They didn't give us anything. They were just shining sunshine up your ass."

Several years later, in two long conversations with Jean-Charles Brisard, author of a study on terrorist financing for a French intelligence agency, O'Neill was still venting his frustration. "All the answers, all the clues that could enable us to dismantle Osama bin Laden's organization," he said, "are in Saudi Arabia." The answers and the clues, however, remained out of reach, in part, O'Neill told Brisard, because U.S. dependence on Saudi oil meant that Saudi Arabia had "much more leverage on us than we have on the kingdom." And, he added, because "high-ranking personalities and families in the Saudi kingdom" had close ties to bin Laden.

These conversations took place in June and late July of 2001.

At his residence outside Washington on the morning of September 11, Prince Bandar rushed out an embassy statement. The kingdom, it read, "condemned the regrettable and inhuman bombings and acts which took place today. . . . Saudi Arabia strongly condemns such acts, which contravene all religious values and human civilized concepts; and extends sincere condolences."

Behind the political scenery, and on the festering subject of Israel, relations between Riyadh and Washington had recently become unprecedentedly shaky. Crown Prince Abdullah had long fumed about America's apparent complacency over the plight of the Palestinians. That spring he had pointedly declined an invitation to the White House. Three weeks before 9/11, enraged by television footage of an Israeli soldier putting his boot on the head of a Palestinian woman, he had snapped. Bandar, the crown prince's nephew, was told to deliver an uncompromising message to President Bush.

"I reject this extraordinary, un-American bias whereby the blood of an Israeli child is more expensive and holy than the blood of a Palestinian child. . . . A time comes when peoples and nations part. . . . Starting today, you go your way and we will go our way. From now on, we will protect our national interests, regardless of where America's interests lie in the region." There was more, much more, and it rocked the Bush administration. The president responded with a placatory letter that seemed to go far toward the Saudi position of endorsing the creation of a viable Palestinian state.

Then came the shattering events of Tuesday the 11th. In Riyadh within 24 hours—himself now in turn placatory—Abdullah pulled the lever that gave his nation its only real power, the economic sword it could draw or sheathe at will. He ordered that nine million barrels of oil be dispatched to the United States over the next two weeks. The certainty of supply had the effect, it is said, of averting what had otherwise been a possibility at that time—an oil shortage that would have pushed prices through the roof and caused, on top of the economic effects of the 9/11 calamity, a major financial crisis.

Into the mix, on Wednesday the 12th, came troubling news. In a phone call that night, a C.I.A. official told Ambassador Bandar that 15 of the hijackers had been Saudis. As Bandar recalled it, he felt the world collapsing around him. “That was a disaster,” Crown Prince Abdullah’s foreign-affairs adviser Adel al-Jubeir has said, “because bin Laden, at that moment, had made in the minds of Americans Saudi Arabia into an enemy.”

Royal and rich Saudis scrambled to get out of the United States and return home. Seventy-five royals and their entourage, ensconced at Caesars Palace hotel and casino in Las Vegas, decamped within hours of the attacks to the Four Seasons. They felt “extremely concerned for their personal safety,” they explained to the local F.B.I. field office, and bodyguards apparently deemed the Four Seasons more secure.

In Washington, Saudis who wished to leave included members of the bin Laden family. One of Osama’s brothers, never named publicly, had hastily called the Saudi Embassy wanting to know where he could best go to be safe. He was installed in a room at the Watergate Hotel and told to stay there until advised that transportation was available. Across the country, more than 20 bin Laden family members and staff were getting ready to leave.

In Lexington, Kentucky, the mecca of Thoroughbred racing in America, Prince Ahmed bin Salman, a nephew of King Fahd’s, had been attending the annual yearling sales. After the attacks, Ahmed quickly began to round up members of his family for a return to Saudi Arabia. He ordered his son and a couple of friends, who were in Florida, to charter a plane and get themselves to Lexington to connect with the plane he was taking home. They managed it, one of them told the security man hired for the flight, because “his father or his uncle was good friends with George Bush Sr.”

Late on the night of the 13th, Prince Bandar’s assistant called the F.B.I.’s assistant director for counterterrorism, Dale Watson. He needed help, the assistant said, in getting bin Laden “family members” out of the country. Watson said Saudi officials should call the White House or the State Department. The request found its way to counterterrorism coordinator Richard Clarke, who has acknowledged that he gave the go-ahead for the flights. He has said he has “no recollection” of having cleared it with anyone more senior in the administration.

An F.B.I. memo written two years after the exodus appears to acknowledge that some of the departing Saudis may have had information pertinent to the investigation. Asked on CNN the same year whether he could say unequivocally that no one on the evacuation flights had been involved in 9/11, Saudi Embassy information officer Nail al-Jubeir responded by saying he was sure of only two things, that “there is the existence of God, and then we will die at the end of the world. Everything else, we don’t know.”

Saudis in Denial

In spite of the fact that it had almost immediately become known that 15 of those implicated in the attacks had been Saudis, President George W. Bush did not hold Saudi Arabia’s official representative in Washington at arm’s length. As early as the evening of September 13, he kept a scheduled appointment to receive Prince Bandar at the White House. The two men had known each other for years. They reportedly greeted each other with a friendly embrace, smoked cigars on the Truman Balcony, and conversed with Vice President Dick Cheney and National-Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice.

There is a photograph of the meeting, which has been published in the past. This year, however, when the authors asked the George W. Bush presidential library for a copy, the library responded in an e-mail that the former president’s office was “not inclined to release the image from the balcony at this time.”

It would soon become evident that, far from confronting the Saudis, the Bush administration wanted rapprochement. The president would invite Crown Prince Abdullah to visit the United States, press him to come when he hesitated, and—when he accepted—welcome him to his Texas ranch in early 2002. Dick Cheney and Condoleezza Rice were there, along with Secretary of State Colin Powell and First Lady Laura Bush.

It seems that 9/11 barely came up during the discussions. Speaking with the press afterward, the president cut off one reporter when he began to raise the subject.

Official Saudi Arabia was tortoise-slow in acknowledging even the fact that almost all of the hijackers had been Saudi citizens. Two days after Bandar was given that information, his spokesman said the terrorists had probably used stolen identities.

“There is no proof or evidence,” claimed Sheikh Saleh al-Sheikh, minister of Islamic affairs, “that Saudis carried out these attacks.” Prince Sultan doubted whether only bin Laden and his followers were responsible, and hinted that “another power with advanced technical expertise” must have been behind 9/11. As of December 2001, Prince Naif was saying he still did not believe 15 hijackers had been Saudis.

Not until February 2002 did Naif acknowledge the truth. “The names we have got confirmed [it],” he then conceded. “Their families have been notified. . . . I believe they were taken advantage of in the name of religion, and regarding certain issues pertaining to the Arab nation, especially the issue of Palestine.”

Even after that admission, Sultan and Naif were not done. They began pointing to a familiar enemy. “It is enough to see a number of [U.S.] congressmen wearing Jewish yarmulkes,” Sultan said, “to explain the allegations against us.” In late 2002, Naif blamed the “Zionists,” saying, “We put big question marks and ask who committed the events of September 11 and who benefited from them I think [the Zionists] are behind these events.”

As the months passed, leading Saudis would suggest publicly that their nation had been entirely open with the United States on the security front all along—even claim that they had alerted Washington in advance to possible calamity.

A year after 9/11, Prince Turki expounded at length on the relationship the G.I.D. had had with the C.I.A. From about 1996, he wrote, “at the instruction of the senior Saudi leadership, I shared all the intelligence we had collected on bin Laden and al-Qaeda with the C.I.A. And in 1997 the Saudi minister of defense, Prince Sultan, established a joint intelligence committee with the United States to share information on terrorism in general and on bin Laden (and al-Qaeda) in particular.”

There was a core of truth to this. The G.I.D. and U.S. services had had a long, if uneasy, understanding on sharing intelligence. Other Saudi claims were far more startling.

Bandar had hinted right after 9/11 that both the U.S. and Saudi intelligence services had known more about the hijackers in advance than they were publicly admitting. In 2007, however, by which time he had risen to become national-security adviser to former crown prince—now king—Abdullah, Bandar produced a bombshell. “Saudi security,” he asserted, “had been actively following the movements of most of the terrorists with precision. . . . If U.S. security authorities had engaged their Saudi counterparts in a serious and credible manner, in my opinion, we would have avoided what happened.”

Though there was no official U.S. reaction to that claim, Michael Scheuer, the former chief of the C.I.A.’s bin Laden unit, later dismissed it in his book Marching Toward Hell: America and Islam After Iraq as a “fabrication.”

Prince Turki had long since come out with an allegation similar to Bandar’s, but far more specific. He said that in late 1999 and early 2000—just before the first two future 9/11 hijackers reached the United States—his staff had informed the C.I.A. that both men were terrorists. “What we told them,” he said, “was these people were on our watch list from previous activities of al-Qaeda, in both the [East Africa] embassy bombings and attempts to smuggle arms into the Kingdom in 1997.”

C.I.A. spokesman Bill Harlow dismissed Turki’s claim as being supported by “not a shred of evidence." Harlow said information on the two hijackers-to-be had been passed on only a month after the attacks. What the 9/11 commission thought of Turki's assertion has not been made public. The National Archives told the authors that it was not permissible even to say whether commission files contain a record of an interview with the former head of the G.I.D. Information on the intelligence background to 9/11 apparently remains highly sensitive.

The Hijackers' Helpers

Saudi Arabia long remained a black hole for American official investigators probing 9/11. They were not, for example, allowed access to the families of those believed to have carried out the attacks. "We're getting zero cooperation," former C.I.A. counterterrorism chief Vincent Cannistraro said a month after the attacks.

Within the United States, however, the probe proceeded intensively and over several years. And some of the most significant information gleaned, it turned out, concerned the same two terrorists to whom Prince Turki had alluded. They are said to have been handpicked by Osama bin Laden to be first to enter the United States, and they would eventually be part of the group that seized American Airlines flight 77, the plane used in the strike against the Pentagon.

They were Khalid al-Mihdhar and Nawaf al-Hazmi, both Saudis, both experienced jihadis—holy warriors—though still in their mid-20s. They entered the country through Los Angeles International Airport as early as January 15, 2000, with scant knowledge of the English language and zero experience of life in the West. The 9/11-commission report declared it "unlikely" that the pair "would have come to the United States without arranging to receive assistance from one or more individuals informed in advance of their arrival."

The investigation identified individuals who helped or may have helped Mihdhar and Hazmi following their arrival in California—whether by happenstance or because of foreknowledge.

An imam named Fahad al-Thumairy, an accredited diplomat appointed by the Saudi Ministry of Islamic Affairs to liaise with the huge nearby mosque, served at the time at the Saudi consulate in Los Angeles. According to one witness, Thumairy had at the relevant time arranged for two men—whom the witness first identified from photographs as having been the two terrorists—to be given a tour of the area by car.

A fellow Saudi, a San Diego resident named Omar al-Bayoumi, said by individuals interviewed to have had frequent contact with Thumairy, acknowledged that he met Mihdhar and Hazmi during a visit to Los Angeles on February 1, two weeks after their arrival.

According to a person interviewed by the F.B.I., Bayoumi said before the trip that he was going to “pick up visitors.” What is agreed by all is that he made the journey by car, accompanied by an American Muslim named Caysan bin Don. On the way, bin Don said, Bayoumi mentioned that he was accustomed to going to the consulate to obtain religious materials. They did stop at the consulate, where, according to bin Don, a man in a Western business suit, with a full beard, greeted Bayoumi and took him off to talk in an office. Bayoumi emerged some time later, carrying a box of Korans. He would describe the encounter differently, saying he was “uncertain” with whom he had met and “didn’t really know people in [the Saudi ministry of] Islamic Affairs.”

Both men agreed, however, that they proceeded to a restaurant and while there—this is the crucial moment in their story—met and talked with future hijackers Mihdhar and Hazmi, who had just arrived in the country. Bayoumi and bin Don were to tell the F.B.I. the encounter occurred merely by chance.

Bayoumi urged Mihdhar and Hazmi to come south to San Diego, assisted them in finding accommodations, and stayed in touch. On the day the two terrorists moved into the apartment they first used, next door to Bayoumi’s, there were four calls between his phone and that of the local imam, New Mexico-born Anwar Aulaqi—later to be characterized in the congressional report on 9/11 as having served as “spiritual adviser” to Mihdhar and Hazmi.

Bayoumi’s income, which was paid by Ercan, a subsidiary of a contractor for the Saudi Civil Aviation Administration—though, according to a fellow employee, he did no known work—reportedly increased hugely following the future hijackers’ arrival. Another Saudi living in San Diego, Osama Basnan, was also of interest to 9/11 investigators probing the money flow.

A three-page section of Congress’s Joint Inquiry report (the product of joint hearings on the 9/11 attacks by the House and Senate intelligence committees), containing more lines withheld than released, tells us only that Basnan was a close associate of Bayoumi in San Diego. According to former U.S. senator Bob Graham, co-chair of the inquiry, and to press reports, regular checks flowed in 2000 from Basnan to Bayoumi’s wife. The payments, ostensibly made to help cover medical treatment, had originated with the Saudi Embassy in Washington.

There are separate reasons to question the activity of Thumairy, Bayoumi, and Basnan. Thumairy, who had a reputation as a fundamentalist, was later refused re-entry into the United States—well after 9/11—on the ground that he “might be connected with terrorist activity.” Bayoumi had first attracted the interest of the F.B.I. years earlier, and the bureau later learned he had “connections to terrorist elements.” He left the country two months before the attacks.

As for Basnan, his name had come up in a counterterrorism inquiry a decade earlier. He had reportedly hosted a party for Omar Abdel Rahman—today notorious as the "Blind Sheikh," serving life for his part in plotting to blow up the World Trade Center and other New York City landmarks in 1993—when he visited the United States, and had once claimed he did more for Islam than Bayoumi ever did. A partially censored commission document suggests that—after Mihdhar, Hazmi, and fellow future 9/11 terrorists arrived in the United States to learn to fly—a Basnan associate was in e-mail and phone contact with accused key 9/11 conspirator Ramzi Binalshibh. A year after 9/11, Basnan was arrested for visa fraud and deported.

Available information suggests that two of the trio were employed by or had links to the Saudi regime—Thumairy through his accreditation by the Ministry of Islamic Affairs and Bayoumi through his employment by the company linked to the Saudi Civil Aviation Authority. At least five people told the F.B.I. they considered Bayoumi to be some sort of government agent. The C.I.A., Bob Graham has said, thought Basnan was also an agent. Graham also cited an agency memo that referred to "incontrovertible evidence" of support for the terrorists within the Saudi government.
Problematic Interviews

In 2003 and 2004, but only following a high-level request from the White House, 9/11-commission staff were able to make two visits to Saudi Arabia to interview Thumairy, Bayoumi, and Basnan.

The questioners, a recently released commission memo notes, believed Thumairy "was deceptive during both interviews. . . . His answers were either inconsistent or at times in direct conflict with information we have from other sources." Most significantly, he denied knowing Bayoumi, let alone Mihdhar and Hazmi. Shown a photograph of Bayoumi, he did not budge. He knew no one of that name, he said. Then, prompted by a whispered interjection from one of the Saudi officials present, he said he had heard of Bayoumi—but only from 9/11 news coverage.

At a second interview, told by commission staff that witnesses had spoken of seeing him with Bayoumi, Thumairy said perhaps they had taken someone else for him. Told that telephone records showed numerous calls between his phones and Bayoumi's phones, just before the arrival of Mihdhar and Hazmi in the United States, Thumairy was stumped. Perhaps, he ventured, his phone number had been assigned to somebody else after he had it? Perhaps the calls had been made by someone else using Bayoumi's phone? Everything Thumairy came up with, his questioners noted, was "implausible."

Bayoumi, interviewed earlier, made a more favorable impression. He stuck to his story about having met Mihdhar and Hazmi by chance. He said that he had rarely seen them after they came to San Diego, that they had been his neighbors for only a few days. Bayoumi said he had then decided he did not want to have much to do with them. Philip Zelikow, who was present during the interview, did not think Bayoumi had been a Saudi agent.

The commission report, however, was to note that Bayoumi's passport contained a distinguishing mark that may be acquired by "especially devout Muslims"—or be associated with "adherence to al-Qaeda." Investigators had also turned up something else. Bayoumi's salary had been approved by a Saudi official whose son's photograph was later found on a computer disk in Pakistan that also contained photographs of three of the hijackers. The son, Saud al-Rashid, was produced for an interview in Saudi Arabia. He admitted having been in Afghanistan and having "cleansed" his passport of the evidence that he had traveled there. He said, though, that he had known nothing of the 9/11 plot. Commission staff who questioned Rashid thought he had been "deceptive."

Finally, there was Basnan. The commission's interview with him, Dietrich Snell wrote afterward, established only "the witness' utter lack of credibility on virtually every material subject." His demeanor "engendered a combination of confrontation, evasiveness, and speechmaking … his repudiation of statements made by him on prior occasions," and the "inherent incredibility of many of his assertions when viewed in light of the totality of the available evidence."

Two men did not face questioning by commission investigators. One of them, a Saudi religious official named Saleh al-Hussayen, certainly should have, although his name does not appear in the commission report. Hussayen, who was involved in the administration of the holy mosques in Mecca and Medina, had been in the States for some three weeks before 9/11. For four days before the attacks, he had stayed at a hotel in Virginia.

Then, on September 10, he had made an unexplained move. With his wife, he checked into the Marriott Residence Inn in Herndon, Virginia—the hotel at which 9/11 hijackers Mihdhar and Hazmi were spending their last night alive.

Commission memos state that F.B.I. agents arrived at Hussayen's room at the Marriott after midnight on the 11th. The Saudi official began "muttering and drooping his head," sweating and drooling. Then he fell out of his chair and appeared to lose consciousness for a few moments. Paramedics summoned to the room were puzzled. Could the patient be "faking"?, they asked the agents. Doctors who examined Hussayen at a local hospital, moreover, found nothing wrong with him. An F.B.I. agent said later that the interview had been cut short because—the agent suggested—Hussayen "feigned a seizure."

Asked by an F.B.I. agent why they had moved to the Marriott, Hussayen's wife said it was because they had wanted a room with a kitchenette. There was no sign, however, that the kitchenette in the room had been used. Asked whether she thought her husband could have been involved in the 9/11 attacks in any way, she replied, "I don't know." Agents never did obtain an adequate interview with Saleh al-Hussayen. Instead of continuing with his tour of the United States, he flew back to Saudi Arabia—and went on to head the administration of the two holy mosques. It remains unknown whether he had contact with Mihdhar and Hazmi on the eve of 9/11, or whether his presence at the Marriott that night was, as Bayoumi claimed of his meeting with the two terrorists, just a matter of chance.

As Hussayen left Virginia for home, other F.B.I. agents in the state were interviewing former San Diego-area imam Anwar Aulaqi. He did not deny having had contact with Mihdhar and Hazmi in California and later—with Hazmi—in Virginia. He could not deny that he had transferred from San Diego to the East Coast in a time frame that paralleled theirs. He made nothing of it, however, and U.S. authorities apparently pursued the matter no further.

Aulaqi had reportedly preached in the precincts of the U.S. Capitol shortly before 9/11. Not long afterward, he lunched at the Pentagon—in an area undamaged by the strike in which his acquaintances Mihdhar and Hazmi had played such a leading role. The reason for the lunch? An outreach effort to ease tensions between Muslim Americans and non-Muslims.

Though American-born, Aulaqi is the son of a former minister of agriculture in Yemen. He remained on and off in the United States after 9/11, apparently unimpeded, before departing first for Britain and eventually for Yemen. Suspicion that he may have had foreknowledge of the 9/11 plot is fueled by the fact that the phone number of his Virginia mosque turned up among items found in an apartment used by accused conspirator Ramzi Binalshibh, who now languishes in Guantánamo.

Only seven years later, starting in 2009, did Aulaqi begin to gain world notoriety. His name has been associated with: the multiple shootings by a U.S. Army major at Fort Hood, the almost successful attempt to explode a bomb on an airliner en route to Detroit, the major car-bomb scare in Times Square, and the last-minute discovery of concealed explosives aboard cargo planes destined for the United States.

When Aulaqi's name began to feature in the Western press, Yemen's foreign minister cautioned that, pending real evidence, he should be considered not a terrorist but a preacher. President Obama took a different view. By early 2010 he had authorized the C.I.A. and the U.S. military to seek out, capture, or kill the Yemeni—assigning Aulaqi essentially the same status as that assigned at the time to Osama bin Laden. Aulaqi remains, as Zelikow noted when his name finally hit the headlines, "a 9/11 loose end."

Taken together, the roles and activities of Thumairy, Bayoumi, Basnan, Hussayen, and Aulaqi—and the dubious accounts some of them have given of themselves—heightened suspicion that the perpetrators of 9/11 had support and sponsorship from backers never clearly identified.
Trouble on the Home Front

Congress's Joint Inquiry, its co-chair Bob Graham told the authors, had found evidence "that the Saudis were facilitating, assisting, some of the hijackers. And my suspicion is that they were providing some assistance to most if not all of the hijackers. . . . It's my opinion that 9/11 could not have occurred but for the existence of an infrastructure of support within the United States. By 'the Saudis,' I mean the Saudi government and individual Saudis who are for some purposes dependent on the government—which includes all of the elite in the country."

Those involved, in Graham's view, "included the royal family" and "some groups that were close to the royal family." Was it credible that members of the Saudi royal family would knowingly have facilitated the 9/11 operation? "I think," the former senator said, "that they did in fact take actions that were complicit with the hijackers."

At page 396 of the Joint Inquiry's report, in the final section of the body of the report, a yawning gap appears. All 28 pages of Part Four, entitled "Finding, Discussion and Narrative Regarding Certain Sensitive National Security Matters," have been redacted. The pages are there, but—with the rare exception of an occasional surviving word or fragmentary, meaningless clause—they are entirely blank. The decision to censor that entire section caused a furor in 2003.

Inquiries established that, while the withholdings were technically the responsibility of the C.I.A., the agency would not have obstructed release of most of the pages. The order that they must remain secret had come from President Bush.

Bob Graham and his Republican co-chairman, former senator Richard Shelby, felt strongly that the bulk of the withheld material could and should have been made public. So did Representative Nancy Pelosi, the ranking Democrat in the House. Shelby said, "My judgment is that 95 percent of that information should be declassified, become uncensored, so the American people would know."

Know what? "I can't tell you what's in those pages," the Joint Inquiry's staff director, Eleanor Hill, said. "I can tell you that the chapter deals with information that our committee found in the F.B.I. and C.I.A. files that was very disturbing. It had to do with sources of foreign support for the hijackers." The focus of the material, leaks to the press soon established, had been Saudi Arabia.

There were, sources said, additional details about Bayoumi, who had helped Mihdhar and Hazmi in California, and about his associate Basnan. The censored portion of the report had stated that Anwar Aulaqi, the San Diego imam, had been a "central figure" in a support network for the future hijackers.

A U.S. official who had read the censored section told the Los Angeles Times that it described "very direct, very specific links" with Saudi officials, links that "cannot be passed off as rogue, isolated or coincidental." The New York Times journalist Philip Shenon has written that Senator Graham and his investigators became "convinced that a number of sympathetic Saudi officials, possibly within the sprawling Islamic Affairs Ministry, had known that al-Qaeda terrorists were entering the United States beginning in 2000 in preparation for some sort of attack. Graham believed the Saudi officials had directed spies operating in the United States to assist them."

Most serious of all, Newsweek's Michael Isikoff reported that the information uncovered by the investigation had drawn "apparent connections between high-level Saudi princes and associates of the hijackers." Absent release of the censored pages, one can only surmise what the connections may have been.

There may be a clue, however, in the first corroboration—arising from the authors' interview with a former C.I.A. officer—of an allegation relating to the capture in Pakistan, while the Joint Inquiry was at work, of senior bin Laden aide Abu Zubaydah. Many months of interrogation followed, including, from about June or July 2002, no fewer than 83 sessions of waterboarding. Zubaydah was the first al-Qaeda prisoner on whom that controversial "enhanced technique" was used.

John Kiriakou, then a C.I.A. operative serving in Pakistan, had played a leading part in the operation that led to the capture of Zubaydah—gravely wounded—in late March that year. Back in Washington early that fall, Kiriakou informed the authors, he was told by colleagues that cables on the interrogation reported that Zubaydah had come up with the names of several Saudi princes. He "raised their names in sort of a mocking fashion, [indicating] he had the support of the Saudi government." The C.I.A. followed up by running name traces, Kiriakou said.

Zubaydah had named three princes, but by late July all three had died—within a week of one another. First to go was Prince Ahmed bin Salman, the leading figure in the international horse-racing community who was mentioned earlier, in our account of Saudis hastening to get out of the United States after 9/11. Ahmed, a nephew of both King Fahd's and Prince Sultan's, died of a heart attack following abdominal surgery at the age of 43, according to the Saudis.

Prince Sultan bin Faisal bin Turki bin Abdullah al-Saud, also a nephew of King Fahd's and Prince Sultan's, reportedly died in a car accident. A third prince, Fahd bin Turki bin Saud al-Kabir, whose father was a cousin of Fahd's and Sultan's, was said to have died "of thirst."

Former C.I.A. officer Kiriakou later said his colleagues had told him they believed that what Zubaydah had told them about the princes was true. "We had known for years," he told the authors, "that Saudi royals—I should say elements of the royal family—were funding al-Qaeda."

In 2003, during the brouhaha about the redacted chapter in the Joint Inquiry report, Crown Prince Abdullah's spokesman, Adel al-Jubeir, made a cryptic comment that has never been further explained. The Saudi regime's own probe, he said, had uncovered "wrongdoing by some." He noted, though, that the royal family had thousands of members, and insisted that the regime itself had no connection to the 9/11 plot.

More than 40 U.S. senators clamored for the release of the censored section of the report. They included John Kerry, Joe Lieberman, Charles Schumer, Sam Brownback, Olympia Snowe, and Pat Roberts.

Nothing happened.

Bob Graham, with his long experience in the field as a member and chair not only of the Joint Inquiry but also of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, has continued to voice his anger over the censorship even in retirement. President Bush, he wrote in his book Intelligence Matters in 2004, had "engaged in a cover-up . . . to protect not only the agencies that failed but also America's relationship with the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. . . . He has done so by misclassifying information on national security data. While the information may be embarrassing or politically damaging, its revelation would not damage national security." Richard Shelby concluded independently that virtually all the censored pages were "being kept secret for reasons other than national security."

"It was," Graham wrote, "as if the president's loyalty lay more with Saudi Arabia than with America's safety." In Graham's view, Bush's role in suppressing important information about 9/11, along with other transgressions, should have led to his impeachment and removal from office.

Within weeks of his inauguration, in 2009, Bush's successor, Barack Obama, made a point of receiving relatives of those bereaved on 9/11. The widow of one of those who died at the World Trade Center, Kristen Breitweiser, has said that she brought the new president's attention to the infamous censored section of the Joint Inquiry report. Obama told her, she said afterward, that he was willing to get the suppressed material released. Two years later, the chapter remains classified—and the White House will not say why. "If the 28 pages were to be made public," said one of the officials who was privy to them before President Bush ordered their removal, "I have no question that the entire relationship with Saudi Arabia would change overnight."

Blame It on Iraq

The 9/11-commission report certainly blurred the truth about the Saudi role. By the time it was published, in July 2004, more than a year had passed since the invasion of Iraq, a country that—the report said—had nothing to do with 9/11.

In the 18 months before the invasion, however, the Bush administration had persistently seeded the notion that there was an Iraqi connection to 9/11. While never alleging a direct Iraqi role, President Bush had linked Saddam Hussein's name to that of Osama bin Laden. Vice President Cheney had gone further, suggesting repeatedly that there had been Iraqi involvement in the attacks.

Polls suggest that the publicity about Iraq's supposed involvement affected the degree to which the U.S. public came to view Iraq as an enemy deserving retribution. Before the invasion, a Pew Research poll found that 57 percent of those polled believed Hussein had helped the 9/11 terrorists. Forty-four percent of respondents to a Knight-Ridder poll had gained the impression that "most" or "some" of the hijackers had been Iraqi. In fact, none were. In the wake of the invasion, a Washington Post poll found that 69 percent of Americans believed it likely that Saddam Hussein had been personally involved in 9/11.

None of the speculative leads suggesting an Iraqi link to the attacks proved out. "We went back 10 years," said Michael Scheuer, who looked into the matter at the request of director Tenet. "We examined about 20,000 documents, probably something along the lines of 75,000 pages of information, and there was no connection between [al-Qaeda] and Saddam."
What About Pakistan?

In the years during which the conflict in Iraq had the world's attention, the real evidence that linked other nations to Osama bin Laden and 9/11 faded from the public consciousness. This was in part the fault of the 9/11 commission, which failed to highlight and fully detail the evidence. It was, ironically, a former deputy homeland-security adviser to President Bush, Richard Falkenrath, who loudly expressed that uncomfortable truth. The commission's report, Falkenrath wrote, had produced only superficial coverage of the fact that al-Qaeda was "led and financed largely by Saudis, with extensive support from Pakistani intelligence."

Pakistan has a strong Islamic-fundamentalist movement. It was, with Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, one of only three nations that recognized the Taliban. Osama bin Laden had operated there as early as 1979, with the blessing of Saudi intelligence, in the first phase of the struggle to oust the Soviets from neighboring Afghanistan. The contacts he made were durable.

What bin Laden himself had said about Pakistan two years before 9/11 seemed to speak volumes. "Pakistani people have great love for Islam," he observed in 1998 after the late-summer U.S. missile attack on his camps, in which seven Pakistanis were killed. "And they always have offered sacrifices for the cause of religion." Later, in another interview, he explained how he himself had managed to avoid the attack. "We found a sympathetic and generous people in Pakistan … receive[d] information from our beloved ones and helpers of jihad."

Pakistan sees Afghanistan as strategically crucial, not least on account of an issue of which many members of the public in the West have minimal knowledge or none at all. Pakistan and India have fought three wars in the past half-century over Kashmir, a large, disputed territory over which each nation has claims and which each partially controls, and where there is also a homegrown insurgency. Having leverage over Afghanistan, given its geographical position, enabled Pakistan to recruit Afghan and Arab volunteers to join the Kashmir insurgency—and tie down a large part of the Indian army.

The insurgents inserted into Kashmir have been by and large mujahideen, committed to a cause they see as holy. Lieutenant General Hamid Gul, who in 1989 headed the ISI—the Pakistani equivalent of the C.I.A.—himself saw the conflict as jihad. Bin Laden, for his part, made common cause with Gul and, in the years that followed, with like-minded figures in the ISI. Many ISI recruits for the fight in Kashmir were trained in bin Laden camps. He would still be saying, as late as 2000, “Whatever Pakistan does in the matter of Kashmir, we support it.”

So powerful was the ISI in Afghanistan, former U.S. special envoy Peter Tomsen told the 9/11 commission, that the Taliban “actually were the junior partners in an unholy alliance” of ISI, al-Qaeda, and the Taliban. As it grew in influence, the ISI liaised closely with Saudi intelligence, and the Saudis reportedly lined the pockets of senior Pakistani officers with cash. The ISI over the years achieved not only military muscle but massive political influence within Pakistan, so much so that some came to characterize it as “the most influential body in Pakistan,” a “shadow government.”

While no hard evidence would emerge that Pakistan had any foreknowledge of the 9/11 attacks, two days later Washington issued a blunt warning as it prepared to retaliate against the bin Laden organization and its hosts in Afghanistan. It was then—according to ISI director Mahmoud Ahmed, who was visiting Washington at the time—that U.S. deputy secretary of state Richard Armitage said the U.S. would bomb Pakistan “back to the Stone Age” should it fail to go along with American demands for assistance. (Armitage has denied having used that extreme language.)

The former C.I.A. station chief in Islamabad Robert Grenier recently confirmed that Pakistani cooperation against al-Qaeda did improve vastly after 9/11. The arrests of three of the best-known top al-Qaeda operatives—Abu Zubaydah, Ramzi Binalshibh, and Khalid Sheikh Mohammed—were, it seems, made by Pakistani intelligence agents and police, in some if not all cases working in collaboration with the C.I.A.

From the time America routed al-Qaeda, however, incoming information indicated that the ISI continued to remain in touch with bin Laden or was aware of his location. ISI officials, Peter Tomsen told the 9/11 commission, were “still visiting [bin Laden] as late as December 2001”—and continued to know his location thereafter. In 2007, Kathleen McFarland, a former senior Defense Department official, spoke of bin Laden’s presence in Pakistan as a fact. “I’m convinced,” military historian Stephen Tanner told CNN in 2010, “that he is protected by the ISI. I just think it’s impossible after all this time to not know where he is.”

Obama had vowed during his campaign for the presidency, “We will kill bin Laden. . . . That has to be our biggest national-security priority.” In office, he made no such public statements. The hunt for bin Laden, meanwhile, seemed to be getting nowhere—and not to be a high priority. Looking back, though, there was a trickle of fresh information that suggested otherwise.

General David Petraeus, commander of U.S. and NATO forces in Afghanistan, was asked on Meet the Press in 2010 whether it was now less necessary to capture bin Laden. “I think,” he replied, “capturing or killing Osama bin Laden is still a very, very important task for all of those who are engaged in counterterrorism around the world.”

For those who doubted that bin Laden was still alive, late fall 2010 brought two new bin Laden audio messages. There had been intercepts of al-Qaeda communications, U.S. officials told The New York Times, indicating that he still shaped strategy. Then, within weeks, CNN quoted a “senior NATO official” as saying bin Laden and his deputy, Ayman al-Zawahiri, were believed to be hiding not far from each other in northwestern Pakistan, and not “in a cave.” The same day, the New York Daily News cited a source with “access to all reporting on bin Laden” as having spoken of two “sightings considered credible” in recent years—even “a grainy photo of bin Laden inside a truck.”
The End of bin Laden

Then, at 11:35 p.m. on the night of Sunday, May 1, President Obama appeared on television screens across the globe to say: “Tonight I can report to the American people and to the world that the United States has conducted an operation that killed Osama bin Laden, the leader of al-Qaeda and a terrorist who’s responsible for the murder of thousands of innocent men, women, and children.”

Killed he was, and in Pakistan. It looked to many as though Pakistan had been knowingly harboring him. For the world’s most wanted terrorist had been living—by all accounts for years, comfortably housed and well protected—in not just any Pakistani city, but in the pleasant town of Abbottabad, where many serving and retired military officers live, and within shouting distance of the nation’s most prestigious military academy, the equivalent of America’s West Point. The ISI also has a presence there.

Officials in Washington were scathingly critical when these facts became public. The Pakistanis, C.I.A. director Leon Panetta reportedly told lawmakers, had been either “involved or incompetent.” The president’s counterterrorism adviser, John Brennan, thought it “inconceivable” that bin Laden had not had a “support system” in Abbottabad. On 60 Minutes, Obama himself speculated “whether there might have been some people inside of government, people outside of government [supporting bin Laden], and that’s something we have to investigate, and more importantly the Pakistani government has to investigate."

Bin Laden had been tracked to Abbottabad, U.S. sources later revealed, thanks to information on his use of couriers to hand-carry messages to his fellow terrorists. Unmentioned were facts about the link between Abbottabad and al-Qaeda that former president Pervez Musharraf had made public in his 2006 memoir. Pakistan's 2005 capture and transfer to U.S. custody of another very senior bin Laden aide—Khalid Sheikh Mohammed's successor, Abu Faraj al-Libbi—Musharraf had written, had been achieved after a prolonged pursuit by Pakistani investigators. In the course of the hunt, according to Musharraf, the investigators discovered that Libbi used no less than three safe houses—all in Abbottabad. Far from being a place where one would not expect to find a top terrorist hiding, it turns out, Abbottabad has a track record for being exactly that.

A week after the strike against bin Laden, the correspondent for The Guardian in Islamabad reported that a decade ago—after 9/11—President Bush struck a deal with Musharraf: should bin Laden be located inside Pakistan's borders, the U.S. would be permitted unilaterally to conduct a raid. "There was an agreement," a former senior U.S. official was quoted as saying, "that if we knew where Osama was, we were going to come and get him. The Pakistanis would put up a hue and cry, but they wouldn't stop us." Musharraf has denied that such a deal was made. According to The Guardian, however, an unnamed Pakistani official offered corroboration for the story. "As far as our American friends are concerned," he said, "they have just implemented the agreement."

We cannot yet know the full background to how the U.S. tracked down bin Laden. We do have a better sense, a decade on, as to whether powerful players in foreign nations had a hand in 9/11.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: STAGED OIL RIG DISASTER PROVES BIGGER THAN FIRST

Title: STAGED OIL RIG DISASTER PROVES BIGGER THAN FIRST Description: THOUGHT. POTENTIAL TO DESTROY OCEANS

craig-oxley - April 30, 2010 01:14 PM (GMT)

It would seem this current oil slick in the Gulf of Mexico is an engineered event once again by the Knights of Malta. This becomes more evident by the day as now we see what the agenda may be. We're hearing more and more nonsense about stopping oil drilling offshore. This is quite obvious a way to try and condition the people to accepting less oil in the future due to staged events. Seems they wish to lower the amount of oil to the top surface which would aid in the depopulation of the planet. Remember it is thanks to oil that lifespans dramatically increased. This will be yet another option from the Cliveden Set's, Club of Rome organisation of conspiring murderers. Below is a peoples vote provided by British Intelligences, Fox News testing their conditioning on the peoples to see how effective it has been. No doubt the Tavistock Institute will be keeping a close eye on the developments of the poll. If they don't get their wishes planted in your mind frames then the conditioning will be ramped up with more events and more mantras to suit. The other purpose of this type of thinking is of course to make the United States corporation dependent on foreign oil as we enter the inter-dependent Globalisation of the Earth during the era of the World Company Incorporated controlled by the Papal Nobility via the Equestrian Order of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem and their Knights of Malta and Opus Dei controlled financial system. Lets not forget that Rupert Murdoch is of course a Knight of Malta and their known as 'the greatest merchants on Earth'.

http://www.foxnews.com/opinion/2010/04/29/...shore-drilling/

craig-oxley - April 30, 2010 03:04 PM (GMT)

Please notice how this is a British Petroleum rig incident and of course will be tied to British Intelligence. It occured on the day of war being a Tuesday tied to the planet Mars. -Craig

Oil spill sparks new drilling ban

White House adviser David Axelrod tells ABC that all new drilling is on hold

Friday, 30 April 2010 15:29 UKE-mail this to a friend Printable version http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/americas/8654138.stm

The US administration has banned oil drilling in new areas of the US coast while the cause of the oil spill off Louisiana is investigated.

White House adviser David Axelrod told ABC TV they wanted to know exactly what led to last week's explosion on the BP-operated rig in the Gulf of Mexico.

Last month President Barack Obama eased a moratorium on new offshore drilling.

Up to 5,000 barrels of oil a day are thought to be spilling into the water, threatening US coastal areas.

The slick has begun to reach the Louisiana shore, and the US Navy has been sent to help avert an economic and environmental disaster.

'Mind-boggling'

Mr Axelrod announced the ban on drilling in new areas in an interview with ABC's Good Morning America programme on Friday.

He also defended the administration's response to the 20 April explosion that destroyed the Deepwater Horizon rig, saying "we had the coast guard in almost immediately".

MAJOR OIL SPILLS

April 2010: Blast at BP's Deepwater Horizon rig causes crude to spill at rate of up to 5,000 barrels (210,000 US gallons) a day
1991: 520m gallons deliberately released from Iraqi oil tankers to impede US invasion
1989: 11m gallons spilt into Alaska's Prince William Sound in the Exxon Valdez disaster
1983: 80m gallons split off Iran over months after a tanker collides with drilling platform
1979: 140m gallons leak over nine months after a well explosion off Mexico's coast
1979: 90m gallons leak from a Greek oil tanker after collision with another ship off Trinidad

The US government has designated the Gulf of Mexico oil spill as an "incident of national significance". This allows it to draw on resources from across the country.

The wetlands off the Louisiana coast sustain hundreds of wildlife species and a big seafood and fishing industry.

Governor Bobby Jindal has declared a state of emergency and asked for federal funds to deploy 6,000 National Guard soldiers to help with the clean-up.

The US Coast Guard said it had sent investigators to confirm whether crude oil had begun to wash up on parts of the Louisiana shoreline.

Cdr Mark McCadden, of the coast guard, told the BBC they were using all resources available.

"We're putting everything forth in plans for a worst-case scenario," he said.

"We can always ramp back on some of those resources, but right now the priority is to bring as many resources as are available to attack this spill and try to minimise the effects to the coast and to the public."

Two US Air Force planes have been sent to Mississippi in case they are needed to spray oil-dispersing chemicals over the slick.

David Kennedy of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration described the oil spill as a "very, very big thing".

The clean-up efforts could be "mind-boggling", he told the Associated Press news agency.

The Louisiana coastline, with its rich shrimp and oyster beds, is the most threatened by the spill.

There are also fears of severe damage to fisheries and wildlife in Mississippi, Alabama and Florida as oil continues to escape from the wreckage of the rig.

An emergency shrimping season was opened on Thursday to allow fishermen to bring in their catch before it was fouled by the advancing oil.

Navy vessels are helping to deploy booms to contain the spill.

'Very, very difficult'

President Obama has dispatched high-level administration officials, including Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano, to the area.

He said they would "ensure that BP and the entire US government is doing everything possible, not just to respond to this incident, but also to determine its cause".

Speaking at the White House, Mr Obama also said: "While BP is ultimately responsible for funding the cost of response and clean-up operations, my administration will continue to use every single available resource at our disposal, including potentially the Department of Defence, to address the incident."

Eleven workers are still missing, presumed dead, after the Deepwater Horizon rig exploded on 20 April.

BP's chief operating officer of exploration and production, Doug Suttles, said the company was using remotely operated vehicles (ROVs) to try to find out how much oil was leaking into the sea.

"This is very, very difficult to estimate," Mr Suttles told reporters.

"Down below the surface we actually can't meter this oil so we can just observe it... what our ROV pictures show to us on the sea floor hasn't changed since we first saw the leak... but what we can say based on what we're picking up on the surface it looks like it is more."

Mr Suttles put the oil leakage at between 1,000 and 5,000 barrels a day.

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 02:43 PM (GMT)

Oil Slick: Pentagon Approves Chemical Plan

Yesterday, 06:04 pm
http://uk.news.yahoo.com/5/20100430/twl-oi...al-3fd0ae9.html

The US Air Force has been given the go-ahead to dump chemicals on a giant oil spill that is threatening the Gulf Coast

The Pentagon said it had approved the operation to break up the slick using chemicals dropped by two C-130 Hercules cargo planes.

The planes are on standby and awaiting orders.

Each plane is capable of covering up to 250 acres in a single flight, and could fly three missions in a day.

Up to 5,000 barrels of oil a day are spewing into the Gulf of Mexico from a leaking well, which was ruptured after the Deepwater Horizon rig exploded and sank.

Experts warn that a major environmental disaster is looming.

A state of emergency was declared in Florida today and Louisiana this week after the slick began washing ashore.

Experts said it could be very difficult to clean up the slick from the fragile marshland at the edge of the Mississippi Delta.

"It is of grave concern," David Kennedy of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said.

"I am frightened. This is a very, very big thing. And the efforts that are going to be required to do anything about it, especially if it continues on, are just mind-boggling."

Sky's US correspondent Greg Milam said the latest efforts have involved rounding up some of the oil and lighting it with flares.

"The stakes could not be higher. In the past, burns like this have had some success, as it did off Canada 17 years ago," he said.

"Fumes are an obvious problem, but they may be the lesser of two evils."

However, the burn-off attempt in one of the thickest parts of the slick was suspended because of heavy winds.

President Barack Obama pledged to "use every single available resource" including the National Guard to help prevent an environmental disaster.

Members of his cabinet including his homeland security, environment and interior chiefs have been sent to conduct an aerial survey of the area off the Gulf Coast.

A White House official has also announced there would be no new offshore oil drilling until a Deepwater Horizon investigation was completed.

Senior adviser David Axelrod told broadcaster ABC: "No additional drilling has been authorised and none will until we find out what happened here and whether there was something unique and preventable."

Louisiana's Governor declared the state of emergency and warned the slick "threatens the state's natural resources".

Bobby Jindal asked the defence department for funds to deploy up to 6,000 troops to help with the clean-up.

But many of those who depend on the region's fisheries and nature reserves have already given up on efforts to stave off an environmental disaster.

"As it gets into the wildlife management area it is going to kill us," said Brent Roy, who charters fishing boats off the coast.

"It's the worst-case scenario for shrimpers, oyster harvesters, crabbers - all the commercial fisherman."

Mr Obama said BP, which leases the Deepwater Horizon, was ultimately responsible for the cost of the clean-up.

The company tried to use robotic submarines to cap the ruptured well on the seabed but this has also been unsuccessful.

Engineers are now building a giant dome that could be placed over the leaks to trap the oil, allowing it to be pumped up to container ships on the surface.

This operation is expected to take weeks.

Eleven workers are missing and presumed dead after the rig sank on April 22, two days after it exploded.

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 02:44 PM (GMT)

Levin: SWAT Team Response To Oil Spill Is Government Takeover Plot

Published on 04-30-2010 Email To Friend Print Version

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=s4DnU_8RhEg

[dohtml]<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/s4DnU_8RhEg&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 03:06 PM (GMT)

The claim in this attached email that the BP Gulf oil Rig was purposely destroyed may just be real and/or intentional, as it is British Petroleum (BP), an alien company that is involved..Did they have a purpose, is there a causus beli? Quite likely, as British Petroleum is a Rothschild company, a crowd of One Worlders (along with the Rockefellers) who have long sought to use Oil as the means, the commodity, for securing that world wide dominion over all companies and nations. This goal is the principle theme of the Babylonian Talmud of Judaism -- One world dominion under the aegis of the Jews. (Look it up for yourself)

Now what would the real purpose for blowing up this oil rig? Why now? We must recall that the current White House occupant has stated that permission is granted to drill in America's off-shore sites..Virginia, for instance.. Well, if more oil is found and in quantity, as is most likely, such finds would drive the price of oil downward and the Oil Barons would lose their historic control over pricing and availability. For it is they who limit production, control pricing and close refineries to aid in their control over this important commodity. So, it is a typical British approach to retaining control and dominion out of that little Jewish-owned Bankster's Inner-"City" located within London.So they create a massive diversion and limit the promotion of off-shore oil drilling until they can work their way into controlling it! Such tactics have been used before to influence political decisions, to limit oil production and new finds, and the history and status of another American oil site seems to confirm these methods by BP.

In Alaska, the US Oil Company, ARCO, first worked the oil sites there, doing the initial site work, setting up the pipelines and doing the additional searches for more oil in that region. When this was completed, ARCO, for some reason not ever explained to the American people, sold its oil rights in Alaska to British Petroleum. (Who have been criticized for how poorly they have maintained the pipeline and other infrastructure) It is they who have failed to continue the drilling in Alaska and it is they who have kept secret "other" massive oil finds (As reported by ARCO's Chaplain, Lindsey Williams) that exist off the coast of Alaska. Williams has stated that he was well aware of a reported discovery known as the Gull Island find, which is reported to be so large as to support America's oil needs for 200 years..Not only is the Gull Island find large, it was subsequently reported to him by one of ARCO's old senior officials that another Oil find, equal to the Gull Island find was discovered northwest of the Gull Island find. (Google Lindsey Williams for confirmation)

Now why have these secrets related to Oil been kept from the American Public? Well, obviously it is necessary to limit production and hide the details of oil discoveries so as to continue sitting in the "Cat-BIrd" seat of oil controls...as the Rockefeller/Rothschild crowd have done since oil was first discovered and found important, not just for Navies, but increasingly for other industrial and personal needs.
The best review of this issue of Oil was done by Dr. Emmanuel Josephson who wrote of the historic battles over control of the world's oil. (See "Rockefeller Internationalist: The Man Who Misrules The World." Chedney Press 1957)

So what in effect is going on, stems directly from the British Rothschild power over the economics and politics of the world, gained from their massive money supply and influence over those who are "elected" into office in America and other nations, especially in Europe. Why else would BP want to "own" the Alaskan oil.

Now, it may have become apparent to some of America's intelligence agencies that the Gulf oil rig may just have suffered from a purposeful sabotage, and it may also account for why the current Occupant sent American Swat teams to other oil rigs in the Gulf, and probably elsewhere....as the Rothschild/Rockefeller crowd may be flexing their muscles and showing this new president just exactly who is running the world.. Only this time, they may have stepped on themselves..The world is awakening to this deceit and who is behind it...

JRN

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 04:04 PM (GMT)

Folks remember that the Russian FSB are on U.S soil and working with Homeland Security. This isn't a shocker to deal with when we consider the close relationship of the KGB and the Deutsche Verteidigung Dienst. Theres also Germany and Russian foreign troops on U.S soil waiting for their orders coming from the United Nations for the coming out right takeover of the United States. The later masters of chemical gassing populaces. -Craig

Spetsnaz. The Story Behind the Soviet SAS (1987)

Suvorov Viktor *

Chapter 15.
Spetsnaz's First World War

I do not know how or when World War Three will start. I do not know exactly how the Soviet high command plans to make use of spetsnaz in that war: the first world war in which spetsnaz will be a major contributor. I do not wish to predict the future. In this chapter I shall describe how spetsnaz will be used at the beginning of that war as I imagine it. It is not my task to describe what will happen. But I can describe what might happen.
* * *
The last month of peace, as in other wars, has an almost palpable air of crisis about it. Incidents, accidents, small disasters add to the tension.

[clip]

In the North Sea the biggest of the British oil rigs tips over and sinks. The precise reason for this is not established, although experts believe that corrosion of main supports is the culprit.

[clip]

All these operations - because of course none of these events is an accident - and others like them are known officially in the GRU as the 'preparatory period', and unofficially as the 'overture'. The overture is a series of large and small operations the purpose of which is, before actual military operations begin, to weaken the enemy's morale, create an atmosphere of general suspicion, fear and uncertainty, and divert the attention of the enemy's armies and police forces to a huge number of different targets, each of which may be the object of the next attack.

[clip]

The number of scandalous affairs increases. The nations discover to their surprise that there are very few people to be trusted. The Soviet intelligence service has nothing to lose if the press gets hold of material showing that it tried to recruit a French general, without saying how the attempt ended. It has even less to lose on the eve of war. That is why the newspapers are full of demands for investigations and reports of resignations, dismissals and suicides. The best way of killing a general is to kill him with his own hands.

There is a marked increase in the strength of the peace movement. In many countries there are continual demands to make the country neutral and not to support American foreign policy, which has been discredited. At this point the 'grey terror' gathers scope and strength and in the last days of peace reaches its peak.

From the first moment of the first day of war the main forces of spetsnaz go into action. From then on the terror is conducted in the name of the Soviet Union and of the Communist leadership: 'red terror'.

[clip]

Spetsnaz detachment I-S-7 consisting of eighty-two men lands on the coast of Mexico, immediately commandeers private cars, and the next night, using their fire-power and new mobility, cross the United States border.

Small spetsnaz groups land and use routes and methods employed by illegal immigrants, while others make use of paths and methods used by drug dealers.

[clip]

QUOTE

These Russian special forces can specifically refer to any elite or special purpose units under subordination of the Federal Security Service (FSB) or Internal Troops of Russian Ministry of Internal Affairs, and the units controlled by the military intelligence service GRU.

Currently, the term is used as well to describe any special purpose units or task forces of other ministries (even the Emergency Situations Ministry special rescue unit) [1] Foreign special forces are also commonly referred to as Spetsnaz on Russian television, for example "American Spetsnaz." Spetsnaz specialists have trained the Republican Guard of Syria, Iraq and Iran and they have been involved in training other special forces units across the world.

Internal troop units of the Cheka were originally raised for internal use against counter-revolutionaries and other undesirables; the most acclaimed is the Vityaz (MVD). Today they carry the same role as gendarmerie or National Guard units in other countries.

In the Armed Forces, spetsnaz is a term mainly used in connection with GRU-controlled COMINT, ELINT and radio-surveillance units. Spetsnaz carry out reconnaissance and "social warfare" missions in "peacetime" as well as in war. The primary function of Spetsnaz troops in wartime was infiltration/insertion behind enemy lines (either in uniform or civilian clothing), usually well before hostilities were scheduled to begin and, once in place, to commit acts of sabotage (such as the destruction of vital NATO communications logistics centers) and the assassination of key government leaders and military officers. According to Vladimir Rezun, a GRU defector who used the pseudonym "Viktor Suvorov", there were 20 Spetsnaz brigades plus 41 separate companies. Thus, total strength of Spetsnaz forces was around 30,000 troops at the time, their numbers are unknown today.

QUOTE

[Widespread terrorist and sabotage operations in advance of World War III] are known officially in the GRU as the "preparatory period," and unofficially as the "overture." The overture is a series of large and small operations the purpose of which is, before actual military operations begin, to weaken the enemy's morale, create an atmosphere of suspicion, fear and uncertainty, and divert the attention of the enemy's armies and police forces to a huge number of different targets, each of which may be the object of the next attack.

The overture is carried out by agents of the secret services of the Soviet satellite countries and by mercenaries recruited by intermediaries. The principal method employed at this stage is "gray terror," that is, a kind of terror which is not conducted in the name of the Soviet Union. The Soviet secret services do not at this stage leave their visiting cards, or leave other people's cards. The terror is carried out in the name of already existing extremist groups not connected in any way with the Soviet Union, or in the name of fictitious organizations.

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 04:07 PM (GMT)

Others in recent past

Oil Rig Fire: West Atlas Platform Bursts Into Flames In Timor Sea Off Australian Coast

An oil rig has burst into flames off the coast of Australia sparking fears it will cause devastating environmental damage.

Relevance: 64 % Last modified: 2 Nov 2009

North Sea Oil Rig Evacuation: Heather Alpha Platform Spillage On Board North Of Shetland Islands

An offshore North Sea oil rig was been partially evacuated on Friday after reports of an oil leak on board.

Relevance: 63 % Last modified: 31 Oct 2008
UK Oil Rig Comes Adrift In North Sea

An oil rig with 75 people on board is adrift off the coast of Norway after it became separated from a tug boat in severe weather. The oil rig, Bredford Dolphin, which is managed by British company Dolphin Drilling, was being towed to Poland for upgrades when the line to the tug boat was lost.

Relevance: 63 % Last modified: 2 Nov 2006

QUOTE

These collapsed:

Alexander L. Kielland
In 1980, the semi-submersible accommodation rig Alexander L. Kielland capsized during a storm after a leg support brace failed. 123

Al Mariyah
Whilst skidding the rig cantilever, the jack-up Al Mariyah collapsed and lost its derrick onto the platform below. 4

Maersk Victory
A punch-through caused extensive damage to the Maersk Victory while working in Australian waters in 1996. 0

Ocean Prince
The UK-built semi-sub Ocean Prince, finder of the first UK offshore oil, broke up off England's east coast during a storm in 1967. 0

Parker 14-J Drilling Barge
Failure of the jacking mechanism caused the Parker rig to collapse in 2003. 0

Ranger I
After being jacked up on location in 1979, the rig Ranger I collapsed due to fatigue in the stern leg. 8

Sea Gem
One of the first drilling rigs in the North Sea, the Sea Gem collapsed in 1965 as a result of metal fatigue. 13

Transocean 3
A rare self-elevating semi-submersible, the Transocean III capsized and sank East of Orkney after a jackable leg broke away in 1974.

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 04:21 PM (GMT)

The Oil Mess

12 days into the oil rig 'accident' events continue to evolve and weather is slowing down efforts to contain things, we have two interesting items to report that are not in the MSM yet...OK, three then.

1. While there are many reports on the 'net that the rig disaster was an attack by a North Korean mini-sub, and other such fanciful things, we have heard that a supply ship arrived just before the explosions and it was reported to be 'manned by all new people, nobody aboard was from the 'usual supply crew'. This purported industry source continues: there were a total of 14 explosions and these could have been cutting charges.

Moreover, the shut off valve below the surface (5000 feet down) on the seabed is not longer controllable. Still, lots of disinfo and speculation scampering around the netosphere. While this is bad, it gets worse.

2. A reader who is an engineer of considerable experience says watch this one evolve carefully because it is destined to continue to grow and he shares this long (but worthy explanation why:

"Heard your mention of the oil disaster in the Gulf of Mexico this morning, and you (and most everyone else except maybe George Noory) are totally missing the boat on how big and bad of a disaster this is.

First fact, the original estimate was about 5,000 gallons of oil a day spilling into the ocean. Now they're saying 200,000 gallons a day. That's over a million gallons of crude oil a week!

I'm engineer with 25 years of experience. I've worked on some big projects with big machines. Maybe that's why this mess is so clear to me.

First, the BP platform was drilling for what they call deep oil. They go out where the ocean is about 5,000 feet deep and drill another 30,000 feet into the crust of the earth. This it right on the edge of what human technology can do. Well, this time they hit a pocket of oil at such high pressure that it burst all of their safety valves all the way up to the drilling rig and then caused the rig to explode and sink. Take a moment to grasp the import of that. The pressure behind this oil is so high that it destroyed the maximum effort of human science to contain it.

When the rig sank it flipped over and landed on top of the drill hole some 5,000 feet under the ocean.

Now they've got a hole in the ocean floor, 5,000 feet down with a wrecked oil drilling rig sitting on top of is spewing 200,000 barrels of oil a day into the ocean. Take a moment and consider that, will you!

First they have to get the oil rig off the hole to get at it in order to try to cap it. Do you know the level of effort it will take to move that wrecked oil rig, sitting under 5,000 feet of water? That operation alone would take years and hundreds of millions to accomplish. Then, how do you cap that hole in the muddy ocean floor? There just is no way. No way.

The only piece of human technology that might address this is a nuclear bomb. I'm not kidding. If they put a nuke down there in the right spot it might seal up the hole. Nothing short of that will work.

If we can't cap that hole that oil is going to destroy the oceans of the world. It only takes one quart of motor oil to make 250,000 gallons of ocean water toxic to wildlife. Are you starting to get the magnitude of this?

We're so used to our politicians creating false crises to forward their criminal agendas that we aren't recognizing that we're staring straight into possibly the greatest disaster mankind will ever see. Imagine what happens if that oil keeps flowing until it destroys all life in the oceans of this planet. Who knows how big of a reservoir of oil is down there.

Not to mention that the oceans are critical to maintaining the proper oxygen level in the atmosphere for human life.

We're humped. Unless God steps in and fixes this. No human can. You can be sure of that.

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 04:24 PM (GMT)

This has the potential making of the worst oil disaster in the United States and definately making the top 10 worst oil disasters of all time in notorious world record oil/ecological disasters. We will not know until the actual barrel per day figure is revealed (expect that by next week or even possibly never revealed to us) I put my money on the Prof. at Florida State University to be telling me a more accurate depiction of what is going on then the US Gov't. (His estimate of 25,000 barrels a day is his current estimate)This vein of oil that is spilling uncontrollably from the Earth can flow for years at this volume if not capped or sealed.If in 90 day's the attempt at capping this thing fails which in my estimate has less than a 50/50 chance of succeeding than what? Another 90 days? 120? 6 months? a year? 2 years? you get my point? It is a valve that cannot be turned off that easily. If this thing then ruptures and the pipe blows out, then there is no answer to the problem....

My neighbor works for Schlumberger and has been on this rig in the past he is a senior roughneck, been doing this for almost 30 years, we talk quite a lot and he is not feeling good about this at all. I can pick up on his mood. Having been involved with crude for that long you know what your dealing with. He just shakes his head sips his beer and basically say's god help us...

One final thing... For those who own pools,say a small one oh 10,000 gallons, for arguments sake take a gallon of Vavoline or Quaker State oil and drop it in your pool then turn on your pool filter let it run for 5 minutes...Got a mess? Yeah I thought so...

For the rest of us who love the Gulf Coast,Nature, and what this planet has to offer us in it's beauty and greatness... Go take your family out to dinner tonite and as long as you can afford it while prices are reasonable and it is available,have a large platter of Seafood, Shrimp and Crab and don't forget the grouper and Lobsta before it dissapears alltogether on the menu of your favorite seafood restaurant!!! God help us and bless us all!

-Anonymous

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 04:55 PM (GMT)

Remember how close Halliburton is to the Deutsch Verteidigung Dienst with ties to both Richard Cheney and George H.W Bush the later being a Knight of Malta. -Craig

Halliburton Snaps Up Boots & Coots

By TOM TAULLI
Posted 10:30 AM 04/12/10 Investing http://www.dailyfinance.com/story/investin...coots/19435689/

In 1978, Edward "Coots" Matthews and Asger "Boots" Hansen founded Boots & Coots (WEL). Both were veteran oil-well firefighters. In fact, they provided inspiration for a 1968 film called Hellfighters, starring John Wayne.

But the days of independence have come to an end for Boots & Coots as the company has agreed to sell out to Halliburton (HAL) for $240.4 million. Shareholders will get $1.73 in cash and $1.27 in Halliburton stock for every share of Boots & Coots.

The company certainly has a distinguished history. It has been critical in dealing with many well fires, including those from Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait. But given its relatively small size, Boots & Coots has been at a disadvantage. As a result, the stock price has been mostly lackluster over the years.

A Perilous Business

Boots & Coots has two core businesses. First, there is Pressure Control, which involves prevention and risk-control services for oil- and gas-well fires and blowouts. A key to this area was the acquisition of John Wright, which developed sophisticated technologies to measure well integrity.

Next, Boots & Coots has a Well Intervention division, which helps enhance production for oil and gas operators. This business is likely to benefit nicely from the trend toward unconventional resource plays (such as extracting energy from shale). Boots & Coots greatly expanded this division with the acquisitions of Oil States International and StassCo.

Despite all this, the company is still at the whim of volatile energy markets, as well as unpredictable government-owned oil companies. For example, last year Boots & Coots saw a 7% fall in revenues to $195.1 million, with net income down from $21.8 million to $6 million. Keep in mind that during this period, there was nearly a 50% drop in domestic rig counts.

But as part of Halliburton, Boots & Coots will have more leverage to expand its platform, especially in areas like Africa and even Southeast Asia, which should provide significant growth opportunities.

Feeling Left Out?

According to its latest earnings report, Halliburton is upbeat about the prospects for 2010. Actually, it looks like there will be a rebound in North America because of increased demand and rig counts. At the same time, it appears that Halliburton is gaining more market share from its struggling rivals.

But when it comes to M&A, Halliburton has been timid. Just look at Schlumberger (SLB), which recently agreed to shell out $11 billion for Smith International (SII) and $1.07 billion for Geoservices. Of course, there is also the $5.5 billion merger of Baker Hughes (BHI) and BJ Services (BJ).

So, will Halliburton try for a major deal, too? Perhaps. The company has $3.4 billion in the bank and easy access to financing. Yet, the oil services industry has undergone lots of consolidation, and few major targets are left. And a deal could ultimately suffer from antitrust pressure.

In other words, Halliburton may focus its dealmaking on small companies that fill out niches, like Boots & Coots.

QUOTE

Although no cause has been determined, oil services contractor Halliburton Inc. says it finished a cementing operation 20 hours before a Gulf of Mexico rig went up in flames.

Halliburton is named as a defendant in most of the more than two dozen lawsuits filed by Gulf Coast people and businesses claiming the oil spill could ruin them financially. In one lawsuit, two Louisiana shrimpers claim cementing contributed to the explosion.

Halliburton said Friday it had four workers stationed on the rig, performing several tasks, including cementing — a process of applying cement and water to a pipe used to prevent the wall of the hole from caving in during drilling.

According to a 2007 study by Minerals Management Service, cementing was a factor 18 of 39 rig blowouts in the gulf between 1992 and 2006.

http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?...L#ixzz0md6w6QKO

QUOTE

http://www.halliburtonwatch.org/about_hal/about.html

craig-oxley - May 1, 2010 05:36 PM (GMT)

Remember we believe that Sorcha Faal is none other than submariner, commander J. Forrest Sharpe of the Office of Naval Intelligence based in Virginia. -Craig

[dohtml] May 1, 2010<o:p></o:p>

US
Orders Blackout Over North Korean Torpedoing Of <st1:place
w:st="on">Gulf Of Mexico</st1:place> Oil Rig <span style='font-size:
20.0pt'><o:p></o:p>

By: <span style='font-size:14.0pt;

color:windowtext'>Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers <span style='font-size:
14.0pt;color:windowtext'><o:p></o:p>

A grim report circulating in the Kremlin today written by Russia's Northern Fleet is reporting that the United States has ordered a complete media blackout over North Korea's torpedoing of the giant Deepwater Horizon oil platform owned by the World's largest offshore drilling contractor Transocean that was built and financed by South Korea's Hyundai Heavy Industries Co. Ltd., that has caused great loss of life, untold billions in economic damage to the South Korean economy, and an environmental catastrophe to the United States.

Most important to understand about this latest attack by <st1:country-region w:st="on">North Korea</st1:country-region> against its South Korean enemy is that under the existing "laws of war" it was a permissible action as they remain in a state of war against each other due to <st1:place w:st="on"><st1:country-region w:st="on">South Korea</st1:country-region></st1:place>'s
refusal to sign the 1953 Armistice ending the Korean War.

To the attack itself, these reports continue, the North Korean "cargo vessel" Dai Hong Dan believed to be staffed by 17th Sniper Corps "suicide" troops left Cuba's Empresa Terminales Mambisas de La Habana (Port of Havana) on April 18th whereupon it "severely deviated" from its intended course for Venezuela's Puerto Cabello bringing it to within 209 kilometers (130 miles) of the Deepwater Horizon oil platform which was located 80 kilometers (50 miles) off the coast of the US State of Louisiana where it launched an SSC Sang-o Class Mini Submarine (Yugo class) estimated to have an operational range of 321 kilometers (200 miles).

On the night of April 20th the North Korean Mini Submarine manned by these "suicidal" 17th Sniper Corps soldiers attacked the Deepwater Horizon with what are believed to be 2 incendiary torpedoes causing a massive explosion and resulting in 11 workers on this giant oil rig being killed outright. Barely 48 hours later, on April 22nd , this North Korean Mini Submarine committed its final atrocity by exploding itself directly beneath the Deepwater Horizon causing this $1 Billion oil rig to sink beneath the seas and marking 2010's celebration of Earth Day with one of the largest environmental catastrophes our World has ever seen.

To the reason for <st1:country-region w:st="on">North Korea</st1:country-region> attacking the Deepwater Horizon, these reports say, was to present US President Obama with an "impossible dilemma" prior to the opening of the United Nations Review Conference of the Parties to the Treat on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) set to begin May 3rd in <st1:State w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">New York</st1:place></st1:State>.

This "impossible dilemma" facing Obama is indeed real as the decision he is faced with is either to allow the continuation of this massive oil leak catastrophe to continue for months, or immediately stop it by the only known and proven means possible, the detonation of a thermonuclear device.

Russian Navy atomic experts in these reports state that should Obama choose the "nuclear option" the most viable weapon at his disposal is the United States B83 (Mk-83) strategic thermonuclear bomb having a variable yield (Low Kiloton Range to 1,200 Kilotons) which with its 12 foot length and 18 inch diameter, and weighing just over 2,400 pounds, is readily able to be deployed and detonated by a remote controlled mini-sub.

Should Obama choose the "nuclear option" it appears that he would be supported by the International Court of Justice who on July 8, 1996 issued an advisory opinion on the use of nuclear weapons stating that they could not conclude definitively on these weapons use in "extreme circumstances" or "self defense".

On the other hand, if Obama chooses the "nuclear option" it would leave the UN's nuclear conference in shambles with every Nation in the World having oil rigs off their coasts demanding an equal right to atomic weapons to protect their environment from catastrophes too, including Iran.

To whatever decision Obama makes it remains a fact that with each passing hour this environmental catastrophe grows worse. And even though Obama has ordered military SWAT teams to protect other oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico from any further attack, and further ordered that all drilling in the Gulf of Mexico be immediately stopped, this massive oil spill has already reached the shores of America and with high waves and more bad weather forecast the likelihood of it being stopped from destroying thousands of miles of US coastland and wildlife appears unstoppable.

And not just to the environmental catastrophe that is unfolding the only devastation to be wrecked upon the United States and South Korea by this North Korean attack as the economic liabilities associated with this disaster are estimated by these Russian reports to be between $500 Billion to $1.5 Trillion, and which only a declaration of this disaster being an “act of war” would free some the World’s largest corporations from bankruptcy.

Important to note too in all of these events was that this was the second attack by North Korea on its South Korean enemy, and US ally, in a month as we had reported on in our March 28th report titled “Obama Orders ‘Immediate Stand-down’ After Deadly North Korean Attack” and which to date neither the Americans or South Korea have retaliated for and giving one senior North Korean party leader the courage to openly state that the North Korean military took “gratifying revenge” on South Korea.

And for those believing that things couldn’t get worse, they couldn’t be more mistaken as new reports coming from Japanese military sources are stating that North Korea is preparing for new launches of its 1,300 kilometer (807 miles) intermediate range ballistic “Rodong” missile which Russian Space Forces experts state is able to “deploy and detonate” an atomic electromagnetic pulse (EMP) device, and which if detonated high in the atmosphere could effectively destroy the American economy for years, if not decades, to come.   [/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 2, 2010 01:57 PM (GMT)

Second rig overturns in Gulf of Mexico

Fears that oil slick will get worse after coastguards said a second rig has overturned in the Gulf of Mexico.

Published: 10:00PM BST 30 Apr 2010
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...-of-Mexico.html

The rig overturned in inland waters near Morgan City off Louisiana on America's southern coast.

It will hamper efforts to clear up oil from a massive spill in the Gulf of Mexico which is starting to ooze ashore in the southeastern US, threatening birds and other wildlife along fragile islands and barrier marshes and putting one of the world's richest seafood grounds in peril.

Crews in boats were patrolling coastal marshes early Friday looking for areas where the oil has flowed in, the Coast Guard said. Storms loomed that could push tide waters higher than normal through the weekend, the National Weather Service warned.

A top adviser to President Barack Obama said Friday that no new oil drilling would be authorised until authorities learn what caused the explosion of the rig Deepwater Horizon.

David Axelrod told ABC television that "no additional drilling has been authorised and none will until we find out what has happened here." Obama recently lifted a drilling moratorium for many offshore areas, including the Atlantic and Gulf areas.

The leak from a blown-out well a mile underwater is five times bigger than first believed. Faint fingers of oily sheen were reaching the Mississippi River delta late Thursday, lapping the Louisiana shoreline in long, thin lines. Thicker oil was about five miles (eight kilometres) offshore. Officials have said they would do everything to keep the Mississippi River – the largest U.S. river, running up the country's middle – open to traffic.

The oil slick could become the nation's worst environmental disaster in decades, threatening to eclipse even the Exxon Valdez in scope. It imperils hundreds of species of fish, birds and other wildlife along the Gulf Coast, one of the world's richest seafood grounds, teeming with shrimp, oysters and other marine life.

"It is of grave concern," David Kennedy of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, told The Associated Press about the spill. "I am frightened. This is a very, very big thing. And the efforts that are going to be required to do anything about it, especially if it continues on, are just mind-boggling."

Oil clumps seabirds' feathers, leaving them without insulation – and when they preen, they swallow it. Prolonged contact with the skin can cause burns, said Nils Warnock, a spill recovery supervisor with the California Oiled Wildlife Care Network at the University of California-Davis. Oil swallowed by animals can cause anaemia, haemorrhaging and other problems, said Jay Holcomb, executive director of the International Bird Rescue Research Center in California.

The spewing oil – about 210,000 gallons (795,000 litres) a day – comes from a well drilled by the rig Deepwater Horizon, which exploded in flames April 20 and sank two days later. BP was operating the rig that was owned by Transocean Ltd. The Coast Guard is working with BP to deploy floating booms, skimmers and chemical dispersants, and set controlled fires to burn the oil off the water's surface.

Protective boom has been set out on Breton Island, where colonial species such as pelicans, gulls and skimmers nest, and at the sandy tips of the passes from the Mississippi River's birdfoot delta, said Robert Love, a state wildlife official.

craig-oxley - May 2, 2010 02:54 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

May 1 2010, 05:36 PM:

Remember how close Halliburton is to the Deutsch Verteidigung Dienst with ties to both Richard Cheney and George H.W Bush the later being a Knight of Malta. -Craig

THE GULF OF MEXICO OIL PLATFORM EXPLOSION: CEMENT CASING THAT BLEW WAS INSTALLED BY HALLIBURTON : MORE U.S./DVD SABOTAGE AGAINST THE BRITISH?

By Christopher Story
MAY 2 2010
http://worldreports.org/news/288_endemic_c...and_halliburton

Just as our suspicions from the outset over the Polish air catastrophe at Smolensk proved to be justified, so do we and many others smell a giant rat concerning the explosion and fire at the BP oil platform in the Gulf of Mexico. And the face of the rat bears an uncanny resemblance to the ugly physiognomy of George Bush Sr.

For starters, the cement casing that blew up was installed by the corrupt Cheney-CIA operation called Halliburton. Apparently this is the second time in a year that a Halliburton casing has failed catastrophically on an oil rig.

•

Before we go any further, please note that we don't deny that alarmist reports about the oil rig explosion may or may not have substance: we don't know. We are alluding here specifically and exclusively to the Halliburton casing, which, as indicated, is the second such casing to have failed catastrophically in the space of a year.

It may be recalled from our earlier coverage that Halliburton operates a huge parasitical buying and ordering department within the Central Intelligence Agency and a parallel parasitical department inside the Pentagon, and that both these entities scam the opposite host on a routine basis, at the expense of the US taxpayer. Whether this unbelievable duplicated CIA scandal was investigated and wound up after we and others exposed it [see report dated 26th May 2008, excerpted below: ARCHIVE], we don't know. What we do recall is it became the subject of a Grand Jury investigation.

Horror stories associated with this colossal corruption op. included the faulty Halliburton gun manufactured in Saudi Arabia that routinely exploded and killed the gunner, which Halliburton continued selling long after the accidents in question (plus the despicably amoral cover-up of the reason for the gun operators' deaths); and the notorious delivery of 1,000 toasters which could be bought for $19.99 at any hardware store, but which Halliburton invoiced to the Pentagon for $1,891 a piece, on the spurious pretext that they were manufactured from a special metal.

Now the oil rig that exploded in the Gulf of Mexico at 10:pm CST on 20th April 2010, was 'Deepwater Horizon' owned by Transocean Limited, based in Zug, Switzerland, with its principal office located in HOUSTON, Texas, and other offices in Zug and Vernier, Switzerland, and in George Town, Cayman Islands. Zug is where Marc Rich, real name HANS BRAND, the long-range Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst (DVD) operative and East-West intermediary, is based.

The explosion occurred on the very same day that Transocean shares started trading in Europe, as is confirmed by the following Press Release dated 20th April 2010:

http://www.deepwater.com/fw/main/News-748....irol-news&nyo=0

'ZUG, SWITZERLAND, Apr 20, 2010 (MARKETWIRE via COMTEX) -- Transocean Ltd. (NYSE: RIG) (SIX: RIGN), the world's largest offshore drilling contractor, announced that its shares will begin trading on SIX Swiss Exchange ("SIX") today under the symbol (RIGN). Transocean's shares also trade on the New York Stock Exchange under the symbol (RIG)'.

Following this sabotage, Barack Obama reversed course on offshore drilling, BARELY THREE WEEKS after he had publicly announced a revised domestic energy policy lifting the longstanding moratorium on certain offshore drilling. Specifically, on 30th April 2010, the controlled US 'State News Agency' Associated Press reported:

'A top adviser to President Barack Obama said Friday that no new oil drilling would be authorized until authorities learn what caused the explosion of the rig Deepwater Horizon. David Axelrod told ABC's 'Good Morning America' that 'no additional drilling has been authorized and none will until we find out what has happened here'. Obama recently lifted a drilling moratorium for many offshore areas, including the Atlantic and Gulf areas'.

'The oil slick could become the nation's worst environmental disaster in decades, threatening even the Exxon Valdez in scope'.

According to Reuters [25th April 2010]:

'Swiss-based Transocean Ltd.'s Deepwater Horizon sank on Thursday, two days after it exploded and caught fire while finishing a well for BP Plc., 42 miles off the Louisiana coast.

Eleven workers from the rig are missing and presumed dead in what is the worst oil rig disaster in almost a decade. The Coast Guard on Friday suspended a search for the workers.

London-based BP, which is financially responsible for the cleanup, has deployed an armada of ships and aircraft to contain the oil slick.

The explosion came almost three weeks after President Barack Obama unveiled plans for a limited expansion of US offshore oil and gas drilling.... The explosion occurred as the rig was capping a discovery well pending production, company officials said. Some 115 of the 126 workers on board at the time of the explosion were rescued'.

•
HOWEVER:

•
The 'Deepwater Horizon' operation received a safety award in 2009.

•
Has British Petroleum at last realised that it is just as hazardous to do business adjacent to US waters as it is to do business in the Soviet Union?

If BP had had the wit to subscribe to Soviet Analyst years ago, we could have informed them that a primary purpose, from the Soviet perspective, of enticing foreign oil corporations into the 'former' USSR was to procure the necessary transfer of technology into Soviet hands, before the GRU-KGB-controlled 'oligarchs' would squeeze the Western operators out.

•
The Americans similarly use sabotage to destabilise the foreign competition.

•
As you can see, there is more than a passing indication that this sabotage may be a desperate Bush Crime Syndicate-related (i.e., DVD) operation, with the non-coincidental 'happy' outcome that British Petroleum, sabotaged again, bleeds financially.

•
In other words, yet another typically hardnosed US kick in the teeth for the Brits, not unassociated, we suspect, with concurrent forceful financial developments in the background.

EXPOSURE OF HALLIBURTON'S SCAMMING OPERATIONS: 26 MAY 2008
The following description of the pit of corrupt degradation known as Halliburton is excerpted from our report dated 28th May 2008 [ARCHIVE]. It reflects the detailed inside knowledge of a fearless and serious-minded whistleblower. [Note: The narrative as partially reproduced here starts 'out of context'. However you can pick up such context as is necessary to be in a position to comprehend the cess-pit of degradation that is being exposed, as you read into the excerpt]:

THE HALLIBURTON DRUG THUG AND THE STOLEN FEDERAL SALARIES SCAM
A former top CIA aide to Tenet and 30-year CIA veteran now reveals the criminal background of 'HallCIA', the thug who yanked the officer’s phone from the wall, ransacked the CIA operative’s office, had the officer incarcerated in Halliburton’s own cell in the basement of CIA headquarters and on a separate occasion punched holes in the officer's office wall, displayed episodes of extreme violence and was observed by many to be high on drugs. He was also a murderer....

This was the criminal whom Cheney asserted to be a friend who could never be arrested. This description leads into a summary of another scam, whereby multiple salaries are paid into corrupt Halliburton employees' secret Swiss bank accounts:

'HallCIA' and the Head Programmer were moved back to Halliburton's main office, just like the priests sexually abusing children are moved to a different parish.

They were never prosecuted...

[Dressed in FBI uniform provided by Halliburton, the operative is engaged in an FBI action to arrest this Halliburton thug], He was arrested for FIRST DEGREE MURDER OF AN FBI OFFICER. I had proof that the FBI officer that he had murdered was a bona fide one with proper papers and vetting in the FBI's personnel archives. The FBI had fingerprint and DNA evidence to prove that the Halliburton programmer was the murderer.

They even had a trial and a conviction of the man for that murder.

He had feigned a fainting episode right before the reading of the sentence and been taken to a hospital. He then assaulted the hospital guard inside his room and left him unconscious in his bed. Then he impersonated the guard using his uniform. He later went to a lawyer who put in a motion to declare the trial a mistrial on the grounds of a technicality: the defendant had not been present at the reading of the sentence. The fact that the criminal had committed a second nearly deadly assault the same day in apparent good health, was omitted from that motion.

The FBI-clandestine CIA raid that I organized was on the private flat of 'HallCIA'. It was not at his house where he lived with a prostitute whom he pimped, according to a CIA file. He did not keep his contraband items there as there were too many unsavory people coming through his house.

WHAT THE FBI FOUND IN THE CIA-HALLIBURTON DRUG THUG'S APARTMENT
At the flat the FBI confiscated drugs in pusher quantities and also illegal weapons, including some unregistered machine guns, explosives and hand-held artillery that could blow big holes through a wall for illegal entry. He had one bedroom devoted just to weapons, with shelves devoted to about half-kilo packages of drugs. It was equipped with a padlock. CIA top secret documents were strewn all over the bed, dresser and floor of the master bedroom.

It looked like a hurricane had hit the bedroom even before we arrived. The padlock was broken on the door to the weapons and drug room and the door was open when we arrived. But all the drugs were still neatly on the shelves. The flat may have been raided by Russian intelligence before we arrived, leaving the CIA documents behind as cover-up after copying them.

The FBI collected fingerprints and I collected the CIA documents. After the raid I returned to the FBI station and filled in the appropriate forms to write a FBI report up on the raid. As I was doing so, the two FBI officers who I had spoken with two days before walked by the desk I was using. They did a double take seeing me in the FBI uniform.... I told them that I had just tested FBI vetting and security procedures for a report I was writing for the CIA. I also explained to them that I had just successfully impersonated an FBI official to the extent of going on a raid with them, and not one had yet asked for my name or run it through a background check. I showed them the CIA top-secret documents the raid had netted and they laughed at the ruse I had played on the FBI.

They were not laughing, however, when I explained how I had gotten that FBI uniform and signed the papers. They checked on their computers; I was not yet registered on the records of the FBI.

I asked them to arrest all of the appropriate Halliburton people involved in that scam. They called the Director of the FBI and I also spoke to him. He refused to authorize the arrests.

He told me: 'Write up your report and let me read it first'. I offered to drive over immediately with the evidence. He refused to make any time to see me. I immediately faxed him a short report and enough evidence to warrant the arrests. Nothing happened.

MULTIPLE SALARIES PAID INTO SWISS BANK ACCOUNTS
But the next day when the local FBI checked my name again, they called me to let me know that I was officially part of the FBI now per their computer. I promptly sent in a full report to the FBI, the CIA, and the Pentagon on this scam to sign up Halliburton employees as their officers and have the US taxpayer pay their salaries. Just like Halliburton over-billed, some Halliburton employees were collecting THREE US Government salaries; one from the Pentagon, one from the FBI, and one from the CIA. I wrote in my report that I had signed up in all three places via Halliburton's scam to see how long it would be before those scams were stopped.

I put on the three forms, separate Swiss bank accounts. The point was to use the accounts as evidence of Halliburton corruption when those cases came to trial; I have not touched a cent of that money. The Directors of the FBI, the CIA, and the Chief of the JCS that I sent those reports to did not implement my list of recommendations; one of them was to shut down all of those public salaries going to Halliburton employees. At least, they had not been implemented as of about Summer 2004 when I last checked those accounts.

Another recommendation was to make sure that everyone in those agencies is properly vetted and drug tested as per that agency's usual security measures. Because I was concerned that my clear recommendations would not be acted upon, I despatched copies of those letters, the forms that I had signed, and the numbers of the Swiss bank accounts to the GAO. In my covering letter to the GAO I told them that I had given them the authority to check the balances in those accounts by written authorization to the Swiss bank.

I had hoped that seeing US taxpayer's money streaming into those accounts would give them an incentive to prosecute those cases promptly. Since the banks were not in the United States, I doubt that coercion applied to the bankers will erase those accounts, but I could be wrong. Since I had long been a covert CIA person, those communications with officials and the banks were under aliases. The GAO however has all of the proper information to check those accounts again and to prosecute these cases. I myself no longer remember any of the aliases and account numbers, so I couldn't access that money even if I wanted to. I never intended to use that money at all, so I did not record those aliases and numbers into my personal effects.

In 2004 when I checked the accounts, I did so from within the CIA by pulling up the report that I had written to the DCI. I have no way to check those accounts now so I do not know whether that scam, as evidenced by a single person's accounts, has been stopped. When I checked in 2004, two years had already passed. The US taxpayer had paid [as follows]: via the CIA, about $80,000.00 each year, for a total of about $160,000.00; via the FBI, about $50,000.00 each year, for a total of $100,000.00; and via the Pentagon, about $80,000.00 each year for a total of about $160,000.00, or roughly $420,000.00 total into those three Swiss accounts...

I also checked on whether Halliburton continued paying those employees if it signed them up for a Federal salary. The answer was no, except for rare exceptions. 'HallCIA' had continued receiving a Halliburton salary while getting one at the CIA, but the Head Programmer had not.

When I checked in 2004 the number of Halliburton employees getting a CIA salary was over 200, the number receiving an FBI salary was over 400, and the number of Halliburton employees receiving a Pentagon salary, was over 300. Suppose that the total for that is about 1,000 salaries each at, say, $50,000 a year. That would mean that the US taxpayer was being bilked (by Cheney) of $50 million a year of fraudulent salaries. Over the eight years that this Cheney has been in the Vice President's office, that could easily add up to $400 million in savings for Halliburton in not having had to to pay salaries. No wonder it was so easy to get that FBI uniform and salary sent out to me by talking to a Halliburton VP. Other Halliburton programmers had complained to me that they took a 'cut in pay' to work at the CIA location. They said that 'the takings are good', and 'Halliburton fences the items for us in a 50-50 split'.

HALLIBURTON'S THIEVES INSIDE THE CIA AND THE INEVITABLE CONSEQEUENCES
When I heard that Halliburton's people were stealing from inside the halls of the CIA, loud alarm bells went off inside my head. The items inside the CIA which were easiest to carry out were of course its documents.

And any computer that one stole inside the CIA was likely to have top-secret information on it, in spades. It was a counterintelligence person's nightmare, and now it was mine. The fact that the Head of the Halliburton section offices at the CIA had just sold the CIA's communication satellite encryption security codes to Moscow burned in my mind.

The Russians had paid him $20,000 for that betrayal.

He had no clue as to their black market value. It made me worry that the Russians and the Chinese could buy every secret inside the CIA for a price that they could afford. More than one Halliburton person inside the CIA had admitted to me that they were stealing to make up for their cut in pay. Halliburton had switched them to Federal salaries, making the CIA pick up the tab [see above].

One Halliburton person at the CIA had told me that they were all stealing enough to make up for that cut in pay. [They were ONLY in it for the money: taking their cue from Cheney and Bush: Ed].

Therefore, the first thing I did was to find out what those 40-odd people used to earn at Halliburton. I had the CIA's accounting office print out for me what the CIA was now paying them. My mouth then dropped open in shock. Each one of them would have to steal over $10,000 worth of CIA secrets or goods a year to break even. In some cases the cut in pay was much higher. One man took a $50,000 a year cut in pay when he switched to the Federal salary. At the average $23,000 cut in pay, the 40 workers together had sustained a $920,000 cut in pay. I had been told that Halliburton was fencing the goods in a 50%-50% split. So, about 2 million dollars' worth of good at black market prices would be stolen from the CIA, if they actually made up their lost salaries stealing.

[There followed a summary of the notorious Aldrich Ames, Clyde Conrad, Larry Wu-Tai Chin, John Anthony Walker, and Robert Hanssen espionage cases, omitted here]

On February 22, 1994, Ames and his wife were formally charged by the United States Department of Justice with spying for the Soviet Union and Russia. Mr Ames could have faced the death penalty, since his betrayal had resulted in CIA 'assets' being killed. However, he received a sentence of life imprisonment, and his wife received only a five-year prison sentence for her conspiracy to commit espionage and tax evasion as part of a plea bargain by Ames.

TENET AND CHENEY REFUSED TO ADDRESS THESE ISSUES
I walked down to the office a very high-ranking CIA analyst, about third in the hierarchy in that department, a man I trusted. People advance inside the CIA by one of two means normally, being very good at what they do or being very good at lying to please those above them. The heads of each section were often in the latter category, as a general rule. I asked him how many secrets the Russians could buy for $2 million a year, if they had 40 moles able to walk the halls of the CIA. In the posing of the question I explained that the hypothetical moles would be assumed to be 'efficient' criminals without formal espionage training. I asked him what effect that would have on national security. He asked me if this was a conversational gambit or a request for a formal report to answer my question. I thought about it a moment and then said the latter.

That meant that I had to go get a signature on a form. By submitting to Mr Tenet new requests for 10 separate reports on a wide variety of important topics, I quickly brought the analyst the signed form that he needed. He whistled in surprise when he reviewed the assignment given to him there in black and white. Then he asked me 'Is this about the Privatized Employees' invasion of the CIA?' I said yes. He said: 'I have been urging Tenet to let us study that risk for months. No go. How did you get this when I couldn't?'

I explained to him my method and also that the Head of the Halliburton group had just sold the CIA's Communication Satellite Encryption Security Codes to the Russians.

He hadn't heard that [because] Tenet had put a lid on it even within the CIA. I promised to show him the proof. I came back and gave him and a few of his top staff an hour long briefing on what I had learned. One man was actually in tears as I finished.

Another said: 'This marks the end of US national security'. Another said, 'No. US honor died already and no memo was sent announcing its funeral'.

I asked them what information they needed to make a proper assessment. They said that it would help them if I could find out how much the 40 people were actually making off their thefts inside the CIA, and a list of what they were stealing. I came back the next day with the list of how much each one had been paid by Halliburton in 'bonuses', which was the code word for fenced items, and what each 'bonus' was for. That list of what each bonus was for was like what the programmers really did in morphing an appliance rack into a bread slice rack. It was not a specifically accurate description but it related to the item in a fairly straightforward way.

CHENEY WAS INFORMED IN A RECORDED PHONE CALL
I showed the list to Tenet and tried to brief him on how dangerous it was.

He did not want to hear. Tenet had not followed my recommendations, which would have stopped the thefts. And he did not want further reasons why he should do so... I called Cheney and begged him to send a memo over to Halliburton setting up a program to [address these extremely serious issues]. I even faxed him a memo so that all he had to do was sign to get that to happen. He did not deny that Halliburton was selling items stolen from the CIA. He did not deny that he had the power to impose the necessary changes at Halliburton by sending the memo. He did not deny that he had the power to order Tenet to institute effective measures to stem the tide of the thefts.

As the phone recording of that call shows, I kept briefing him on the problem while he kept saying that he refused to discuss the matter with me.

I sent a copy of that call over to the GAO because it showed that I had in fact managed to inform Vice President Cheney of the seriousness of the thefts. In that call [to Cheney] I cited that the likely consequences were the shredding of US national security and the wholly unnecessary deaths of its covert personnel. I also set up a surveillance operation behind Cheney's and Tenet's back to actually inspect each item that Halliburton fenced from the CIA.

COUNTERINTELLIGENCE OPERATION AGAINST TENET AND CHENEY BACKFIRES
That is, I had an ex-CIA operative with counter-intelligence experience whom I trusted, apply to Halliburton. I instructed him to offer to 'help them fence their CIA goods and get higher prices for them'. Call him Alan for short. A Halliburton VP, the same one who sent me the FBI uniform, sent me a 'thank you' letter for referring Alan to them. He no doubt believed that I was corrupt and making a kickback. It was to my advantage to foster that image of myself without it actually being true. In my position it was best if everything I did could be interpreted as corrupt at the same time that I was collecting the evidence for prosecution.

That operative, Alan, ended up terribly overworked in no time. The analysts and I had been off by a factor of THREE in the amount that was routinely being stolen by Halliburton from the CIA.

We did not find that out until the Halliburton people realized that they could get more money by making sure that Alan sold the goods for them. That meant Alan had to sell them at on average much higher than twice what they could get for them themselves, even by selling directly to the Russians. That was not as hard as it would have been with regular stolen goods; the Halliburton people did not know their true worth on the black market. Alan could make a better profit selling a document to a rich government such as France, which would have been very bad in the hands of the poorer Chinese or Russians. Before that, Halliburton had sold mainly to the Russians. [Editor: Further allegation that Halliburton has sold CIA secrets to the Russians].

The French were very helpful to us in keeping many things out of the hands of the Russians. They had wised up quickly as to our problem and how to assist us. The United Kingdom was less helpful because they could get that same information by merely filing a request for it.

The French were not as tight into the CIA, though they were still US allies. We needed top dollar for the stolen items because we had to make up for the fact that we were not selling off all of the items due to their national security risk. We were hiding the fact from Halliburton's management that we were really sending the items back to the CIA.

OVER 50% OF HALLIBURTON SALES BREACHED NATIONAL SECURITY
We could not send computers back, as it was impossible to ensure that the Russians etc. had not altered them in the meantime. Those had to be scrubbed clean using a special erasing procedure. But it was possible to send back documents. We had initially thought that it would be only 10% of the items that had to be vetoed on national security grounds. But as we got a better understanding of what was being sold via Halliburton, that figure went up to a little over 50%

[Editor: More damning allegations against Halliburton as a continuing threat to US national security, for which Cheney should be impeached, along with Bush Jr., who authorised this corruption via his Executive Orders].

[The high-level operative and source for this information left the CIA for Canada in 2002].

Subsequently, operatives working inside the CIA to address this catastrophic situation] demanded that Tenet should lock the unvetted people out of the building.

In the process of showing how serious the security violations were, they revealed the oversight (or counterintelligence) operation against Tenet and Cheney themselves. That ended up revealing that they were recovering about 50% of the items and about 30% of their black market worth. Tenet informed Cheney of that fact, and Cheney ordered an end to the oversight.

I later sent copies of the relevant telephone calls revealing all this to the GAO. The Russians and Mossad had a complete set of White House calls, including of [calls concerning what was] for sale. The CIA also had a fairly complete set. When I was forced back into the CIA in October 2003 from Canada with threats and worse, I heard about the troubles that the oversight people had suffered over the intervening 16 months. They had been unable to perform oversight for four months.

During that time Halliburton had fired their Private Eyes, the ex-CIA operatives that they had there. Instead, Halliburton had hired its own experts on Black Market Intelligence Pricing and had sold all of the stolen items without regard to US national security. I then despatched over to the GAO about a dozen phone conversations by Halliburton's high officials demonstrating their reckless disregard for national security and the lives of covert operatives. [Therefore, this information is all available for the Congressional Committee to access immediately: Editor].

But it now gets much, much worse....

THEFTS OF CIA COMPUTERS LEADING TO AN UNIMAGINABLE CATASTROPHE
The next part of the narrative briefing leads into a description of the most ghastly consequences, for which Vice President Richard B. Cheney is clearly indicated by the narrative to be responsible, given his Luciferian greed for 'profit' which of course is on its own an impeachable offence:

It was only after a [hitherto unreported: Ed.] colossal national security catastrophe that the [CIA operatives who had carried on trying to get results] managed to get Tenet to insist that Halliburton rehire their ex-CIA 'Private Eyes'. The oversight people briefed me on [the catastrophe] as soon as I returned. The first day I came back to the CIA's Headquarters, they kept me up all night telling me about it. I cried many times that night for my country and for the harm that had been done to her. I cried for the people who had died so brutally and unnecessarily.

Many, many more intelligence professionals lost their lives as a consequence of Cheney's selling secrets than lost their lives because of the traitorous behaviour of Aldrich Ames. Ames is serving a life sentence for what he did. Cheney's Halliburton people were still working at the CIA and were still stealing there because of Cheney's protection of them. They were still walking inside the halls of the CIA every day and going into its offices to 'have a chat'.

It was such an egregious violation of national security that some oversight members quit the CIA. Others said to me: 'Why should we look like criminals who are enabling this theft'? 'We are not making a cent off it... Yet we have been threatened by Tenet that we will be put in prison because we know of the thefts and hence must be guilty of them... We are being treated like criminals because we are trying to stop the most dangerous of these sales'.

[Editor: Gross abuse by Tenet of the Misprision of Felony Statute].

I later collected a memo from Cheney to Tenet which stated that the oversight of the sales by the CIA was cutting into profits and had to be stopped. It recommended imprisoning all of those in the CIA suspected of being a bottleneck in [the raking in of] US corporate profits. Tenet prohibited the oversight within a week of receiving that memo. The GAO has a copy of the memo and also of the memo that Tenet sent out threatening imprisonment if anyone was discovered to have decreased US corporate profits. They also have the later memorandum that Mr Tenet sent, which threatened imprisonment if anyone knew about stolen goods and did not report it to the designated official.

Those who had reported thefts to that official had been fired soon afterwards.

Thieves do not report stolen goods; people with integrity do, until it is clear that it is pointless and dangerous to do so. I also sent the GAO the document suggesting this ruse of a new designated official as a way to stop the oversight. That designated official never prosecuted a case of theft against a Halliburton person. He came from Halliburton! He had in fact been recommended for the job by 'HallCIA' to Cheney, who then recommended him for the job. I sent over to the GAO a tape of the phone conversation between 'HallCIA' and Cheney. On it. 'HallCIA' says that the man that he is recommending will stop the losses of revenues 'from our CIA sales'.

HALLIBURTON CROOK BRAGGED ABOUT LUCRATIVE SALE TO THE RUSSIANS
Later he bragged about one of his sales to Russia of 'one of our CIA products', and says, 'too bad we can't make more of them'. It was clear that he was referring to the stolen goods that Halliburton stole from the CIA, not products that Halliburton made and sold to the CIA. The designated official was not vetted by the CIA. He was stealing from the CIA while working out of the Halliburton offices. I sent to the GAO a signed statement from a CIA security guard who caught him carrying a computer of the CIA's out of the front door. That man could have employed the back door out of their offices manned only by Halliburton's guards. He was so used to stealing from the CIA and getting away with it that he forgot, and used the front door.

That is what he told the guard: 'I forgot... Give me a hand and we'll take it out the back door'. The Halliburton guards did just that. They helped the Halliburton thieves load CIA computers into their private cars. I sent the GAO several CIA security camera clips of that happening.

The CIA had massive amounts of security camera data showing that [activity]. The CIA security people were afraid to report the thefts that they saw, because they did not want to lose their jobs without it even cleaning up the problem. By the time I returned to the CIA, 16 people had lost their jobs due to reporting thefts to the designated official that Tenet's memo had directed them to use. No one at the CIA knew about the item sold during the blackout that caused the national security catastrophe, until after the catastrophe happened. [Details of this national security catastrophe, unfortunately containing graphic and disturbing language, now follow].

THE CATASTROPHE, COURTESY OF THE CORRUPTION OF TENET, CHENEY AND BUSH
The first sign of that Catastrophe [with a capital C: Ed] was a dead body lying on a sidewalk in a foreign city. The body had been the teenage daughter of a CIA officer. The body was no longer recognizable, even by her father. The body was identified definitively by dental records. Her face had been peeled off in small strips. The forensic evidence revealed that she was still able to bleed and struggle during most of the time that was done to her.

The next sign of the Catastrophe was another unrecognizable body. This time, of a 6-year-old boy of a US diplomat. The injuries were the same. The CIA concluded that the murderer was the same man. The next sign was an 11-year-old child of a US school teacher in Africa. She was divorced and her husband had once worked for the US State Department. Perhaps he had been CIA under diplomatic cover, but the CIA refused to comment.

I saw the photographs of the dead bodies. They were too horrible for words. Could it be that I was recalled to the CIA against my will in order to get my special operational skills to track down the villain? The day I got back to the CIA, the first thing Tenet did was hand me these pictures and ask me to find The Killer. He had given me the pictures of 23 victims who had all died the same way. All of them were children of people who could have been in the CIA. About 22 of them did have a known parent or guardian in the CIA.

DEATHS DUE TO THE STEALING OF A CIA COMPUTER
What he failed to tell me, or give me the photos for, for was the over 100 adults that had been killed using the exact same modus operandi. One of them was in the CIA's morgue at that moment [Editor: did you know that the CIA has its own morgue? I didn't]. ..The item that was stolen from the CIA that was responsible for those deaths was a computer. That computer had not gone through the hands of one of the ex-CIA operatives. Its contents not been thoroughly erased.

It took work and time to do that; the disc had to be erased and written over 50 times. Halliburton's bosses did not care about national security or the risk to the CIA's covert operatives, if they were exposed... I was able to prove that it was the same computer. It still had the CIA's personnel files on it and many of the victims had been selectively deleted from where they should have been in that list. When I then compared that file to the CIA's current personnel file, the comparison program marked those deletions in red. The selective deletions showed that the owner of the computer was getting tipped off by someone high up in the investigation of the deaths inside the CIA.

The US Administration managed to suppress the news of these murders almost completely, after its ties to the computer started showing up in the CIA's internal investigations. No-one in the media had connected the isolated cases across the globe [another gross failure by the incompetent and controlled Fourth Estate, which has intelligence cadres sitting in its press rooms: Ed.].

The motivation of the deletions was obviously to try to cover-up the guilt of the owner's role in those murders. There were about 86 deletions in a file of thousands of names. Each deletion was a victim, as already known by the CIA up to a certain date about two weeks earlier.

ENTER THE 'DARK LORDS': DIRECTLY CONNECTED TO BUSH
No victim that the CIA had on its investigation list by that point had failed to be deleted on that stolen computer. The odds of that happening by chance alone was practically speaking, exactly zero. In addition, I later obtained evidence that firmly tied the secondary ownership of that same computer to those who committed the actual tortures and murders. There was many more than one murderer. What they had in common was membership in a kind of paramilitary, quasi-religious cult. The members of that paramilitary cult had a group commitment to kill a person once a month. The Mafia usually only requires its members to kill once to get into it. This satanic group required their members to kill once a month in order to remain in good standing in it.

[Note: The Editor of this service received, between February and mid-May 2008, a large number of evil, unsolicited phone calls from a contrived, deep demonic 'voice' referencing 'the Great Dark Lords'. This harassment [referenced in our report dated 27th April 2010, as the stupid harassment resumed: we have identified the operative concerned as Wanta] continued until shortly after we reported the matter to the head of the US Anti-Terrorism Task Force and also, separately, to law enforcement personnel in contact with the Editor's own contacts, whereupon they ceased. We have voice recordings of almost all these calls.

Considered in the context of what follows, it would appear that these calls represented threats: one of these was quite specific, along the lines of 'we have the means of dealing with you'. Given the appearance of the 'Dark Lords' in this 'Cheney' context, it is likely that the Unterreichsführer's apparat will indeed, as we suspected, have been responsible for these multiple telephone threats and harassment calls.

It comes as NO SURPRISE whatsoever to the Editor that the veteran CIA investigator came across this 'Black' dimension. The harassment calls to the Editor were also interspersed with threatening emails. The content of one of these, containing a very grave threat, was conveyed immediately as referenced above, with the consequence that (at the date of this posting) the harassment ceased].

A Manual on 'How to Please the Lords of Darkness' had been published by a member of that cult. It recommended that the best way to do it was to torture people to death using the modus operandi that I have indicated above. That Manual had been distributed by the owner of the aforementioned computer with that CIA Personnel file suggested as the targets. The man who bought the computer was indeed a paramilitary type, with a large collection of weapons, many of them unregistered... He was identified as a fundraiser for Bush.

The literature of the group showed upside-down crosses as an emblem [satanic symbolism: Ed.]. The reason that others in the CIA had not tracked him down and had failed to pin the instigating of the murders on him, was political. Like 'HallCIA', and the Head Programmer from our earlier cases, he was well protected. It was not that CIA investigators had not suspected him. It was that they did not know what to do with their suspicions and even their evidence after they got it.

I was the booby prize winner: the fool at the CIA who had before been willing to buck the silence at great risk to myself. There was precedence for giving me a job like this. At one point, a CIA officer had sold a list of MI6 officers to the KGB during the Cold War. The KBG had started killing them off. I was given the job to stop them from continuing. And they had stopped: whether or not it was due to my efforts, was a matter of hot debate within the CIA. But some people credited me with having had some influence in the matter.

The individual who bought that computer was apparently a friend of Cheney and Bush; they had invited him to the White House. They had been present when he picked it out among a number of other CIA stolen computers, paying cash, which Cheney had put in his pocket.

'CHENEY & BUSH TOOK THE MONEY FOR THE COMPUTERS USED FOR THE MURDERS'
I found the White House Security camera footage of that event. The GAO has a copy of it. The payment is shown on the video. The man took hundred dollar bill(s) out of his pocket and handed that to Bush. Bush hesitated and then handed the money to Cheney. The footage of that computer being carried out of the room by a guard follows about 20 minutes later. The room had about 20 computers from the CIA in it, to start with. [They were all neatly laid out, as at a corporate sales demonstration, for buyers to examine, test, select, and pay for: only cash was accepted: Ed.].

The security camera tape shows Bush Jr. and Mr Cheney repeatedly coming into the room with a prospective buyer and taking cash in varying amounts. That continued until all the computers were gone. Some prospective buyers remained in the room for over an hour exploring the contents of the stolen CIA computers, before deciding on a purchase. I checked with the CIA and found that no CIA vetting of those buyers had occurred. Most did not have security clearances. Some of them had prior felony convictions and had been allowed into the White House 'on orders from above'. The sale was 'by invitation only', with Bush and Cheney controlling the invitation list.

The earlier tape shows Cheney directing Halliburton employees in where to set the computers up. Much care and time was taken to plug them in and connect them to monitors, mice, keyboards, and to arrange the room nicely with a mouse pad under each mouse. The GAO has a copy of that tape too. The manual on how to torture people (in the manner described) and the file of CIA Personnel was sent overseas and domestically through the mail whenever a buyer purchased a snuff film from that man. His poorly kept records showed that he had mailed out at least 2,000 such CDs with the Manual on 'How to please the Lords of Darkness'.

His records omitted the addresses that he sent them to in about 50% of the cases where he marked payment received and product and ‘How-to’ sent. Thirty of the murders had been solved already by local foreign authorities by the time I was given the case. Of those, the 'How-to' CD was found in 28 of them. Presumably it had been overlooked in the other two, or the wrong party may have been charged, or the 'How-to' thrown out by the 'Black' criminal operative.

Unfortunately, the murders had continued after those arrests.

BUSH AND CHENEY RESPONSIBLE FOR 168 CIA DEATHS, COVERED UP (HITHERTO)
At least 168 CIA officers and their family members were brutally tortured to death as a direct result of this cynical corruption run by Bush and Cheney. The CIA [systematically] covered it all up and pretended that it never happened on Tenet’s orders. The notorious traitor Aldrich Ames had not sent out instructions to torture and kill anyone. He had sold ONE copy of a list of CIA operatives in one country to one buyer. He is languishing in prison for life.

[The perpetrator identified here] sent out over 2,000 copies of all the names and addresses of the CIA officers and their families in every country. He had sent them out with hate propaganda and incited others to kill them. He had sent this [Nazi filth] to people who were known murderers who had a commitment to kill again. And he had sent it out as a challenge: are you man enough to kill a CIA person? His group offered ‘Advanced Membership Privileges’ to anyone who succeeded.

It was very curious that someone close and high up in the investigations at the CIA was tipping him off, since he was targeting CIA officers. I was able to supply the GAO with the evidence as to who was doing it. This person was getting calls and faxes directly from Cheney and Tenet. Tenet’s faxes included the names of the victims to date. He was being assisted in his cover-up at a very high US level. I investigated whether the Russians or another foreign group had put him up to this, as his methods seemed too effective to be that of an individual’ alone.

HALLIBURTON LINKED TO THESE MURDERS OF CIA PERSONNEL
I found no such evidence of a foreign government or its operatives being behind it [but] I found many ties to US underworld organizations. Most of the ties, however, were directly to Halliburton. According to Halliburton’s records which I sent the GAO, [the perpetrator of these incitements to murder CIA personnel] had headed one of their subsidiaries before it went bankrupt.

CIA INVESTIGATOR TOLD TO 'BACK OFF, OR ELSE'
When I looked up that old corporation I did not find a building on the aerial to correspond to the address. That subsidiary had been selling intelligence and paramilitary gear. It had specialized in recruiting mercenaries worldwide. It made me wonder if those killing the CIA had done so, as a kind of recruitment test; those getting away with it and being able to prove it, getting the job. I started looking into whether he was on Halliburton’s books as CEO of a new subsidiary. Just as soon as I started that investigation, Cheney called and told me to ‘back off or else’.

I asked him what the ‘else’ referred to, because it certainly sounded like a death threat to me. He hung up on me. Then he called me back about 10 minutes later and offered to set up a face-to-face meeting with that computer owner. I agreed and asked at once for a time and a place. He hung up: apparently his offer was just to threaten me that he would [impose] that man on me. I sent copies of those calls to the GAO also. They should still have them. The Halliburton mercenary recruiter [who incited the murders] was never prosecuted. Cheney and Bush would not allow it.

BIO-FEEDBACK EQUIPMENT STOLEN BY HALLIBURTON FOR THE RUSSIANS
In about May 2002, a Halliburton person at the CIA had stolen an expensive piece of equipment.
It was an ultra-sophisticated CIA bio-feedback machine that was worth over $5 million.

It had required hundreds of millions of dollars of R & D money for the CIA to develop it. It was custom-made only for the CIA. Its only purpose was to train operatives how to pass a lie detector test. It was only used when they were to be sent on extremely dangerous missions to places like Russia. And it was only used in very critical missions.

There was a high risk that Russian intelligence would figure out how to overcome that training, if they interrogated about five operatives who had used it. That is, if they realised that those 5 had been trained in that fashion. Thus it was TOP SECRET and its manual was also top secret at the time. Loss of that machine and its Manual was the same as potentially losing every secret a given CIA official had in his or her mind when they were in Russia. The head of the CIA station in Russia had been trained on that machine for obvious reasons.

The effect of the training was to give the user control over their automatic nervous system. That meant that they could stop their fear, their sweating, their heart rate increase etc. in response to an interrogation. In addition to those obvious advantages in an interrogation situation, it had a big psychological benefit. It gave those who had used it confidence that they could pass a lie detector test. Thus, they were as if ‘bullet proofed' against threats and lie detector tests.

Although the signal-to-noise ratio relating to information obtained under torture is so low as to be unusable, that is not true in a ‘friendly’ interrogation. The British had admirably demonstrated the effectiveness of 'friendly interrogations' in WWII. An operative who had fear or fear of a lie detector test was more likely to ‘tell all’ in a ‘friendly interrogation’ because of underlying anxiety. I did not find out about that theft until the next day. I then learned from a Halliburton person that it had been stolen and was en route to the Russian Embassy to be sold to them. I was absolutely horrified by the national security implications of that. I rushed up to Tenet’s office to tell him. He already knew.

Cheney had called him and asked him what it was and what it was worth to the Russians. This was after I had set up the system for things to go through Alan so that the oversight committee could intervene to stop the worst violations of national security.

But the thief was a personal friend of Cheney’s and had taken the item straight to the White House to ask him if he wanted to buy it. Cheney had paid him $50,000 for it, he informed me. The copy of the telephone call that I sent to the GAO between Tenet and Cheney showed that Mr Cheney had considered keeping it, so that he could pass lie detector tests.

CHENEY THREATENS TO KILL THE VETERAN CIA OPERATIVE PERSONALLY
They had discussed it and Tenet had promised to find out more about it, how it worked, and how much it was ‘worth outside of the CIA’. He had called him back and told him a figure of $1.2 million. Cheney asked him to find out what was his risk of needing the machine himself. Tenet called him back and said that CIA analysts judged his risk to be about 4%. In front of Tenet with his phone on speaker, I called Cheney and demanded its return.

He laughed and said, ‘What’s the big deal? It can only be used 5 times total and it has already been used once. We should sell it while it still has value before those 5 times are up’. He had absolutely no understanding of intelligence matters. It was not 5 uses of the machine: it was 5 times a CIA person trained using that machine was interrogated by the Russians. It could be 20 years' worth of use to prevent the loss of security codes, national secrets, and how a CIA station was operating.

I explained it all quite carefully as Cheney is not a technically minded person. I even asked him questions to make certain that he had understood what I said correctly [Editor: This interesting comment suggests that Cheney is actually not that bright, which may also be judged to be the case, given his behaviour over the Settlements and his repeated thefts of gigantic sums of money. It may be that he progressed to these much larger thefts after getting away with multiple lesser thefts of which examples have been given in this narrative]. Cheney then said: ‘Well, what difference does it make since there are remote viewers like you in Russia who can steal the secrets anyway?’

I then explained that remote viewers were not 100% accurate and that intelligence agencies always had to verify what they said using hard data. Lie detector tests are not 100% accurate either, but they add some signal-to-noise benefit. Mr Cheney replied that torture was generally worthless in getting information [Editor: Amazing! Was not Cheney reported to be adamant that torture MUST be used to extract intelligence from terrorists and from prisoners in US hell holes like Gantanamo and Abu Ghraib?]. That was true. But it was still wrong to sell the Russians the CIA's very best and most advanced equipment to deter loss of information under interrogation. 'Friendly interrogations' do yield valid intelligence.

When I pointed that out, Cheney said that the machine had already been sold to the Russians and that I was too late. I told him that I would figure out some way of prosecuting him, if he ever did that again. He laughed and said, 'You haven't got a chance'. I told him that I would try.

Cheney then said: 'I will kill you myself, if you ever get close to succeeding'.

As we have said before, Cheney is what Malachi Martin would have called 'perfectly possessed'.

RUSSIA TREATED AS 'THE ENEMY' THROUGHOUT: RAPPROCHEMENT IS THEREFORE FALSE
You will have noticed that during the timeframe of this narrative [2002-2005-ish], Russia is considered in this dialogue to be an enemy, just as was the case during the overt Cold War.

This reflects the fact that the dialectical breach created by Lenin's Revolution and its aftermath has not, in fact, been healed or discarded: exactly as the Soviet defector Anatoliy Golitsyn advised the disinterested CIA: see The Perestroika Deception by Anatoliy Golitsyn, edited by Christopher Story, available from the books [Edward Harle Limited] segment of this website.

craig-oxley - May 2, 2010 04:13 PM (GMT)

[DOHTML]<CENTER>[/DOHTML]

DAME OF MALTA, ELIZABETH II AND THE BUSH CONNECTION

By Craig Oxley
2nd of May 2010
[DOHTML]</CENTER>[/DOHTML]

So we have this oil rig known as Deepwater Horizon down in the Gulf of Mexico causing a storm at the moment. This has the potential of being a giant catastrophic disaster for the planet's biosphere. Deepwater Horizon is owned by British Petroleum plc which is controlled from St James's, City of Westminster in London. Its front controlled by the Swede known as Carl-Henric Svanberg on behalf of the Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II and British Monarchy. People should be made aware of Operation Ajax and how the Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II controlled the coup of Iranian Prime Minister, Mohammed Mossadeq via her British Intelligence in complete control of the Central Intelligence Agency which itself was created by British Intelligence commander, William Samuel Stephenson. The Central Intelligence Agency being a Roman and British collaboration in joining most of the Office of Strategic Services in the United States with the Nazi SS machine. This was all completed thanks to Vatican intelligence, Knights of Malta, British Intelligence and of course the Joint Intelligence Objectives Agency. The Queen had Mohammed Mossadeq imprisoned until death in the name of control of the World and its oil reserves. She placed Fazlollah Zahedi on the throne as head of Iran once Mossadeq was removed. Some people are currently trying to claim that British assets are now targets. How can this be when Britain controlled by Rome, control the very supposed enemy of Britain according to some?
[dohtml]
 <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/8Riejd9ymXg&hl=en_GB&fs=1&" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"

width="400" height="340"></embed></object> [/dohtml]
Usually when we see something purposely attacked we find theres either serious future profits and investment which will come of it or of course destruction of evidence of criminal activity. Whats been going on aboard these oil rigs that may need these criminals to resort to using SWAT teams to gather and protect documentation or destroy documentation whatever the case may be right now. Regardless something crooked is going on at this moment in time. We see that Halliburton is deeply involved in the current crisis after problems with their cement casing work on Deepwater Horizon just prior to this event. We all know how deep Knight of Malta, George Bush Sr goes with the crooked Halliburton. Now the name of the rig itself may be an occult clue as a horizon is a Horus zone where the Sun rises at the start of a new day. Would this be tied to fire perhaps? I'm sure that rig is very much in deepwater don't you?
[dohtml]
<CENTER><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/VCcN4SQkb9A&hl=en_GB&fs=1&" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="400" height="340"></embed></object> [/dohtml]
Do you all remember the explosion in March of 2005 on the third largest oil refinery in the corporation of the United States? Who owns this refinery? Why it's none other than British Petroleum and its Texas City Refinery. Does this remind you also of The Buncefield depot in Hertfordshire, England owned by Texaco and Total? Remember that Texaco was dealing with ex-agent of the realm, Saddam Hussein for their oil supplies at the time when Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II had Knight of Malta, George Bush Sr hammer Texaco with an eleven billion dollar hit which later was bought down to three billion in April of 1988. Knight of Malta, Ronald Reagan was fully compliant with attacking Texaco. Its interesting to note that Federal Bureau of Investigation Division Five informer, Jesse Jackson of the Boule Society also attacked Texaco in 1996 ripping one hundred and eighty million dollars from the company. Seems folks we have serious oil wars still going on to this day.
[dohtml]
 <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/F3T9mZNx_zo&hl=en_GB&fs=1&" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="400" height="340"></embed></object> [/dohtml]
Now should we believe that the Deutsche Verteidigung Dienst is against British assets at the moment? It would seem that Knight of Malta, George Bush Sr is a member of the D.V.D but he's also loyal to the Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II. So why would he be part of attacking her British Petroleum? It wouldn't happen! Heinz Kissinger another D.V.D member is a Knight of Malta loyal to both Knight of Malta, David Rockefeller and Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II. My God, Elizabeth II breeds her feminine mares with William Stamps Farish III's stud race Horses. He has facilities for this down in Florida, Kentucky and Texas. Who's Farish you cry? Well he's a former U.S. Ambassador to the United Kingdom thanks to George Bush Sr in fact. He controls the Bush finances through his W.S. Farish & Co based in Houston, Texas. Lets not forget how the Queen has a joint account at the old John Campbell's, Coutts & Co now tied to tax payer bailed out Royal Bank of Scotland. Coutts & Co is front controlled by Commander of the British Empire, David Douglas. Therefore he's fully controlled by both Dame of Malta, Elizabeth II and her husband. Lets never forget how it was the Royal Institute of International Affairs who made George Bush Sr kick start operations against Iraq in 1991 with a visit from an angry Margaret Thatcher. Why was she angry? Bush had not followed his orders and she was sent out to order him to act when she could have been doing something else. All of course on the behalf of the Cliveden Set controlled by 114 Mount Street, Westminster, England and the Curia Generalizia of Borgo Santo Spirito.
[dohtml]
<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mMoWFCvcdDg&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object> [/dohtml]
I believe the ultimate goal of this current event is to demonise oil in the minds of the populaces of this planet. Oil will be used as a weapon in order to now depopulate the planet by at least 50-60% with this goal finally being achieved by 2050. The false information pushed about peak oil being a conditioner for when their actions are bought into play and their media kick starts the mantras where by even many conspiracy researchers will get suckered in to the hype of peak oil. What this event and others like it will do is simply increase the price of oil dramatically and thus the control over the nations of Earth. I'm fully expecting at some point oil to be in the range of $250-600 a barrel. You think you have it bad now? Its only $87 a barrel now. Your hardship is inflation at this moment in time and thats why your petrol at the pumps is so high as your currencies are worthless. Lets not forget that your also having to take on the extra cost that is caused by the British Empire allowing Iraqi citizens to still have cheap oil at Saddam Hussein's guaranteed prices of old. Why they doing this? In order to make sure theres no major disruptions to order in the Country. So of course once again the Western corporation slaves have to foot the bills. One things for certain and that is War is on the Horus zone and its coming fast as the economy slides further and further into great depression.

DAGGER - May 3, 2010 05:36 PM (GMT)

If little Ice age kicks in then depopulation objective will be achieved much sooner than 2050 .. as soon as 2030 or less. Scarcity of oil supply & distribution along with rocket high retail price will leave us out in the cold & on foot. There could be world wide scale secret plans to introduce quotas and rations per citizen where you'll have to 'check in' to get your weekly allocated portion barely enough to survive or move around. Perfect for Police state as well. Chopping off wood to keep warm will be globaly scrutinized by Al Gore's all seeing eye. I don't think Rome is willing to wait till 2050. We are on fast track turbo mode now.

craig-oxley - May 3, 2010 05:45 PM (GMT)

I did hear that 2020 onwards was a timeframe to worry about.

craig-oxley - May 6, 2010 06:40 PM (GMT)

Official In Charge of Responding to the Oil Spill Was Official In Charge of Responding to Hurricane Katrina

Washington's Blog
May 3, 2010

I have provided a balanced overview of the oil spill.

I have tried to diffuse partisan comparisons of the oil spill with Hurricane Katrina.

But I just read something which is making me lose my composure a tad.

As the New York Times reports:

Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano announced that she was changing the federal leadership of the oil spill operations. Adm. Thad W. Allen, the commandant of the Coast Guard, is now directly overseeing the work of Rear Adm. Mary E. Landry, who had been in charge of the response. Admiral Allen was in charge of the federal response to Hurricane Katrina.

The same guy who oversaw the brilliant government response to Katrina is overseeing its response to the Gulf oil spill?

Well, that's confidence-inspiring …

craig-oxley - May 6, 2010 11:45 PM (GMT)

Gulf Oil Spill: BP Trying To Hide Millions of Gallons of Toxic Oil?

BP Embraces Exxon's Toxic Dispersant, Ignores Safer Alternative

http://www.protecttheocean.com/gulf-oil-spill-bp/

It has been confirmed that the dispersal agent being used by BP and the government is Corexit 9500, a solvent originally developed by Exxon and now manufactured by Nalco Holding Company of Naperville, IL. Their stock took a sharp jump, up more than 18% at its highest point of the day today, after it was announced that their product is the one being used in the Gulf. Nalco's CEO, Erik Frywald, expressed their commitment to "helping the people and environment of the Gulf Coast recover as rapidly as possible." It may be that the best way to help would be to remove their product from the fray. Take a look at some of the facts about Corexit 9500:

A report written by Anita George-Ares and James R. Clark for Exxon Biomedical Sciences, Inc. entitled "Acute Aquatic Toxicity of Three Corexit Products: An Overview" states that "Corexit 9500, Corexit 9527, and Corexit 9580 have moderate toxicity to early life stages of fish, crustaceans and mollusks (LC50 or EC50 – 1.6 to 100 ppm*). It goes on to say that decreasing water temperatures in lab tests showed decreased toxicity, a lowered uptake of the dispersant. Unfortunately, we're going to be seeing an increase in temperatures, not a decrease. Amongst the other caveats is that the study is species-specific, that other animals may be more severely affected, silver-sided fish amongst them.

Oil is toxic at 11 ppm while Corexit 9500 is toxic at only 2.61 ppm; Corexit 9500 is four times as toxic as the oil itself. Sure, a lot less of it is being introduced, but that's still a flawed logical perspective, because it's not a "lesser of two evils" scenario. BOTH are going into the ocean water.

The lesser of two evils seems to be a product called Dispersit, manufactured by Polychem, a division of U.S. Polychemical Corporation. In comparison, water-based Dispersit is toxic at 7.9-8.2 ppm; Dispersit holds about one third of the toxicity that Corexit 9500 presents. Dispersit is a much less harmful water-based product which is both EPA approved and the U.S. Coast Guard's NCP list. So why isn't it being used?

We spoke with Bruce Gebhardt at Polychem Marine Products, asked him if Dispersit was being used in the Gulf Oil Spill situation. "Very little," he replied. When asked why, the impression was that the government had used Corexit 9500 in the past, and was going with what they know — no matter how dangerous that might prove to be.

Dispersit has a demonstrated effectiveness of 100% on the lighter South Louisiana crude, and 40% on Pruhoe Bay's heavier crude. Exxon's Corexit 9500 is just 55% effective on SL and 55% effective on PB. On an average, Dispersit is 70% effective, and may prove 100% effective, while 9500 is an average of 50% effective, with a maximum effective use of just 55%. Corexit 9500 is a harsh petroleum-based solvent which is dangerous to people and sea life. Dispersit's human health effect is "slight to none." Whether or not a dispersal agent is a wise move, the question remaining unanswered is: Why is Corexit 9500 is being used at all, when the water-based Dispersit is available, markedly more effective and less toxic? Follow the money.

Dispersal of the oil does not eliminate it, nor does it decrease the toxicity of the oil. It just breaks it up into small particles, where it becomes less visible. It's still there, spewing toxicity at an even greater rate (due to higher surface area.) But now it's pretty much impossible to skim or trap or vacuum or even soak up at the shoreline, because most of it will never make it to the shoreline. Instead, that toxic crude oil AND the dispersant will be spread all over the ocean's waters. This is why introducing such a product into the crude oil as it comes out from the pipe is a very bad idea for the ocean.

It may not be pretty, but if the oil makes it to the shore, it can be soaked up, cleaned up. To "disperse" it means it will NEVER be cleaned up. It will just stay out there, polluting and poisoning the ocean, her inhabitants, and all the food we take from it. It's unwise to be using Corexit 9500 at all, but introducing it to the oil as it leaves the broken pipe is approaching madness. Mr. Gebhardt agrees that the oil should be contained, and what has been leaked should be allowed to come to shore where it can be removed from the ocean by less toxic means.

BP's use of Corexit 9500 on the oil before it rises to the surface seems to be a deliberate attempt to mask the poison, to cover up that it continues to flow out from the ocean's floor, while making it impossible to recover. In short, BP and Exxon want to spread the toxic oil throughout the oceans of the world, pollute everywhere, rather than allow it to be seen coming to shore where BP would have to pay for its containment and clean-up. It's our job to keep them from getting away with sweeping this ugly mess under the surface.

craig-oxley - May 6, 2010 11:46 PM (GMT)

Oil from Gulf spill creeps ashore in Louisiana

By Matthew Bigg
mAY 6 2010
http://news.yahoo.com/s/nm/20100506/ts_nm/us_oil_rig_leak

VENICE, Louisiana (Reuters) – Oil from a massive spill in the Gulf of Mexico came ashore on a chain of islands off the Louisiana coast on Thursday as BP Plc engineers prepared to start lowering a 98-ton metal chamber over the ruptured seabed well miles off the coast.

A sheen of oil washed ashore on much of Chandeleur Islands, barrier islands that are part of the Breton National Wildlife Refuge, a spokeswoman for the U.S. response team said.

"That's the only shoreline oiling that we have been able to find," Jacqui Michel, an official with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said at a news briefing. "It is pretty amazing that we've had the oil in the water for this long a period of time and so little shoreline oiling."

The Breton refuge is an important breeding and nesting area for many endangered and threatened bird species.

Oiled birds, including gannets and brown pelicans, Louisiana's state bird, have been found on the islands, said Jeff Dauzat of the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality.

Obama administration officials and U.S. lawmakers kept up the pressure on BP to make good on its promises to pick up the tab for cleaning up what could end up being the largest oil spill in United States history.

"Very major mistakes" were made by companies involved in the deadly offshore rig explosion that led to the spill and no new offshore drilling permits will be issued until a review is complete, Interior Secretary Ken Salazar said on Thursday.

A barge carrying the massive white containment box arrived at the spill site where a BP-owned well blew out two weeks ago 40 miles off the Louisiana coast, causing the explosion and sinking of the Deepwater Horizon rig.

Once the four-story-tall metal dome is lowered to the seabed in an operation that could take two days, it is supposed to capture leaking oil and channel it to a drilling ship on the surface. BP said the dome, the best short-term option for containing the leak, could begin operations by Monday.

"We'll be lowering this containment vessel within the next 24 hours, weather permitting," Robert Dudley, a BP executive vice president, said after giving a speech in Boston.

A Coast Guard official said the oil threatening the Chandeleurs was "largely just sheen," or the leading edge of the slick.

Heavy oil remains further off the coast for now, close to the site of the leak. But the Mississippi Delta, Breton Sound, and Chandeleur Sound continue to be threatened by shoreline contacts over the next few days, officials said.

By late Saturday night into Sunday morning winds in the Gulf region could pick up to 15 to 20 knots, said Tim Destri, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service office in New Orleans. That may make efforts to battle the slick more difficult.

Oil workers, volunteers and the military have battled desperately to shut off the gushing leak and stop the huge spreading oil slick from reaching major ports, tourist beaches, wildlife refuges and fishing grounds on the Gulf Coast.

CALM WEATHER WINDOW

While the calm weather continues, crews are taking advantage of a window of opportunity to fight the leak. About 270 boats deployed protective booms on Thursday to block the slick and dispersants to break up the thick oil.

The chemical dispersants worried environmentalists.

"These dispersants contain proprietary chemicals that have unknown effects," said Larry Schweiger, president the National Wildlife Federation, who called on BP to close what chemicals are in their dispersants.

Scientists monitored the impact on marine and coastal wildlife of the oil slick, estimated to be at least 130 miles by 70 miles in size.

"It has already hit some of the fishing areas further out," said Leonard Ball, a resident of Biloxi, Mississippi, adding he feared damage to oyster bays and the fishing community.

"There's already a lot of devastation as far as the fishermen go," he said.

Coast Guard and port officials said there had been no impact on ship traffic, and preparations were in place to clean vessels quickly en route to port to keep traffic moving.

BP has capped one of three leaks in the ruptured well, but oil is still flowing at an unchanged 5,000 barrels (210,000 gallons/795,000 liters) a day.

The company is drilling a relief well that could take two or three months to complete, making the containment dome the centerpiece of the short-term fight against the slick.

BP shares closed up 0.4 percent in London on Thursday as bargain hunting continued after weeks of declines wiped more than $32 billion from the company's market value.

In New York, the company's American Depositary Receipts fell 1.2 percent.

In Houston, Interior Secretary Salazar met with BP officials on Thursday, and a bipartisan congressional delegation will visit the Gulf region on Friday.

The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee has slated a hearing on May 11 to examine the oil spill

Lamar McKay, president of BP America, Steven Newman, head of Transocean Ltd which owned the oil rig that exploded on April 20, and Tim Probert, president of Halliburton, have been called on to testify. Halliburton helped cement in place the blown-out well.

The attorneys-general of Gulf states threatened by the spill -- Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas -- sent a letter to President Barack Obama and Attorney General Eric Holder seeking to establish a group to prepare for any damage assessment initiatives, enforcement or litigation relating to the spill.

A federal statute caps damage recoveries from oil spills at $75 million, if no negligence is established. Lawmakers on Capitol Hill are working on a measure to increase that to $10 billion.

BP has said it will pay all "legitimate claims," but Alabama Attorney General Troy King called this a "lawyered up" answer and said the company should provide "plain-spoken" specifics.

Transocean said the U.S. Justice Department asked it to preserve records related to the well's drilling and the deadly blast on its rig two weeks ago that killed 11 workers.

The Interior Department on Thursday canceled a series of public meetings planned this month on a proposal to sell oil and gas leases off the Virginia coastline.

The move was cheered by environmentalists.

"Our ability to prevent and contain spills has not kept pace with our ability to access oil below ocean waters," senior campaign director Jacqueline Savitz with the group Oceana said in a statement.

(Additional reporting by Matt Daily in New York; Tom Bergin in London; Anna Driver and Chris Baltimore in Houston; Tom Brown and Pascal Fletcher in Miami; Michael Peltier in Pensacola; Steve Gorman and Brian Snyder in Mobile; Scott Malone in Boston; and Richard Cowan in Washington; writing by John Whitesides and Ros Krasny; editing by Mohammad Zargham)

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 12:01 AM (GMT)

The Cover-up: BP's Crude Politics And The Looming Environmental Mega-Disaster

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 05/06/2010 13:25 -0500 http://www.zerohedge.com/

Crude Crude Oil Florida Geyser Guest Post John McCain Mexico national security New Orleans Obama Administration White House

We have been informed by sources in the US Army Corps of Engineers, Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), and Florida Department of Environmental Protection that the Obama White House and British Petroleum (BP), which pumped $71,000 into Barack Obama's 2008 presidential campaign -- more than John McCain or Hillary Clinton, are covering up the magnitude of the volcanic-level oil disaster in the Gulf of Mexico and working together to limit BP's liability for damage caused by what can be called a "mega-disaster." Obama and his senior White House staff, as well as Interior Secretary Ken Salazar, are working with BP's chief executive officer Tony Hayward on legislation that would raise the cap on liability for damage claims from those affected by the oil disaster from $75 million to $10 billion. However, WMR's federal and Gulf state sources are reporting the disaster has the real potential cost of at least $1 trillion. Critics of the deal being worked out between Obama and Hayward point out that $10 billion is a mere drop in the bucket for a trillion dollar disaster but also note that BP, if its assets were nationalized, could fetch almost a trillion dollars for compensation purposes. There is talk in some government circles, including FEMA, of the need to nationalize BP in order to compensate those who will ultimately be affected by the worst oil disaster in the history of the world.

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 12:01 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/9PA7e2v_0f4&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/9PA7e2v_0f4&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 12:04 AM (GMT)

Florida's Loop Current could intersect with oil slick, scientists say

McClatchy Tribune News Service,writer
Last Modified: Wednesday, May 5, 2010 at 9:32 a.m.

http://www.houmatoday.com/article/20100505...icles/100509685

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. - Outer bands of the powerful Loop Current moved north to within 31 miles of the destroyed wellhead, spewing thousands of barrels a day. If the current reaches the spill, it could drag the slick south to the Florida Keys within days, and push it north to Broward and Palm Beach counties in a week to two weeks, marine scientists said.

"If it continues to move in that direction, and there is no reason why it shouldn't, the Loop Current could very well be at the wellhead," said Bob Weisberg, who is using satellite images to track the slick at the College of Marine Science at the University of South Florida. "So there is a strong likelihood that at some point in the future oil will be entrained into the Loop Current."

Florida Gov. Charlie Crist on Monday extended a state of emergency south to Sarasota County. Everglades National Park, Big Cypress National Preserve, Dry Tortugas National Park and Biscayne National Park began disaster preparations, establishing a response team comparable to that set up for hurricanes, and Tuesday they will begin assessing vulnerable natural systems, such as mangrove shorelines.

"We certainly hope it's not going to hit the park," said Linda Friar, spokeswoman for Everglades National Park. "We are concerned. There's potential for the oil to impact Everglades, Dry Tortuga, Big Cypress and Biscayne."

Florida faces the risk of gooey oil washing up on beaches, smothering sea turtle hatchlings, ruining shorebird nests, contaminating coral reefs and killing a wide range of coastal wildlife. One scientist told the Coast Guard to consider laying a floating boom from Key West to Palm Beach to protect the coast.

In years of debates over expanding offshore drilling in the Gulf, environmentalists had invoked the danger of a slick riding the Loop Current through the Florida Straits. Now, even without more drilling, the danger appears to be real.

The current, which moves 2 to 6 mph, turns into the Gulf Stream, which runs near to the shores of Miami-Dade, Broward and Palm Beach counties.

"If you are standing on a beach in Miami, you can throw a stone at times into the Gulf Stream," Weisberg said. If winds blow an oil slick toward shore, "you are likely to get oil on the beach in Miami."

The Florida Department of Environmental Protection said there are no projections of oil reaching Florida beaches through Thursday.

Federal agencies are cautious about predicting the slick's path. "It's way too early to tell," said Dave Miller, spokesman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "The tracking we have now only goes out three days. The science just isn't there."

If the oil does come to South Florida, it will be a thicker, denser substance than the slick spreading in the Gulf, as volatile compounds have a chance to evaporate during the trip around the peninsula.

"If it washes up on our beaches, it will be a more gooey substance," said Stephen Leatherman, director of the Laboratory for Coastal Research at Florida International University, also known as Dr. Beach for his annual rankings of top beaches.

"The thing is, we really haven't seen anything like this before. A lot of people didn't think this was going to happen. We were sure, with all the modern technology out there, there was an infinitesimal chance this would happen," Leatherman said.

The oil would arrive at the worst possible time for many wildlife species engaged in the springtime rituals of mating, nesting and reproduction.

Sea turtles are crawling up on beaches to lay eggs. Brown pelicans, roseate terns and many other coastal bird species are nesting. Snapper, grouper and bluefin tuna are spawning, with larvae heading up to the ocean surface, where, if the worst comes true, they would end up coated in oil.

"We're very concerned about the potential harm the oil could have on fish and wildlife," said Ken Warren, spokesman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's South Florida field office. "You're talking more than 250 species of birds that could be negatively impacted. We're especially concerned because this is sea turtle nesting season. It's nesting season for avian species, and manatees are migrating."

Palm Beach County emergency officials will brief the County Commission Tuesday on plans for dealing with the oil.

"My point isn't to create any type of panic. My point is what plans we have in place as a contingency in the event the oil flow comes to the east coast, as soon as possible," said Palm Beach Commissioner Steven Abrams, who requested the briefing. "This is all uncharted territory."

Abrams wants to know if Palm Beach County inlets, such as the Boynton Inlet, would have to be closed off to avoid an ecological disaster.

Winds had been nudging the slick farther north toward the Gulf Coast, but scientists said shifting winds could push the slick south to meet the Loop Current. The longer the cleanup, the greater the likelihood the slick and the Loop Current will intersect.

"It may take months to get the spill under control," said Frank E. Muller-Karger, an oceanographer also at the University of South Florida.

"The wind itself will move the oil in different directions," he said. "If it moves to the east, it will slowly drift to the Panhandle. If it blows to the south and gets caught in Loop Current, it will move south very quickly toward the Keys."

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 01:10 AM (GMT)

Underwater video of oil gushing into Gulf of Mexico

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/CH4I1a5vg3w&hl=en_GB&fs=1&"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/CH4I1a5vg3w&hl=en_GB&fs=1&" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 09:29 AM (GMT)

[DOHTML]<embed width="320" height="240" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=136a4102ee4b4103ae6" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/DOHTML]

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 09:32 AM (GMT)

Giant Box Lowered Into Gulf to Battle Oil Spill

Associated Press
http://www.foxnews.com/us/2010/05/06/giant...ttle-oil-spill/

The 100-ton containment vessel is designed to collect as much as 85 percent of the oil spewing into the Gulf and funnel it up to a tanker.

ON THE GULF OF MEXICO -- Workers eased a giant concrete-and-steel box into the Gulf of Mexico late Thursday, starting the long process of lowering the contraption over the blown-out oil well at the bottom of the sea in an untested bid to capture most of the gushing crude and avert a wider environmental disaster.

The 100-ton containment vessel is designed to collect as much as 85 percent of the oil spewing into the Gulf and funnel it up to a tanker. It could take several hours to lower it into place, after which a steel pipe will be installed between the top of the box and the tanker.

The whole structure could be operating by Sunday.

"We haven't done this before," said BP spokesman David Nicholas. "It's very complex and we can't guarantee it."

The mission took on added urgency as oil started washing up on delicate barrier islands.

Dangerous fumes rising from the oily water on a windless night had delayed the lowering of the box for hours. The fear was that a spark caused by the scrape of metal on metal could cause a fire.

But a crane lifted it from the deck of the supply boat Joe Griffin and into the Gulf after 10 p.m. CDT, dark oil clinging to its white sides as it entered the water and disappeared below the surface.

The technology has been used a few times in shallow waters, but never at such extreme depths -- 5,000 feet down, where the water pressure is enough to crush a submarine.

The box -- which looks a lot like a peaked, 40-foot-high outhouse, especially on the inside, with its rough timber framing -- must be accurately positioned over the well, or it could damage the leaking pipe and make the problem worse.

BP spokesman Doug Suttles said he is not concerned about that happening. Underwater robots have been clearing pieces of pipe and other debris near where the box will be placed to avoid complications.

"We do not believe it could make things worse," he said.

Other risks include ice clogs in the pipes -- a problem that crews will try to prevent by continuously pumping in warm water and methanol -- and the danger of explosion when separating the mix of oil, gas and water that is brought to the surface.

"I'm worried about every part, as you can imagine," said David Clarkson, BP vice president of engineering projects.

If the box works, a second one now being built may be used to deal with a second, smaller leak from the sea floor.

"Hopefully, it will work better than they expect," the supply boat's first mate, Douglas Peake, told an Associated Press reporter on board.

The well blew open on April 20 when the Deepwater Horizon drilling platform exploded 50 miles out in the Gulf of Mexico, killing 11 workers. It has been spewing an estimated 200,000 gallons a day in the nation's biggest oil spill since the Exxon Valdez disaster in Alaska in 1989.

Interior Secretary Ken Salazar on Thursday halted all new offshore drilling permits nationwide until at least the end of the month while the government investigates the Gulf spill.

Oil slicks stretched for miles off the Louisiana coast, where desperate efforts were under way to skim, corral and set the petroleum ablaze. People in Mississippi, Alabama and Florida watched in despair.

The dropping of the box is just one of many strategies being pursued to stave off a widespread environmental disaster. BP is drilling sideways into the blown-out well in hopes of plugging it from the bottom. Also, oil company engineers are examining whether the leak could be shut off by sealing it from the top instead.

The technique, called a "top kill," would use a tube to shoot mud and concrete directly into the well's blowout preventer, BP spokesman Bill Salvin said. The process would take two to three weeks, compared with the two to three months needed to drill a relief well.

On Thursday, oil reached several barrier islands off the Louisiana coast, many of them fragile animal habitats. Several birds were spotted diving into the oily, pinkish-brown water, and dead jellyfish washed up on the uninhabited islands.

"It's all over the place. We hope to get it cleaned up before it moves up the west side of the river," said Dustin Chauvin, a 20-year-old shrimp boat captain from Terrebonne Parish, La. "That's our whole fishing ground. That's our livelihood."

During a visit to Biloxi, Miss., Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano said of the containment vessel: "I hope it works. But we are still proceeding as if it won't. If it does, of course, that will be a major positive development."

"We are facing an evolving situation," she warned. "The possibility remains that the BP oil spill could turn into an unprecedented environmental disaster. The possibility remains that it will be somewhat less."

Meanwhile, a six-member board composed of representatives of the Coast Guard and the federal Minerals Management Service will begin investigating the accident next week.

And a federal judicial panel in Washington has been asked to consolidate at least 65 potential class-action lawsuits claiming economic damage from the spill. Commercial fishermen, business and resort owners, charter boat captains, even would-be vacationers have sued from Texas to Florida, seeking damages that could reach into the billions.

"It's just going to kill us. It's going to destroy us," said Dodie Vegas, who owns a motel and cabins in Grand Isle, La., and has seen 10 guests cancel.

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 04:25 PM (GMT)

[dohtml] May 3, 2010<o:p></o:p>

US
Goes To “COCKED PISTOL” Alert Status Over Korean War
Fears<o:p></o:p>

By: <span style='font-size:14.0pt;
color:windowtext'>Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers
<o:p></o:p>

Russian Defense Ministry reports circulating in the Kremlin this evening are warning that that the United States has ordered 3 of its aircraft carrier battle groups belonging to its Northern Pacific Third Fleet Naval forces to “COCKED PISTOL” alert status over growing war fears originating on the Korean Peninsula.

The “COCKED PISTOL” alert status used by the US Defense Department, these reports state, is the “exercise” term that coincides with the Americans Defense Condition (DEFCON) 1 which puts their forces on “maximum readiness” and is reserved for an imminent or ongoing attack on US armed forces or <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">US</st1:place></st1:country-region> territory by a foreign military power.

Raising the fears of the Americans, these reports continue, was South Korean President Lee Myung-bak calling for an emergency meeting of all of his military commanders, and which we can read as confirmed by <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">South Korea</st1:place></st1:country-region>’s JoongAng Daily News Service:

“For the first time in the 62-year history of Korea’s military, a president will chair an emergency meeting of top commanders to discuss the national security crisis prompted by the sinking of the Navy warship Cheonan near the inter-Korean border.<o:p></o:p>

About 150 commanders from the Army, Navy and Air Force will attend the meeting with President Lee Myung-bak tomorrow, according to Blue House spokesman Park Sun-kyoo.”

Important to note about these events is that by President Lee’s action in calling this unprecedented meeting it is the first time since the Korean War stalemate began in 1953 that South Korea has begun military operations outside of the UN-US Forces Command, and which according to the International laws of war they are able to do as unlike the United States, and the other UN Forces involved in this conflict, the South Koreans refused to sign the armistice allowing them free reign to begin retaliatory attacks against the North should they choose this course of action.

President Lee, these reports continue, is described as being “livid” over what he believes has been China’s betrayal after his meeting with Chinese Communist leader Hu Jintao two days ago where he had received “assurances” they would “contain” their North Korean ally only to have the Communists receive North Korea’s enigmatic dictator Kim Jong-Il [photo 3rd left] earlier today on a state visit.

To the North Korean actions precipitating this crisis we had previously written about in our March 28th report <b style='mso-bidi-font-weight:
normal'>“Obama Orders ‘Immediate Stand-down’ After Deadly North Korean Attack” and May 1st report “US Orders Blackout Over North Korean Torpedoing Of Gulf Of Mexico Oil Rig” wherein we detailed North Korea’s deadly attacks upon the South Korean warship Cheonan and the sinking of the South Korean industrial giant Hyundai Heavy Industries $1 Billion oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico operated by the World’s largest offshore drilling contractor Transocean under contract to British Petroleum (BP).

Though not being reported by American propaganda media organs, North Korea’s destruction of Hyundai’s Deepwater Horizon oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico puts all liability for the catastrophic damages now occurring squarely upon the South Korean economy as with all oil exploration projects of this magnitude, especially in hurricane/cyclone zones, no insurer, or re-insurer, in the World is able to insure them and which leaves this mammoth financial burden to fall upon those industrial Nations able to afford to do so, like South Korea.

Unfortunately for South Korea, and as the Deepwater Horizon was attack and sunk in American territorial waters, US President Obama has refused to call it an “act of war”, which he should have done to negate any liability for the catastrophic damage now occurring falling upon BP, Transocean or Hyundai, all of whom are ultimately <i style='mso-bidi-font-style:
normal'>‘self insured’ by the South Korean people.

Interesting to note in these reports are Russian Military Analysts stating that China’s Communist leaders may, in fact, be encouraging open warfare on the Korean Peninsula as a “deliberate move” to further accelerate the economic (and by extension infrastructure) destruction of both South Korea and the United States which would then “catapult” China to forefront of Global economic and industrial power.

Bolstering this view is the growing fear in <st1:country-region w:st="on">China</st1:country-region> of an open trade war with the <st1:country-region w:st="on">United States</st1:country-region> which <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">China</st1:place></st1:country-region>'s commerce minister Chen Deming had already warned the Americans “will suffer the most”. Credit Suisse Group AG economist Dong Tao has further warned that <st1:country-region w:st="on">China</st1:country-region> is closer to a trade war with the <st1:place w:st="on"><st1:country-region w:st="on">US</st1:country-region></st1:place> than any time in the last five years.

The Americans having failed to listen to China’s growing trade war concerns they were met earlier today on this “eve of war” with one of the most scathing editorials appearing in China’s Communist governments official

Xinhuanet News Service titled “Going toe to toe with the bully” and which, in part, says:

“Recently, the United States postponed its expected branding of China as a currency manipulator for selling cheap goods to US consumers at fixed rates. But the US has threatened China with trade sanctions, which will likely set off a trade war.<o:p></o:p>

US mercantilists and their political, academic and media allies are decrying China's surpluses and claiming that the yuan is undervalued.<o:p></o:p>

So, how does China succeed from being victimized by the US, unlike other Asian economies before it? How does it deal with the thuggish return of the 800-pound economic gorilla? By not caving in.<o:p></o:p>

If China caves in now to the current round of bashing from the US, it will create expectations and pressure on China to cave in again and again in the future. This will lead to unending pressure on the currency and ultimately economic dilemmas.<o:p></o:p>

Notwithstanding its well-known fiscal problems, the US economy is the juggernaut of production and innovation in the history of mankind. It is a pity that every time this economic juggernaut encounters successful international competition in manufacturing, it resorts to bullying against its own consumers' welfare and that of the working poor worldwide.<o:p></o:p>

Therefore, the US too needs to look inward. It has to rein in those special interest groups; it has to reform its tax system to encourage instead of discourage savings; it has to rationalize its Social Security and Medicare systems, which also discourage personal savings. Finally, it has to stop bashing and bullying successful international competitors. The world is catching on. After Japan and China, who will be next? India? Enough is enough.”

Unfortunately for the American people the dire truth of these things is, and as always, being kept from them by their media and political elite classes who fear the revolt of their people should the reality of what has been done to them is ever discovered.

The same cannot be said, however, about one of America’s longest and most powerful allies Taiwan, whose President, in seeing the <i style='mso-bidi-font-style:

normal'>“clouds of war” gathering, once again, over Asia, announced this morning that his Nation “will never ask the United States to help fight a war”, and which really means, “don’t ask us to help you fight your wars either.”

During the last century when our World, like today, stood on the brink of war amidst a shattered Global economy, perhaps the wisest man alive, Albert Einstein, uttered these words:

“He who joyfully marches to music in rank and file has already earned my contempt. He has been given a large brain by mistake, since for him the spinal cord would suffice.”<o:p></o:p>

Sadly for our World today, hardly anyone alive remembers this. [/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:14 PM (GMT)

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:15 PM (GMT)

Is Gulf oil rig disaster far worse than we're being told?

Saturday, May 08, 2010
by Mike Adams
http://www.naturalnews.com/028749_Gulf_of_..._oil_spill.html

Reports about the massive Gulf of Mexico oil spill have been largely underestimated, according to commentators, including Paul Noel, a Software Engineer for the U.S. Army at Redstone Arsenal in Alabama. He believes that the pocket of oil that's been hit is so powerful and under so much pressure that it may be virtually impossible to contain it. And Noel is not the only person questioning the scope of this disaster.

A recent story from the Christian Science Monitor (CSM) reports that many independent scientists believe the leak is spewing far more than the 5,000 barrels, or 210,000 gallons, per day being reported by most media sources. They believe the leak could be discharging up to 25,000 barrels (more than one million gallons) of crude oil a day right now.

The riser pipe that was bent and crimped after the oil rig sank is restricting some of the flow from the tapped oil pocket, but as the leaking oil rushes into the well's riser, it is forcing sand with it at very high speeds and "sand blasting" the pipe (which is quickly eroding its structural integrity).

According to a leaked National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration memo obtained by an Alabama newspaper, if the riser erodes any further and creates more leaks, up to 50,000 barrels, or 2.1 million gallons, per day of crude oil could begin flooding Gulf waters every day.

When this disaster first occurred, the media downplayed it. BP spokespersons were quick to claim that the leakage was minimal and that crews would eventually be able to contain it. But as time went on, it became clear that things were not under control and that the spill was far more serious than we were originally told. (Gee, sound familiar? Remember Katrina?)

Yet some of the media reports still seem more like press releases than actual reporting because they continue to repeat what the public relations cleanup crews (pun intended) would like the public to believe rather than what's actually happening. Reality, it seems, has a nasty habit of interfering with corporate spin.

Cap and trade becomes "cap and pray"
The New York Times yesterday reported that BP is working on a large containment dome that is intended to cap the leak and catch the escaping oil so that it can be safely pumped to the surface. Meanwhile, crews are said to be working on fixing the broken blow-out preventer valve that should have stopped the leak from happening in the first place, but they have been unsuccessful thus far.

Almost every report says that BP is doing everything it can to contain the spill and stop the leak, even though the company claims it is not technically at fault. According to an article from the U.K. Daily Mail, BP's CEO Tony Hayward recently responded to the cleanup efforts by explaining, "This is not our accident but it is our responsibility to deal with it."

Swiss-based Transocean is the company that actually owned and operated the sunken rig. It manned the rig with its own crew and BP just leased it from Transocean (which makes you wonder why BP is so willing to take full responsibility for everything).

BP says that it's working on a relief well, but that it could take up to three months to complete. Until then, the company is trying several different approaches to at least slow the leak and hopefully stop it altogether.

Mind you, almost all of the information about the spill from day one has come directly from BP which obviously has every incentive to downplay the true environmental destruction that could be caused by this oil spill.

Even the word "spill" is incorrect. This isn't some ship of oil that spilled into the ocean -- it's a "volcano" of oil spewing from the belly of Mother Earth herself. It's under extremely high pressure, it's spewing a huge volume of oil directly into the ocean, and there so far seems to be no human-engineered way of stopping it (short of setting off an underground nuclear bomb near the well site).

Addressing the unanswered questions

According to the CSM article, environmental risk models are normally performed for pollutants like crude oil, yet not one model has yet been released for this incident by BP or the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Many are wondering why this crucial information has not been made public. Could it be because the results of the model might seem too catastrophic?

Neither has there been an adequate explanation given for exactly why the oil rig exploded... twice! Some reports indicate that the crews responsible for properly cementing the well casing didn't do it right. Others suggest that the oil deposit was just too large and under too much pressure for the equipment to handle it. (Be careful where you poke around the planet if you can't handle what comes out, right?)

It's also important to note that, according to a recent New York Times article, Halliburton was actually the company responsible for all the cementing work on the rig, which brings a third party into the picture.

BP's federal permits allowed the company to drill up to 20,000 feet deep, but according to one of the workers who was onboard the rig during the explosion, drilling in excess of 22,000 feet had been taking place. This same worker is said to handle company records for BP, but BP has denied these allegations.

BP has declined to comment, however, on other allegations that the spill happened because it chose not to install necessary deep-water valves which would have acted as a last resort seal of protection in the event of an emergency.

Several other allegations include suspicions that the crews allowed gas to build up in the well bore and that the rig operator tried to detach too quickly from the well, causing a disruption.

BP, Halliburton and Transocean have all indicated that they are continuing to investigate the situation. When companies investigate themselves, however, the truth rarely comes out.

The possibility of an extinction event?
It's hard to say exactly what's going on in the Gulf right now, especially because there are so many conflicting reports and unanswered questions. But one thing's for sure: if the situation is actually much worse than we're being led to believe, there could be worldwide catastrophic consequences.

If it's true that millions upon millions of gallons of crude oil are flooding the Gulf with no end in sight, the massive oil slicks being created could make their way into the Gulf Stream currents, which would carry them not only up the East Coast but around the world where they could absolutely destroy the global fishing industries.

Already these slicks are making their way into Gulf wetlands and beaches where they are destroying birds, fish, and even oyster beds. This is disastrous for both the seafood industry and the people whose livelihoods depend on it. It's also devastating to the local wildlife which could begin to die off from petroleum toxicity. Various ecosystems around the world could be heavily impacted by this spill in ways that we don't even yet realize.

There's no telling where this continuous stream of oil will end up and what damage it might cause. Theoretically, we could be looking at modern man's final act of destruction on planet Earth, because this one oil rig blowout could set in motion a global extinction wave that begins with the oceans and then whiplashes back onto human beings themselves.

We cannot live without life in the oceans. Man is arrogant to drill so deeply into the belly of Mother Earth, and through this arrogance, we may have just set in motion events that will ultimately destroy us. In the future, we may in fact talk about life on Earth as "pre-spill" versus "post-spill." Because a post-spill world may be drowned in oil, devoid of much ocean life, and suffering a global extinction event that will crash the human population by 90 percent or more.

We may have just done to ourselves, in other words, what a giant meteorite did to the dinosaurs.

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:30 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed width="400" height="340" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=2948b3960b8f6b82e74" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:30 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=itanItp-8w0

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/itanItp-8w0&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/itanItp-8w0&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:31 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=n00OLX7cwh4

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/n00OLX7cwh4&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/n00OLX7cwh4&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:33 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=puE5aN8T5Cw

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/puE5aN8T5Cw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/puE5aN8T5Cw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:35 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GTZZPErqvHE

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/GTZZPErqvHE&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/GTZZPErqvHE&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 12:53 PM (GMT)

Map For Sunday May 9
http://deepwaterhorizon.noaa.gov/bookshelf...-05-08-1200.pdf

Map For Monday May 10
http://deepwaterhorizon.noaa.gov/bookshelf...-05-08-1200.pdf

Map For Tuesday May 11
http://deepwaterhorizon.noaa.gov/bookshelf...-05-08-1200.pdf

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 01:00 PM (GMT)

CONTAINMENT BOX FAILS TO CONTAIN GULF OIL SPILL Quote

BP Exec: Oil Leak Containment Box "Didn't Work" Contraption Had to be Moved Away from Leak Site after Icelike Crystals Formed Inside

http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2010/05/08/...in6469495.shtml

(CBS/AP) Icelike crystals encrusting a 100-ton steel-and-concrete box meant to contain oil gushing from a broken well deep in the Gulf of Mexico forced crews Saturday to back off a long-shot plan to contain the leak.

The latest problem for BP comes as about a half dozen tar balls are washing up on an Alabama island.

Coast Guard chief warrant officer Adam Wine said the tar balls had been collected by Saturday afternoon at Dauphin Island. He says the substance needs to be tested, but officials think it came from the oil spill.

Complete Coverage: Disaster in the Gulf

The buildup on the specially constructed containment box made it too buoyant and clogged it up, BP chief operating officer Doug Suttles said. Workers who had carefully lowered the massive box over the leak nearly a mile below the surface had to lift it and move it to the side. Now they're trying to unplug it while they look at other solutions.

More than 200,000 gallons of crude have spewed into the Gulf since a rig exploded April 20, killing 11. The containment box, a method never before attempted at such depths, had been considered the best hope of stanching the flow in the short term.

"I wouldn't say it's failed yet," Suttles said. "What I would say is what we attempted to do last night didn't work."

The blowout was triggered by a bubble of methane gas that escaped from the well and shot up the drill column, expanding quickly as it burst through several seals and barriers before exploding, according to interviews with rig workers conducted during BP's internal investigation.

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 01:02 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed width="400" height="340" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=d0f12098f486e7e8a0f" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<embed width="400" height="340" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=4869a7a5d9e4d0e1689" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 01:05 PM (GMT)

CLEANMAG technology introduction / cleaning oil spills with magnetic material.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/S1zDYRVMdCI&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/S1zDYRVMdCI&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/4h2OC50hS1Q&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/4h2OC50hS1Q&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/_af1BUkCmZg&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/_af1BUkCmZg&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/EF3bHeY24iI&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/EF3bHeY24iI&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="400" height="340"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 04:04 PM (GMT)

The new financial system now supposed to start on May 11th but believe it when you see it.

by benjamin fulford
May 4, 2010

A new dollar to replace the US dollar is going to be introduced on May 11th, according to a senior CIA source. Other sources, including linked to the Chinese politburo, the Japanese secret government and the British Royal family have all said something big and good is imminent. However, we have seen so many deadlines come and go that we shall continue to believe only what we see. Fortunately, there is plenty out there to show the New World Order really is coming down.

The most important sign remains the criminal investigation of Goldman Sachs. This is a frontal attack on Wall Street and the Feds. The wheels of justice grind slowly but they grind to dust. The Europeans are now also considering bringing criminal and civil charges against Goldman for helping Greece cook its government books. There is an awful lot I could say about Goldman's activities in Japan too but, because of promises made to Japanese underworld sources, I will keep my Japan Goldman file as insurance and not have it made public unless I die.

In any case, this probe is not about Goldman Sachs so much as it is about the entire Western banking system. The audit of the Federal Reserve Board that is now under way is now expected to go all the way back to 1916, when the Federal Reserve Board first went into business (The act creating the Fed was passed in 1913 but did not go into force until 1916).

As a sign of more to come, Deutschebank offices have been raided in Germany, England and the Netherlands as part of a probe of fraudulent CO2 trading. The corporate press and the blogosphere are now going into pack feeding frenzy mode as it finally appears safe to target the previously taboo. They will not have to dig far before they uncover an awful lot of dirt.

In a sign of the increasing isolation of the Washington D.C. corporation, the Europeans have been making many public statements in recent days about the need to totally revamp the global financial system: The head of the European Central Bank told my former employer Forbes magazine of the need for global financial governance; President Sarkozy of Francewas in China promising to work together on "global monetary reform;" and the President of the European Commission was in Japan and China meeting with the Emperor and Chinese leaders discussing the "financial crisis."

ECB President Favors Global Governance

Sarkozy and Hu bury hatchet in Beijing talks

Chinese President holds talks with European Commission President in Shanghai

We also confirmed, from our sources that reports the British royalty have asked the politicians in Washington to leave the 10 square British property known as Washington D.C. are correct. It is doubtful this order will be obeyed but it is one more piece of evidence to show the increasing isolation of the Federal Reserve Board crime syndicate.

There are also signs of military moves to fill the vacuum expected to be created when the Pentagon begins to evacuate many of the 800 or so overseas military bases it will soon not be able to pay for. The biggest sign was the Japanese self-defense forces creating Japan's first overseas base since World War 2. The base is being set up in Djibouti to protect shipping from the Middle East.

The Russians also held giant naval exercises in the Sea of Japan in what seems to be a signal to the Japanese that "we both have an interest in containing China." Ever since Obama went to China last year to propose the US and China create a G2, the Japanese have begun to doubt if the US would really go to war with China to save them. That is why they are now probing the possibility of allying themselves with India, Russia and other countries that actually have borders with China.

The North Koreans also seem to be ratcheting up the pressure on South Korea to come up with a peace agreement. Sorcha Faal, the US Naval Intelligence information/disinformation site, claims it was the North Koreans who blew up the oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico. Our source in China linked to the politburo confirmed this, saying the new North Korean regime has decided to "display its strength, bravery and determination." Since North Korea and South Korea are technically at war, North Korea is actually allowed to carry out such acts of sabotage. Other sources believe it was the Bush/ Nazi faction that blew up the oil rig to spite the British and create distraction from their troubles. However, since North Korea has worked closely with this faction in the past, the two scenarios are not mutually contradictory.

There many similar signs of high-level preparations for change. For example, last week the head of the UN and the Bank of Japan•among others, called for the release and funding of “green energy technology.” There are many actual concrete new energy technology deals in the works that we are aware of but will not yet write about in order to prevent sabotage.

Meanwhile, in Japan secret government sources continue to say the Prime Minister Hatoyama will probably resign this month and be replaced by Finance Minister Naoto Kan. I know Kan quite well and am quite sure he is not a Federal Reserve Board puppet. However, it remains to be seen if he has what it takes to reboot Japan’s financial system.

The Liberal Democratic Party that ruled Japan since the end of World War 2 is rapidly falling apart and efforts to create a new, viable right-leaning party are proceeding rapidly. Japanese power brokers are planning to revamp the political system sometime after the upper house elections due July 11th. Their hope is to create a new dominant umbrella party containing various factions much like the LDP did in its heyday.

No matter what though, the days of Japan being a Federal Reserve Board/New World Order colony are coming to an end.
The various global power brokers this writer has talked to have said there will not be any special announcements of a sudden change in how the world is governed. Instead, they say it will take place in bits and pieces and is exactly how events appear to be unfolding. There can be no doubt to any but the most brainwashed that historical changes are happening at an accelerating rate.

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 04:08 PM (GMT)

The reporter was about to say the containment dome was clogged with hydrates. He said BP expected hydrate in the pipe itself and was prepared for that but wasn't prepared for hydrates to clog the dome itself.

Just as he was about to say it, his audio was cut. When he finished the sentence audio was restored. He again went to reiterate and again the audio was cut. After he said it again, audio was restored.

Someone censored what he said.

Reason is this. If the containment dome was clogged with methane hydrates it shows the amount of gas escaping is far greater then what we are being told.

This more a methane gas doom then it is an oil doom!

-Anonymous

> QUOTE
>
> I just witnessed this myself and I posted it to the 2 pinned oil threads.
> The reporter was intentionally cut off because the news is being censored. This is a very big coverup now. This is what I posted to the pinned threads. "In the middle of Fox News at 11 a.m., the reporter got cut off right in the middle of the containment box story. The anchor then said "BP has hope the box will be able to cap the leak that is coming up from the sea floor"
>
> -anonymous II

craig-oxley - May 9, 2010 04:13 PM (GMT)

Greetings,

I have mentioned it before and I still hold it is valid. Sunday May 16th is when The World will wake up to the extent of this mess.

When you hear BP begin to point fingers at Trans-ocean the helplessness of the situation will be intertwined with every news release.

You may or may not be aware of the coercive waivers the survivors were forced to sign. It is interesting that part of the waiver includes denying being a first hand witness to what happened.

Think about this. If a first hand witness is forced to sign something saying he is NOT a first hand witness, how does anyone expect that the truth will be presented?

This week all eyes will remain on the Market, The Volcano and other things of this nature. By next Friday the "Fat Boys" will have their toys in place. Sunday the 16th an announcement. Monday the 17th a Market crash and closure followed by "limited" Martial Law as a run up to total lock-down.

The Wetlands are a highly important filter. They are about to become trashed but their NEED will still be there. No one is talking about the true Domino effect this disaster will cause.

The 16th will mark the two week countdown to Hurricane Season in an already predicted heavy season.

Most of us on the Gulf Coast know how to deal with incoming storms. Generally, a CAT 4 or 5 will get some of us to jump on I10 or I45 and bug out for a bit.

A small Tropical Storm can do a lot of damage in an oil soaked Gulf.

Best of luck to us all.

This thread speaks of censorship which was first established with the coercive waivers and let us know what to expect. Spoon fed "facts" until THEY are ready.

Regards

JimmyK

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Silenced: TWA 800 and the Subversion of Justice

Title: Silenced: TWA 800 and the Subversion of Justice
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 02:43 AM (GMT)

Silenced: TWA 800 and the Subversion of Justice

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/U4XB_plw9S0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/U4XB_plw9S0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: TWA 800 - The Search For The Truth [Vd]

Title: TWA 800 - The Search For The Truth [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 02:42 AM (GMT)

TWA 800 - The Search For The Truth

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/7mZQ4v6Hlww&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/7mZQ4v6Hlww&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: WTF Charlie Veitch???

Title: WTF Charlie Veitch???
Description: [A SHILL]

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 01:22 AM (GMT)

WTF Charlie Veitch???

June 30, 2011 by POPEYE
http://www.federaljack.com/?p=50134

(FEDERALJACK) Back in 2008, while at Harvard Law School, Cass Sunstein co-wrote a paper titled “Conspiracy Theories: Causes and Cures” proposing that the U.S. Government employ teams of covert agents and “independent” advocates to “cognitively infiltrate” online groups and websites, as well as other activist groups that have “anti-government conspiracy theories” and his primary target is the 9/11 Truth Movement. Cass Sunstein now works for the Obama Administration. This brings us back to today. The founder of the Love Police Charlie Veitch has released a new video where he says he no longer believes 9/11 was an inside job.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nMopKnT_V5c&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nMopKnT_V5c&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nMopKnT_V5c

In this new video, made just 11 days after Charlie attended an event his girlfriend helped organize, that brought Richard Gage from AE911Truth to Cambridge University, we see and hear Charlie say after 5 years he has changed his mind and he doesn’t think 9/11 was an inside job. He thinks the Government was caught with “their pants around their ankles” just like the official conspiracy theory. Along with the video Charlie included a brief description:

My anarchism and libertarian mindset has strengthened.

So I've spent 5 years listening to the conspiratorial view – then I got the opportunity to grill the historical/accidental view of 9/11 proponents.

Where I stand now is that America's defenses got caught with their pants around their ankles. I do not think there was high level evil complicity in the events of that day. Yes, I have changed my mind.

To change one's mind when presented with evidence that contradicts one's mind, is to be scientific, logical and rational. The CIA fucked up. No-one got fired. Condi Rice lied to the commission. Bush and Cheney would not testify under oath. No-one wants to take the blame for the incompetence that killed over 3,000 people.

So to be clear Charlie is filming his own TV show and he suddenly decides after 5 years that 9/11 was just as the government said it was all along. Does anyone else smell bullshit?! Another truth seeker and radio host MistrBrit has confirmed by calling Charlie directly, that this is not a joke or a test of some sort.

Screen Shot of MistrBrit's youtube channel comments.

Very simply put… WTF Charlie?

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 02:12 AM (GMT)

[DOHTML]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nyuIeZw8dss?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nyuIeZw8dss?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/DOHTML]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 10:47 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mojsgRl_0Gg&feature=related

[dohtml]<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/M0qdZANdKnQ?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mojsgRl_0Gg?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 10:49 PM (GMT)

Charlie Veitch is a sell-out and a coward

30 June 2011 608 views 10 Comments http://empirestrikesblack.com/2011/06/char...t-and-a-coward/

By Martin Iqbal.

I deliberated briefly on exactly what the title of this article would be. ‘British activist performs inexplicable u-turn on 9/11′? ‘Leader of ‘The Love Police’ given TV show, suddenly drops 9/11 truth’? But indeed the deliberation was brief; there’s no reason to beat around the bush. Charlie Veitch is a sell-out and a self-serving coward. Or maybe he’s just a gullible idiot of the highest order.

Veitch, who came to prominence with his activist group The Love Police, tells us that he grew up in lots of different places all over the world and had to move often – every time his father “got another job in the oil industry”. Nevertheless, he had a “very pleasant family life,” with parents who nurtured him and provided him with “unconditional love”. Veitch claims to “search for the truth” and he assures us that it “lives inside (him) somewhere“. Aside from enlightening us on his enchanting childhood, the About page over at cveitch.org spells outs his (former) opinion on 9/11:

Even my father, a conservative-hawk who watches Sky News and has old fashioned views supporting the Empire, now sees that September 11th was not as explained. I wasn’t there, and most probably you, the reader, were not there in Manhattan that day, but like the Swine Flu scare, we have no reason to trust the lies of the governments when we can see with our own eyes a building demolished and blown to pyroclastic smithereens…

But now, after starting to film his own TV show, Veitch has suddenly decided that 9/11 wasn’t an inside job. The following video chronicles his u-turn:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nMopKnT_V5c?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.

youtube.com/v/nMopKnT_V5c?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

So, a mere 19 days after filming himself talking about how he was convinced that 9/11 was a false flag after seeing the “scientific evidence”, he does a complete 180. He tells us that he’s spoken to ‘engineers, demolition experts, aviation experts‘ and that he’s been ‘exploring the kinetic energy of Boeing 767s slamming into buildings‘. His unnamed experts have apparently explained to him how these planes can be “controlled very easily at any altitude” (why do we even bother training pilots?). Veitch now thinks that this ‘kinetic energy release’ is to blame for the World Trade Center being reduced to dust in seconds. I won’t waste any time on this illogical, birdbrained argument; over 1,500 verified architectural and engineering professionals have already constructed a cogent explanation of how and why the (three) buildings came down. Veitch’s moronic argument doesn’t account for the molten steel. It doesn’t account for the innumerable accounts of explosions occurring before and during the collapses, and even before the impact of the planes. I could go on all night.

Maybe Veitch is tired of living off of Daddy’s money and wants his TV show to work out. One thing is for sure: he wouldn’t have a cat in hell’s chance of getting it off the ground without abandoning any link to 9/11 truth first.

Coward? Without a doubt. The only question that remains is whether this moron is a paid shill, or whether he’s selling out the truth for his shot at ‘success’. Or perhaps he’s simply as dumb as he looks.

Bonus: watch below for a short clip of that ‘Boeing kinetic energy‘ in action. Except that this building wasn’t graced by a Boeing. But that’s not important. It’s kinetic innit.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/LD06SAf0p9A?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/LD06SAf0p9A?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

~ empirestrikesblack | Follow @nit2am on Twitter

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 10:50 PM (GMT)

Charlie Veitch Is Either An Idiot Or A Bought And Paid For Shill

June 29, 2011
By Lee Rogers
http://www.roguegovernment.com/Charlie_Vei.../23/23/Y/M.html

Charlie Veitch a prominent so-called truth activist is now claiming in a YouTube video that he believes the official government theory as to why the Twin Towers collapsed on September 11th, 2001. He claims that he talked to unnamed structural engineers and controlled demolition experts that have convinced him of this but does not reveal specifically who these people are. • Despite the fact that basic common sense and High School physics proves that these buildings could not have collapsed at free fall speed due to the impact of a plane, he is now trying to convince his brainwashed followers otherwise.

It is extremely odd that this character came out of no where as a prominent figure at both the recent G20 protests in Toronto and the Royal Wedding in the UK. In fact he was preemptively arrested prior to the Royal Wedding which now appears to have been an entirely staged event. It is also funny to see how Veitch has the time and money to travel all around the world to attend protests and meet with structural engineers and demolition experts. Who the hell has the time and money to be a full time activist like this guy appears to be? Travel is not cheap these days, but whoever is helping this guy with travel expenses probably has deep pockets and/or resources like an intelligence organization or a government.

Either way, it now seems obvious as to why he was sold as a prominent figure at these protests, because his recent comments on 9/11 prove that he is probably a bought and paid for operative of the establishment. If he's not that, than he's simply an idiot. In the same video he talks about how the government has lied so many times, yet he is now willing to believe them on the issue of the Twin Towers collapse. This is the point of view one would expect to see from a person who is either not using their brain or has an agenda. Veitch is simply attempting to get people to re-engage in a more mainstream thought process that gives credibility back to the power structure that is the United States government. But let's face the facts, if he was really being honest, he would have specifically mentioned who these engineers and experts were in his video. He did not do this, nor did he provide any sort of real specific evidence from these people that caused him to change his mind on this issue.

This fiasco also answers the question as to why fellow bought and paid for operative Alex Jones has heavily promoted this clown and his Love Police organization. Veitch's video can be viewed below.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ezHNdBE5pZc?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ezHNdBE5pZc?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 10:52 PM (GMT)

Charlie Veitch sells his soul to the Devil or in other words the BBC

Simon Murphy – Sovereign Independent http://www.sovereignindependent.com/?p=22626

Charlie Veitch accepted an all expenses paid trip to the US to Re-Educate himself on 911. He now rejects the so called “conspiracy theory” for the official “conspiracy theory” that’s touted by the US administration. It’s worth saying that Luke Rudkowski and others were offered to do this for the BBC before Charlie and they decided to tell them to Jump in a lake. It’s a real shame that someone like Charlie can fall for money and maybe fame to compromise their principles.

Hey Charlie, has no one ever told you that you can’t be inserted back into The Matrix? Ignorance is bliss and all that, eh?

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/rZsCsHa8XJk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/rZsCsHa8XJk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/feMQ6wpH2Ck?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/feMQ6wpH2Ck?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/rUSRA4xmzrs?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/rUSRA4xmzrs?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 11:14 PM (GMT)

Scrub The Internet of Charlie Veitch

July 4, 2011 by POPEYE
http://www.federaljack.com/?p=58237

(FEDERALJACK) As we all know by now the founder of the Love Police, Charlie Veitch, has come out and publicly stated on his youtube channel that he does not believe 9/11 was an inside job and he is now pushing the official government conspiracy theory about that awful day. Charlie’s massive change of mind and actions since have really pissed off his base of listeners. Most of the comments on his video are telling him off, calling him out, calling him names and some have even gone to the extent of threatening his life, which I don't condone and that kind of crap makes us look bad. Aside from the stupid death threats I believe the anger is justified because people really believed in him. This should serve as a lesson to people in the future, do not put anyone up on a pedestal, follow nobody. You can listen to people, and agree with what they say or don't say, but don't just blindly follow anyone because they say the right things. Do your own homework, in fact don't even believe me, think to yourself "he must be exaggerating, I gotta check this out for myself".

The one question that has bugged me is this: Was he a plant all along or did he just sell out? I have to honestly say I don't know for sure which one is the answer, but if I had to make an educated guess I would say he was a plant. To better understand why I say this and why he would have been planted in the 9/11 Truth Movement I suggest you read former Harvard Professor and now Obama Czar Cass Sunstein's paper on "Conspiracy Theories" and the 9/11 Truth movement in particular titled "Conspiracy Theories: Causes and Cures" proposing that the U.S. Government employ teams of covert agents and "independent" advocates to "cognitively infiltrate" online groups and websites, as well as other activist groups that have "anti-government conspiracy theories" and his primary target is the 9/11 Truth Movement. It is also important to note that in 2010 a British "Domestic Extremism Expert" Jamie Bartlett of a think-tank called DEMOS wrote a very similar paper called "The Power of Unreason", which attempts to link 'conspiracy theories' to extremism, arguing that such 'theories' are a 'force magnifier' for terrorism. The paper recommends that, "Government agents or their allies should openly infiltrate the Internet sites or spaces to plant doubts about conspiracy theories and by introducing alternative information." Veitch's comment that he saw no evidence for controlled demolition is refuted by the fact that only weeks ago he and his girlfriend setup a speaking event for Richard Gage of Architects & Engineers For 9/11 Truth at Cambridge University. And his entire argument supporting the official government conspiracy theory of 9/11 is a joke at best. His "new" evidence is the same garbage that NIST has been presenting for years, he can not factually, with scientific evidence, back up the crap that he is now spewing at all. If Charlie did truly just have a change of mind then why do interviews and Skype calls labeling the 9/11 Truth Movement a cult? To create division, doubt, and make the movement as whole look foolish to outsiders that's why. The idea is to make the movement look foolish to people who are just waking up or haven't done so yet, and it serves to be a catalyst for infighting inside the movement itself, if we let it… but we won't. People who considered themselves friends with Veitch need to put their personal feelings aside and figure out for themselves that they and the movement have been had. The sooner they admit it, the sooner we can deal with it and get over it like a bad relationship.

This is going to be used against us by the establishment no matter what, it is how we deal with it that is what is important. As Charlie says in his Skype call with Max Igan, he is working with the BBC on a piece on 9/11. This TV piece is actually going to be a total hit piece about 9/11 Truth and I have interviewed Jim Fetzer about this as well as Alex Jones being interviewed by the BBC and saying on his radio show that it is going to be a hit piece. So I have been doing allot of thinking about how to handle this. After consulting with some high profile members of this vast movement I decided to write this piece to share our idea for combating the problem that is Charlie Veitch's backstabbing. The idea actually came from monitoring the people's reaction to Charlie's video and interviews, over 1500 videos pulled from the internet in a single day. These were videos people had uploaded of Charlie, or their own Love Police street actions. Let's follow suit. Delete any videos you have of Veitch, any articles, tagged photos, anything. Make the memory of Charlie Veitch go the way of the dinosaur….. extinct. If everyone can scrub all records of Veitch and the "Love Police" from the web the only thing people will hear are his own cries to be heard. As Samuel Adams said "If ye love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude than the animated contest of freedom, go from us in peace. We ask not your counsels or arms. Crouch down and lick the hands which feed you. May your chains sit lightly upon you, and may posterity forget that you were our countrymen!"

deadpeoplestuff - July 18, 2011 10:28 PM (GMT)

I know this is old news now...but I thought I should share this (for those who may have missed it) - but if anyone wishes to buy into 'I just changed my mind on 9/11' but I'm still loveable 'old Charlie' and behind you all the way - then you might want to take a look at this.

Observe the background of these Veitch uploads, not that you will be left in any doubt about this busted agent...

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nce7enlUIWI&NR=1

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Gun-smuggling cartel figures possibly were paid

Title: Gun-smuggling cartel figures possibly were paid
Description: FBI informants

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:16 AM (GMT)

Gun-smuggling cartel figures possibly were paid FBI informants

Los Angeles Times
Sunday, July 17, 2011
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...es-richard.html

Probe reveals that the U.S. agency running the 'Fast and Furious' anti-gun-trafficking operation didn't know about the alleged FBI informants. Congressional investigators are looking into the matter.

Reporting from Washington—Congressional investigators probing the controversial "Fast and Furious" anti-gun-trafficking operation on the border with Mexico believe at least six Mexican drug cartel figures involved in gun smuggling also were paid FBI informants, officials said Saturday.

The investigators have asked the FBI and the Drug Enforcement Administration for details about the alleged informants, as well as why agents at the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, which ran the Fast and Furious operation, were not told about them.

Suspected members of the Zeta drug cartel are arrested in Guadalajara.
Weapons also were seized.

The development raises further doubts about the now-shuttered program, which was created in November 2009 in an effort to track guns across the border and unravel the cartels' gun smuggling networks. The gun tracing largely failed, however, and hundreds of weapons purchased in U.S. shops later were found at crime scenes in Mexico.

The scandal has angered Mexican officials and some members of Congress. Investigators say nearly 2,500 guns were allowed to flow illegally into Mexico under the ATF program, fueling the drug violence ravaging that country and leading to the shooting death of a U.S. border agent.

In a letter to FBI Director Robert S. Mueller III, the investigators asked why U.S. taxpayers' money apparently was paid to Mexican cartel members who have terrorized the border region for years in their efforts to smuggle drugs into this country, and to ship U.S. firearms into Mexico.

"We have learned of the possible involvement of paid FBI informants in Operation Fast and Furious," wrote Rep. Darrel Issa (R-Vista), chairman of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, and Sen. Charles E. Grassley of Iowa, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee. The two have been the leading congressional critics of the program.

"At least one individual who is allegedly an FBI informant might have been in communication with, and was perhaps even conspiring with, at least one suspect whom ATF was monitoring," they wrote.

The FBI and DEA did not tell the ATF about the alleged informants. The ATF and congressional investigators learned later that those agencies apparently were paying cartel members whom the ATF wanted to arrest.

"Operation Fast and Furious was conceived to get some of the bigger fish down there," said one official close to the congressional investigation, who asked not to be identified because the probe is ongoing. "Then it turned out that some of the ones they were zeroing in on actually, mostly likely were paid informants."

The official said at least half a dozen cartel figures were being paid by one U.S. law enforcement agency while they were being targeted by another.

"We are learning more about them, and there are six so far that we know about. It's multiples, for sure," the official said.

The official declined to identify the six, but said the individual cited in the letter to the FBI operated along the Texas border with Mexico.

"This guy could die if it got out who he is," the official said. "He'd be killed."

The FBI and DEA referred queries Saturday to the Department of Justice. Officials there said they cannot talk about paid informants, but are attempting to answer the questions from Issa and Grassley.

They noted that they already have provided thousands of pages of documents to Congress, and have answered questions in sworn depositions and open hearings.

"We have been cooperating, and we will continue to cooperate," said an Obama administration official. "We want to learn as much as we can about Fast and Furious, just as they do."

The ATF ran the Fast and Furious operation out of its field office in Phoenix until early this year. The idea was to monitor illegal purchases in federally licensed U.S. gun shops, but allow the illicit buyers to walk away with the weapons, giving ATF agents the opportunity to learn how the guns are smuggled across the border.

But many of their gun tracing efforts failed, and hundreds of firearms purchased under the program were used to commit crimes in Mexico.

In addition, two AK-47s purchased during the operation were found at the scene last December where U.S. Border Patrol Agent Brian A. Terry was shot to death near Tucson, allegedly by a Sinaloa cartel member.

A second U.S. immigration agent, Jaime Zapata, was slain in a cartel ambush in February in Mexico, and investigators now are trying to determine whether Fast and Furious weapons were used to kill him as well.

In the letter to Mueller, the senators asked if Zapata was armed when he was killed and "if not, why not?" They also asked if his vehicle was bulletproof, and if so, "how was he killed inside of the vehicle?"

They also asked how many cartel members were paid, if any of the informants had been deported from the United States, and if FBI personnel in Arizona knew of the informants.

The Republican leaders asked to see all "emails, documents, memoranda, briefing papers, and handwritten notes" from and to FBI and DEA field supervisors and agents in Phoenix, Tucson, Nogales and Yuma in Arizona, and in El Paso, Texas.

They are seeking the same material from the FBI case agent investigating Terry's death.

Zapata's family also is seeking answers. Relatives of the slain immigration agent sent a letter June 14 to the U.S. attorney's office in South Texas, the top FBI official in San Antonio, and several U.S. immigration officials, "requesting information about the specific circumstances of Jaime Zapata's death."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New doubts over crucial evidence in Lockerbie tria

Title: New doubts over crucial evidence in Lockerbie tria

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:14 AM (GMT)

New doubts over crucial evidence in Lockerbie trial

HeraldScotland
Sunday, July 17, 2011
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...vidence-in.html

A prosecution expert misled judges at the Lockerbie trial about key evidence, according to a classified police memo obtained by the Sunday Herald.
Pan Am Flight 103 was blown up over the Scottish border town on December 21, 1988, killing 270 people.

The trial of the two Libyan men accused of the bombing began in May 2000, in front of a Scottish court set up in the Netherlands. During the trial, Dr Thomas Hayes, an expert witness for the prosecution, testified that a fragment allegedly from the bomb's timer had not been tested for explosive residues.

However, according to the memo, tests were in fact carried out – and proved negative.

The revelation comes as the Scottish Parliament's Justice Committee prepares to consider calls for a public inquiry into the conviction in 2001 of Abdelbaset al-Megrahi.

Campaigners believe he was wrongly convicted of the Lockerbie bombing, and accuse the police and Crown Office of concealing evidence that might have cleared him.

Forensic evidence suggested that the fragment, known as PT/35, was part of a timer supplied to Libyan intelligence by the Swiss company Mebo. Mebo's offices were shared by a company co-owned by Megrahi.

According to the prosecution, the timer and the explosive were hidden in a Toshiba radio-cassette player which Megrahi packed into a suitcase along with clothing.

Hayes was employed by the Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment (RARDE), linked to the UK Ministry of Defence. Scientists from the RARDE were involved in examining material found at the Lockerbie crash scene.

Hayes told the trial in June 2000 that he did not test PT/35, or a fragment of Toshiba circuit board, for explosive residues because it was clear from their appearance that they were bomb-damaged.

He added that the chances of finding residues were “vanishingly small”, but acknowledged that residues had been found on pieces of aircraft debris, and that test results for other items were not disclosed.

A previously secret memo, dated April 3, 1990, describes a visit to the Lockerbie investigation by French police officers examining the 1989 bombing of a French airliner in Niger. The memo states that Detective Superintendent Stuart Henderson, senior investigating officer, told the French delegation “that the piece of PCB [printed circuit board] from the Toshiba [cassette player] bore no trace of explosive contamination and that this was due to the total consummation of the explosive material. Similarly with PT/35, the item was negative in regard to explosive traces”.

It is not known whether Hayes knew of the tests alluded to in the memo, and there is no suggestion that he deliberately misled the court. Henderson did not testify at the trial, and there is no suggestion that he acted improperly.

Christine Grahame, SNP MSP and convener of the Justice Committee, said yesterday: “This adds to the growing body of evidence that Megrahi’s conviction, if it was placed before the appeal court today, would not stand the test of being proven beyond reasonable doubt.”

Calls for a public enquiry have been led by the campaign group Justice for Megrahi. Group member Dr Jim Swire, whose daughter Flora died in the Lockerbie bombing, said yesterday: “At the end of Megrahi’s trial, PT/35 stood out for me as being shrouded in a cloud of anomalies. Everything that I’ve learned since then has added to my suspicion that there was something very wrong.”

The trial court heard that Hayes found the fragment in May 1989 in the collar of a blast-damaged shirt. However, his laboratory notes and the collar’s police evidence label were inexplicably altered, and other official documents gave the date of discovery as January 1990.

Hayes’s employer, the RARDE, was involved in a string of miscarriages of justice in the 1970s and 1980s. In 1990, Hayes and senior colleagues were criticised by former appeal court judge Sir John May in his report on the Maguire Seven case, in which individuals had been charged with handling explosives linked to the IRA. Sir John said they knew of evidence pointing to the innocence of the accused yet failed to inform the court.

After seeing PT/35, Mebo's owner, Edwin Bollier, said it was from a prototype circuit board that was never part of a functioning timer.

The police memo was one of hundreds of documents appended to the 800-page report into Megrahi's conviction produced by the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission. However, its potential significance was apparently overlooked.

The Crown Office would not comment directly on the memo. In a joint statement with Dumfries and Galloway Police, which led the Lockerbie investigation, it said: "The only appropriate forum for the determination of guilt or innocence is the criminal court. Mr Megrahi was convicted unanimously … following trial and his conviction was upheld unanimously by five judges in an appeal court."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CIA Knowingly Released False TWA 800 Video, Report

Title: CIA Knowingly Released False TWA 800 Video, Report
Description: Directly to President Clinton

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:00 AM (GMT)

CIA Knowingly Released False TWA 800 Video, Reported Directly to President Clinton

July 16, 2011
http://flight800.org/pr_rel_7_16_11.htm

Within recently obtained CIA emails, agents admit that their video produced to explain eyewitness accounts from the 1996 crash of TWA Flight 800 did not match the evidence. In one email, an agent states that the video "could not possible (sic) match the radar data" that recorded the aircraft as it fell to the ocean.

In another, an agent discusses briefing then FBI Director Louis Freeh and President Clinton. The National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) is by law, the government's lead agency in investigating commercial airline disasters. The CIA video did not "accommodate" NTSB-imposed time constraints on the crash sequence, according to a CIA agent in yet another email.

TWA Flight 800 crashed off the coast of Long Island, New York fifteen years ago on July 17, 1996. The FBI interviewed 182 eyewitnesses who reported seeing a rising streak of light near the jetliner before it exploded in midair. Some said the streak collided with the aircraft.

The FBI tasked a small group at the CIA to explain these eyewitness accounts. On November 18, 1997 the FBI released a CIA-produced video at a nationally televised press conference. The video showed the jetliner breaking in half and then the larger half that included the wings climbing sharply 3,000 feet. The CIA narrator said this "may have looked like a missile attacking an aircraft".

In August of 1999, the Flight 800 Independent Researchers Organization (FIRO) showed how the CIA video did not match the radar evidence during a nationally televised press conference. The radar evidence indicated that the jetliner did not climb, but rather banked left and descended immediately after exploding.

On July 15, 2011, FIRO Chairman Dr. Tom Stalcup sued the CIA in federal court for more documents and information regarding the CIA's participation in the investigation of TWA Flight 800.

Contact
Dr. Tom Stalcup
Chairman, Flight 800 Independent Researchers Organization
Sandwich, MA
Flight800.org
774-392-0856

Flight800.org

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 ANNOUNCEMENT: Long-awaited International

Title: 9/11 ANNOUNCEMENT: Long-awaited International Description: Hearings Set for September 2011

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 01:06 AM (GMT)

9/11 ANNOUNCEMENT: Long-awaited International Hearings Set for September, 2011

Thursday, July 14, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/07/911-an...ng-awaited.html

Toronto Hearings

From: The International Hearings on the Events of September 11, 2001
To: All those concerned about the events of September 11, 2001

Four days of international hearings (September 8-11, 2011) will be held at Ryerson University in Toronto on the tenth anniversary of this pivotal event.

The events of September 11 have provided a pretext for a War on Terror that has replaced the Cold War as a global conflict framework within which military invasions and occupations have taken place.

The focus on military solutions to complex human problems has sidetracked humanity at the very moment when peaceful interaction is needed to address genuine challenges facing humanity.

Objectives of the Hearings:

(1) To present evidence that the U.S. government's official investigation into the events of September 11, 2001 is seriously flawed and has failed to describe and account for the 9/11 events.

(2) To single out the most weighty evidence of the inadequacy of the U.S. government's investigation; to organize, classify, preserve, and publicize that evidence;

(3) To submit a record and a summary of the Hearings, together with signed Statutory Declarations by witnesses, to relevant governments, groups and international agencies with the request that a full and impartial investigation be launched into the events of September 11, 2001

(4) To engage the attention of the public and media through witness testimony as well as through public talks and media events during the four day event.

Expert witnesses and scholars from the independent 9/11 research community will include:

David Chandler, mathematician; Jon Cole, engineer; Richard Gage, architect; former U. S. Senator Mike Gravel; 9/11 scholar Dr. David Ray Griffin; chemist Dr. Niels Harrit; physicist Dr. Steven Jones; Prof. Emeritus Dr. Graeme MacQueen, Peace Studies, McMaster University; PhD candidate Laurie Manwell; chemist Kevin Ryan; 9/11 scholar Dr. Peter Dale Scott, and political scientist Dr. Lance DeHaven-Smith.

The Hearings are not in themselves a new investigation, but rather a gathering and presentation of the evidence collected over the last 10 years showing that the government account is incorrect and that a new investigation is needed to fully explore the lines of evidence presented.

The Toronto Hearings are being sponsored by the International Center for 9/11 Studies, and will be moderated by Dr. Michael Keefer (Canada) and Dr. Matthew Witt (U.S.). The final report will be edited by attorney James Gourley.

The Steering Committee invites your support and participation in helping to publicize and finance this strategic mission.

More information on the process and the players is available at the website http://torontohearings.org and tax-exempt donations will be gratefully received at http://torontohearings.org/donations

The Committee will welcome any offers of resources or assistance in support of the Toronto Hearings, using the contact form at http://torontohearings.org/about

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 Survivors Will Not Be Allowed to Attend

Title: 9/11 Survivors Will Not Be Allowed to Attend
Description: Ground Zero Commemoration

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 12:02 AM (GMT)

9/11 Survivors Will Not Be Allowed to Attend Ground Zero Commemoration

By Jen Doll Wed., Jul. 13 2011 at 4:41 PM
http://blogs.villagevoice.com/runninscared...rvivors_w_1.php

•This year's commemoration ceremony at Ground Zero -- which marks the 10th, and will be held for the first time at the new 9/11 memorial -- will be the first to exclude survivors who escaped the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001, reports DNA Info. The World Trade Center Survivors' Network was informed of this last week by the mayor's office, saying that there would simply be no room for them at the event.

"In years past, members of this survivors' group were permitted to attend once it was clear that attendance numbers of victims' family members would allow it," said Andrew Brent, spokesman for the mayor's office.

"The commemoration ceremony is for victims' family members, and this year - on the 10th anniversary of 9/11 -- the expectation is there will be no opportunity for members of the group to attend."

September 11th will again be an emotional day for victims' family members, survivors, responders, millions of New Yorkers and people from all over the country and the world, but obvious space constraints on the Memorial plaza will limit the attendees to victims' families," Brent added.

Survivors had asked the mayor for permission to attend, and upon denial, emailed its members that they wouldn't be allowed to join the ceremony -- and that if an exception was to be made, "we won't know until just a few days beforehand," organizers Richard Zimbler, Brendan Chellis and Lori Mogol wrote.

Many survivors do still plan to visit the memorial on September 12, and others hope for a last-minute invite if there's room. Record attendance is expected this year -- and tickets to the memorial have been extremely popular -- making it particularly sad that not all who want to be there will allowed. An online petition is in the works to ask the city to reconsider.

No Room for 9/11 Survivors at 10th Anniversary Ceremony, City Says [DNA Info]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Report: Bin Laden Already Dead

Title: Report: Bin Laden Already Dead

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 01:38 AM (GMT)

Report: Bin Laden Already Dead

Wednesday, December 26, 2001
http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,41576,00.html

Usama bin Laden has died a peaceful death due to an untreated lung complication, the Pakistan Observer reported, citing a Taliban leader who allegedly attended the funeral of the Al Qaeda leader.

"The Coalition troops are engaged in a mad search operation but they would never be able to fulfill their cherished goal of getting Usama alive or dead," the source said.

Bin Laden, according to the source, was suffering from a serious lung complication and succumbed to the disease in mid-December, in the vicinity of the Tora Bora mountains. The source claimed that bin Laden was laid to rest honorably in his last abode and his grave was made as per his Wahabi belief.

About 30 close associates of bin Laden in Al Qaeda, including his most trusted and personal bodyguards, his family members and some "Taliban friends," attended the funeral rites. A volley of bullets was also fired to pay final tribute to the "great leader."

The Taliban source who claims to have seen bin Laden's face before burial said "he looked pale ... but calm, relaxed and confident."

Asked whether bin Laden had any feelings of remorse before death, the source vehemently said "no." Instead, he said, bin Laden was proud that he succeeded in his mission of igniting awareness amongst Muslims about hegemonistic designs and conspiracies of "pagans" against Islam. Bin Laden, he said, held the view that the sacrifice of a few hundred people in Afghanistan was nothing, as those who laid their lives in creating an atmosphere of resistance will be adequately rewarded by Almighty Allah.

When asked where bin Laden was buried, the source said, "I am sure that like other places in Tora Bora, that particular place too must have vanished."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Scientist Sues CIA for TWA Flight 800 Crash

Title: Scientist Sues CIA for TWA Flight 800 Crash
Description: Documents

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 01:34 AM (GMT)

Scientist Sues CIA for TWA Flight 800 Crash Documents

July 15, 2011
http://flight800.org/PressRelease_7_15_11.html

Two days before the fifteenth anniversary of the crash of TWA 800 on July 17, 2011, independent investigator Dr. Tom Stalcup filed a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit in Massachusetts Federal District Court against the CIA for documents related to the CIA's production of a controversial animation pertaining to TWA 800's demise. Stalcup is seeking internal communications among the CIA team members who produced the animation, as well as all radar and simulation data the team used to create the animation.

The FBI tasked the CIA to produce an animation to explain eyewitness accounts of a rising streak of light seen near TWA Flight 800 moments before it exploded in midair off the coast of Long Island fifteen years ago, on July 17, 1996. Many eyewitnesses thought a missile hit the jetliner. But in its animation, the CIA discredited these eyewitness accounts by showing Flight 800 breaking in half and then climbing sharply, trailing flames. The climbing aircraft, the animation's narrator said, "may have looked like a missile."

Dr. Stalcup obtained internal CIA emails showing that the CIA knowingly created a false portrayal of the crash sequence. Contrary to the their claim that TWA Flight 800 climbed sharply, the CIA had access to radar tracking which recorded no such climb. In one email, a CIA agent admits that their animation "could not possible (sic) match the radar data". In another, an agent admits to disregarding time constraints imposed on the crash sequence by the National Transportation Safety Board, the lead agency in charge of the investigation.

Without the CIA's proposed climbing aircraft, the present official theory for the crash cannot accommodate the rising streak of light that many eyewitnesses claimed they saw rise off the ocean surface and collide with the jetliner. Stalcup hopes to receive more information from the CIA to learn how and why the CIA disregarded the radar evidence and crucial NTSB conclusions.

CONTACT

Dr. Tom Stalcup
Chairman, Flight 800 Independent Researchers Organization
http://Flight800.org
East Falmouth, MA
stalcupt@gmail.com
774-392-0856

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Chinese Bank Helped Fund Hamas, Suit Says

Title: Chinese Bank Helped Fund Hamas, Suit Says

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 06:56 PM (GMT)

Chinese Bank Helped Fund Hamas, Suit Says

July 13, 2011
http://www.theepochtimes.com/n2/china/chin...says-58981.html

Dozens of Israeli terror victims are suing the Bank of China for helping fund two groups they say launched attacks against them and their family members, in the latest case of Chinese-sponsored terrorism to make its way to U.S. courts.

A lawsuit alleging that the Bank of China aided and abetted the Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ) and Hamas, which are considered terrorist groups by the United States, Europe, and Israel, will proceed after a New York Supreme Court judge rejected the bank's motion to dismiss on July 7.

The suit, filed with the help of the Tel Aviv-based Israel Law Center, accuses the bank of knowingly providing wire transfers for the organizations' leaders in Iran, Syria, and other locations in the Middle East through a Bank of China U.S. branch since 2003.

According to court documents, the funds were funneled to accounts owned by Said al-Shurafa, a "senior operative and agent of both the PIJ and Hamas," which was in turn moved to PIJ and Hamas leaders in Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza "for the purpose of planning, preparing for, and executing terrorist attacks."

U.S. sanctions make it illegal for financial institutions to provide banking services to terrorist organizations and their affiliates.

The money from "dozens" of wire transfers totaling "several million dollars" was in turn used to bankroll bombings and rocket attacks against Israelis, the suit says. "[The Bank of China's] assistance with the wire transfers was the proximate cause of [defendants'] injuries" in attacks from 2006 to 2007, court documents read.

Court records also chronicle a series of meetings in 2005 in which Israeli officials informed their Chinese counterparts of the terrorist links to the wire transfers, warnings which were not acted upon, lawyers for the plaintiffs argued.

"Plaintiffs … allege that [the Bank of China] knew or should have known that the transfers were being made for illegal purposes" due to warnings from the Israelis as well as "various red flags" that the wire transfers were funding terrorism, the suit says.

PIJ and Hamas leaders regularly withdrew amounts of around $100,000 in cash from the Bank of China, usually within one day of a deposit, over a period of years, the case alleges.

The Bank of China "was under an obligation to monitor, report, and refuse to execute such suspicious and irregular banking transactions," but did not, the complaint reads.

In response to the accusations, the bank argued the case should be dismissed because China, not the United States, was the more appropriate forum for the plaintiffs to voice their complaints as per the legal doctrine "forum non conveniens" (forum not agreeing). However, Justice Barbara Kapnick of the Supreme Court of the State of New York ruled otherwise, allowing the case to continue and for the process of evidence discovery to advance.

“The Bank of China will now have to provide us with details of all bank transactions, basically everything that went through the accounts,” especially those of al-Shurafa, Israel Law Center Director Nitsana Darshan-Leitner told The Jerusalem Post.

Darshan-Leitner told the Israeli newspaper that she was confident in the plaintiffs' suit.

"We have all the evidence that the money came from Syria and was transferred to Hamas," she said. "We will be able to convince the jury that the Bank of China aided and abetted terrorist organizations, that they were negligent, and that they will have to compensate the victims."

The lawsuit is the latest in which Israeli terror victims have sued the Bank of China for being complicit in the funding of terrorist groups.

In 2008, hundreds of Israelis filed a similar suit in Los Angeles. The plaintiffs demanded hundreds of millions of dollars in reparations.

Chinese state-owned financial institutions are not alone in their links to terrorism. The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) and its affiliates routinely support terrorist organizations in the Taliban and al-Qaeda, and cooperate with regimes that sanction terrorism in North Korea, Syria, and Iran, some researchers say.

"Terrorists aren't enemies of the CCP. They are allies of the CCP in its cold war against the democratic world," said D.J. McGuire, co-founder of the China e-Lobby and author of Dragon in the Dark: How and Why Communist China Helps Our Enemies in the War on Terror, in an e-mail interview.

"Normally, the courts are not the best place to battle communists and terrorists, but this is an exception. It is time for the legislative and executive branches in America to join the judicial branch in confronting the communist-terrorist axis," he wrote.

The case in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, New York County, is index number 102026-2009. The next court date is Sept. 14.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Co-Chair of 9/11 Inquiry: American Government

Title: Co-Chair of 9/11 Inquiry: American Government
Description: Covered Up State Assistance to Hijackers

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 06:45 PM (GMT)

Co-Chair of 9/11 Inquiry: American Government Covered Up State Assistance to Hijackers

July 12, 2011
http://www.washingtonsblog.com/2011/07/co-...y-american.html

It's front page news today that:

Journalists at Rupert Murdoch's now-shuttered News of the World paper tried to access the mobile phones of 9/11 victims, a former New York City police officer claimed on Monday.

It's also front page news today that the new Secretary of Defense – Leon Panetta – said that American soldiers are in Iraq because of 9/11, even though AFP notes:

That was one of the justifications for the 2003 US-led invasion, but the argument has since been widely dismissed.

(see this for details).

But a more important story – and one which might focus on a more appropriate country country than Iraq – is that the co-chair of the Congressional Joint 9/11 Inquiry (Bob Graham) today alleged a cover up by the U.S. government of state assistance by Saudi Arabia to the 9/11 hijackers.Graham is no flake. He was a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence for 10 years (including 18 months as chairman), member of the CIA External Advisory Board, chairman of the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism, 18-year U.S. senator, two-term governor of Florida, co-chair of the national commission on the BP oil spill, and member of the Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission.

Graham writes today in the Daily Beast:

The first two hijackers who entered the United States did so through Los Angeles International Airport in mid-January 2000. Within days they were urged by a shadowy man, already described in an FBI report as an “agent” of the Saudi government, to relocate to San Diego with promises of extensive support—promises on which he promptly delivered.

The agent’s cover was as a ghost employee of a contractor to an agency of the Saudi government—paid a salary and allowances but never expected to show up and work. His real job was to monitor Saudi youth in San Diego getting an education to ensure they were not also plotting the overthrow of the monarchy.

When the two future hijackers reached San Diego, the agent’s allowances were substantially increased. Upon their arrival the agent secured and paid for an apartment. He arranged flight lessons. He introduced them to a tight circle of Muslims, primarily Saudis, who offered additional support.

Yet the support being funneled to the two visitors proved insufficient for their decidedly non-Islamic tastes—alcohol, strip clubs, even a desired, though unfulfilled, marriage to a stripper. The agent then tapped another source of funds: a welfare account maintained for the benefit of Saudis in need by the wife of the kingdom’s ambassador to the United States.

That is some of what we do know, and we got a sufficient glimpse to know what we didn’t know. Still unanswered after nearly 10 years are the questions of the full extent of the Saudi pre-9/11 involvement: Did any or all of the other 17 receive support from Saudi interests? Why would Saudi Arabia do this? Do the Saudis have the will and capability to aid future attacks against the United States? And most important: Why the cover-up by our government?

I have attempted to address these questions in the final report of the congressional commission and the nonfiction book Intelligence Matters, published in 2004. Each was censored by authorities in the intelligence community, particularly on the role of the Saudis in 9/11.

***

Why would the Saudis have given substantial assistance to at least two of the hijackers, and possibly all 19? The answer I have come to is survival—survival of the state and survival of the House of Saud.

This is stunning. Graham is saying – and actually has said for years – that the Saudis were involved in 9/11, but the U.S. government has been censoring this fact.

But it doesn't end there.

As I noted last year:

Investigators for the Congressional [9/11] Joint Inquiry discovered that an FBI informant had hosted and even rented a room to two hijackers in 2000 and that, when the Inquiry sought to interview the informant, the FBI refused outright, and then hid him in an unknown location, and that a high-level FBI official stated these blocking maneuvers were undertaken under orders from the White House.

As the New York Times notes:

Senator Bob Graham, the Florida Democrat who is a former chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, accused the White House on Tuesday of covering up evidence . . .
* * *

The accusation stems from the Federal Bureau of Investigation's refusal to allow investigators for a Congressional inquiry and the independent Sept. 11 commission to interview an informant, Abdussattar Shaikh, who had been the landlord in San Diego of two Sept. 11 hijackers.

In his book "Intelligence Matters," Mr. Graham, the co-chairman of the Congressional inquiry with Representative Porter J. Goss, Republican of Florida, said an F.B.I. official wrote them in November 2002 and said "the administration would not sanction a staff interview with the source." On Tuesday, Mr. Graham called the letter "a smoking gun" and said, "The reason for this cover-up goes right to the White House."

And see this Newsweek article.

The co-chairs of the 9/11 Commission also described numerous obstructions of justice by the government into the 9/11 inquiry.

As I also pointed out last year, Graham – as well as the co-chairs of the 9/11 Commission – found that witnesses were also intimidated into being quiet:

As I detailed previously, both the Joint Intelligence Committee and 9/11 Commission investigations into 9/11 had government "minders" intimidating witnesses into not saying anything the government didn't like.

You may assume that the issue of "minders" is overblown, and is not really that important.

But, as the New York Times noted in 2003:

The panel [i.e. the 9/11 Commission] also said the failure of the Bush administration to allow officials to be interviewed without the presence of government colleagues could impede its investigation, with the commission's chairman suggesting today that the situation amounted to "intimidation" of the witnesses.

[9/11 Commission co-chairs] Mr. Kean and Mr. Hamilton suggested that the Justice Department was behind a directive barring intelligence officials from being interviewed by the panel without the presence of agency colleagues.

At a news conference, Mr. Kean described the presence of "minders" at the interviews as a form of intimidation. "I think the commission feels unanimously that it's some intimidation to have somebody sitting behind you all the time who you either work for or works for your agency," he said. "You might get less testimony than you would."

"We would rather interview these people without minders or without agency people there," he said.

And as I previously noted, a recently released 9/11 Commission memo complains that:
Minders "answer[ed] questions directed at witnesses;"
Minders acted as "monitors, reporting to their respective agencies on Commission staffs lines of inquiry and witnesses' verbatim responses." The staff thought this "conveys to witnesses that their superiors will review their statements and may engage in retribution;" and Minders "positioned themselves physically and have conducted themselves in a manner that we believe intimidates witnesses from giving full and candid responses to our questions."

Still think this isn't an important issue?

Senator Bob Graham, former chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, and chair of the Joint Inquiry of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees into 9/11, said in 2005:

The [9/11] commission's findings were based on an interview with al-Bayoumi in Saudi Arabia with Saudi Arabian officials present. "He had no motivation to speak truthfully as to his role," he said.

When government officials are present, it creates conditions where the witness "has no motivation to speak truthfully."

Bottom Line: The co-chairs of the 9/11 Commission, Tom Keane and Lee Hamilton, and chair of the the Joint Inquiry of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees into 9/11, Bob Graham, said that minders obstructed the investigation into 9/11.

In his Daily Beast article today, Graham also goes into more detail regarding the American cover up of 9/11:

The most perplexing unanswered question remains: Why would the United States engage in a cover-up? Many have pointed to the special personal friendship between the royal family and the highest levels of our national government. The fact that the Saudis were allowed to fly a planeload of their elite home from the United States in the days immediately after 9/11, when all other commercial aviation was grounded, is often cited as support for that position. In fact, all that actions such as this do is make America's post-9/11 reaction to the Saudis even more mysterious.

Secrets deemed this critical by both governments are bound to be buried under many layers of official protection and unofficial obfuscation. The actions since 9/11 are a perverted application of Winston Churchill's truism on the Allies' plans to end World War II: "In wartime, truth is so precious that she should always be attended by a bodyguard of lies."

How far has the American cover up gone?

Here are some hints:
The 9/11 Commission's co-chairs said that the 9/11 Commissioners knew that military officials misrepresented the facts to the Commission, and the Commission considered recommending criminal charges for such false statements (free subscription required)
9/11 Commission co-chair Lee Hamilton says "I don't believe for a minute we got everything right", that the Commission was set up to fail, that people should keep asking questions about 9/11, and that the 9/11 debate should continue
9/11 Commissioner Timothy Roemer said "We were extremely frustrated with the false statements we were getting"
9/11 Commissioner Max Cleland resigned from the Commission, stating: "It is a national scandal"; "This investigation is now compromised"; and "One of these days we will have to get the full story because the 9-11 issue is so important to America. But this White House wants to cover it up"
9/11 Commissioner Bob Kerrey said that "There are ample reasons to suspect that there may be some alternative to what we outlined in our version . . . We didn't have access . . . ." He also says that it might take "a permanent 9/11 commission" to end the remaining mysteries of September 11.
And the Senior Counsel to the 9/11 Commission (John Farmer) – who led the 9/11 staff's inquiry – recently said "At some level of the government, at some point in time… there was an agreement not to tell the truth about what happened". He also said "I was shocked at how different the truth was from the way it was described …. The tapes told a radically different story from what had been told to us and the public for two years….

This is not spin. This is not true." And he said: "It's almost a culture of concealment, for lack of a better word. There were interviews made at the FAA's New York center the night of 9/11 and those tapes were destroyed. The CIA tapes of the interrogations were destroyed. The story of 9/11 itself, to put it mildly, was distorted and was completely different from the way things happened"
A 27-year CIA veteran, who chaired National Intelligence Estimates and personally delivered intelligence briefings to Presidents Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush, their Vice Presidents, Secretaries of State, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and many other senior government officials (Raymond McGovern) said "I think at simplest terms, there's a cover-up. The 9/11 Report is a joke"
The Division Chief of the CIA's Office of Soviet Affairs, who served as Senior Analyst from 1966 – 1990. He also served as Professor of International Security at the National War College from 1986 – 2004 (Melvin Goodman) said "The final [9/11 Commission] report is ultimately a coverup"
The Group Director on matters of national security in the U.S. Government Accountability Office said that President Bush did not respond to unprecedented warnings of the 9/11 disaster and conducted a massive cover-up instead of accepting responsibility
The former director of the FBI (Louis Freeh) says there was a cover up by the 9/11 Commission
Whistleblower Daniel Ellsberg says that the government has ordered the media not to cover 9/11

(Other than that, the American government has been totally forthcoming .)

Note: This essay does not address one way or another whether any countries other than Saudi Arabia might have been involved in the 9/11 attacks themselves.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CNN exposes ‘terror expert’ as a fraud

Title: CNN exposes ‘terror expert’ as a fraud

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 06:29 PM (GMT)

CNN exposes ‘terror expert’ as a fraud

Posted on 07.14.11
By David Edwards
http://www.rawstory.com/rawreplay/2011/07/...ert-as-a-fraud/

CNN reported Wednesday that a so-called terrorism expert that is paid with tax dollars and has even appeared on their own network may be a fraud.

Walid Shoebat claims he converted to Christianity after years as a Palestinian Liberation Organization terrorist who once helped firebomb an Israeli bank in Bethlehem. But CNN’s Jerusalem bureau could find no proof that that his story was true. The Israeli police and the bank had no evidence that a firebombing ever took place.

Even members of his family doubt his story.

“I have never heard anything about Walid being a mujahedeen or a terrorist,” Walid Shoebat’s fourth cousin Daood Shoebat said. “He claims this for his own personal reasons.”

Other relatives told CNN that Shoebat had been “regular kid” who eventually became a computer programmer in the United States.

CNN’s Drew Griffin caught up with Shoebat at a conference in South Dakota where he spoke to about 300 law enforcement officials about the dangers of radicalized Muslims.

Shoebat’s message to the law enforcement, churches and universities that pay him to speak is to trust no Muslims, especially the ones that organize.

“All Islamic organizations in America should be the No. 1 enemy. All of them,” he said at the South Dakota conference.

Tax records indicated that Shoebat’s anti-Muslim speeches, books and videos brought in $500,000 in 2009.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9-11 HOW THE TWIN TOWERS WERE DESTROYED AND HOW

Title: 9-11 HOW THE TWIN TOWERS WERE DESTROYED AND HOW Description: THEY COVERED IT UP [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 03:50 PM (GMT)

9-11 HOW THE TWIN TOWERS WERE DESTROYED AND HOW THEY COVERED IT UP! (NEW 2011)

[DOHTML]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/pPntg80fxvY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/pPntg80fxvY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/DOHTML]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: BUBONIC E.COLI IS A SUPER BIOWEAPONIZED AGENT Title: BUBONIC E.COLI IS A SUPER BIOWEAPONIZED AGENT

Description: ATTACK!

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 06:05 PM (GMT)

British Intelligence: al-Qaeda May Contaminate Food After E.Coli Scare

Kurt Nimmo
June 5, 2011
http://www.infowars.com/british-intelligen...r-e-coli-scare/

Britain's MI5 is exploiting an E.coli outbreak in Germany to push the fear of terrorism as part of an effort to introduce police state measures in the country's food industry.

"Manufacturers and retailers have been told that their sector is vulnerable to attacks by ideologically and politically motivated groups that may seek to cause widespread casualties and disruption by poisoning food supplies," the Telegraph reported on Saturday.

Followers of a dead Osama bin Laden have replaced traditional criminals who have in the past deliberately contaminated food, according the Center for the Protection of National Infrastructure (CPNI), a subset of British intelligence. British officialdom, according to the warning, "fear there is an emerging threat from extremist groups such as al-Qaeda, dissident republicans in Northern Ireland and animal rights activists."

The CPNI wants food and drinks producers, suppliers and supermarkets to tighten security at plants and depots and to identify vulnerabilities in supply chains. "The UK suffers from a low level of malicious contamination of food by the bad, the mad and the sad. Now it has to consider the possibility of food supplies being disrupted by politically motivated groups," said an official from the CPN who addressed a conference of the Society for General Microbiology.

Politically motivated attackers could contaminate prepared food or drink with bacteria or chemicals. Or, by targeting basic ingredients used in large numbers of foods, they could cause even wider disruption, according to the Telegraph.

Britain is notorious for its pervasive electronic surveillance and oppressive terrorism laws. A 2010 study by Privacy International reveals that the British government engages in endemic surveillance.

Last year, Libertarian Alliance Director Sean Gabb said England “is now a soft totalitarian police state” that not only routinely surveils the public, but also suppresses opposition political parties.

Britain is not alone is scaremongering an attack on food supplies. Officialdom and government recognized “experts” in the United Stats also claim terrorists may poison food. “US experts have warned that the dairy industry is particularly vulnerable, as adding just a few grams of botulinum toxin or ricin to a tanker load of milk could poison or even kill thousands of consumers,” the Telegraph reports.

In 2010, officialdom in the U.S. warned that al-Qaeda would poison the local salad bar in its perpetual attempt to harm freedom lovers. “The al Qaeda group that built two toner-cartridge bombs in an unsuccessful attempt to blow up planes in October also has contemplated spreading poison on salad bars and buffets at U.S. hotels and restaurants,” CNN reported on December 21, 2010.

Following non-stop coverage of the so-called toner bomb threat, the Air Cargo Director for Yemenia Airways said there were no UPS or DHL cargo flights from Yemen within a 48 hour period prior to the supposed terror attack, a detail ignored by the corporate media.

The Department of Homeland Security told CNN al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula was considering the tactic of placing ricin and cyanide poisons into food supplies. CNN ran a particularly sensationastic video report on the highly speculative threat.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/hn-ztBPxTNo?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/hn-ztBPxTNo?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

The MI5 terror warning after an outbreak of E.coli in Germany is particularly suspect considering that German authorities believe the outbreak was caused by poor hygiene at a farm, in transit, or at a food outlet.

On Sunday evening, the Germans said bean sprouts might have caused the Escherichia coli bacterial scare. The agricultural ministry in the German state of Lower Saxony reported a bean-sprout farm tested positive for E. Coli, and deliveries of that product had been tied to several restaurants where diners suffered infections, according to the Wall Street Journal.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/sll-YL8FpMw?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/sll-YL8FpMw?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

According to the British Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology, most food poisoning in the UK is the result of poor hygiene in processing and delivery, not terrorists.

MI5 has exploited the issue in order to push its anti-terror agenda, which is ironic considering the fact British intelligence has been caught on numerous occasions supporting and fostering terrorism, including the terror bombing of innocent civilians.

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 06:08 PM (GMT)

Remember folks theres been attacks on sprouts many times before and scares. Why would they love and do this? Simply because the nutrition of a sprout is very dense and therefore a threat to pharmaceutical profits and depopulation control figures. They can't stop you sprouting your own YET but they'll put a stop to you buying them. The later suits them for now as they know most people are too lazy or dumb to sprout their own.

QUOTE

Probe targets German bean sprouts, no E.coli found

By Brian Rohan
BIENENBUETTEL, Germany | Mon Jun 6, 2011 1:38pm EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/06/06/...E7511UX20110606

(Reuters) - German scientists found no traces of E.coli bacteria at an organic vegetable farm believed to be the source of an outbreak that has killed 22 people, but said this did not mean their suspicions were wrong.

Even though first lab tests on bean sprouts from the farm were negative, officials said they were not surprised because any contaminated produce could have been long since distributed.

"This is an important lead that we're vigorously pursuing," federal Agriculture Minister Ilse Aigner said in Berlin on Monday after the state agriculture ministry in Lower Saxony state said the 23 samples tested so far had been negative.

Aigner repeated warnings to consumers to avoid bean sprouts, cucumbers, tomatoes and salad.

In Bienenbuettel, the manager of the farm said he could not understand how his small organic food operation could be the source of an infection that is usually transmitted through feces, or food or water contaminated with fecal bacteria.

The rare Shiga toxin-producing E.coli (STEC) strain found in this outbreak is known to be able to lurk in cows' intestines.

"I can't understand how the processes we have here and the accusations could possibly fit together," Klaus Verbeck told the regional newspaper Neue Osnabruecker Zeitung. Bild newspaper reported that two workers at the farm had fallen ill.

"The salad sprouts are grown only from seeds and water, and they aren't fertilized at all," Verbeck added. "There aren't any animal fertilizers used in other areas on the farm either."

Scientists believed investigators were now on the right trail. A number of the victims were linked to restaurants that had been supplied by the organic farm in Bienenbuettel.

RELIEF AND CAUTION

The relief in Germany that investigators had finally found a possible source of the bacteria was tempered by the cautious tone of official statements, and by mounting losses for farmers and retailers across Europe caused by three weeks of panic.

Scientists say the contamination may have been on or in the bean seeds themselves, or in the water used to grow them, or have come from a worker handling them.

"Bean sprouts are not an uncommon cause of food poisoning," Paul Wigley, from the University of Liverpool's School of Veterinary Science, told Reuters.

He said the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and the U.S. Department of Agriculture had long been concerned about risks associated with bean sprout production.

"Both E. coli and Salmonella outbreaks have been linked to sprouts in the United States and in Britain," Wigley said.

In Brussels, the European Commission said it would hold a special meeting of EU farm ministers in Luxembourg on Tuesday. One EU source told Reuters the ministers would discuss financial aid to fruit and vegetable producers hit by the E.coli crisis.

German officials said on Sunday that Verbeck's bean sprouts could be behind the outbreak, which has made more than 2,300 people ill in 12 countries.

All the victims had been traveling in northern Germany. Many have developed hemolytic uremic syndrome (HUS), a potentially fatal complication attacking the kidneys.

Neither Verbeck, himself a vegetarian, nor anyone else from the farm would talk on Monday to journalists and television crews, including Reuters, outside his farm in Bienenbuettel, a town of 6,600 people about 70 km (40 miles) south of Hamburg.

German officials, under intense pressure to identify the source of the outbreak, have been warning consumers to avoid tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce, and at one stage said Spanish cucumbers might be the source.

Aigner said at her news conference the possibility of contaminated seeds having come from abroad needed to be included in the investigation.

TIES STRAINED

The emergency has strained ties between EU members Spain and Germany. Russia has banned imports of EU fruit and vegetables.

Raw bean sprouts are popular among Germans and are often added to salads or sandwiches.

"No one wants anything with bean sprouts today," said Constanze Voelmy, who delivers salads and sandwiches to offices in Berlin's government quarter. "We're not putting bean sprouts on anything. Hardly anyone wants to eat salad anymore anyhow."

Spanish farmers say lost sales have been costing them 200 million euros a week, and put 70,000 jobs at risk. Officials said they might claim compensation.

"Bean sprouts are very frequently the cause of outbreaks on both sides of the Atlantic," said Paul Hunter, a professor of public health at Britain's University of East Anglia. "They're very difficult to grow hygienically and you have to be so careful not to contaminate them."

He said organic farms often carried an extra risk of contamination because they shunned non-organic chemicals. He said he personally ate organic fruit and vegetables, but steered clear of organic raw salad foods "for precisely that reason."

In Japan, at least 11 people died in 1996 in an E. coli outbreak linked to contaminated radish sprouts.

In Bienenbuettel, half a dozen uniformed security guards patrolled behind the closed farm gate.

One neighbor, Sibylle Lange, said she knew Verbeck well and that he had been in organic farming for many years.

"These are very serious, hardworking people who were very early producers of organic products," Lange told Reuters.

"They've been working here for some 30 years. It's a high-quality product. I've eaten all sorts of vegetables from here -- bean sprouts included -- and they taste delicious. I can't imagine the source could come from here."

The Lower Saxony farm minister, Gert Lindemann, said alfalfa sprouts, mung bean sprouts, radish sprouts and arugula sprouts from the farm might all be linked to the outbreak.

The rare strain of E.coli can stick to intestinal walls, where it pumps out toxins, sometimes causing severe bloody diarrhea and kidney problems. Some patients have needed intensive care, including dialysis.

(Additional reporting by Stephanie Nebehay in Geneva, Charlie Dunmore in Brussels and Eric Kelsey in Berlin; Writing by Erik Kirschbaum; Editing by Kevin Liffey)

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 06:11 PM (GMT)

Forensic evidence emerges that European e.coli superbug was bioengineered to produce human fatalities

Monday, June 06, 2011
by Mike Adams
http://www.naturalnews.com/032622_ecoli_bioengineering.html

(NaturalNews) Even as the veggie blame game is now under way across the EU, where a super resistant strain of e.coli is sickening patients and filling hospitals in Germany, virtually no one is talking about how e.coli could have magically become resistant to eight different classes of antibiotic drugs and then suddenly appeared in the food supply.

This particular e.coli variation is a member of the O104 strain, and O104 strains are almost never (normally) resistant to antibiotics. In order for them to acquire this resistance, they must be repeatedly exposed to antibiotics in order to provide the "mutation pressure" that nudges them toward complete drug immunity.

So if you're curious about the origins of such a strain, you can essentially reverse engineer the genetic code of the e.coli and determine fairly accurately which antibiotics it was exposed to during its development. This step has now been done (see below), and when you look at the genetic decoding of this O104 strain now threatening food consumers across the EU, a fascinating picture emerges of how it must have come into existence.

The genetic code reveals the history
When scientists at Germany's Robert Koch Institute decoded the genetic makeup of the O104 strain, they found it to be resistant to all the following classes and combinations of antibiotics:

- penicillins
- tetracycline
- nalidixic acid
- trimethoprim-sulfamethoxazol
- cephalosporins
- amoxicillin / clavulanic acid
- piperacillin-sulbactam
- piperacillin-tazobactam

In addition, this O104 strain posses an ability to produce special enzymes that give it what might be called "bacteria superpowers" known technically as ESBLs:

"Extended-Spectrum Beta-Lactamases (ESBLs) are enzymes that can be produced by bacteria making them resistant to cephalosporins e.g. cefuroxime, cefotaxime and ceftazidime - which are the most widely used antibiotics in many hospitals," explains the Health Protection Agency in the UK (http://www.hpa.org.uk/Topics/Infect...).

On top of that, this O104 strain possesses two genes -- TEM-1 and CTX-M-15 -- that "have been making doctors shudder since the 1990s," reports The Guardian (http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentis...). And why do they make doctors shudder? Because they're so deadly that many people infected with such bacteria experience critical organ failure and simply die.

Bioengineering a deadly superbug
So how, exactly, does a bacterial strain come into existence that's resistant to over a dozen antibiotics in eight different drug classes and features two deadly gene mutations plus ESBL enzyme capabilities?

There's really only one way this happens (and only one way) -- you have to expose this strain of e.coli to all eight classes of antibiotics drugs. Usually this isn't done at the same time, of course: You first expose it to penicillin and find the surviving colonies which are resistant to penicillin. You then take those surviving colonies and expose them to tetracycline. The surviving colonies are now resistant to both penicillin and tetracycline. You then expose them to a sulfa drug and collect the surviving colonies from that, and so on. It is a process of genetic selection done in a laboratory with a desired outcome. This is essentially how some bioweapons are engineered by the U.S. Army in its laboratory facility in Ft. Detrick, Maryland (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nation...).

Although the actual process is more complicated than this, the upshot is that creating a strain of e.coli that's resistant to eight classes of antibiotics requires repeated, sustained expose to those antibiotics. It is virtually impossible to imagine how this could happen all by itself in the natural world. For example, if this bacteria originated in the food (as we've been told), then where did it acquire all this antibiotic resistance given the fact that antibiotics are not used in vegetables?

When considering the genetic evidence that now confronts us, it is difficult to imagine how this could happen "in the wild." While resistance to a single antibiotic is common, the creation of a strain of e.coli that's resistant to eight different classes of antibiotics -- in combination -- simply defies the laws of genetic permutation and combination in the wild. Simply put, this superbug e.coli strain could not have been created in the wild. And that leaves only one explanation for where it really came from: the lab.

Engineered and then released into the wild
The evidence now points to this deadly strain of e.coli being engineered and then either being released into the food supply or somehow escaping from a lab and entering the food supply inadvertently. If you disagree with that conclusion -- and you're certainly welcome to -- then you are forced to conclude that this octobiotic superbug (immune to eight classes of antibiotics) developed randomly on its own... and that conclusion is far scarier than the "bioengineered" explanation because it means octobiotic superbugs can simply appear anywhere at any time without cause. That would be quite an exotic theory indeed.

My conclusion actually makes more sense: This strain of e.coli was almost certainly engineered and then released into the food supply for a specific purpose. What would that purpose be? It's obvious, I hope.

It's all problem, reaction, solution at work here. First cause a PROBLEM (a deadly strain of e.coli in the food supply). Then wait for the public REACTION (huge outcry as the population is terrorized by e.coli). In response to that, enact your desired SOLUTION (total control over the global food supply and the outlawing of raw sprouts, raw milk and raw vegetables).

That's what this is all about, of course. The FDA relied on the same phenomenon in the USA when pushing for its recent "Food Safety Modernization Act" which essentially outlaws small family organic farms unless they lick the boots of FDA regulators. The FDA was able to crush farm freedom in America by piggybacking on the widespread fear that followed e.coli outbreaks in the U.S. food supply. When people are afraid, remember, it's not difficult to get them to agree to almost any level of regulatory tyranny. And making people afraid of their food is a simple matter... a few government press releases emailed to the mainstream media news affiliates is all it takes.

First ban the natural medicine, then attack the food supply
Now, remember: All this is happening on the heels of the EU ban on medicinal herbs and nutritional supplements -- a ban that blatantly outlaws nutritional therapies that help keep people healthy and free from disease. Now that all these herbs and supplements are outlawed, the next step is to make people afraid of fresh food, too. That's because fresh vegetables are medicinal, and as long as the public has the right to buy fresh vegetables, they can always prevent disease.

But if you can make people AFRAID of fresh vegetables -- or even outlaw them altogether -- then you can force the entire population onto a diet of dead foods and processed foods that promote degenerative disease and bolster the profits of the powerful drug companies.

It's all part of the same agenda, you see: Keep people sick, deny them access to healing herbs and supplements, then profit from their suffering at the hands of the global drug cartels.

GMOs play a similar role in all this, of course: They're designed to contaminate the food supply with genetic code that causes widespread infertility among human beings. And those who are somehow able to reproduce after exposure to GMOs still suffer from degenerative disease that enriches the drug companies from "treatment."

Do you recall which country was targeted in this recent e.coli scare? Spain. Why Spain? You may recall that leaked cables from Wikileaks revealed that Spain resisted the introduction of GMOs into its agricultural system, even as the U.S. government covertly threatened political retaliation for its resistance. This false blaming of Spain for the e.coli deaths is probably retaliation for Spain's unwillingness to jump on the GMO bandwagon. (http://www.naturalnews.com/030828_G...)

That's the real story behind the economic devastation of Spain's vegetable farmers. It's one of the subplots being pursued alongside this e.coli superbug scheme.

Food as weapons of war - created by Big Pharma?
By the way, the most likely explanation of where this strain of e.coli was bioengineered is that the drug giants came up with it in their own labs. Who else has access to all the antibiotics and equipment needed to manage the targeted mutations of potentially thousands of e.coli colonies? The drug companies are uniquely positioned to both carry out this plot and profit from it. In other words, they have the means and the motive to engage in precisely such actions.

Aside from the drug companies, perhaps only the infectious disease regulators themselves have this kind of laboratory capacity. The CDC, for example, could probably pull this off if they really wanted to.

The proof that somebody bioengineered this e.coli strain is written right in the DNA of the bacteria. That's forensic evidence, and what it reveals cannot be denied. This strain underwent repeated and prolonged exposure to eight different classes of antibiotics, and then it somehow managed to appear in the food supply. How do you get to that if not through a well-planned scheme carried out by rogue scientists? There is no such thing as "spontaneous mutation" into a strain that is resistant to the top eight classes of brand-name antibiotic drugs being sold by Big Pharma today. Such mutations have to be deliberate.

Once again, if you disagree with this assessment, then what you're saying is that NO, it wasn't done deliberately... it happened accidentally! And again, I'm saying that's even scarier! Because that means the antibiotic contamination of our world is now at such an extreme level of overkill that a strain of e.coli in the wild can be saturated with eight different classes of antibiotics to the point where it naturally develops into its own deadly superbug. If that's what people believe, then that's almost a scarier theory than the bioengineering explanation!

A new era has begun: Bioweapons in your food
But in either case -- no matter what you believe -- the simple truth is that the world is now facing a new era of global superbug strains of bacteria that can't be treated with any known pharmaceutical. They can all, of course, be readily killed with colloidal silver, which is exactly why the FDA and world health regulators have viciously attacked colloidal silver companies all these years: They can't have the public getting its hands on natural antibiotics that really work, you see. That would defeat the whole purpose of making everybody sick in the first place.

In fact, these strains of e.coli superbugs can be quite readily treated with a combination of natural full-spectrum antibiotics from plants such as garlic, ginger, onions and medicinal herbs. On top of that, probiotics can help balance the flora of the digestive tract and "crowd out" the deadly e.coli that might happen by. A healthy immune system and well-functioning digestive tract can fight off an e.coli superbug infection, but that's yet another fact the medical community doesn't want you to know. They much prefer you to remain a helpless victim lying in the hospital, waiting to die, with no options available to you. That's "modern medicine" for ya. They cause the problems that they claim to treat, and then they won't even treat you with anything that works in the first place.

Nearly all the deaths now attributable to this e.coli outbreak are easily and readily avoidable. These are deaths of ignorance. But even more, they may also be deaths from a new era of food-based bioweapons unleashed by either a group of mad scientists or an agenda-driven institution that has declared war on the human population.

Additional developments on this e.coli outbreak
• 22 fatalities have so far been reported, with 2,153 people now sickened and possibly facing kidney failure.

• An agricultural ministry in Germany said that even though they now know the source of the outbreak is a German sprout farm, they are still not lifting their warnings for people to avoid eating tomatoes and lettuce. In other words, keep the people afraid!

• "The German variant of E coli, known as O104, is a hybrid of the strains that can cause bloody diarrhoea and kidney damage called 'hemolytic uremic syndrome'." (http://www.independent.ie/world-news/europ...22-2667140.html)

• A total of ten European nations have reported outbreaks of this e.coli strain, mostly from people who had visited northern Germany.

• The following story is in German, and it hints that the e.coli outbreak might have been a terrorist attack (http://www.aerztezeitung.de/medizin/krankh...rde-kritik.html). Yeah, a terrorist attack by the drug companies upon innocent people, as usual…

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 06:30 PM (GMT)

The E.coli outbreak in Europe is BioWar

Europe Blog
Saturday, June 4, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/06/ecoli-...-is-biowar.html

Waterboarding The World, Part 1:

Out of nowhere a strange new deadly disease has sprung up in Europe, causing an explosion of over 3,500 serious illnesses and 35 or more deaths in at least 10 European nations (and now 4 suspected cases in the U.S. - Ed.). There are four scientific indications that this is a case of man-engineered Advanced Biowar, as well as strong circumstantial indications that this is a part of something much larger politically.

Scientifically, the four strong indications of an Advanced Biowar (genetically engineered recombination DNA) basis for this new outbreak are as follows:

(1) Multipoint release. That is the disease has quickly come from nowhere and is in multiple locations almost overnight. It is now in at least ten European nations. In writing this article, I have had to change the numbers twice (total illnesses and deaths and nations involved) as the numbers are increasing almost hourly.

(2) Multi-drug resistance. Chinese scientists, at the Shenzhen, China laboratory BGI (working with scientists at the University Medical Center of Hamberg-Eppendorf) have confirmed that the new bacterium carries genes that make it resistant to several classes of antibiotics! Patients often have bloody diarrhea, and many require intensive care including kidney dialysis.

(3) No cross contaminations. There is no contamination with fecal matter (or possible related infections) as one might expect from a E.coli infection. In fact, Germany, which has a large number of cases, has one of the best food safety and inspection programs on Earth. Normally E.coli infections are spread by feces contaminating food and can also be spread from person to person via the faecal-oral route due to poor hygiene. So far these do not appear to be primary vectors for the disease and in fact the primary vector is unknown at present.

(4) Recombination of multiple strains/DNA found. World Health Organization scientists have confirmed that genetic sequencing tests suggest the strain, E. coli O104:H4, is a never seen before combination/hybrid of two different E. coli bacteria. Scientists at China's Beijing Genomics Institute say that the new strain is both highly infectious and toxic and that it is similar, but not the same as, a strain (EAEC 55989) isolated in the Central African Republic known to cause serious diarrhea. The new O104:H4 E.coli strain contains the Shiga-like biotoxin from Enterohaemorrhagic E. coli which binds to and damages kidney cells and can cause potentially fatal HUS (haemolytic uraemic syndrome) disease, which causes serious liver damage.

This is the largest E.coli outbreak and the most deadly in known human history. This new enterohemorrhagic strain of the bacterium Escherichia coli (EHEC) can attack the blood, kidneys, liver and brain. Close to one-third of the cases have developed full-blown HUS (haemolytic uraemic syndrome) disease which is very unusual. Normally in E.coli outbreaks only10% of the cases develop HUS. Also unusual is that most victims are adult women, where normally HUS affects more children then adults. The severe bloody diarrhea, with often related kidney, liver, brain and blood damage is somewhat similar to a HEMORRHAGIC fever such as Ebola.

The circumstantial indications that this is part of something much larger politically is that it fits into a pattern of political/economic/currency/medical/military/disaster/food shortages events and circumstances that are spreading an ever increasing level of chaos throughout the world. I will be covering these interrelated topics in later posts.

Stirling
[Tim Alexander, Rt. Hon. The Earl of Stirling]

Links to relevant articles:

Deadly E.coli outbreak in Europe caused by rare strain of bacterium, UN confirms ~ link

E.coli Outbreak Linked to Aggressive New Strain ~ link

EHEC: Update from Spiegel ~ link

Killer germ very antibiotic resistant: German researchers ~ link Europe E.coli is toxic new strain, trade row grows ~ link

Killer E.coli strain described as deadliest yet ~ link

E.coli in Europe outbreak never seen before - with video ~ link

WHO: E.coli outbreak cause by new strain ~ link

Never seen before E.coli strain hits Europe - video ~ link

Outbreak in Europe blamed on 'super-toxic' strain ~ link

UK confirms E.coli cases linked to German outbreak - with video ~ link

Cucumbers cleared, sources of E.coli not yet found ~ link

Thanks to Dr. Bill Deagle, MD, for his advice and to various readers of my blog for sending me links and information. Stirling

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 06:30 PM (GMT)

DR BILL DEAGLE - U.S. MILITARY BEING ISSUED URBAN CAMOUFLAGE

Listen to Dr Bill Deagle and John Moore speak about how the U.S. Military are now being issued with urban camouflage possibly for operations within six months or less. Also hear about the new hemorrhagic e.coli and further nuclear information tied to Fukushima. This broadcast took place on The Nutrimedical Report broadcast on the 3rd of June 2011.

Parts 1-3:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=J6sv0khA794
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hc0L4_S6poA
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EFO92De0yZU

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/J6sv0khA794" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/hc0L4_S6poA" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/EFO92De0yZU" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 11:26 PM (GMT)

USA has four suspected cases of contamination by bacteria E. coli

05/06/2011 - 2042
http://translate.google.com.br/translate?u...en&hl=&ie=UTF-8

The number of suspected cases involving the deadly bacterium Escherichia coli (E. coli), which left thousands of patients in Europe, reached four in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control of the country on Sunday.

"Right now, there are no reports of any other additional suspected cases in the United States, according to spokesman said the agency, Lola Russell.

All four patients visited the city of Hamburg, Germany, recently.

The rare outbreak of E. coli infected people in 12 countries - and has killed 22, besides leaving over 2,000 patients.

Bean sprouts and other foods may be the source of bacterial infection, according to German officials.

There are no indications that the U.S. food supply is affected by the bacterium, reported the U.S. government.

As a precaution, however, the country should increase surveillance on fresh food from places or areas of concern. But officials added that the EU is not a significant source of perishable products to the U.S..

INFECTION BY THE NUMBERS

The Robert Koch Institute (RKI) announced on Sunday that the number of deaths from complications caused by the bacteria increased to 22 (21 in Germany and one in Sweden) and confirmed cases totaled 2,200, and officials said the source of the outbreak can be in bean sprouts. Gero Breloer / Associated Press

German authorities said the source of the outbreak of the bacterium Escherichia coli can be in bean sprouts

More details about the investigations should be announced at a press conference on Sunday evening. Gerth Hahne, spokesman for Secretary of Agriculture of the State of Lower Saxony, said the British newspaper "Guardian" that an alert would be sent immediately to people to avoid eating bean sprouts in Germany.

Reinhard Burger, director of IRK, said that of those infected, 627 are suffering from hemolytic uremic syndrome, or HUS, and that cases of contamination could rise to 2,500 - if other suspicions are confirmed.

In conference, the German Health Minister, Daniel Bahr, defended the handling of the crisis and said that Hamburg reacted faster and more efficiently than in other outbreaks of E. coli already registered in other countries.

The opposition, however, accuses the government and says the crisis could have been managed more vigorously.

Also Sunday experts told the newspaper "Welt am Sonntag" that the bacteria may have spread from a biogas plant. During the fermentation process biogas, new bacteria often develop.

"They intersect and merge," said Bern Schottdorf. "We have not been researched what happens after that."

HOSPITALS BEYOND THE LIMIT

Earlier, the Minister of Health said hospitals in Germany are struggling to cope with the huge influx of victims of the bacterium.

Hospitals in Hamburg, the epicenter of the outbreak that began three weeks ago, patients have dispensed with minor illnesses to be able to meet people affected by a rare and highly toxic strain of the bacterium Escherichia coli (E. coli). Marcus Brandt / Efe - 30.mai.2011

Picture shows zone isolation hospital UKE, Hamburg; bacteria outbreak has killed 19 people in Europe

"We are facing a tense situation in relation to patient care," Bahr told the newspaper Bild am Sonntag on Sunday. He added that hospitals outside of Hamburg can be used to offset the "lack of beds" in the second largest city in Germany.

A spokeswoman for Regions Hospital Clinics, the largest private hospital in the state of Schleswig-Holstein, near Hamburg, said the crisis was using the resources to the limit.

He also said that "surgery for non-fatal diseases are being rescheduled. However, it seems the situation is improving, as we now have only 60 patients need to be isolated, compared to 109 on Friday."

GROUPS

The University Hospital Hamburg-Eppendorf (UKE), who yesterday visited the Leaf (3), centered care to more severe cases in the region.

"It's a situation that has never confront the past," says Jörg Debatin, director of UKE. "It's very difficult to make any prediction as to epidemiology. In the past weekend, we saw a decrease of infected people, only to be surprised with a new peak a few days ago," he says.

According to Carolina Vila-Nova, special envoy of the sheet to Hamburg, the hospital began to divide patients into groups according to severity of clinical manifestations. Of the approximately 700 confirmed cases, the uke came between 200 and 250.

The most worrying is the 105 people who developed the so-called hemolytic uremic syndrome, or HUS, with severe neurological and kidney damage (such as kidney failure and seizures) considered irreversible.

A third is in intensive care units and isolation. Breathing with the aid of equipment or are in coma. A second group, diarrhea with blood and other complications, has traditional conditions of internment, with dialysis and transfusions.

A third group is at home and have disease progression monitored daily. Monitoring is essential: Hamburg had the tragic case of the patient released from a clinic and died days later at home.

RESTAURANT

The owner of a German restaurant whose food may have been contaminated by the bacterium said Saturday he was devastated to learn that many of its customers were infected.

Reported in Europe, the outbreak of the bacterium E. coli has caused 22 deaths so far. Fabian Bimmer / Reuters

Germany has the largest number of cases of contamination by the bacterium Escherichia coli (E. coli), which has killed 19 people

"It was like a blow to the head when I heard the news," said Joachim Berger in an interview at his restaurant kitchen in Luebeck, 60 km from the city of Hamburg, the epicenter of the disease.

"We did all being tested here and everything was clean. I even paid for the test, because safety is important to our customers and employees," he said.

The newspaper Lübecker Nachrichten "reported that scientists had identified the local restaurant as a possible focus, where the bacterium was transmitted after the death of one person and sickening 17, including a group of tax collectors German and Danish tourists a child southern Germany.

"The restaurant has no fault, but it is possible that the supply chain can help determine how the disease germ into circulation," said microbiologist Werner Solbach, University Clinic of Lübeck, as saying.

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 01:03 AM (GMT)

E coli outbreak: German hospitals struggling to cope

Death toll rises to 21 as number of cases increases to 2,200, with bean sprouts thought to be to blame

Abby D'Arcy Hughes in Berlin guardian.co.uk, Sunday 5 June 2011 21.16 BST http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/0...erman-hospitals

German hospitals are struggling to cope with the surge in patients caused by the E coli outbreak, as the death toll rose to 22.

The health minister, Daniel Bahr, said hospitals in northern Germany were finding it difficult to provide enough beds and treatment for patients, with the total number of cases increasing to 2,200.

"We're facing a tense situation with patient care," Bahr said, "but we will manage it."

Agriculture officials said that bean sprouts grown in one organic farm between Hamburg and Hanover were the likely cause of the illness.

Hospital authorities said blood supplies were running low and staff were exhausted and working round-the-clock, with the northern cities of Hamburg and Bremen the worst affected.

"They [the doctors] voluntarily come in on weekends and even sleep here," Oliver Grieve, a spokesman for the Kiel University hospital in northern Germany told Spiegel Online.

Hamburg's health minister, Cornelia Prüfer-Storcks, told a news conference the city was considering bringing doctors out of retirement. "We want to discuss with doctors about whether those who recently retired can be reactivated," she said.

Patients with less serious illnesses are now being moved to nearby hospitals and operations for non-threatening diseases are being postponed.

A spokesman for Regio Clinics, the largest private hospital in the state of Schleswig Holstein, told Reuters: "All the hospitals in the region are pushing their limits. We can handle it but some of our patients have to be sent to other hospitals, especially those with HUS [haemolytic uraemic syndrome] or needing dialysis."

Extra nurses are being recruited from southern Germany to plug the gaps.

Meanwhile patients have described "horrendous" conditions in some hospitals. One said poor hygiene standards were contributing to the problem.

"All of us had diarrhoea and there was only one bathroom each for men and women, it was a complete mess," Nicoletta Pabst told the Associated Press. "If I hadn't been sick with E coli by then, I probably would have picked it up over there."

She said she had waited three hours to be seen before being sent home, apparently because her blood levels did not indicate that she had kidney failure. Her condition deteriorated and she had to call an ambulance the next morning, she said. She was hospitalised for a week at a different hospital.

Despite the increase in the death toll, authorities said the number of new cases had started to decline.

Meanwhile health inspectors continue testing samples from a restaurant in the northern city of Lübeck.

Tucked away in the cellars of the city's old town, the Kartoffel Keller became the focus of investigations over the weekend after a local newspaper revealed that up to 17 people who had eaten at the restaurant were infected with E coli, among them tourists from Denmark and a group of German civil servants. Two are seriously ill and a 47-year-old woman died.

The Kartoffel Keller is still open for business as officials from Germany's disease control authority, the Robert Koch Institute, are poised to release the results of samples taken from the kitchen of the restaurant.

"We've taken salad off the menu and put up an official notice on the door to reassure customers that the food is safe to eat," said the owner, Joachim Berger.

"We've got nothing to hide," he added. "So far all the tests have come up negative. But the guests are staying away."

But one journalist, Oliver Vogt, said locals were deliberately defying the hysteria.

"People are coming as a show of support," he said. "This is one of the best-loved restaurants here in Lübeck."

Just around the corner, the waiter at Lübeck's only vegetarian cafe had a very different view. "They [Kartoffel Keller] have hit rock bottom," he said. "You can lose your reputation so fast. It's not so easy to get it back."

• This article was corrected on 6 June 2011 to delete the reference to the E coli virus. It's a bacterium, not a virus.

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 02:53 AM (GMT)

'Terrorist food poisoning?! It's sociological warfare developing!'

Video; http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15243

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 09:18 PM (GMT)

Bioengineered E-coli Forensic Evidence

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=z8Mhjd3YN-I http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-RIwCK7C8ts

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/z8Mhjd3YN-I" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/-RIwCK7C8ts" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 11:26 PM (GMT)

E. Coli in Europe May Hurt U.S. Produce Sales

By Alan Bjerga and Leslie Patton - Jun 7, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-06-07/e...ause-found.html

Fresh and organic produce sales may decline in the U.S. because of an E. coli outbreak in Europe before rebounding once confusion over the cause is resolved, according to an industry group.

German officials backed away yesterday from comments that sprouts from an organic farm in Lower Saxony were the likely cause of the deadly E. coli case after initial tests at the farm failed to find traces of the bacteria. At least 23 people have died of the 2,429 stricken since May 2, the European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control said today.

Consumers in the U.S. may shy away from produce until they get clearer information on the cases in Europe and regain their confidence in food safeguards, Dave Gombas, senior vice president for food safety and technology with the United Fresh Produce Association, said in an interview yesterday.

“Getting consumer trust back is a very difficult thing,” said Gombas, whose Washington-based group represents companies such as Dole Food Co. and Chiquita Brands International Inc. (CQB) “Growers and handlers are following the right practices, and we have to let people know we are doing that.”

German authorities originally blamed cucumbers in Spain, then focused on the organic farm near the German town of Uelzen. Officials of Lower Saxony state said yesterday that initial tests from the farm showed no evidence of the bacteria while some samples were still being checked.
Contaminated Seed

Sprouts can’t be ruled out as a cause of the outbreak because the bacterium may be gone from the farm where they were grown, scientists said. Traces may be undetectable now if the offending produce was grown from a depleted batch of contaminated seed weeks ago, said James Paton, head of the bacterial pathogenesis laboratory at the University of Adelaide in South Australia.

In the U.S., Democrats on the House Energy and Commerce Committee requested a hearing on lessons of the outbreak for the nation’s food system. The European cases involve a strain that produces a toxin not usually seen in E. coli.

“What are the implications for the United States of a significant outbreak of what was previously an uncommon pathogenic strain?” the lawmakers, led by Representative Henry Waxman of California, said yesterday in a letter to the panel’s Republican majority. “A better understanding of what sparked this major outbreak in the European Union will help us to determine the prospect for an outbreak of this pathogen in the United States.”

Cutbacks in state and local government disease detection and response programs might hinder investigations of U.S. outbreaks, said Thomas Frieden, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta.
Import Alerts

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has “import alerts and mechanisms in place” to prevent European produce that may pose a risk from entering the country, Michael Taylor, the agency’s deputy commissioner for foods, said today in Washington.

The U.S. imports “little or no produce from Europe so it’s not a significant threat,” he said. The outbreak is “almost a classic case of an emerging pathogen” that’s a scientific challenge because “bacteria themselves change,” he said.

United Natural Foods Inc. (UNFI) has yet to see a decline in sales, according to Mark Shamber, chief financial officer of the company, the largest distributor of organic and specialty products in North America.

United Natural Foods

The effect on consumers can't be evaluated until the source of the bacteria's spread is identified, said Shamber, whose business sells food to grocers including Target Corp. (TGT), Whole Foods Market Inc., Costco Wholesale Corp. (COST) and Kroger Co. (KR)

United Natural Foods has fallen 5.6 percent in Nasdaq Stock Market composite trading since May 25, a day after the European cases became public. Today, the Providence, Rhode Island-based company rose 21 cents to $40.43 at 4 p.m.

In a 2006 outbreak, spinach in California was contaminated by E. coli, killing three people and sickening 200. Cow feces had contaminated water on the farmland where the vegetable grew, a conclusion made after weeks of investigations as sales of the leafy green plummeted.

Episodes of contaminated eggs, peanut butter and meat have produced sales slumps at food companies whose products weren't making people sick.

The cases have prompted grocery stores to use signs and food labels to better inform consumers where their food comes from, said Jennifer Dennis, an associate professor of horticulture and agricultural economics at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana. That should make consumers less likely to panic at an outbreak abroad, she said.

"I could see there being a little bit of skepticism, but in the long-term produce season I don't see things slipping" in the U.S., Dennis said.

To contact the reporters on this story: Alan Bjerga in Washington at abjerga@bloomberg.net; Leslie Patton in Chicago at lpatton5@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Larry Liebert at lliebert@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 11:27 PM (GMT)

E. Coli Deaths at 23 After Another Fatality as Source Eludes Investigators

By Allison Connolly and Jason Gale - Jun 7, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-06-07/e...estigators.html

Germany's E. coli outbreak killed another patient, bringing the death tally to 23, and sickened 96 more people as officials continued to search for a source.

At least 674 people have developed a life-threatening complication from E. coli in Europe out of the 2,429 who have been stricken since May 2, the European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control said today.

German authorities came under fire for being too quick to point to a cause for the second time since the infections began a month ago. France, the European Union's largest agricultural grower, will back a plan to compensate producers hurt by the outbreak, which has decimated consumer demand for vegetables and pointed to shortcomings in the 27-nation bloc's food-safety system, Agriculture Minister Bruno Le Maire said.

"There has been a failure, there has been a great failure, and we have to take that into account and try to improve our safety system so that it will never happen again," Le Maire said in an interview in London today.

German officials initially blamed Spanish cucumbers. Two days ago, they said sprouts from an organic farm near the town of Uelzen played a role in the outbreak. Yesterday, authorities in Lower Saxony state said initial tests from the farm showed no evidence of the bacteria.

European Health Commissioner John Dalli, speaking at the European Parliament in Strasbourg, emphasized the need to "reduce unnecessary fears" by communicating facts that are based on science rather than speculation.
700 Tests

Lower Saxony has conducted more than 700 tests, of which 415 have come back negative for E. coli while another 287 tests still need to be analyzed, authorities said today in an e-mailed statement. The results of 500 samples taken from the farm near Uelzen are not yet available, the statement said.

"It is crucial that national authorities do not rush to give information on a source of infection that is not" backed by science analysis, Dalli said. "We must be careful not to make premature conclusions."

The strain of E. coli involved in the outbreak produces a toxin that attacks the kidneys and blood vessels. Most cases have occurred in adult women and those who recently traveled to the north of Germany -- mainly Schleswig-Holstein, Lower Saxony, North-Rhine-Westphalia and Hamburg, the Stockholm-based European health agency said.
'Go for Salad and Die'

"It's not normal that people go out for a salad and die of the consequences," Linda McAvan, a U.K. member of the European Parliament, said today at a session devoted to the outbreak.

Sprouts can't be ruled out as a cause of the outbreak because the bacterium may be gone from the farm where they were grown, scientists said. Traces may be undetectable now if the offending produce was grown from a depleted batch of contaminated seed weeks ago, said James Paton, head of the bacterial pathogenesis laboratory at the University of Adelaide in South Australia.

The cause of the month-old epidemic remains unknown, according to health officials in Hamburg, which the European Union said is the “epicenter” of illnesses. Seventeen cases were tied to a restaurant in Luebeck, about 65 kilometers (40 miles) away, which got supplies from Hamburg.
Sprout Supplier

“They are still pretty strongly suspicious of the sprouts because the epidemiological link was strong,” Paton said in a telephone interview today. “It’s just that they haven’t found it at the farm.”

The property, Gaertnerhof Bienenbuettel, which has produced sprouts for 25 years, said it recalled produce and informed its customers immediately. Lab tests in mid-May found no evidence of E. coli, its proprietors said in a statement, adding they were “shocked and concerned” at being linked to the infection.

While the number of new cases of E. coli infection is rising at a slower rate, it’s too early to “give the all- clear,” said Cornelia Pruefer-Storcks, the health senator for the city of Hamburg, at a press briefing today. She said the exact cause of the outbreak may never be known.

The epidemic has killed more people and resulted in more cases of severe kidney damage than any outbreak on record. About 9,451 people were sickened and 12 killed in a series of outbreaks in Japan between May and December 1996, according to a 1999 study in the American Journal of Epidemiology. The majority of those cases were acquired by tainted radish sprouts in school lunches.
Infected Seeds

Radish seeds experimentally infected with the germ produced contaminated sprouts, suggesting the original source may not be the farm supplying the produce, researchers in Tokyo reported in a 1998 study.

“All of their water systems may be perfectly OK and their production methods may be fine, it’s just that they are starting off with contaminated seed stock,” said Paton, who was among the first scientists to use DNA analysis to trace food-borne outbreaks in Australia in the early 1990s. “If you just had a single-batch contamination, then the likelihood of there being any traces left over are remote.”

Evidence in restaurants and households may also be hard to find as any offending sprouts would likely have perished in the weeks since cases were first reported, he said.
Seeking a Source

It's possible the source of the German outbreak may never be discovered, said Robert Hall, a senior research fellow at Monash University's School of Public Health and Preventive Medicine in Melbourne, Australia.

"It gets really tough at this stage, and I suspect they may not get it out," said Hall, who investigated outbreaks of food-borne diseases as the former director of communicable disease control with the South Australian health department in Adelaide.

"You have got to make a lot of fine judgments and you've got to do them in a tearing rush, and with the eyes of the world's media glaring at you," Hall said in a telephone interview today.

Most disease investigators use methods based on those described by Michael Gregg, an epidemiologist with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention who edited the textbook Field Epidemiology in 1996, Hall said.
Food Targets

The process typically involves interviewing dozens of people who fell ill to screen for potential risk factors, including commonly consumed food and beverage items, he said. The same questions are then posed to about three times as many unaffected people, or "controls," and the data compared in order to discern key differences.

"That's quite a difficult thing to do, especially if you're doing it in a big rush, which you always are," Hall said. "On the basis of the differences, you can get an epidemiological association, which if you're lucky, you can then use to identify the food and test the food. And if you're really lucky, it turns out positive as well."

Once food targets have been identified, investigators will usually also look for possible contaminants in the environment, Hall said.

"Part of the difficulty is that it might be quite widespread through all kinds of cross-contamination mechanisms, or it might just be a single producer," he said. "If it's a single producer, then that's usually quite easy to control once you've found it. Then the court cases begin."

EU agriculture ministers are meeting in Luxembourg today. Vegetable supplies are being destroyed and prices for cucumbers, lettuce and tomatoes are tumbling after demand slumped and Russia banned imports. Farmers are losing millions of euros a day and some are being forced out of business by the crisis, according to Copa-Cogeca, a farm lobby group based in Brussels.

To contact the reporters on this story: Allison Connolly in Frankfurt at aconnolly4@bloomberg.net; Jason Gale in Singapore at j.gale@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Phil Serafino at pserafino@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 11:44 PM (GMT)

E. coli outbreak: EU proposes 150m euros to aid farmers

MEP Francisco Sosa-Wagner demands compensation for Spain's farmers

7 June 2011 Last updated at 18:17
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13683270

The European Commission has proposed giving at least 150m euro (£134m; $220m) in compensation to farmers hit by the deadly E. coli outbreak.

EU agriculture ministers have been holding crisis talks, amid criticism of Germany's handling of the outbreak.

But Germany's health minister has said the worst could now be over.

Producers of salad vegetables have seen sales plummet during the outbreak, which has killed 24 people and sickened nearly 2,400.

Germany's Health Minister Daniel Bahr said there was cause for optimism, saying there were "some arguments suggesting the worst is behind us".

There has been growing criticism of the way the outbreak has been handled, with MEPs accusing the German authorities of a lack of communication and co-operation.
'Be realistic'

Speaking after the talks in Luxembourg, EU farm commissioner Dacian Ciolos said the proposal of 150m compensation could be increased substantially if necessary.

The final amount could be announced by Wednesday, he said, and would depend on how many producers were shown to be entitled to money.

Spain has been demanding 100% compensation from Germany for the huge losses suffered by its farmers because of the false accusation that the outbreak began in Spanish cucumbers.

Spain's fruit and vegetables exporters association has estimated losses at 225m euros (£200m) a week.

France and Spain have both said the proposal is insufficient, but EU health chief John Dalli said countries had to be realistic about what they might receive.

He also called on Russia to lift its ban on importing European vegetables, calling it "disproportionate".

All the deaths from the outbreak, bar one in Sweden, have been in Germany. Twelve countries have been affected, with the cases outside Germany linked to travel there.

The latest focus for the source has been on bean sprouts from a German organic farm in Uelzen, 100km (62 miles) south of Hamburg. However, of 40 samples examined from the farm, the first 23 tested negative.

Officials say the results of the final 17 tests will not be known until Wednesday at the earliest because of the complicated nature of the testing process.

Further samples were also collected for testing on Tuesday.

Mr Ciolos earlier said it was important for the authorities to find the source of the infection as quickly as possible to regain consumers' trust and boost the market.

Mr Dalli told the European Parliament the outbreak was limited to a small area around Hamburg, so European-wide action and measures against any specific product were not necessary.

EU health commissioner John Dalli said unjustified fears were being spread Detailing how the crisis unfolded, he said that originally pinpointing cucumbers from Spain as the source had been wrong.

He said: "It's crucial that national authorities don't rush to give information on the source of infection when it's not justified by the science.

"That creates fears and problems for our food producers. We must be careful not to make premature conclusions."

Mounting criticism

Spanish delegate Francisco Sosa-Wagner later held up a cucumber during his speech to parliament, saying: "We need to restore the honour of the cucumber."

Dr Guenael Rodier, director of communicable diseases expert at WHO, said that if the origin of the infection was not identified soon it could never be found.

He told the Associated Press news agency the German investigation had been "erratic" but that solving such an outbreak was "not an impossible task".

On Monday, Germany's Lower Saxony agriculture ministry said investigations were continuing, as it announced that the first tests from the farm in Uelzen had proved negative.

It added that it did not expect "any short-term conclusions", and that, given the complex testing procedure, the remaining 17 samples might not be returned for a few more days.

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 12:16 AM (GMT)

British scientist identifies genetic sequences in new E. coli strain

Researchers are rapidly try to reveal this E. coli's secrets

Biology | 06.06.2011
http://www.dw-world.de/dw/article/0,,15133914,00.html

In a DW interview, a UK bioinformatician says he's part of a group 'crowdsourcing' E. coli analysis. They are using public data made available from Chinese researchers as a way to better understand the new strain.

On Sunday, German health authorities identified German-grown bean sprouts as the most likely potential source of the deadly E. coli. The bacteria has so far killed 22 people and made more than 2,000 ill across Europe since being detected in northern Germany more than three weeks ago.

German scientists and their colleagues at the Beijing Genomics Institute in China have been working on uncovering secrets of the outbreak. BGI scientists revised their draft genetic sequence of the E. coli strain and have been sharing their data with dozens of scientists around the world as a way to "crowdsource" this data. By publishing their data publicy and freely, these other scientists can have a look at the genetic structure, and try to sort it out for themselves.

To learn more, Deutsche Welle spoke with one of those people participating in this crowdsourced research, David Studholme, a bioinformatician and lecturer at the University of Exeter in the UK.

You've been doing some of your own research on this new E. coli strain here in Germany?

Yes. That's right. The really exciting thing here is that the Chinese institute, the BGI, released a complete genome sequence for this strain. Within hours of them releasing that, people like myself, and lots of other people around the world have taken this data that was publicly released by the BGI and have done our own analysis on it. Then, we've shared our results with each other, and it's all made public. It's very exciting to be able to do this.

Studholme normally studies pathogens that affect plants but volunteered during this crisis
What exactly have you been able to determine from the results you've gotten from the genetic sequence?

So probably the most important thing is that having the complete genetic sequence of this particular outbreak strain. We can then compare that against the complete gene sequences of other E. coli strains from other outbreaks in the past, so we can get a clue as to how similar this strain is to other outbreaks. It can give us some clues to the origin of this particular outbreak. It can also tell us some more interesting biology of this particular strain that make it particularly aggressive or antibiotic resistant, or those kind of features. So we can learn a lot about the strain by looking at its gene sequence.

What we've learned in this particular case is that this strain, the German strain, for the current outbreak, is very very similar to a couple of other strains that have been studied previously. One of those is one that occurred in an outbreak in Africa from 2001. But also very interestingly the current outbreak strain is one is also similar to an outbreak in Germany. If you have a look at the BGI's website, they actually speculate that the current outbreak is derived from this previous outbreak.

The other thing that I specifically found here is that I identified several genes that are in this current outbreak, and these are genes that are not found in any previously studied E. coli strain.

But these new gene sequences that you've identified, do you know what they do?

For some of them, yes, or at least we can make a good guess. So most of them look as though they are derived from a bacteriophage. This is a virus that infects the bacteria, or like a parasite on a parasite. They may be of some significance. There is also a gene in there that looks like it might be involved in breaking down or overcoming antibiotic.

So it has antibiotic resistance?

Yes, there are several genes in there that look like antibiotic resistant genes. And one of them looks pretty unique, not previously seen in E. coli. It's specifically called a microswin esterase, if you care to know what it's called.

Interview: Cyrus Farivar
Editor: Stuart Tiffen

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 01:43 AM (GMT)

There are claims Australian beef imports could be linked to E. coli outbreaks in Japan.

Updated at 12:02pm on 3 June 2011
http://www.radionz.co.nz/news/world/76869/...an-e-coli-alert

The Japanese authorities are looking into two outbreaks, one of which has killed four people since April.

The E coli is of a different type to that which has killed 18 people in an outbreak Europe.

Both outbreaks in Japan of the O157 strain E. coli are linked to Korean-style barbecue restaurants.

In the latest, the operator has apologised and says it suspects the infections might have been caused by beef from Australia.

However a public health inspection of the affected restaurant did not find E. coli bacteria.

Twenty people experienced moderate symptoms and have recovered, officials said, adding that the diners probably used the same chopsticks to cook raw meat slices and to eat them.

In the first outbreak, at another change, four people died after eating raw beef at a restaurant chain.

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 03:16 AM (GMT)

E. Coli confirmed in SWVA child that died, possible "outbreak" in NETN under investigation

By Nate Morabito
Published: June 06, 2011
http://www2.tricities.com/news/2011/jun/06...ion-ar-1088553/

[dohtml]<object width="429" height="295"><param name="movie" value="http://vp.mgnetwork.net/viewer.swf?u=8bfbd202e201102ea6fd001ec92a4a0d&z=TRI&embed_player=1" ></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://vp.mgnetwork.net/viewer.swf?u=8bfbd202e201102ea6fd001ec92a4a0d&z=TRI&embed_player=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="429" height="295"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

DRYDEN, Va. -- Lab results confirm the presence of E. coli in the child that died this weekend and the presence of the bacteria in a close contact of the child, Virginia Department of Health Public Information Officer Robert Parker said.

"The lab results confirm the presence of E. coli 0157:H7," Parker said. "That's a strain of E. coli that causes severe illness."

Northeast Regional Health Office Medical Director Dr. David Kirschke also confirms a similar severe strain in Northeast Tennessee.

"We have one case of the severe type in Tennessee," Dr. Kirschke said. "It may be similar to what the two kids from Virginia had."

In the Tennessee case, Dr. Kirschke said a Northeast Tennessee child is suffering complications in a Knoxville hospital.

Meanwhile, he says there are seven other confirmed cases of E. coli from four Northeast Tennessee counties.

“Everyone is doing fine,” Dr. Kirschke said of those seven people. “From the initial tests, these look like the less severe type of E coli. We are treating it like an outbreak. We are investigating it like an outbreak.”

The Northeast Regional Health Office is urging people to cook their meat thoroughly, wash their raw fruits and vegetables, and avoid swimming in recreation waterways like rivers and lakes that may be prone to agricultural run-off. Meanwhile, the health department is continuing to search for the cause of the “outbreak.”

“We’ve interviewed all of the people,” Dr. Kirschke said. “Some people have eaten ground beef, others have not. Some have eaten fresh fruits, but not everybody. Some have swam in lakes and rivers, but not everybody.”

A two year-old Dryden, VA girl died at Johnson City Medical Center Sunday after potentially being exposed to E. coli.

According to a Washington County, TN Sheriff's Office Coroner's Report, the two year-old was brought to the medical center Pediatric Intensive Care Unit with bloody diarrhea after she was "believed to be exposed to E. coli from a contaminated pool."

According to Capt. Shawn Judy, the report says the girl was transferred from a Southwest Virginia community hospital. The Washington County Sheriff's Office has now ordered an autopsy.

Her brother was also brought to the hospital with the same symptoms, Capt. Judy said. However, the WCSO is not aware of his condition.

Mountain States Health Alliance Communications Manager Teresa Hicks also did not know the boy's condition. He has since been transferred to a different hospital, Hicks said.

As for his sister, a Virginia Department of Health spokesperson confirmed the agency is investigating the death of a child, but would not go into specifics. Southwest Virginia Regional Public Information Officer Robert Parker said it’s too early to tell the exact cause of the child’s death.

"We can confirm the death of a child (within the last few days) in the Western Region of Virginia," Parker said. "The child was ill with a toxin-producing bacterial infection in the gastrointestinal tract. The investigation is continuing. We are awaiting lab results. E. coli is one of a number of things that can cause these types of infections.”

While the Virginia Department of Health waits on those results, Parker urges people to be cautious.

"It's important for everyone to keep in mind the ways they can prevent the spread of illness," Parker said. "Cook meat thoroughly. Avoid raw or undercooked meats like hamburger. Make sure food prep surfaces are clean (avoid cross-contamination). Wash your hands frequently. Avoid water that may be contaminated: rivers, lakes, pools. Don't drink water in a swimming pool, river, or lake. Any child with diarrhea should seek medical attention, because of how quickly diarrhea can lead to dehydration.”

Mountain States Health Alliance Infection Prevention Corporate Manager Rebecca Bartles echoes that advice. She urges people to watch out for the warning signs.

“Usually it starts out with abdominal pain, cramping, diarrhea, and then can progress to bloody diarrhea,” Bartles said. “If a child has those symptoms of abdominal pain and diarrhea that have gone on for any period of time, it’s best to take them to see their physician. Of course, bloody diarrhea is something that warrants immediate health care attention.”

In the most serious cases, E. coli can lead to kidney failure and even death. The bacteria can enter the body through oral contact with human feces or animals feces.

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 03:36 AM (GMT)

Here you go folks you knew it was about to be dropped at any time and now it has. Now do you understand the current attack with E.coli? Remember they want ever single gram of food irradiated Worldwide destroying the food and your health to boot.

QUOTE

Irradiation underused to fight E. coli in foods

By LAURAN NEERGAARD, AP Medical Writer – Mon Jun 6, 3:53 pm ET http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20110606/ap_on_...mFkaWF0aW9udQ--

WASHINGTON – Zapping salad fixings with just a bit of radiation can kill dangerous E. coli and other bacteria — and food safety experts say Europe's massive outbreak shows wary consumers should give the long-approved step a chance.

The U.S. government has OK'd irradiation for a variety of foods — meat, spices, certain imported fruits, the seeds used to grow sprouts. Even iceberg lettuce or spinach can be irradiated without the leaves going limp. And no, it doesn't make the food radioactive.

But sterilized leafy greens aren't on the market, and overall sales of irradiated foods remain low. A disappointed Grocery Manufacturers Association says one reason is that sellers worry about consumer mistrust.

"We need to do whatever we can to give us a wider margin of safety," says Dr. Michael Osterholm, a University of Minnesota infectious disease specialist who frequently advises the government. "Food irradiation for a number of produce items would give us not just a marginal increase, but give us probably the Grand Canyon increase of safety."

The source of the E. coli strain in Europe hasn't been pinpointed. Health authorities have warned consumers there not to eat any type of sprout, the newest suspect, but also say to avoid tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce until the mystery is solved.

The U.S. has faced its own spate of tainted produce in recent years, with E. coli, salmonella, listeria and other bugs linked to lettuce, spinach, hot peppers, sprouts, cantaloupes and more.

The outbreaks have renewed interest in higher-tech fixes like irradiation, used in certain foods in the U. S. and parts of Europe. Irradiation zaps food with electron beams, like the kind long used to run TVs, or with gamma rays or X-rays. It's the same way numerous medical products are sterilized.

The Food and Drug Administration approved irradiation for raw spinach and lettuce three years ago, saying it safely killed germs and lengthened shelf life without harming texture, taste or nutrients. But it didn't catch on, and the grocery producers group, which wants more salad ingredients OK'd for irradiation, blames both consumer wariness and a technical issue. Some of the bags the greens are sold in need approval to be zapped, too.

Irradiated meat has been around for years, particularly ground beef that is a favorite hiding spot for E. coli. About 15 million to 18 million pounds of U.S. ground beef are irradiated every year, says Ron Eustice of the Minnesota Beef Council. That's a tiny fraction of the nation's hamburger, and it must be labeled so consumers can choose — although some retailers advertise irradiated hamburger as a safety selling point. Thorough cooking kills E. coli and other germs, but people don't always get their meat hot enough.

Still, Americans get more irradiated foods than they realize. About a third of commercial spices — the kind added to processed foods — are irradiated, says Eustice, who's also a consultant to the Food Irradiation Processing Alliance.

About 30 million pounds of imported produce, mostly fruits such as guavas and mangos, get a low-dose zap, not enough to kill germs but to kill any foreign insects along for the ride.

As for those seeds used to grow recall-prone raw sprouts, Eustice says irradiation hasn't caught on for them either, despite government research backing it. Some growers instead try washing seeds in a mild bleach solution.

The newest irradiated product is pet treats, about 40 million pounds and counting, Eustice says. It's to combat the problem of salmonella-tainted dog chews.

Irradiation isn't an excuse for dirty produce, Osterholm says. It's far better to prevent contamination on the farm or in the processing plant than to try to get rid of it later. But it's impossible to prevent all animal-borne bacteria in open fields.

There's no reason to fear irradiation but "there's no silver bullet here," cautions food-safety expert Caroline Smith DeWaal of the Center for Science in the Public Interest. Irradiation doesn't kill viruses that also sometimes taint food, and it adds to the food's price. She says consumers' biggest desire: Make cleaner food in the first place.

Nor is irradiation the only high-tech option. Scientists also are trying high-pressure treatment to literally squeeze away germs. It's been used for fresh guacamole and raw oysters. Earlier this year, beef giant Cargill Inc. announced it was using the technology for a longer-lasting hamburger patty.

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 10:48 PM (GMT)

Experts criticize bungled German E. coli inquiry

By MARIA CHENG and JUERGEN BAETZ
Jun 7, 5:11 PM EDT
http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/E/EU_...-06-07-07-44-45

LONDON (AP) -- Outside health experts and German lawmakers roundly criticized Germany on Tuesday for a bungled investigation into the world's deadliest E. coli outbreak, saying the infections should have been spotted much sooner.

Many experts have been surprised, even shocked, at lapses in the German inquiry, and some say the culprit food may never be known.

Weeks after the outbreak began on May 2, German officials are still looking for its cause. Spanish cucumbers were initially blamed, then ruled out after tests showed they had a different strain of E. coli. On Sunday, investigators pointed the finger at German sprouts, only to backtrack a day later when initial tests were negative. The sprouts are still being tested.

"If we don't know the likely culprit in a week's time, we may never know the cause," said Dr. Guenael Rodier, the director of communicable diseases at the World Health Organization.

Rodier said the contaminated vegetables have probably disappeared from the market and it will be difficult to link patients to tainted produce weeks after they first became infected.

So far, the super-toxic strain of E. coli has killed 24 people, infected more than 2,400 and left hundreds hospitalized with a serious complication that can lead to kidney failure. New cases are being reported every day - 94 more in Germany on Tuesday.

Other experts were far more critical of the German investigation.

Michael Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota, said officials should have done more detailed patient interviews as soon as the outbreak began to trace cases of illness to infected produce.

Tests on current produce won't be helpful, he said. "It's like looking at camera footage of a traffic intersection today to see what caused an accident three weeks ago."

"If you gave us 200 cases and five days, we should be able to solve this outbreak," added Osterholm, whose team has contained numerous food-borne outbreaks in the United States.

He also disputed the idea that it might be impossible to find the source. "To say we may never solve this is just an excuse for an ongoing bad investigation," he said.

German lawmakers also slammed the government's response to the outbreak, criticizing the confusing announcements and retractions.

Christine Clauss, Saxony's state health minister and a member of Chancellor Angela Merkel's own governing party, said states were initially conducting their own investigations into the outbreak.

"It would be especially important to cooperate more closely and in a more centralized way in situations with a nationwide germ," she told the daily newspaper Leipziger Volkszeitung.

Karl Lauterbach, a doctor who serves as the health expert for the opposition Social Democrats, has repeatedly urged the government to set up a national crisis team to counter the lack of coordination and the leadership vacuum among the federal and state authorities responding to the crisis.

Paul Hunter, a professor of health protection at the University of East Anglia in England, said the outbreak could have been detected sooner if doctors regularly did lab tests on patients with diarrhea - a standard practice in Britain.

"They could miss an outbreak starting until people get quite sick with severe complications," he said.

Hunter said German doctors probably only realized how widespread the infections were when the number of patients with kidney failure spiked in mid-May.

On Tuesday, the EU health chief warned Germany against issuing any more premature - and inaccurate - conclusions about the source of contaminated food.

"It is crucial that national authorities do not rush to give information on the source of infection that is not proven by bacteriological analysis, as this spreads unjustified fears (among) the population all over Europe and creates problems for our food producers," EU health chief John Dalli said.

Tests are continuing on sprouts from an organic farm in northern Germany, but have so far come back negative.

Rodier said that doesn't necessarily exonerate the vegetables.

"Just because tests are negative doesn't mean you can rule them out," he said. "The bacteria could have been in just one batch of contaminated food and by the time you collect specimens from the samples that are left, it could be gone."

Hunter said the outbreak could have devastating consequences for consumers' faith in food safety.

Authorities in Germany "just have not done a good job of explaining why their assessments keep changing and as a result, it may be a long time before many people eat cucumbers and sprouts again," Hunter said.

Still, in outbreaks, it is not unusual for certain foods to be suspected at first, then ruled out.

In 2008 in the U.S., raw tomatoes were initially implicated in a nationwide salmonella outbreak. Consumers shunned tomatoes, costing the tomato industry millions. Weeks later, jalapeno peppers grown in Mexico were determined to be the cause.

In 2006, lab tests mistakenly pointed to green onions in an E. coli outbreak at Taco Bell restaurants in the U.S. Investigators considered cheddar cheese and ground beef as the source before settling on lettuce.

In Europe, a heated battle erupted Tuesday over compensation to farmers blind-sided by plunging demand as a result of the outbreak, with vegetable producers Spain and France scoffing at the amount proposed by the EU farm chief.

Farm Commissioner Dacian Ciolos suggested euro150 million ($219 million) - about 30 percent of the value of vegetables that cannot be sold. The losses to EU farmers have been staggering - in the neighborhood of euro417 million ($611 million) a week.

As of Tuesday, Germany's national disease control center reported 24 deaths - 23 in Germany and one in Sweden - and 2,325 infections in Germany, including 642 patients with a rare complication that may lead to kidney failure. Ten other European countries and the United States have another 100 cases.

The Robert Koch Institute reported a slight decline in the rate of newly reported infections, a sign the epidemic may have reached its peak, but added it was not certain whether that decrease will continue.

Hospitals in northern Germany were still being crushed by the demands of caring for E. coli patients.

A 41-year-old Hamburg lawyer who was hospitalized for more than a week in a separate hospital ward for E. coli cases described a surge in infections.

"When I got there, it wasn't that full yet, but then more patients came every day," she told the Sueddeutsche Zeitung newspaper, speaking on condition of anonymity because she didn't want her family identified.

Now discharged, she remains quarantined at home.

"People here are very, very much afraid," she said.

Baetz reported from Berlin. David Rising in Hamburg and Raf Casert in Brussels and contributed to this report.

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 10:49 PM (GMT)

Germany defends E.coli response as death toll rises

By Eric Kelsey and Brian Rohan
BERLIN/HAMBURG | Wed Jun 8, 2011 3:12pm EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/06/08/...E7511UX20110608

(Reuters) - German ministers on Wednesday defended their response to the E.coli outbreak that has killed 27 people and signaled possible changes in the way the country handles health crises in the future.

The German government has been criticized at home and around Europe for failing so far to pin down the cause of the outbreak that has stricken more than 2,700 people in 12 countries. All cases have been traced back to near Hamburg in northern Germany.

About a quarter of E.coli patients in the latest outbreak have developed a severe complication called hemolytic uremic syndrome affecting the blood, kidneys and nervous system.

"The E.coli and HUS outbreak in Germany is so severe that we have to react very quickly to announce these recommendations and we still can't give the all-clear," said Health Minister Daniel Bahr, referring to warnings not to eat certain raw vegetables, such as bean sprouts but also cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce.

The European Union on Wednesday upped compensation to 210 million euros from 150 million for farmers hit by plummeting sales, after Germany first blamed cucumbers from Spain and other salad vegetables, and then German bean sprouts.

The economic damage to Europe's farming industry -- with organic producers singled out for suspicion because they use manure rather than chemical fertilizer, putting crops more at risk of contamination -- could reach half a billion euros.

A German organic producers' association said it was not enough to compensate farmers for under a third of their losses.

Although the hunt for the source of infection now focuses on bean sprouts grown in Germany, cucumbers were back in the spotlight after traces of the E.coli strain were found in the eastern state of Saxony-Anhalt on cucumbers in a family's rubbish.

"There's no definitive proof the cucumber is the source of the E.coli outbreak," a state official said, adding that it was unclear when or how the cucumber became contaminated.

Germany has been criticized for hastily blaming Spanish cucumbers for the outbreak -- which it later withdrew -- and the lack of conclusive evidence that German sprouts are indeed the source. Excessive bureaucracy at federal and state level has also been blamed for slow crisis response.

Bahr said federal and regional health and food safety bodies would undertake an "immediate evaluation" of how they cooperate in what looks like the deadliest ever outbreak of E.coli.

The Robert Koch Institute, Germany's disease control body, reported an additional 318 E.coli-related cases on Wednesday.

"There will be new cases and unfortunately we have to expect more deaths, but the number of new infections is dropping significantly," Bahr said.

TESTS ON FARM WORKERS, SEEDS

Speaking at a news conference with EU health chief John Dalli and German health officials, Bahr said that a slowdown in the number of new infections was cause for "cautious optimism."

But he conceded that the source of the outbreak may never be positively identified, as scientists have warned.

Analysis of samples from restaurants, canteens and kitchens which prepared food where patients ate has failed to yield conclusive evidence for the theory that organic sprouts from a farm in the state of Lower Saxony were to blame.

Agriculture Minister Ilse Aigner said officials were still tracking more cases linked to the bean sprout farm, where at least one worker is known to have contracted the bacteria and had to have part of her intestine removed in surgery.

Two other workers at the farm had E.coli symptoms but both have since recovered, making it unlikely that tests could prove they had the new strain, a Lower Saxony agriculture ministry spokesman Gert Hahne said.

Investigators were also testing the seeds used at the farm after analysis of bean sprouts were so far inconclusive, Hahne said. Seeds from southern Europe and Asia were used at the farm and were likely shipped via Hamburg and Rotterdam, he said.

Dalli said the European Commission was convinced that the German investigation into the cause of the outbreak was heading in the right direction and defended the decision to issue health warnings on some vegetables, despite the impact on farmers.

"The advice and information reported to the public domain can stand up to rigorous scrutiny," he said, adding that only once the outbreak is over should Germany start looking at reforms to its crisis management.

"It's very different in the eye of the crisis," he said.

"EPIDEMIC POLICE?"

With the critical spotlight on the German federal system which divides responsibility for crisis response between state and central authorities, Bahr rejected calls for a national "epidemic police" and called this a "typical German" response.

"This is not the right time, at the height of the outbreak, to talk about structural (reforms)," Bahr said, adding that authorities needed to see through their current mandates.

Dalli advised Berlin to use the experience of countries which have dealt with E.coli outbreaks before.

The United States and Japan have had similar deadly outbreaks linked to sprouts while it was a Chinese laboratory that used DNA sequencing technology to identify this E.coli outbreak as a new and "highly infectious and toxic" strain.

(Additional reporting by Hans-Edzard Busemann and Christiaan Hetzner; Editing by Jon Boyle and Jon Loades-Carter)

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 03:32 AM (GMT)

EU-Russia summit overshadowed by E. coli vegetable ban

Farmers have suffered major losses amid fears about the safety of eating fresh produce

9 June 2011 Last updated at 01:10
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13706678

EU and Russian leaders are due to open a two-day summit, marred by Moscow's recent ban on EU vegetable imports following a deadly E. coli outbreak.

Brussels has condemned last week's measure as "disproportionate", but Russia says it wants to know the source of the outbreak before lifting the ban.

The outbreak has so far left at least 26 dead, most of them in Germany.

At the talks in Nizhny Novgorod, the EU and Russia will also discuss gas pipeline projects and visa-free travel.

Meanwhile, the EU has increased to 210m euros (£187m) its offer of compensation to farmers who have lost income due to E. coli crisis.
'No expectations'

Ahead of the biannual summit in the city on the Volga river, Dutch Agriculture Minister Hans Bleker downplayed hopes for a quick resolution of the rift between the two sides over last Thursday's ban on vegetables.

"We will see in the next hours, the next two or three days what will be the complete results," Mr Bleker told reporters, after holding urgent talks in Moscow on Wednesday.

He added that he had "no expectations that there will be an end to the export ban within a couple of days".

Russia imports about one-fifth of its vegetables from the EU, which makes it the bloc's largest market for the produce.

The EU has warned Russia that its ban is contradicting the spirit of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) - which Moscow wants to join.

However, Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin has countered that he would not "poison" his people for the sake of the WTO.

All in all, this has been not the perfect build-up to the bi-annual meeting of Russia and its largest trading partner and investor, the BBC's Steve Rosenberg in Moscow reports.

In Nizhny Novgorod, the two sides are also expected to discuss visa-free travel for Russians to the 27-member bloc, but a breakthrough is unlikely.
'Infections dropping'

On Wednesday, EU Farm Commissioner Dacian Ciolos raised 210m euros (£187m) its offer of compensation to farmers who have lost income due to the E. coli outbreak.
Continue reading the main story

Mr Ciolos was forced to act after coming under pressure from major producers. The EU had initially offered 150m euros.

European farmers' federation Copa-Cogeca quickly rejected the improved EU offer, which is still a fraction of farmers' estimates of their losses estimated to be as high as 417m euros a week.

Cases of the rare strain of enterohaemorrhagic E. coli (EHEC) have been concentrated in the northern German city of Hamburg.

Germany's health minister has said infections are dropping significantly, though he warned that more deaths were expected.

Health authorities in Germany erroneously blamed Spanish cucumbers, before an organic bean sprout farm in northern Germany came under suspicion.

Some samples from the farm have tested negative, with results of other tests still pending.

Scientists and German officials have warned that the origin of the infection might never be found.

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 04:21 PM (GMT)

Spain farmers give away produce in health campaign

By Martin Roberts

MADRID | Wed Jun 8, 2011 8:10am EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/06/08/...E7572DO20110608

(Reuters) - Spanish farmers gave away 30 tones of fruit and vegetables on Wednesday to dispel health fears they say are still hurting producers after being erroneously blamed for an E.coli outbreak in Germany.

On Tuesday the European Union offered farmers 150 million euros in aid to reimburse producers who have been unable to sell fruit and salad vegetables for nearly two weeks.

"They want to fob us off with 150 million (euros). It's shameful, it's humiliating when losses in our country are above 350 million," Miguel Lopez, general secretary of the COAG farmers' union told reporters.

Hundreds meanwhile queued up in Madrid's central Felipe II square as farmers stacked stalls with free produce including cucumbers, tomatoes, lettuces, courgettes, aubergines, water melons and peaches.

Fruit and vegetables are key components of the Mediterranean diet, which has been linked to lower rates of heart disease than those prevalent in northern Europe.

Lopez said strict traceability standards in Spain ensured the safety of its fresh fruit and vegetables, of which he said Spain was the world's biggest exporter.

"When fingers were pointed at us, we rectified. We immediately identified the farms where it was indicated there was a health problem with cucumbers," he said.

"Nonetheless, when our produce reaches the distribution platform, all traceability is lost. We have been asking the EU for better traceability for years."

CASH NEEDED

German officials have yet to identify the source of a strain of E.coli bacteria which has killed 25 and made more than 2,400 people in 12 countries ill and scientists say they may find out.

Health officials in Hamburg initially said Spanish cucumbers may have been the source of outbreak, but later admitted further tests on the cucumbers showed that, while contaminated, they did not carry the strain responsible for the deaths.

Farmers say they cannot afford to buy seeds they need to plant for the summer after having had to uproot plantations and dump or compost perishable goods they have been unable to sell.

"The situation is critical," said Miguel Monferrer, who grows cucumbers and cherry tomatoes on the coast of southern Granada province.

"We can't sell at any price, we haven't sold anything for two weeks. If this doesn't improve soon, we will have to wait until the autumn until we can plant again."

Farmers groups estimate the Spanish fresh fruit and vegetable sector turns over 15 billion euros a year and earned 2 billion euros in exports to Germany alone in 2010.

(Reporting by Martin Roberts; Editing by Jon Boyle)

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 05:19 PM (GMT)

Germany's superbug is weaponized with Bubonic Plague DNA

Posted on June 9, 2011 by geobear7| 11 Comments
http://foodfreedom.wordpress.com/2011/06/0...-dna/#more-8756

Food Freedom has deliberately refrained from posting any suggestion that Germany's superbug is related to biowarfare, until further evidence emerged. Various sources now corroborate this story, including The Atlantic:

"On Tuesday [May 31], the German newspaper Süddeutsche Zeitung reported that [leading German E. coli researcher Helge] Karch had discovered that the O104:H4 bacteria responsible for the current outbreak is a so-called chimera that contains genetic materia from various E. coli bacteria. It also contains DNA sequences from plague bacteria, which makes it particularly pathogenic."

Though he emphasized "There is no risk, however, that it could cause a form of plague," Karch added that plague DNA sequences make the superbug "particularly pathogenic."

Also, it is interesting timing to note that the European Union banned herbal remedies on May 1, 2011. Below is Dr Rima Laibow's summary of this developing story.

~ Ed.

By Dr Rima Laibow
Natural Solutions Foundation

They tell us the "Super bug E. coli 0104:H" is terrorizing Germany, causing otherwise healthy people to develop Hemolytic-Uremic Syndrome (HUS) in which their kidneys fail, their red blood cells explode and then, tragically, they die.

Germ sleuths and clinicians alike have been even more horrified than the average Spanish cucumber eater (the vegetable pinned with the blame for the lethal outbreak). The general public just wants the disaster to go away. The doctors want to know why, what and, now, WHO is responsible.

E. coli is found in the guts of every mammal and is generally harmless. In fact, it is present in massive quantities: half of the volume of the normal bowel excretion is made up of their huge numbers. But when a good germ goes wrong, it can cause disease in the host or anyone who picks it up through contamination or lack of hygiene.

And E. coli 0104:H4 has gone very, very wrong, with, it would appear, quite a bit of help from its friends.

Mike Adams, the intrepid Health Ranger, revealed to the English speaking world that this extraordinarily aggressive E. coli (from a family of bugs which are normally passive and non-aggressive in the extreme) had been systematically genetically altered through laboratory manipulation, to be totally resistant to 8 classes of antibiotics.

Natural News Article Link: http://www.naturalnews.com/032623_ecoli_fr...vegetables.html

“European health authorities are leaping at the opportunity to spread fear about organic foods while ignoring the obvious true cause of the contamination in the first place — the widespread abuse of antibiotics in animal farming operations… The e.coli blame game has become a circus of musical chairs. First, they blamed the Spaniards as a form of retaliation for Spain’s resistance to accepting GMOs. This act drove Spanish farmers into bankruptcy through a savage campaign of rumor-mongering. After ravaging the Spanish vegetable farmers, they began to randomly instill widespread fear about a variety of vegetables: First it was cucumbers, then lettuce and then finally tomatoes. And now, the blame has come full circle and is now being cast upon organic sprout growers in Germany!”

He pointed out, quite correctly, that without sustained and careful laboratory manipulation there would be no way for this organism to acquire total resistance to these drugs since the drugs are not used in agriculture and the bacteria would not encounter all eight of them in nature.

The only reasonable conclusion is that colonies of normal E. coli had been intentionally, systematically exposed to each of the antibiotics in turn and the surviving colonies had been propagated and then exposed to the next antibiotic. The surviving germs were now resistant to both of the antibiotics to which they had been exposed. The process was repeated until a super bug was created which would not yield to any of the antibiotics that doctors would customarily use to treat the infection.

This is the only rational conclusion to which the evidence points.

Of course, by who, and why, the altered organism was deployed has not yet been established. A psychotic graduate student with aspirations to be a mass murderer? A corporate ploy to discredit independent agriculture and force the total industrialization of food to keep it “safe” from contamination (that is, the organized intentional contamination of all food by the folks who make the agrochemicals and GMOs which allow more of them to poison us and the drugs that you take when you get sick from the food)? A dedicated globalist loyally pursuing the “great culling” of us “useless eaters”?

So what we knew was that a forced natural selection had been used to create killer super-super bugs. Now we know that genetic manipulation of the GMO sort has been used, as well. Truly, a weaponized bug if there ever was one…

Helge Karch, the director of the Robert Koch Institute (Germany’s CDC). who heads a consulting laboratory at the Münster University Hospital in Germany says that he has discovered that the super killer contains DNA from E. coli, which is what he expected. It also contains (unexpectedly for those who don’t expect such genocidal manipulations) DNA from the organism that causes plague, responsible for wiping out a quarter of Europe’s population during the Black Death (1348-1351).

Please pay attention here: we are talking about the Black Death. Seriously.

Bubonic plague is caused by Yersinia pestis and is one of the most feared of all disorders. So when Dr. Karch blithely assured the German population that there is little danger of an outbreak of plague from this organism, he is clearly whistling through his Spanish cucumber.

Although we all love to be reassured, there is no one on planet Earth who can reassure us that we are not already facing a new plague. This one, however, rather than resulting from an unplanned, but wildly toxic combination of rats, lice and history, would be the intentional outcome of an unnatural selection process and a high-tech genetic manipulation to create a death bug. A weaponized bug.

Deny the genocidal agenda at your peril. I, for one, can see no reasonable option to the conclusion that the mad [wo]men at the helm of the realm are consummate murderers, killing randomly for their own unspeakable ends.

A bright note, however: there is no way in which any organism can become resistant to nano silver. None. Faced with the presence of a plague, a weaponized super plague, an ordinary infection or a genocidal assault through organisms of death, I want nano silver on hand, lots of it. Nano-silver is a nutrient that supports normal immune system function.

Ah, yes, nano silver was declared illegal in Europe on January 1, 2011. Can’t use an illegal substance, now can we. The good people of Europe are expected to be good citizens of the New World Order and… just die.

Civil disobedience, anyone? Or perhaps the people are ready to fight for their silver!

I get mine, which is called “Silver Sol” at www.Nutronix.com/NaturalSolutions. You should, too.

Yours in health and freedom,
Dr. Rima – www.DrRima.net
Rima E. Laibow, MD
Medical Director of the Natural Solutions Foundation

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 05:49 PM (GMT)

6 Real Examples of Food Terrorism

Recent food terror warnings hide reality

http://farmwars.info/?p=6205

The latest warning coming from British intelligence that al-Qaeda and other political organizations could contaminate the food supply is part of a continuing plot line that hides the obvious: our food already has been poisoned under the auspices of oversight agencies who have been complicit in the very real threats to the public food supply. The following toxins offered into the marketplace by corporate-government collusion have contributed to far more sickness and death than E. coli or salad bar terrorists ever will . . . unless of course the terrorists have bioengineered a superbug, or it has escaped from a bioweapons lab like the one at Fort Detrick, Maryland.

Pesticides: Aside from the fact that pesticides have been linked to lower IQ in children, thus altering the future potential of human society, DDT and the cocktail of other pollutants and synthetic chemicals now include those used in GM food production (Bt), such as glyphosate. Even more alarming is that pollutants that have been banned for decades are still present in 100% of pregnant women, while those from GM food appear in 80% of unborn fetuses. The presentation below offers additional analysis of the health effects, particularly on the immune system:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/0_BbQxAs5us?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/0_BbQxAs5us?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true"

allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Fluoride: Sodium fluoride (silicofluoride), is an industrial-grade hazardous waste material made during the production of fertilizer. Its past history includes patented use as rat poison and insecticide. Dr. Paul Connett is leading the fight against mandatory water fluoridation. People are finally waking up to the hazards and are now demanding that governments remove this deadly poison. Let's keep in mind that it was put there with full knowledge of its toxicity and has led to massive negative health effects. Dr. Connett explains all in a must-see, one-hour interview:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/zo6SnvmMP9k?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/zo6SnvmMP9k?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Mercury: In both organic and inorganic form, mercury wreaks havoc with the nervous system — especially the developing nervous system of a fetus. It penetrates all living cells of the human body, and has been documented most as increasing the risk for autism. This calls into question mercury's use in dental fillings, vaccines, and just about anything containing high fructose corn syrup — a near staple in the American diet . . . including baby food. It has also been known for years that mercury fumes from CFL compact fluorescent tube light bulbs pose a serious threat which goes far beyond eyestrain, migraines, and depression, but still they have been pushed under the green agenda and are set to be completely phased in by 2014. We offer the following video of truth-telling comic relief from 2007 to illustrate the absurdity of such legislation, with a more serious presentation available HERE :

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/BqrCij6CbHA?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/BqrCij6CbHA?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

GMO: Monsanto owns nearly 90% of staple GMO crops such as corn, soy, and cotton. Monsanto started as a chemical company that brought the world poisons like Agent Orange and Roundup. Independent studies of "frankenfood" have shown a link to organ failure; a Russian study has concluded near-total sterility in GMO-soy-fed hamsters by the third generation; and other animal studies have shown potentially pre-cancerous cell growth, smaller brains, livers, and testicles, partially atrophied livers, and damaged immune systems, according to a comprehensive article by Jeffrey M. Smith that also highlights the process of intimidation that even well-regarded scientists have been subjected to when publishing their research. Perhaps a recent mainstream article theorizing that a massive 64% increase in bowel cancer among young people is attributable to “heavy drinking and obesity” should be redirected toward the rise in the prevalence of GMO. Here is Jeffrey M. Smith interviewed about the GMO threat:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/HVeS1yIA7x0?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/HVeS1yIA7x0?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Bisphenol-A: The FDA failed to warn the public about this chemical found in plastic packaging including baby food containers, baby bottles, and pacifiers. Animal research has shown many adverse health effects such as damage to the reproductive system, immune system, and neurological development, as it mimics sex hormones. In humans this seems to be leading to early puberty, reduced sperm count, and prostate cancer. The two-part episode below offers key details about the history and dangers of Bisphenol-A that the FDA continues to officially allow despite finally acknowledging its dangers, even as other countries ban it and many companies have proactively removed its use:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/3iJTBv3RV5g?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/3iJTBv3RV5g?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Aspartame: Among the many dangerous food additives that plague the modern-day plate, Aspartame is one of the most widespread and toxic. Aspartame is a neurotoxin that interacts with natural organisms, as well as synthetic medications, producing a wide range of proven disorders and syndromes as outlined in the following must-see, full-length documentary, Sweet Misery, showing how a neurotoxin became part of the food supply with FDA approval:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/DJ0lEZQF1-Y?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/DJ0lEZQF1-Y?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Conclusion

The list above is merely the tip of the iceberg that doesn't even include corporate/ military poisoning of the planet through environmental disasters like Fukushima, the BP oil disaster, geo-engineering, or the ongoing use of depleted uranium. As the food terror news is guaranteed to be used to cast a wider net of potential shadowy terrorist groups and lone nuts in order to usher in total food control, we would do well to remember the millions who already have died from corporate-government malfeasance . . . and from exactly where the provable death sentence has been issued. Terrorists have been striking the food system for decades now. They're just not the cave-dwellers we've been conditioned to fear.

TheUnhivedMind - June 10, 2011 04:53 PM (GMT)

They just have to try and pin all this created attack on the organic farm and one of the most nutritious foods, watch them falsify tests shortly. All giving the impression that organic farming is bad and should be taken over/ monitored etc.

QUOTE

German tests link bean sprouts to deadly E. coli

It is believed the bean sprouts were produced in Germany

10 June 2011 Last updated at 11:59
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13725953

New data released in Germany strongly suggests that locally produced bean sprouts were, as suspected, the source of the deadly E. coli outbreak.

"It's the bean sprouts," said Reinhard Burger, head of Germany's centre for disease control.

Officials initially blamed the E. coli, which has killed 29 people, on imported cucumbers, then bean sprouts.

In another development, Russia agreed to lift its ban on imports of EU fresh vegetables in return for guarantees.

The Russian ban had compounded a crisis for EU vegetable-growers, with Spanish cucumber producers wrongly blamed for the contamination.

Mr Burger, who heads the Robert Koch Institute, told reporters on Friday that even though no tests of the sprouts from a farm in Lower Saxony had come back positive, the epidemiological investigation of the pattern of the outbreak had produced enough evidence to draw the conclusion.

The institute, he added, was lifting its warning against eating cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce, but keeping it in place for the sprouts.

Some 3,000 people have been taken ill with the German outbreak of E. coli, which involves a previously unknown strain of the bacterium.

Sufferers may develop haemolytic uraemic syndrome (HUS) where bacteria attack the kidneys and nervous system, giving them fits and often forcing them on to dialysis.
'Hot lead'

Robert Koch Institute researchers have been examining the farm in Bienenbuettel

"People who ate sprouts were nine times more likely to have bloody diarrhoea than those who did not," Mr Burger said.

Germany's top disease control official said the origin of the contamination was still believed to be the small organic farm in Lower Saxony which first came under suspicion at the weekend.

"The links are ever clearer - it's a hot lead," he told reporters in Berlin, at a joint news conference with the heads of Germany's federal institute for risk assessment and federal office for consumer protection.

He said it was possible that all tainted sprouts had now either been consumed or thrown away, but he warned the crisis was not yet over.

"There will be new cases coming up," he said.

"Thousands of tests carried out on tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce have proved negative," he added.

Lower Saxony agriculture minister Gert Lindemann said earlier this week that experts had found no traces of the E. coli bacterium strain at the Bienenbuettel farm but he did not rule it out as the source of the contamination.

In an interview to be published in next week's edition of Focus magazine, Mr Lindemann said some 60 of the people taken ill had eaten sprouts from the farm, which employs about 15 people.

Contamination might have been caused by contaminated seeds or "poor hygiene", he added.
Ban to be lifted

The agreement to lift the Russian ban was announced after talks between top EU officials including the Commission chief, Jose Manuel Barroso, and Russian counterparts in the central Russian city of Nizhny Novgorod.

"We are ready to resume the shipments under guarantees of the EU authorities," President Dmitry Medvedev told reporters.

Russia's top food safety officer, Gennady Onishchenko, said Russia would lift its prohibition after receiving food safety guarantees from the European Commission.

Mr Barroso said the EU would send a form for issuing food safety certificates to Russia in the next few days.

According to the Commission, the total value of EU exports of fresh vegetables to Russia is 600m euros (£530m; $870m) a year, a quarter of the total exported.

Spain, France, Germany and Poland are the biggest exporters.

Phazon - June 11, 2011 11:06 AM (GMT)

E coli death toll rises to 33 in Germany
June 10, 2011

http://www.deccanchronicle.com/channels/wo...-33-germany-536

German health authorities on Friday lifted their warnings against cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce as possible carriers of a deadly E coli bacteria, which so far has claimed 33 lives, and narrowed down their search for the source of the infection to bean sprouts.

Investigators have now narrowed down their search for the origin of the killer bacteria to bean sprouts from an organic farm in northern Germany even though no concrete evidence for that has been found, says Prof Reinhard Burger, President of the Robert Koch Institute, Germany's national disease control and prevention centre.

The authorities decided to withdraw their month-long warnings against consuming raw cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce, especially from northern Germany because their suspicions so far could not be substantiated, he told a news conference in Berlin.

These vegetables can be consumed without any apprehensions, Prof Burger said. But he advised the public to continue to avoid eating raw bean sprouts.

The farm in Uelzen in the state of Lower Saxony became a focus of the investigators last week after they found that it had supplied a variety of bean sprouts to restaurants and canteens in some of the centres of severe E coli outbreak in northern Germany. Its clients included a restaurant in the Baltic Sea port city of Luebeck where 17 people became infected with the Escherichia coli bacteria after dining there between May 12 and 14.

One woman in a group of eight died of complications caused by the life-threatening haemolytic uraemic syndrome (HUS) while two others were in critical condition. The farm had also supplied to a canteen in nearby Cuxhaven where 18 customers were infected with the bacteria.

Moreover, three workers of the farm contracted E coli infection and one of them was treated in a hospital.

However, initial laboratory tests of 40 samples of bean sprouts from the farm and a much larger investigation involving around 500 samples produced no evidence of contamination with the Enterohaemorrhagic E coli bacteria, Lower Saxony health ministry officials in Hannover said.

New evidences that restaurant visitors who had bean sprouts in their menu had a higher risk of contracting the infection than other guests who did not eat the vegetable prompted the authorities to narrow down their investigation to the farm in Uelzen, Prof Burger said.

However, he expressed doubts whether it would be possible for the researchers to establish that bean sprouts from the farm indeed carried the bacteria because it is very likely that the source of infection may have dried up. E coli contaminated bean sprouts may have been consumed already or thrown away, he said.

Prof Burger said the killer bacteria was spreading at a much slower pace than in the past weeks and the number of grave infections dropped for the first time since its outbreak over a month ago.

According to the estimates of the RKI, around 2,000 people are infected with the bacteria and 722 of them have developed symptoms of HUS, which results in acute kidney failures, seizures, strokes and coma.

Germany's Health Minister Daniel Bahr expressed relief that the warnings against possible source of E coli infection could be narrowed down to bean sprouts. This will give the public a clear idea how to protect themselves, he told journalists.

Meanwhile, Lower Saxony's health authorities barricaded the farm and imposed a ban on selling all agricultural products. Until now, it was barred from selling bean sprouts.

TheUnhivedMind - June 12, 2011 05:59 PM (GMT)

Russia to Lift Ban on EU Vegetables

VOA News June 10, 2011
http://www.voanews.com/english/news/europe...-123624149.html

Russia says it will lift its ban on European Union vegetables imposed in the wake of the deadly E. coli outbreak.

Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and EU Commission chief Jose Manuel Barroso made the joint announcement Friday following a two-day Russia-EU summit in the central Russian city of Nizhny Novgorod.

The EU is to provide Moscow with documents certifying the vegetables' safety.

German public health officials say new data show that contaminated sprouts are the source of the outbreak, which has killed at least 30 people and sickened nearly 3,000 others. All but one of the deaths and the majority of those infected have been in Germany.

The head of Germany's national disease control center said Friday the pattern of the outbreak points to the sprouts as the source.

Health officials initially blamed the bacterial infection on Spanish cucumbers and other vegetables and then spread the blame to other European countries, costing EU farmers millions of dollars as produce was left to rot in fields and warehouses. Russia is one of the EU's largest markets for vegetables and other produce.

German authorities are now lifting the warning against eating cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce, but they say the crisis is not over and people should not eat bean sprouts.

Russian officials gave no specific timeframe for resuming vegetable imports from the European Union, saying it depends on how quickly the EU sends the documents. The EU has promised to send the safety certificates in the next two days.

E. coli symptoms include stomach cramps, diarrhea, fever, vomiting, and in extreme cases, kidney failure and death.

TheUnhivedMind - June 12, 2011 06:04 PM (GMT)

5 people in US now linked to European E. coli outbreak; 4 believed infected in Germany

By Associated Press,
http://www.washingtonpost.com/lifestyle/fo...4IPH_story.html

ATLANTA — Health officials say the count of U.S. cases linked to the food poisoning outbreak in Europe has grown to five.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on Friday added a case to the count. Unlike the previous four, the new case was not someone who had been to Germany — it was a family member who apparently was infected from close contact with one of the travelers.

One case has been confirmed as the same form of E. coli, and the other four are still suspected. They include people in Massachusetts, Wisconsin and Michigan. None died.

European officials say sprouts from a farm in northern Germany caused the outbreak that has killed 31 people, sickened nearly 3,100 and prompted much of Europe to shun vegetables.

TheUnhivedMind - June 13, 2011 12:58 AM (GMT)

German E-Coli Outbreak: Accident or Planned “Genocide” for Organics?

By Barbara H. Peterson
http://farmwars.info/?p=6236

What if the deadly e-coli outbreak in Germany that was blamed on organic sprouts with no direct proof, but through circumstantial evidence only, was instituted as part of a deliberate campaign to sway public opinion in favor of compliance with Codex regulations and to call for the irradiation of organic seeds?

Whether the contamination came from the water, seeds, was genetically engineered in a lab specifically for this purpose, or was a natural and unreported product of the genetic engineering process and high rate of GM contamination we are currently experiencing, makes no difference at this point to the people, and I use that term lightly, who are taking advantage of every situation to turn it to their favor and make a fast buck off others' misery.

While strolling the net, I hear a lot of buzz lately about how dirty organic processing is because free-range cattle poop on the ground where plants are grown that people eat, and that all organic seeds should be irradiated to kill the deadly e-coli pathogens inherent in this system. That is the spin, based on half-truths and outright lies. The truth is, organic farming has proven to be safer and healthier than its factory farm cousins. Poop from organic, free-range cows that lands on the soil is not the problem. I grow my veggies in organic poop, and have never been sick from a head of cabbage, bean sprout, or beet. So, either this latest "threat" in the form of e-coli was a concocted event intended to lead to the eradication of organics or simply an advantageous situation that is being exploited by the powers that be. Either way, here is a possible anticipated outcome:

Organic sprouts are blamed for a deadly e-coli outbreak. To remediate this, irradiation of all organic SEEDS will be called for as per Codex guidelines, and instituted as a process for the National Organics Program in order to retain certification. Simple. Kill true organics from the inside out, and leave the door open for the likes of Monsanto et al to completely take over ALL food supplies without firing a shot.

If this plan should work, then this could signify the end of organic food as we know it. Period. Spread the word. Maybe we can nip this in the bud before it grows too big. Meanwhile, grow and save your own seed from clean sources, teach others to do the same, and spread this movement just as far and wide as possible to save as many people as possible, or we can simply kiss organics and our health goodbye, and say hello to complete food control via Codex Alimentarius and your friendly USDA.

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 06:00 PM (GMT)

Majority of Germans unhappy with handling of E.coli outbreak

Wed Jun 15, 2011 11:17am GMT
http://af.reuters.com/article/worldNews/id...0110615?sp=true

BERLIN (Reuters) - A majority of Germans are unhappy with their government's handling of the outbreak of E.coli bacteria in food that has killed 37 people, a poll indicated on Wednesday.

In a survey of 1,003 people by pollsters Forsa, 58 percent of respondents considered Berlin's crisis management in what is the deadliest outbreak of the bacteria in modern history as less than satisfactory or poor.

Only 31 percent of those surveyed were satisfied with the government's information policy during the outbreak, according to the poll, published by Stern magazine.

More than 3,200 people have so far been taken ill with the E.coli strain, about a quarter of them developing a complication called haemolytic uraemia syndrome, which affects the blood, kidneys and nervous system.

German health authorities have linked the epidemic to contaminated bean sprouts and shoots from a German organic farm sold to consumers and restaurants for eating in salads.

Germany's main disease control centre, the Robert Koch Institute, says the number of new infections appears to be on the wane, although the outbreak claimed its first child fatality on Tuesday when a two-year-old died from the bacteria.

Last weekend, Karl Lauterbach, a health expert and member of parliament for the opposition Social Democrats, said some 100 victims had suffered such extensive damage that they would need kidney transplants or lifelong dialysis.

Speaking to newspaper Bild am Sonntag, Lauterbach criticised the sometimes bureaucratic handling of the outbreak, saying parliament would investigate reports that infection alerts took over a week to be registered because they were sent by post.

"We will investigate in the health committee how many infections could have been avoided if an electronic alert system had been used," he said.

Health Minister Daniel Bahr acknowledged in the same paper that the alert system for E. coli should be improved and that German states and the federal government would work together in that direction, saying: "We must discuss the alert process."

The poll, conducted on July 8 and July 9 with a margin of error of three percent, also showed that 58 percent of respondents had avoided certain vegetables during the outbreak.

(Reporting by Brian Rohan)

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 06:01 PM (GMT)

Toddler dies of E.Coli related complications in Germany

Germany reports death of first toddler from E. Coli

15 June 2011
http://www.allheadlinenews.com/articles/90...%20in%20Germany

Germany, the origin of deadly EHEC infection, on Tuesday reported the death of a toddler. The deadly E. coli infection has already claimed 37 lives, 36 in Germany and one in Sweden.

The two-year-old boy, who lived in the northern town of Celle, was receiving treatment at a Hanover hospital where he died of abnormal breakdown of red blood cells, kidney failure and two extreme symptoms of E. coli infection.

The authorities in the state of Lower Saxony confirmed his death that has made him the youngest victim of the deadly infection, which hit the nation last month.

The deadly bacteria had also infected his elder brother and father, but doctors claimed that they were recovering in the hospital.

According to Germany's National Disease Prevention and Control Agency, Robert Koch Institute, Germany has reported 3, 235 cases since the outbreak, of which 782 are suffering from a life-threatening illness arising from E. coli called haemolytic uraemic syndrome (HUS). The HUS destroys nervous and kidney systems.

Last week, authorities claimed that bean sprouts produced in a northern German farm was the source of E. Coli outbreak, dropping previous warning against avoiding raw cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce. However, European farmers lost hundreds of millions of dollars because of this food panic.

Republish Email Facebook Digg Twitter

TheUnhivedMind - June 17, 2011 02:20 AM (GMT)

BUBONIC SUPERBUG: THE COMING FALSE FLAG PART 1 UMBRELLA CORPORATION (HD)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OViQm9X6yqo

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/OViQm9X6yqo?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/OViQm9X6yqo?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

IMPORTANT LINKS YOU MUST TAKE A LOOK AT.. http://foodfreedom.wordpress.com/2011/06/0...nic-plague-dna/
http://www.naturalnews.com/032622_ecoli_bioengineering.html
http://www.dw-world.de/dw/article/0,,15133914,00.html
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/06/ecoli-...-is-biowar.html

STAY TUNED.. A LOT MORE TO COME IN PART 2

TheUnhivedMind - June 19, 2011 03:49 PM (GMT)

Burgers from this shop left eight French kids in hospital with E coli

04:47 AM Jun 18, 2011
http://www.todayonline.com/World/EDC110618...tal-with-E-coli

LILLE (France) - Eight children have been admitted to hospital in northern France after eating beef burgers infected with a strain of E coli bacteria, health officials said.

But the bacteria was not related to the lethal strain of E coli that has killed 39 people and made 3,000 ill, most of them in northern Germany.

"We are now certain that this is not the same strain as the one discovered in Germany," a health official from the Nord Pas de Calais region said.

Privately-owned German discount chain (picture) Lidl has withdrawn boxes of frozen beef patties, which regional health authorities said were behind the French infections.

The boxes were sold under the brand "Steaks Country" and had expiry dates of May 10, 11 and 12, officials said.

On Wednesday, five children, aged between 20 months and eight years and from different towns in the Nord Pas de Calais region, were taken to a hospital in the city of Lille after suffering bouts of bloody diarrhoea.

One was quickly released but four were still being treated at the hospital. Three are being treated with hemodialysis, a method of removing waste products from the blood in the case of kidney failure.

One of the victims' condition was life-threatening, a medical source said.

A spokesman for Lidl said that the beef used in the suspect boxes had been bought from French supplier SEB-CERF, based in the north-eastern town of Saint-Dizier, which produces some 400 tonnes per week of frozen beef, according to its website.

"The products were made in France, but depending on the expiry date and our suppliers' opportunities, the beef can come from Germany, Italy, France, the Netherlands or even other places," spokesman Mr Jerome Gresland at Lidl told Reuters.

Health Minister Xavier Bertrand said a search was under way to determine the origin of the outbreak and stricter controls would be enforced at production sites. Reuters

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 04:45 PM (GMT)

France / E. coli: an eighth child in hospital ennahar 18 June, 2011 06:49:00

http://www.ennaharonline.com/en/international/6851.html

LILLE (France) - An eighth child with symptoms of bacterial contamination, but who has not eaten steak carrying the bacteria E.coli causing the disease first seven children, was hospitalized, said Saturday the hospital of Lille (north).
In addition, the health of a child of two years in a coma due to neurological disorders after consumption of steaks in question, was Saturday in "slight improvement", announced the doctors of the University Hospital of Lille in the course of a press conference.
The origin of the bacteria that exists in France is still unclear. The only certainty, analysis confirmed that the E. coli found in the steak was different from the bacterial strain identified in Germany in germinated seeds and that has made a total of 39 deaths in Europe, according to the French health agencies.
The eighth child in hospital in Lille, a seven-year-old girl born in Valenciennes (northern France), was admitted to the hospital Friday night. This little girl suffers from "moderate impairment," said Dr. Michel scarf, head of nephro- pediatric service at the CHU of Lille. "According to our information, she would not consume minced meat, but we are investigating (...). We will confirm by sero-diagnosis (blood test) if it matches the same strain," said the doctor.
In addition to the child in a coma, the other six children, ages 18 months to eight years, are in a "stable" state or even a clear improvement, doctors stressed.

Ennaharonline/ M. O.
article views:124

TheUnhivedMind - June 24, 2011 10:18 PM (GMT)

E. coli outbreak caused by mix of 2 deadly strains

24 June 2011
http://yourlife.usatoday.com/fitness-food/...ains/48729896/1

A mix of two dangerous E. coli strains caused the recent deadly food poisoning outbreak in Germany, according to a new study of the bacteria's DNA.

Scientists said the E. coli outbreak strain combined one that makes a toxin and another that sticks to the gut in a way that potentially speeds up the body's absorption of the toxin. They described it as "unprecedented" in its lethality.

"The two strains are in themselves quite nasty," said Hugh Pennington, an emeritus professor of microbiology at the University of Aberdeen, who wrote an accompanying commentary on the research.

"It may be that more of the bugs are sticking to the intestines, and that may result in more toxin being produced," he said.
PHOTOS: An E. coli outbreak from around the world
STORY: Germany presses to find cause of E.coli outbreak
MORE: Arizona death may be linked to European E. coli

Experts had earlier suggested, based on an early DNA sequence of the bacteria, that the new strain was particularly aggressive because it reproduced quickly and released more toxin than similar bacteria.

Unlike previous E. coli outbreaks, the German strain caused three times as many cases of a severe complication that can lead to kidney failureIt was the deadliest E. coli outbreak in history, infecting 3,601 people and killing 39 across Europe, with most cases in Germany. More than 800 people developed kidney problems from the outbreak that peaked in late May.

German officials identified sprouts from an organic farm in northern Germany as the outbreak's cause, though they don't know how the sprouts got infected.

There are hundreds of E. coli strains in the environment, and many strains dangerous to humans come from animals like cows and sheep. People naturally carry E. coli in their gut but few strains cause illness. But the bacteria is constantly evolving and swapping genes with other strains, giving it countless opportunities to mutate into a killer version.

Pennington said it is crucial to find out whether this new E. coli strain is widely circulating in animals. "If it turns out to be very common in cattle, that would ring alarm bells that this kind of (outbreak) might happen again in the future," he said.

In the new study, researchers at the University of Muenster and the Robert Koch Institute analyzed samples from 80 patients sent to a national laboratory between May 23 and June 2. The analysis was paid for by the German government and Network Zoonoses. It was published Thursday in the journal, Lancet Infectious Diseases.

In separate research published Wednesday in the New England Journal of Medicine, German doctors released an early description of the outbreak, including the cases of 59 people hospitalized with the illness at the Hamburg University Medical Center. They found about 20 percent of patients developed the kidney failure complication linked to E. coli.

Unlike in previous E. coli crises, few children were affected. "The pathogen seems to have a special affinity for adults," said Dr. Gerard Krause, a director at the Robert Koch Institute, and one of the paper's authors. He said it could be that even if children picked up the bacteria, they didn't fall sick.

Krause said scientists are conducting studies to find where the bacteria naturally lives in the environment, but that it could take years to get an answer. He said control measures might help prevent future outbreaks, and that Germany's outbreak response system could be streamlined. Under their current reporting system, hospitals' notifications of serious illness still often wind their way to the national disease control center by mail.

Critics slammed Germany's bungled response to the outbreak and officials mistakenly blamed imported Spanish cucumbers for the crisis before pinpointing local sprouts as the cause. An editorial published earlier this month in the Lancet concluded that "coordination of the German public health response seems to have been utterly absent."

_____

Online:

www.lancet.com

www.nejm.org

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 04:54 PM (GMT)

Get ready for border food irradiation and watch the nervous system problems sore thus feeding The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries and the agenda YET AGAIN.

QUOTE

British seed firm 'linked to French E. coli outbreak'

Sales of mustard, rocket and fenugreek seeds from Thompson and Morgan have been halted in France

25 June 2011 Last updated at 16:57
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-13913513

Officials are investigating a possible link between seeds sold by a UK firm and an E. coli outbreak in France.

News agency AFP said 10 people have been affected by E. coli in Bordeaux.

It is thought a number of them had eaten rocket and mustard vegetable sprouts, believed to have been grown from seeds sold by Thompson and Morgan.

The Ipswich-based company told the BBC it had no evidence of a link. The Food Standards Agency (FSA) said no E. coli cases had been reported in the UK.

A spokeswoman for Thompson and Morgan said the company sold "hundreds of thousands of packets of these seeds" throughout France, the UK and other parts of Europe every year.

"We are very confident the problem is not with our seeds. People can still grow these seeds and use these seeds with absolute confidence," she said.

"For such a small number of people to have been affected, it does suggest that the problem is perhaps in the local area, how the seeds have been handled or how they have been grown, rather than the actual seeds themselves."

The company was co-operating fully with investigations, she added.

Paul Hansord, the company's managing director, said: "We make sure that everything we do is to a high standard."

He said the firm bought its seeds in bulk from suppliers around the world. The affected seeds may have been sourced from Italy.

Thompson and Morgan also said they did not raise any seeds, instead selling packets via mail order to gardeners.

Seven of those affected by the E. coli outbreak, who ate the sprouts at a country fair at Begres near Bordeaux, needed hospital treatment.

Close contact

The FSA says it is asking the company for more information about the seeds.

There is no suggestion of a link to the German E. coli outbreak, which came from bean sprouts grown on an organic farm, but two people are said to be infected with a similar strain.

Frederic Lefebvre, France's secretary of state for consumer affairs, was quoted by AFP recommending "consumers who bought these same products not use them".

Mr Lefebvre added: "The link between the symptoms and eating of the sprouts so far has not been definitively established."

The sale of the three seed types - mustard, rocket and fenugreek - has been halted in France.

Thompson and Morgan have provided samples of these seeds to investigators in the UK.

An FSA spokesman told the BBC: "We have been in contact with the French authorities about this outbreak and are aware that a UK business has been named in connection with it.

"No cases of food poisoning have been reported in the UK linked with the outbreak in France but we are in close contact with the Health Protection Agency.

"We have asked for further information from the French authorities with regard to the three named type of seeds to help us carry out investigations in the UK."

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 01:28 AM (GMT)

Russia's Putin won't back down on EU vegetable ban

Stefan Korshak, Deutsche Presse-Agentur
Friday, June 24, 2011
http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?.../MNG01K1QSC.DTL

Moscow --

Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin said Thursday his government would not revoke a ban on European vegetable imports until Brussels met the Kremlin's conditions, saying European Union exporters needed to stop thinking of the Russian market "as a personal fiefdom."

"Western producers for many years have got used to thinking of the Russian market as a fiefdom where they can do anything they want. An example is what is happening with vegetables," Putin said in the southern city Rostov.

Russia on June 2 banned imports of EU vegetables because of a deadly E. coli outbreak in Germany.

EU officials since then have twice announced the impending cancellation of the ban - only to have the Kremlin accuse Brussels of failing to provide certificates of vegetable safety as agreed in bilateral talks.

Russia will admit European vegetables once approved laboratories - which have yet to be identified - start checking individual vegetable shipments and certify each one as E. coli free, Russian health officials said Wednesday.

EU officials' unwillingness to organize a system of laboratory checks of vegetable exports to Russia, and their policy of instead applying diplomatic pressure in an attempt to force Moscow to cancel the import ban has harmed both European producers and Russian consumers, officials said.

Critics of the Putin government have said Moscow's claims of the need to prevent the spread of E. coli from Europe into Russia are self-serving, as food safety law inside Russia is poorly enforced.

TheUnhivedMind - June 27, 2011 01:17 AM (GMT)

How Did German Sprouts Become Contaminated?

Food Safety News
Gretchen Goetz
Sunday, June 26, 2011
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...uts-become.html

The German E. coli outbreak that has now claimed 37 lives and damaged fresh produce markets across Europe finally seems to be abating; but the question of how the suspect sprouts became contaminated remains unanswered.

Investigators are looking closely at whether the problem originated with sprout seeds.

After 5 workers on an organic farm in Bienenbüttel, Lower Saxony were confirmed to have been infected with the outbreak strain of E. coli, health authorities have been trying to figure out whether they could have transferred the germ onto the sprouts or whether the sprouts made them ill.

While investigators said the possibility of human introduction of the E. coli pathogen into the sprouts at the farm can't be ruled out, and that water and preceding suppliers are also possible sources, there is growing suspicion that the sprout seeds arrived at the farm already carrying the bacteria.

What health officials do know is that the 5 infected workers reported eating broccoli, garlic and fenugreek sprouts. Workers who had eaten alfalfa and spicy mix varieties of sprouts remained healthy, according to Der Spiegel.

On Monday, the Federal Institute for Risk Assessment (BfR) said a family in Lower Saxony became infected with enterohemmorhagic E. coli (EHEC) after eating home-sprouted seeds grown from a kit, suggesting that seed supplied to several sprout companies may have been contaminated.

What is the deadliest E. coli outbreak in history has now sickened 3,335, with 818 developing hemolytic uremic syndrome, or HUS, a life-threatening kidney complication.

Because the outbreak was linked to vegetables, more and more countries have been turning away from German produce.

Last week, Russia took the drastic step of banning all fresh produce imports from Germany. Monday, Taiwan said it would bar German sprouts from entering the country.

Mistrust from abroad and within the EU has cost vegetable producers dearly this season. At the height of the local growing season, sales have dipped drastically below their usual levels.

Approximately 5,900 tons of cucumbers, over 3,200 acres of lettuce and 3, 500 tons of tomatoes have had to be destroyed, reported Germany's Agriculture Minister Ilse Aigner Tuesday.

Given these damages, the European Union has increased the compensation it has agreed to give to European farmers from 150 million to 210 million euros, according to Neue Osnabrueker Zeitung. This brings the amount of reparations for farmers up to about 50 percent of profits lots, a "small change," say Spanish agricultural organizations, according to Economics Newspaper.

As for the virulent effects of the disease, while the Commissioner of the European Union, John Dalli, said Monday that the problem is now, "under control," health minister Daniel Bahr told Bild that, "More fatalities cannot be ruled out, painful as it is to say."

Monday also brought with it a scare that sprouts might not in fact have been the definitive source of the outbreak, when enterohemorrhagic E. coli (EHEC) was found in lettuce imported from Bavaria, according to Der Spiegel. However, the E. coli strain on the lettuce was determined to be unrelated to the outbreak strain.

Nonetheless, the detection of dangerous, Shiga toxin-producing E. coli on vegetables throughout Europe, including Spanish cucumbers and Bavarian lettuce, has raised concern about the prevalence of pathogens on European produce.

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 12:45 AM (GMT)

European taskforce mobilised as E.coli 104:H4 hits France

Post a comment
By Rory Harrington, 27-Jun-2011
http://www.foodproductiondaily.com/Product...-H4-hits-France

A European taskforce has been assembled to pinpoint the source of any contaminated beansprouts after the same potentially deadly strain of German E.coli that killed scores has surfaced in an outbreak in France.

The announcements from the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) came as French authorities said beansprouts were suspected as the source of an outbreak of E.coli 104: H4 in the Bordeaux region from earlire this month.

The pan-regional team will be led by scientists from the food safety watchdog and joined by experts from Germany, the UK, Italy and France, as well as specialists from the European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control (ECDC) and the World Health Organisation (WHO).

EFSA spokesman Steve Pagani told FoodProductionDaily.com: “The first teleconference is being held this afternoon at which Member States will be nominating their representatives. Much has been learned following the German outbreak, and many of the processes put in place for Germany can now be used and leveraged at a European level.”

The group has been urged to get to grips with how the production of seeds, beansprouts and other sprouted seeds are organised in the European Union – as part of the probe into the recent outbreak of E.coli 0104:H4 originating in Germany that has so far killed 43 and sickened almost 4,000 people.

The scientists will coordinate the gathering and analysis of information that is logged through the Rapid Alert System for Food and Feed (RASFF).

French outbreak

The Parma-based agency announced the formation of the expert panel in the wake of reports from French authorities of an E.coli outbreak in Bordeaux at the end of last week.

So far 10 victims in France are suffering from bloody diarrhoea, with five diagnosed with haemolytic uremic syndrome (HUS) – symptoms typically caused by Shiga toxin-producing E.coli.

Initial tests have found the Ecoli O104:H4 bacteria present in two of the cases, with French officials confirming it said this was the same strain as that responsible for the outbreak in Germany.

Epidemiological investigations found that a number of patients, who live in close proximity to each other, had attended an open day at a community centre in the Bègles on 8 June. Many were said to have eaten beansprouts scattered on various dishes.

"Investigations by French authorities into the Bordeaux E.coli outbreak are still ongoing and a possible link between the consumption of sprouts and the health effects observed is yet to be definitively established," said an EFSA statement. "If confirmed, seeds could be seen as a common factor between the French outbreak and an outbreak in May in Germany associated with bean sprouts."

UK firm linked with outbreak

France's consumer affairs Minister, Frederic Lefebvre, linked the outbreak last Friday to the seeds of UK company Thompson and Morgan, as he confirmed sale of three seed types – mustard, fenugreek and rocket – had been stopped in the country.

The Ipswich-based seed firm told FoodProductionDaily.com it was aware of the "unsubstantiated link" between the outbreak and its products but noted the French Minister had also said that "no link between the E.coli symptoms and the eating of sprouting seeds has been established".

Hundreds of thousands of packets of seeds have been sold in Europe and "to date, there have been no reported incidents of any problems either in France, the UK or anywhere else they are sold," added Thompson and Morgan.

The firm said the confinement of the outbreak to a single event and area indicated that "something local in the Bordeaux area, or the way the product has been handled and grown, is responsible for the incident rather than our seeds".

The UK Foods Standards Agency said it is currently testing seed samples from Thompson and Morgan. No cases of food poisoning linked to the French outbreak had been reported to date in the UK, said the body.

Both the FSA and its Irish counterpart have advised consumers against eating raw beansprouts.

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 04:27 AM (GMT)

FDA warns consumers not to eat Evergreen sprouts

John Stucke The Spokesman-Review
June 27, 2011 in Nation/World, Region http://www.spokesman.com/stories/2011/jun/...rgreen-sprouts/

A small food company in the northernmost reaches of Idaho is reeling in the wake of a salmonella outbreak that federal and state health investigators suspect may have come from contaminated alfalfa sprouts.

About 20 people across Eastern Washington, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota and New Jersey have been sickened by salmonella.

Idaho officials initially concluded that at least six of them reported eating alfalfa sprouts from Evergreen Produce, based about 10 miles outside of Moyie Springs, east of Bonners Ferry. Those findings prompted the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to issue a warning today and encourage the disposal of alfalfa sprouts and spicy sprouts sold by Evergreen.

Of the 20 reported cases of the salmonella strain, one involved hospitalization.

So far the poisoning investigation has not led to product recalls.

Nadine Scharf, owner of Evergreen Produce, said Monday afternoon that her company has temporarily quit selling alfalfa sprouts even as she awaits evidence that her sprouts are contaminated.

“So far they haven’t offered one bit of concrete evidence that we have a problem,” she said. “Our company’s name has been smeared and it makes me think, the way they are going about this, that maybe they just want to shut us down.

“We’re just hanging on by a thread.”

Evergreen Produce has been in business 23 years, employs about 14 people and moved into a new production facility about five years ago. It sells about 6,000 pounds of sprouts every week, including those from mung beans, clover, broccoli and alfalfa.

When first notified of salmonella fears, Scharf said food safety investigators went through her entire operation “with a fine-toothed comb.” Meanwhile, she quickly checked with more than a dozen area families – including some elderly people – that eat her company’s sprouts to share the news and ensure they were not sick.

“None of us have been sick,” Scharf said.

She expects to know more within a week when further results from laboratory testing are released.

Her company pays an independent laboratory for testing, and food procurement officials with the U.S. military test the company’s sprouts four times a year as a condition of food purchases.

Salmonella bacterial infections can cause severe illness, especially among the elderly, infants and those with weakened immune systems. Symptoms can include fever, diarrhea and abdominal cramps 12 to 72 hours after infection. The illness can last up to seven days.

Most people recover without treatment, but others may need medical care. It can be fatal if it spreads into the blood stream. It is treated with antibiotics.

In its warning, the FDA stated that sprouts are a known source of food-borne illness.

There have been 30 reported outbreaks of food-borne illness due to eating sprouts with the past 15 years.

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 05:26 AM (GMT)

Just prior to the take down of the Economy we're likely to see either a raised E.Coli scare on a much larger scale or a H5N1 pandemic which will be used to destory much of South America, Africa, parts of Asia and CHINA. This will of course be blamed on a bio-weapon by Al-Qaeda leading to pure hatred of the Moslem World ready for Holy War with the Muslim Brotherhood. Note all this talk about zombies recently and films like Quarantine blaming home grown doomsday cults. They're signalling again! The economy has to be blamed on someone, they need both a 9/11 attack for further psy-ops into the 'war on terrorism' and a oil shut off which we're all expecting which may last for up to 6 months to annoy us further. Martial Law will be bought forth and due to this being a bio-weapon threat soldiers will have no problem killing you when asked.

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 12:22 AM (GMT)

From Germany, to France to England and now they blame it on the Muslims again.

QUOTE

Egyptian Seeds Linked to E. Coli in Europe

By WILLIAM NEUMAN and SCOTT SAYARE
Published: June 29, 2011
http://www.nytimes.com/2011/06/30/world/mi...ner=rss&emc=rss

European investigators fitting together the puzzle pieces of devastating E. coli outbreaks in Germany and France cautiously identified a likely source on Wednesday: contaminated fenugreek seeds from Egypt.

Officials also said that the seeds seemed to have entered Europe through a single German importer, which acted as a distributor to other companies.

A report by the European Food Safety Authority said that sprouts grown from fenugreek seeds imported from Egypt in 2009 and 2010 “are implicated in both outbreaks.” But it added that “there is still much uncertainty about whether this is truly the common cause of the infections” because tests on the seeds had not yet found any of the deadly E. coli, a rare strain known as O104:H4. Food safety experts say, however, that the bacteria can contaminate one seed in thousands and that it is very difficult to isolate in seed samples.

The devastating E. coli outbreak first surfaced in Germany in early May, eventually striking more than 4,000 people, nearly all of whom lived in Germany or had traveled there. The bacteria causes acute diarrhea and, in severe cases, kidney failure. At least 48 people died, according to the European Center for Disease Prevention and Control.

The German authorities concluded the outbreak was caused by contaminated sprouts produced by a grower in northern Germany. The German grower produced many different types of sprouts, often selling them in mixes, and investigators were apparently unable to definitively identify a single variety as the culprit, despite some early accounts that blamed bean sprouts.

As the German outbreak began to wane in mid-June, a fresh wave of illness involving the same E. coli strain was identified in the Bordeaux region of France.

The French authorities said many of the people who fell ill had eaten sprouts from a mix of three varieties, including fenugreek.

Public health experts in the United States said that the French outbreak, in which about 16 people fell ill, may have helped investigators looking into the German episode to focus on the three varieties of sprouts, looking for common threads. The food safety authority's report said the fenugreek seeds came into Europe from Egypt in two shipments, one in 2009 and one in 2010.

Ian Polombi, an authority spokesman, said a single importer in Germany handled the shipments. The report said that seeds from the 2010 lot were sold to the German sprouter implicated in the outbreak there, while seeds from the 2009 lot went to a British company that packed them and later sold them to a retailer in France.

The French authorities last week said that the British seed company Thompson & Morgan had packaged the sprouting seeds that were tied to the Bordeaux E. coli cluster. A Thompson & Morgan spokeswoman said Wednesday that the company would not identify its suppliers.

Fenugreek resembles wild clover; its seeds and leaves are used as flavorings in China, South Asia and some Mediterranean countries. The Thompson & Morgan Web site says fenugreek sprouts have "a spicy curry flavor" and are high in vitamins A and C.

William Neuman reported from New York, and Scott Sayare from Athens.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Iran explosives at centre of Cypriot intrigue

Title: Iran explosives at centre of Cypriot intrigue

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

Iran explosives at centre of Cypriot intrigue

The United Nations, Cyprus residents, and conspiracy theorists will all want to know how a shipment of Iranian explosives came to be in a position where it could be hit by fire and cause such devastation.

By Richard Spencer
1:08PM BST 11 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...t-intrigue.html

At the centre of the explosion at the main Cypriot naval base near the town of Zygi were 98 barrels of munitions seized from a Russian-owned, Cypriot-flagged and Iranian-hired vessel, the Monchegorsk, in January 2009.

The vessel had been tagged as of interest by the United States navy not long after leaving the Iranian port of Bandar Abbas heading to Latakia in Syria. It was stopped by the US navy and searched twice in the Red Sea, with the agreement of the captain, under the terms of a 2007 UN sanctions resolution banning the export of weapons from Iran.

The vessel put into dock in Egypt, where it was searched again but allowed to continue on its way.

But the United States and Israel believed the end user was most likely Hamas in the West Bank, which has strong ties to both Syria and Iran.

Wikileaks cables have shown how the United States put pressure on the Cypriot authorities to use the ship's Cypriot flag to "recall" the vessel to port.

The ship was escorted into Limassol, where the contents were unloaded and taken into custody. The Cypriot government later announced that the 98 barrels contained 3,300 cases of high explosives - one estimate was 2,000 tonnes - to fuel artillery. Subsequent documents revealed by Wikileaks said they also contained shell casings and primers.

The Iranians denied that the weapons were intended for use in Gaza, as was alleged, but gave no other explanation for the cargo.

The explosion may yet highlight Cyprus's unique and difficult geographic and political position between Europe and the Middle East.

Divided between Cyprus "proper", where the explosion occurred, and a Turkish "northern" Cyprus whose existence is not formally recognised by most of the rest of the world, the island is a key western base.

It is home to more than 3,000 British servicemen, at RAF Akrotiri to the west of Zygi and at Dhekelia to the east of the island.

But it is not a member of NATO itself - the only one of the European Union's 27 states not to be officially part of the western alliance - and leftists prefer to talk of its potential as a Switzerland, fostering peace in the Near East.

At the time, Britain offered help in disposing of the cargo.

A Ministry of Defence spokesman said officials were trying to find out what happened to that offer. But it may not have been welcome - for many, the continued British presence on the island is an unwelcome reminder of an unpopular colonial past.

golden_oil - July 14, 2011 04:57 PM (GMT)

Citing information given in the local Cyprus Mail newspaper, July 14, 2011, and some my personal observation and opinion:

13 are now dead and more than 60 injured. A criminal probe is underway, said to be "a gargantuan task." Funerals were held for Captain Ioannides Commander of the Navy National guard, and Commander Lambros Lambrou, the Commander of the Naval Base, and others who were navy personnel and firemen.

The Vassilikos power station providing electricity for 60% of the island was entirely destroyed in the blast and is estimated that it will cost between 1 and 2 billion euros to replace, and at least a year to rebuild.

Generators are on their way. We are experiencing necessary cutoffs of power for 2 hours 2-3 times a day with the request that air conditioners not be used.

Just last week there was a meeting of certain government officials who decided to hose the explosions down as some of the material had ignited at one point, but it's obvious nothing was done. The temperature here in the area is currently 92 degrees which no doubt affected certain kinds of the gunpowder that was present. One red flat is they mentioned there was plutonium present in the drums but little has been said about that, as if they want to sweep that under the carpet.

Damage to homes near the naval base is estimated to cost 2 million euros.

There were two nights of protests by the thousands outside the Presidential Palace demanding President Demetris Christofias to resign.

The whole incident makes me suspicious if this was a false flag as these drums were foisted upon Cyprus by both Iran and America and conveniently "forgotten" by the Cypriot government.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE ORION EXERCISE HAPPENING IN THREE LOCATIONS IN

Title: THE ORION EXERCISE HAPPENING IN THREE LOCATIONS IN Description: THE U.K. PREPARING FOR EARTHQUAKE

craig-oxley - September 8, 2010 12:01 AM (GMT)

Major 'earthquake' hits a small British town! Emergency services recreate massive disaster scene for training exercise

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 10:46 PM on 7th September 2010
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13...g-exercise.html

Fire and rescue crews from across Europe and the Middle East are taking part in a major exercise simulating an earthquake hitting a fictional British town.

The event, one of the largest to have been undertaken, is aimed at testing the response of the emergency services from the UK and seven other countries to an 'unthinkable' disaster.

Funded through a one million euro grant from the European Union, Exercise Orion is being held simultaneously in Portsmouth, Hampshire, and Merseyside.

Exercise Orion: Emergency crews from across Europe and the Middle East are taking part in a major exercise simulating an earthquake hitting a fictional British town

[dohtml]<img src="http://i.dailymail.co.uk/i/pix/2010/09/07/article-1309837-0B122425000005DC-217_634x393_popup.jpg" width=634 height=500>[/dohtml]

Disaster in Hampshire: The event is one of the largest to have been undertaken. It is aimed at testing the response of the emergency services to an 'unthinkable' disaster

The three-day exercise will simulate emergency services coming to the aid of up to 600 casualties in the fictional town of Widley.

In the fictional scenario, the disaster is so severe that the British emergency services are overwhelmed and the Cabinet Office issues an appeal for help from the EU.

Countries coming to the aid of the UK include Denmark, Germany, Italy, Norway, Spain and Sweden as well as an urban search and rescue team from the United Arab Emirates.

The disaster scene created at Fort Widley, near Portsmouth, includes collapsed apartment blocks, a motorway bridge and an oil storage plant.

[dohtml]<img src="http://i.dailymail.co.uk/i/pix/2010/09/07/article-1309837-0B12E93E000005DC-940_634x438_popup.jpg" width=634 height=500>[/dohtml]

Drill: Firefighters at Croxteth Fire Station in Merseyside tackle a blaze as part of the exercise

Simulated: A collapsed road is mocked up to give emergency workers the sense of a real disaster

On Merseyside, the exercise will focus on the impact of the earthquake on the Birkenhead tunnel.

Group manager Pete Crook, of Hampshire Fire and Rescue Service, said: 'Exercise Orion is deliberately being organised to challenge all teams to the limit and that is why we have chosen the unlikely scenario of an earthquake, because the UK is not accustomed to such incidents and it is therefore outside all normal planning assumptions.

'Some of the participants will have experienced first-hand the devastation caused by an earthquake having responded to Haiti or Indonesia last year and seen how easy it is for local emergency services to become overwhelmed by the sheer scale of the situation they face.'

Taking part in the Hampshire arm of the exercise are Hampshire Constabulary, South Central Ambulance Service, Fareham Borough Council, the Environment Agency, Hampshire County Council and Hampshire Fire and Rescue Service.

No expense spared: A Chinook helicopter lands at Croxteth Fire Station with search and rescue teams

Realistic: A 'casualty' lies awaiting help from rescue workers

Back in Hampshire, firemen carry a body out of the simulated disaster zone

craig-oxley - September 8, 2010 12:21 AM (GMT)

Why are these cretins preparing for something like this here in Britain? This is not a usual spot for massive earthquakes but then again in truth neither is Haiti. It looks like the CIA and company are ready to fire up one or more of their satellite weapon based stations and attack this nation creating some kind of diversion away from real issues (economic collapse) at the time or to put people into the mind frame for the Global threat of climate disaster to bind us all together for World Governance just like what the Iron Mountain Report laid out. You may wish to also take note of John Moore's information as it has some interesting information regardless of whether its all man-made completely or part created elsewhere then a natural side effect known would happen. Please take note of the Orion exercise name and its ties to the worship of Osiris and the obelisk symbolising this constellation itself known as 'The Hunter'. Osiris is tied to the underworld after Set destroys him. Orion is a constellation tied to the three pyramids of Giza and the Persian three Magi. This all ties into the theory of this constellation being a gateway to the heavens.

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=37308

craig-oxley - September 8, 2010 12:56 AM (GMT)

UHM Scrolltext:

08 SEP 2010 .. MASSIVE EARTHQUAKE DRILLS IN BRITAIN CALLED EXERCISE ORION TAKING PLACE IN PREPARATION FOR A COMING SATELLITE WEAPONS BASED ATTACK WITH TESLA TECHNOLOGY SHORTLY AS A PRETEXT FOR MARTIAL LAW? COVER UP ECONOMIC COLLAPSE PERHAPS, LIKE A DIVERSION? THE BUSH DYNASTY (BARBARA BUSH AKA AGENT BOOKKEEPER) CONTROLS MUCH OF THE TESLA TECHNOLOGY AND LOOK AT THEIR CONTROL OVER THE CIA (DVD)!!

craig-oxley - September 8, 2010 02:10 AM (GMT)

craig-oxley - September 8, 2010 02:13 AM (GMT)

Exercise Overview

http://www.orion2010.co.uk/

This exercise will be held in week 37 of 2010, week starting 6th September 2010.

Exercise Orion will consist of an exercise held over three days. It will commence with a strategic command post exercise that will be designed to cover all areas of the scenario. EU operational needs assessment teams will be utilised to assess the potential EU response requirements. This is followed by a field exercise that will require the intervention of UK and EU USAR Module Teams. An initial evaluation conference will be held at the completion of the exercise.

The EU's Monitoring and Information Centre (MIC) will dispatch an EU assessment/coordination team on site and this will provide a training opportunity for experts, who have attended the relevant EU training courses.

Observers (Assessors) from all states participating in the Community Mechanism shall be invited to the exercise. Pre training will be provided, they will be divided in groups and requested to evaluate specific elements of the exercise and provide evaluation.

The exercise will link command post/ field training and will provide the opportunity for the deployment and operation of EU modules under realistic self sufficiency conditions

Phase 1 - Command Post
The aim of this phase is to develop a scenario that will gradually build in complexity and scale. It is proposed that during this simulation the affected Member State (MS) will identify that its resources could benefit from support and a request for international assistance will need to be made via the EU Civil Protection Mechanism. It is proposed that national command structures continue to operate during the field exercises.

Phase 2 – EU operational needs assessment
This may also involve a joint English/EU incident assessment of the field exercise site.

Phase 3 - Field Exercise
This part of the exercise will be a conventional USAR scenario with the mobilisation of English USAR teams, UK International SAR teams and EU International SAR teams. This part of the exercise will require all teams (apart from the English USAR) to be self sufficient to meet the requirements for the deployment of UK ISAR and EU Modules.

Phase 4 – Evaluation Conference
This will consist of two individual evaluations (command post and field exercise) and will involve all players and observers

craig-oxley - September 16, 2010 09:42 PM (GMT)

Britain is overdue a major earthquake which could kill 100, warns geologist

By David Derbyshire
Last updated at 5:59 PM on 16th September 2010
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/sciencetech/art...-geologist.html

Britain is overdue a killer earthquake that could see up to 100 people crushed to death, a leading geologist warned today.

Dr Roger Musson of the British Geological Survey believes a fracture in the earth's crust beneath the English Channel could 'fail' at any time, sending a tremor rippling across the South-East.

The same fault was to blame for one of Britain's biggest earthquakes in the last 500 years - a magnitude 6 quake that killed two people in London in 1580.

Be prepared: A 'casualty' during a simulated earthquake in Merseyside last week. Experts believe Britain is due a large quake which could kill up to 100 people

According to Dr Musson, the same scale of earthquake would be 50 times more serious today because the population has grown so much.

The earthquake could cause billions of pounds worth of damage to buildings and infrastructure, he said.

Last week, there was criticism of a decision by police to spend more than £1million on a three-day training exercise - Project Orion - which simulated what would happen if a massive earthquake hit Britain.

A spokesman for the TaxPayers' Alliance said of the EU-funded exercise: 'Those police should have been out fighting crime, not working on unlikely or imaginary scenarios.'

Shook up: An elderly woman is escorted from her home in Folkestone through chimney rubble after a magnitude 4.3 earthquake hit the Kent coast in April, 2007

The UK is shaken by hundreds of earthquakes every year, although most are too minor to detect.

Although they can occur anywhere, experts are most concerned about faults that have triggered earthquakes before.

The 1580 earthquake was a magnitude of 5.5 to 6 on the Richter Scale and caused 'extensive damage in London', even though its epicentre was in the Dover Straits, Dr Musson told the British Science Festival.

'This earthquake could certainly happen again because even the earthquake of 1580 itself was a repeat of a previous earthquake that occurred in 1382 with almost the same epicentre, almost the same size and almost the same results.'

Since 1580 the population of London has gone up 50 times, he said.

'If two people were killed in London then, you can imagine yourself what sort of scaling up that would be for a contemporary earthquake of the same size,' Dr Musson said.

'While that might not be a high death toll in world records, it would certainly be a nasty shock in terms of Britain's experience of earthquakes.'

Fault line: A damaged road from the earthquake in Christchurch, New Zealand earlier this month

It is impossible to predict when the next one will hit the UK.

He added: 'In terms of saying when is the next one going to be, all we can say is something that has happened twice can and probably will happen three times.

'But as to whether it happens tomorrow, or in two years' time or in 20 years or 50 years' time, that is something we would love to know but we don't'.'

A magnitude 5.5 or 6 quake is unlikely to demolish buildings, but will topple chimneys and ornaments on older, poorly repaired homes.

'It may not sound very dramatic compared to buildings collapsing, but if people are walking on the street and a chimney falls on you it's bad news,' he said.

London and homes in the Thames valley are particularly vulnerable because they are built on soft clay which moves more in a quake than hard rock.

The epicentre of the Dover Straits hotspot is 10 miles below the surface of the sea bed and lies on of the faults in the earth's crust that riddle Europe.

The faults release tension that builds up when Europe's tectonic plate is pushed from the south by the plate under Africa.

The last noticeable earthquake in the UK shook Cumbria in April 2009. It was 3.7 on the Richter Scale.

Geologists expect a magnitude 4.5 quake capable of shaking ornaments at least once a decade.

A moderate 5.5 earthquake – capable of causing major damage to badly constructed buildings - takes place every century on average.

craig-oxley - September 16, 2010 09:44 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

ENGLISH CHANNEL
September 11, 2010
Time: 15:12:49.3
Lat./Lon.: 49.435 -0.358
National Grid: 519.0 km E, -50.3 km N
Depth: 0.0
Magnitude: 2.5
POSSIBLE EXPLOSION?

http://www.quakes.bgs.ac.uk/recent_events/...11151249.3.html

craig-oxley - September 16, 2010 10:20 PM (GMT)

If we look back to September 3rd 2010 you'll notice how there was a large quake in New Zealand. Whats interesting is the location of this quake which was Christchurch. Think about it the name tells it all Christ's Church. We know that these Luciferians detest the Church of Christ. Please don't mix up the Catholics with Christians.

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=38348

kalongi - September 17, 2010 01:44 PM (GMT)

UK spy chief warns of terror from Northern Ireland, Mid-East

Published: 09.17.10, 10:16 / Israel News
http://www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-3955565,00.html

The head of Britain's domestic spy agency warned Friday that the UK faces potent new threats from terrorism incubated in Northern Ireland, the Middle East and North Africa.

Jonathan Evans, director-general of MI5, the country's domestic intelligence service, said in a rare public speech that attacks on the UK are increasingly likely to emanate from Somalia, Yemen or Belfast, as al-Qaeda-linked groups flee strongholds in Pakistan. (AP)

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 04:31 PM (GMT)

> QUOTE (kalongi @ Sep 17 2010, 01:44 PM)
>
> UK spy chief warns of terror from Northern Ireland, Mid-East
>
> Published: 09.17.10, 10:16 / Israel News
> http://www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-3955565,00.html
>
> The head of Britain's domestic spy agency warned Friday that the UK faces potent new threats from terrorism incubated in Northern Ireland, the Middle East and North Africa.
>
> Jonathan Evans, director-general of MI5, the country's domestic intelligence service, said in a rare public speech that attacks on the UK are increasingly likely to emanate from Somalia, Yemen or Belfast, as al-Qaeda-linked groups flee strongholds in Pakistan. (AP)

This has no place in this forum as its Irrelevant. This type of terrorist group aren't going to be manipulating tectonic plates like nations with real weapons. Only corporations like U.S., U.K., Russia, Israel and France etc would be able to do this.

TheUnhivedMind - December 22, 2010 06:20 PM (GMT)

Earthquake rumbles through Cumbria

22 Dec 2010
http://uk.news.yahoo.com/21/20101222/tuk-e...ia-6323e80.html

Buildings wobbled and the ground rumbled after an earthquake measuring 3.5 on the Richter scale shook Cumbria and neighbouring counties.

Residents were woken up and sent scurrying outside when the tremor struck just before 11pm in Coniston, lasting for up to a minute.

It was felt in places across the county and as far away as Lancashire, south-west Scotland, Northumberland and the Isle of Man. No damage or injuries have yet been reported.

A spokesman for Cumbria Fire & Rescue Service said: "We can confirm that following the earth tremor that occurred in Cumbria that we have received numerous calls from members of the public but at the present time we are not attending any incidents which are related to the earth tremor."

Peter Kelly, owner of the Yewdale Hotel in Coniston, said: "We felt the earthquake. It probably lasted about 30 seconds. It was quite noticeable. We were just closing up the bar with a few residents in and we just felt like a bang and then a rumbling but we couldn't decide what it was."

Hotelier Alan Robertson, who was in his 30-bed hotel in Eskdale, near Whitehaven, described how the entire building shook.

"I was watching TV and there was this sort of really loud rumble. Then the entire building shook," he said. "I ran out of the front door, only to be confronted by my guests running out of their part of the house. We couldn't believe it."

Data from the British Geological Survey (BGS) showed the location of the quake at Coniston, with a depth of 8.9 miles. The rumble was also flagged up by the US Geological Survey.

BGS Head of Seismology Dr Brian Baptie said: "We get an earthquake of this size somewhere in the UK roughly every 12-18 months. Damage is very unlikely. An earthquake of this size and depth might be felt up to 80-100 km away. The earthquake has probably made windows and doors rattle and small objects might have been displaced."

Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary said the force also had reports of people feeling a tremor in Dalbeattie.

QUOTE

Earthquake 'could hit plans to bury nuclear waste'

By Alan Irving
Last updated at 16:14, Wednesday, 22 December 2010
http://www.whitehaven-news.co.uk/news/eart...errerPath=news/

WEST Cumbria's potential for burying highly radioactive nuclear waste could have taken a step back as a result of Tuesday night's earthquake, say campaigners.

Seismic tremors have to be seriously considered as part of a watertight safety review if a site is eventually found which appears to have the right geology.

With large areas of Cumbria already unsuitable, Copeland is seen by many as a favoured site.

But yesterday campaigner Martin Forwood of Cumbrians Opposed to a Radioactive Environment said it would be "dangerous folly" to consider anywhere in West Cumbria for a repository.

He told The Whitehaven News: "Our own house (at Broughton Mills) shook with the explosion. It was a real tremor and as soon as we heard it our first thought was: 'This has put paid to the nuclear waste dump.'

"It would be stupidity to bury high levels of radioactive material underground in areas which can be affected by earthquakes.

"[Tuesday] night's was felt to a depth of eight-and-a-half miles. A tremor this far underground where nuclear waste happened to be buried would allow water into the dump and then consequences would be dangerous."

But Coun Tim Knowles, who chairs the West Cumbria Managing Radioactive Waste Safely Partnership, said: "If the public are eventually in favour of moving things forward then it would be a question of a new body being formed to look at the safety case, taking into account all geological risks including seismic. In fact, all the regulators would be involved and would have to be satisfied about safety, but this is many years away – we are not even at the starting gate yet."

David Moore, chairman of the West Cumbria Stakeholders emergency planning sub committee, said: "It's always been part of the plans to look at the potential impact of seismic activity. Tremors can occur anywhere at any time, so in terms of a repository it is something which will have to be looked at very closely and very seriously."

Sellafield's own sophisticated seismic monitoring equipment registered the tremor but not high enough to trigger the alarm. As a precautionary measure full safety inspections were carried out in key installations and no effects or damage discovered. The site has continued to operate normally.

Across Cumbria homes shook as the tremor, which had a magnitude of 3.5 on the Richter scale, hit at around 11pm on Tuesday.

Officers at Workington police station were inundated by calls after the shake – but no damage or injuries have yet been reported.

The British Geological Survey (BGS) this morning carried a record of the quake, which had an epicentre in Coniston. It was also felt as far away as Lancashire, south-west Scotland, Northumberland and the Isle of Man.

The British Geological Survey's head of seismology Dr Brian Baptie said: "We get an earthquake of this size somewhere in the UK roughly every 12-18 months. Damage is very unlikely."

Derek Eastwood, of Seascale, was watching TV when he felt the tremors. "We thought there had been an explosion, we heard about two or three murmurs," he said.

Mandy Regan, of Cleator Moor, said: "We heard a rumble, like a thunder sound, we thought there might have been a crash."

Tracey Kendall, of Gosforth, said: "I heard a rumbling sound – it sounded like a train passing. My partner thought it was an explosion, and it woke up my 12-year-old son. However, I realised it was an earthquake because I experienced one when I lived in Leicestershire."

Eskdale hotelier, Alan Robertson, said: "The entire building shook. I ran out of the front door, only to be confronted by my guests running out of their part of the hotel. We couldn't believe it."

Mike Ormond, from Rothersyke, near Egremont, thought that his “house was coming down”.

“I was sitting in the corner of the sofa and it threw me from one side to the other.”

First published at 15:52, Wednesday, 22 December 2010
Published by http://www.whitehaven-news.co.uk

QUOTE

EQ-20101222-197693-ES
Magnitude: 3.5
Mercalli scale: 1
Date-Time [UTC]: 22 December, 2010 at 16:31:14 UTC
Local Date/Time: Wednesday, December 22, 2010 at 16:31 in the afternoon at epicenter
Location: 35° 58.800, 4° 43.800
Depth: 80 km (49.71 miles)
Region: Europe
Country: Spain
Distances: 52.10 km (32.37 miles) of San Amaro,
Source: EMSC
Generated Tsunami: Not or no data!
Damage: Not or not data!

QUOTE

EQ-20101222-197692-FR
Magnitude: 3.9
Mercalli scale: 2
Date-Time [UTC]: 22 December, 2010 at 17:24:44 UTC
Local Date/Time: Wednesday, December 22, 2010 at 17:24 in the afternoon at epicenter
Location: 43° 11.400, 0° 15.000
Depth: 2 km (1.24 miles)
Region: Europe
Country: France
Distances: 0.74 km (0.46 miles) of Mirepeix,
Source: EMSC
Generated Tsunami: Not or no data!
Damage: Not or not data!

TheUnhivedMind - December 22, 2010 06:40 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/DLloS5TEpXk?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/DLloS5TEpXk?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="640" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - December 22, 2010 06:52 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nq2kMMOvJVU?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nq2kMMOvJVU?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - December 26, 2010 03:54 PM (GMT)

New Zealand's Christchurch hit by strong aftershocks

Speaking from Christchurch, Radio New Zealand's Ian Telfer told the BBC it was pure luck that no-one was injured

26 December 2010 Last updated at 10:06
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-asia-pacific-12080121

A series of strong aftershocks from a September earthquake has rattled Christchurch in New Zealand on one of the busiest shopping days of the year.

The most powerful tremor was 4.9 magnitude and its impact was magnified by its proximity to the city centre.

Buildings were damaged, power supplies temporarily cut and a large shopping centre was evacuated.

The city of 370,000 people was hit by a 7.1-magnitude earthquake three months ago, causing widespread destruction.

Two people were seriously injured in that quake, and older buildings including some landmarks were destroyed.

Scientists say the tremors which continue to shake the area are related to the September quake and warn they could continue for some time.

On Saturday, a 7.3 magnitude quake struck under the sea off Vanuatu, but there were no reports of damage or injuries.
'Violent'

Correspondents say it was a remarkable stroke of luck that no-one was hurt in Sunday's tremor.

It struck at 1030 (2130 Saturday GMT) within 5km (three miles) of Christchurch at a depth of 12km, said GNS Science monitoring agency.

Shop fronts were shattered and in some places masonry could be seen littering the streets.

Large parts of the central business district were cordoned off as police assessed damage to buildings.

"To witness that first hand, it really scared the living daylights out of me," one witness told reporters. "Buildings were exploding, and I thought it was glass but it was rock!"

One resident, Roger Cleave, who owns a music shop, said the latest shocks did more damage than September's quake.

"When we had the [earthquake in September] we had very little damage to stock. I think only one guitar fell off the wall and a couple of other items fell over. But this one was a lot more violent and a lot more stuff has fallen off."

A Civil Defence Emergency Operations Centre, to co-ordinate the response of emergency services, has been set up.

TheUnhivedMind - January 3, 2011 10:52 PM (GMT)

Earthquake Rattles Homes In North Of England

Philip Thomas, Sky News Online
http://news.sky.com/skynews/Home/UK-News/E...115879004?f=rss

An earthquake measuring 3.6 on the Richter scale has hit the North East of England.

[dohtml]<object width='485' height='385'><param name='movie' value='http://news.sky.com/sky-news/app/skynewsflash/OBU_Player_30.swf?type=embedded&baseColor=6710886&highlightColor=16711680&channel_key=News&ad_channel=2169867&ad_alias=pre_skynews_skynews_Home_UK_News&networkId=999.1&unique_id=052296&media_title=030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145&attrib_url=http://news.sky.com&smoothing=true&tracking_account=DM530320KARC&video_url=http://static1.sky.com//feeds/skynews/latest/flash/030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145.flv'></param><param name='allowFullScreen' value='true'></param><param name='allowScriptAccess' value='always'></param><embed src='http://news.sky.com/sky-news/app/skynewsflash/OBU_Player_30.swf?type=embedded&baseColor=6710886&highlightColor=16711680&channel_key=News&ad_channel=2169867&ad_alias=pre_skynews_skynews_Home_UK_News&networkId=999.1&unique_id=052296&media_title=030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145&attrib_url=http://news.sky.com&video_url=http://static1.sky.com//feeds/skynews/latest/flash/030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145.flv&smoothing=true&tracking_account=DM530320KARC' type='application/x-shockwave-flash' allowFullScreen='true' allowScriptAccess='always' width='485' height='385'></embed></object>[/dohtml]

The British Geological Survey confirmed that an earthquake had occurred.

The organisation's seismology project leader, Dr Brian Baptie, told Sky News: "We believe the earthquake was centred in North Yorkshire, just west of Ripon, round about the Yorkshire Dales region."

He said the tremor measured 3.6.

Earlier the US Geological Survey told Sky News it was aware of an incident which it initially said measured 3.7 and which was 10km deep and happened at 9.03pm.

It said the earthquake may have been centred under the North Sea.

The tremor is the second to hit England in the space of a few weeks.

I am in Stockton-on-Tees and my whole bed shook along with the pictures on my wall and shelves! Scary stuff.

Sky viewer Louise Trever

Last month the British Geological Survey confirmed that an earthquake of local magnitude 3.5 on the Richter scale took place shortly before 11pm on December 21 in Coniston in the Lake District.

Sky News received dozens of reports from viewers across the north of England.

Lester Hurst wrote: "I felt it in Harrogate North Yorks whilst I was in the bath!! It went right through me, incredible."

Lawson Morton, in Sunderland, Tyne and Wear, wrote: "My son was sitting at his computer upstairs and he saw his lava lamp shaking then his desk shook and then his chair started to shake for about three seconds.

"The shaking stopped and then he heard a noise something like a rumbling noise."

Louise Trever said: "The earthquake was felt also in Teesside area as well, I am in Stockton-on-Tees and my whole bed shook along with the pictures on my wall and shelves! Scary stuff."

Other viewers reported feeling the tremor in Cumbria, Greater Manchester and across Yorkshire.

TheUnhivedMind - January 3, 2011 11:13 PM (GMT)

Have the Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst clan attempted another frequency test over the Yorkshire Dales in North Yorkshire which has just created a 3.6 Earthquake tonight at 21:03? This will be the second Earthquake in England within thirteen (rebellion) days. Remember the one on December 21st 2010 was the same day as the Lunar Eclipse. Today's Earthquake is tying in with the coming Solar Eclipse which will start tomorrow the 4th at 08:00. Do you see the connection? The 4th will also be the New Moon and in the Constellation of Capricorn (Goat) which is the dwelling of the Planet of Saturn. Is it natural or is it the DVD?

QUOTE

Earthquake Rattles Homes In North Of England

Philip Thomas, Sky News Online
http://news.sky.com/skynews/Home/UK-News/E...115879004?f=rss

An earthquake measuring 3.6 on the Richter scale has hit the North East of England.

[dohtml]<object width='485' height='385'><param name='movie' value='http://news.sky.com/sky-news/app/skynewsflash/OBU_Player_30.swf?type=embedded&baseColor=6710886&highlightColor=16711680&channel_key=News&ad_channel=2169867&ad_alias=pre_skynews_skynews_Home_UK_News&networkId=999.1&unique_id=052296&media_title=030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145&attrib_url=http://news.sky.com&smoothing=true&tracking_account=DM530320KARC&video_url=http://static1.sky.com//feeds/skynews/latest/flash/030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145.flv'></param><param name='allowFullScreen' value='true'></param><param name='allowScriptAccess' value='always'></param><embed src='http://news.sky.com/sky-news/app/skynewsflash/OBU_Player_30.swf?type=embedded&baseColor=6710886&highlightColor=16711680&channel_key=News&ad_channel=2169867&ad_alias=pre_skynews_skynews_Home_UK_News&networkId=999.1&unique_id=052296&media_title=030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145&attrib_url=http://news.sky.com&video_url=http://static1.sky.com//feeds/skynews/latest/flash/030111-earthquake-baptie-live-2145.flv&smoothing=true&tracking_account=DM530320KARC' type='application/x-shockwave-flash' allowFullScreen='true' allowScriptAccess='always' width='485' height='385'></embed></object>[/dohtml]

The British Geological Survey confirmed that an earthquake had occurred.

The organisation's seismology project leader, Dr Brian Baptie, told Sky News: "We believe the earthquake was centred in North Yorkshire, just west of Ripon, round about the Yorkshire Dales region."

He said the tremor measured 3.6.

Earlier the US Geological Survey told Sky News it was aware of an incident which it initially said measured 3.7 and which was 10km deep and happened at 9.03pm.

It said the earthquake may have been centred under the North Sea.

The tremor is the second to hit England in the space of a few weeks.

I am in Stockton-on-Tees and my whole bed shook along with the pictures on my wall and shelves! Scary stuff.

Sky viewer Louise Trever

Last month the British Geological Survey confirmed that an earthquake of local magnitude 3.5 on the Richter scale took place shortly before 11pm on December 21 in Coniston in the Lake District.

Sky News received dozens of reports from viewers across the north of England.

Lester Hurst wrote: "I felt it in Harrogate North Yorks whilst I was in the bath!! It went right through me, incredible."

Lawson Morton, in Sunderland, Tyne and Wear, wrote: "My son was sitting at his computer upstairs and he saw his lava lamp shaking then his desk shook and then his chair started to shake for about three seconds.

"The shaking stopped and then he heard a noise something like a rumbling noise."

Louise Trever said: "The earthquake was felt also in Teesside area as well, I am in Stockton-on-Tees and my whole bed shook along with the pictures on my wall and shelves! Scary stuff."

Other viewers reported feeling the tremor in Cumbria, Greater Manchester and across Yorkshire.

QUOTE

Solar eclipse is 'almost certain' to be completely blocked out by cloud

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 5:38 PM on 3rd January 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/sciencetech/art...o=feeds-newsxml

People hoping to catch a glimpse of a solar eclipse tomorrow morning are likely to be disappointed because clouds are 'almost certain' to be covering the UK.

The chances of clear skies are very unlikely anywhere in Britain between 8am and 9.30am when the moon is scheduled to pass between the sun and the earth.

MeteoGroup forecaster Daniel Adamson said: 'The most likely place to have clear breaks is going to be north-east Scotland, but nowhere is going to be particularly clear.

'There is a small chance in the south-east of England, but it looks almost certain to be cloudy everywhere.'

However, the country's top doctor warned it could cause permanent damage to the eyes of those who look at it directly, if the clouds do break.

People may even risk blindness if they watch the moon passing between the sun and the earth between around 8am and 9.30am tomorrow.

Dame Sally Davies, the Government's Interim Chief Medical Officer, especially called on parents to make sure their children understand the dangers.

She said: 'Children are particularly vulnerable as they may be tempted to take a peek. We would urge parents to explain the danger to their children.

'We would not wish to see another case like the young boy who lost his central vision back in October 2005 through looking directly at a partial eclipse in his school playground.'

Medical experts said the safest way to watch the eclipse is on the television or live webcasts on the internet. Observing the eclipse directly through a telescope, binoculars or camera is not safe under any circumstances.

'The risks of doing so are very real and could lead to irreversible damage to eyesight and even blindness.'

Even viewing it through sunglasses or photographic film is also 'wholly inadequate', experts warned.

They said only specially designed solar filters bearing the appropriate CE mark can be used to view the eclipse directly.

Anita Lightstone, programme director of the UK Vision Strategy at the Royal National Institute of Blind People, said: 'It is vital that people take the issue of eye safety seriously. People who look directly at the sun, even for as little as five seconds, risk permanent eye damage, even blindness.'

The advice was backed by the Royal College of Ophthalmologists, the College of Optometrists and the Royal National Institute of Blind People, and incorporates advice from the Royal Astronomical Society.

From the UK, the eclipse will already have begun when the sun rises in London at 8.06am, in Manchester at 8.24am and in Glasgow at 8.46am.

The eclipse will end at or shortly after 9.30am for viewers in the UK.

The percentage of the sun obscured in the middle of the eclipse varies considerably across the UK, with the South-East seeing more than two thirds obscured while from the Western Isles as little as a quarter is covered.

London will see almost three quarters obscured at maximum eclipse, with Liverpool and Plymouth just under 70 per cent and Glasgow barely 40 per cent.

Last month's winter solstice lunar eclipse could be seen over Horton Park mosque in Bradford - but for most of the UK it was obscured by cloud

QUOTE

Earthquake Details

This event has been reviewed by a seismologist.Magnitude 3.7

Date-Time Monday, January 03, 2011 at 21:03:09 UTC
http://earthquake.usgs.gov/earthquakes/rec...rb5.php#details

Monday, January 03, 2011 at 09:03:09 PM at epicenter
Time of Earthquake in other Time Zones
Location 54.181°N, 1.633°W
Depth 11 km (6.8 miles) set by location program
Region ENGLAND, UNITED KINGDOM
Distances 45 km (25 miles) N of Leeds, England, UK
85 km (55 miles) NNE of Manchester, England, UK
90 km (55 miles) S of Newcastle upon Tyne, England, UK
315 km (195 miles) NNW of LONDON, United Kingdom
Location Uncertainty Error estimate not available
Parameters NST= 3, Nph= 3, Dmin=162.3 km, Rmss=0 sec, Gp=209°,
M-type=local magnitude (ML), Version=5
Source British Geological Survey, Edinburgh, Scotland, UK
Event ID us2011frb5

TheUnhivedMind - January 4, 2011 02:40 AM (GMT)

A REASON FOR MANY OF THE EARTHQUAKES
+ NUCLEAR ATTACK ON THE WAY

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=vNuE6TCXffs http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=n-yahtnQot0
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=P-54AxP9JH8

[dohtml]<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/vNuE6TCXffs?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed>

<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/n-yahtnQot0?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed>

<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/P-54AxP9JH8?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Have the Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst clan attempted another frequency test over the Yorkshire Dales in North Yorkshire which has just created a 3.6 Earthquake tonight at 21:03? This will be the second Earthquake in England within thirteen (rebellion) days. Remember the one on December 21st 2010 was the same day as the Lunar Eclipse. Today's Earthquake is tying in with the coming Solar Eclipse which will start tomorrow the 4th at 08:00. Do you see the connection? The 4th will also be the New Moon and in the Constellation of Capricorn (Goat) which is the dwelling of the Planet of Saturn. Is it natural or is it the DVD?

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 12:09 PM (GMT)

EARTHQUAKE HITS ENGLISH CHANNEL
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=64591

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 And The Rise of The World Wolf State

Title: 9/11 And The Rise of The World Wolf State

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:23 AM (GMT)

9/11 And The Rise of The World Wolf State

By Saman Mohammadi
July 13, 2011
http://theintelhub.com/2011/07/13/911-and-...rld-wolf-state/

It is an amazing fact of history that what passes for history in the West is factually untrue. The people get public mythologies and government lies instead of the facts, so what they know is not real.

Currently, the State is the principal actor and recorder of history. And what it records is not the truth, but what is politically convenient for the corrupt oligarchs and various special interests who have captured the State's myth-making powers.

If we don't know the real history of financial crises, terrorist attacks, and wars then we can't claim to live in free societies. Today, the power to create and write history is in the dominion of the State. And the history it is writing is based on lies, deception, and propaganda.

Since the end of World War II a slow and gradual political revolution has occurred in America, England, France, Canada, Australia, and other Western nations against the liberal democratic state.

In its place has risen what William Ralph Inge called the "Wolf State" in his 1948 book, "The End of an Age." Inge, a professor of divinity at Cambridge and Dean of St Paul's Cathedral, said the philosophy of the Wolf State was the bedrock of Nazi Germany, but it "did not begin with Hitler and will unfortunately survive him."

The Wolf State outlasted the madness of Hitler and Nazism to be worshipped anew by another set of madmen elsewhere in the world. In post-WWII America, new devils arose under the cover of the CIA and the National Security State as part of an American Wolf State. They exploited the American people's fear and ignorance in the Cold War climate for the political and financial gain of a powerful few.

America's wolves were hungry and lethal. They worked up a big appetite in the 1950s after taking down a number of democratically elected governments, but that was not enough. The Big Get was America.

With the private banksters calling the shots behind them, America's traitorous and blood-thirsty wolves gained the confidence to go forth and attack the foundations of America's constitutional republic. On November 22, 1963 they used the Wolf State's vast resources to assassinate President John F. Kennedy and turn the page on the short-lived American experiment in self-government.

Kennedy had went to war against America's secret Wolf State in the months preceding his tragic death. He wounded the ambitious and cunning wolf pack by firing CIA director Allen Dulles and refusing to commit American blood and treasure to a hopeless war in Vietnam. James W. Douglass has all the details in his 2008 book "JFK and the Unspeakable: Why He Died And Why It Matters."

Inge was not a prophetic genius, he was just able to see the writing on the wall by the end of World War II that political systems in the West were in a deep state of crisis. Although Nazism was defeated, the philosophy that gave birth to Nazism did not disappear from history.

In the chapter, 'The Philosophy of the Wolf State,' Inge said that the institutions of a free society and a government at war with an external enemy are naturally at odds with each other, writing:

The question may be raised whether the repudiation of parliamentary government and of all the ideas which collectively constituted what Fisher calls the Liberal experiment is necessarily connected with aggressive imperialism and blatant immoralism.

The answer seems to be that the theory of the State which we have to examine demands that a nation shall be permanently on a war footing, and that this type of State is almost incompatible with liberty and decent behaviour. We are discovering with regret that in order to combat Fascism we are obliged to a large extent to fascise ourselves. Power politics and liberty can hardly exist together. (1).

In the beginning of the 21st century the eyes of the Western Wolf State turned inward. There was a hint of this dark reality during the Cold War period when secret intelligence agencies and covert military groups carried out terrorist attacks in European cities as part of Operation Gladio which were falsely blamed on leftist groups. But those activities were mild compared to the treason and state terror that occurred on September 11, 2001 and July 7, 2005.

The Wolf State had grown up and come alive on September 11. New imperialist wars were planned, and a whole new world government structure was being put in place behind the scenes. 9/11 was the cataclysmic event that made the people go along with new wars, state surveillance, and the militarization of society.

II. The World Wolf State

It is worth repeating again and again that America underwent a radical political revolution in the 20th century that was orchestrated from the very top, and which was instigated by foreign financial interests. These were the same interests that were regarded as America's greatest enemies by its founders and numerous American presidents.

This revolution came into being in the dark and as a result of moral corruption and political treachery at the highest levels of society and government in America. Its greatest victory was the secret establishment of the private Federal Reserve Bank in 1913. The Fed has been used by the corrupt ruling elite to financially sack America, and milk the citizenry for all its worth.

Ever since America got suckered into the trap set by the financial wolves in 1913 the world has not been the same. America was supposed to be a free Republic and a great example for other aspiring nations. But it was turned into an evil empire and a country of unspeakable evil, capable of sacrificing its own people for the god of war, as it did on September 11, 2001.

After 9/11 we heard talk about a new world order from top officials in America and other Western nations, including the current American President. But the world that America's traitorous political puppets like Obama and Bush are creating is anything but new, and it isn't being built on foundations that a true international order ought to have. They are building the same old tower of Babel, the dream of all tyrants.

The revolution towards a new order and against America's constitution and free institutions has been so successful that today top political leaders and media institutions in America openly denounce the U.S. constitution and attack basic American principles like freedom of speech.

Bruce Fein, a lawyer trained in Constitutional law and author of "American Empire Before the Fall," wrote in May in a piece called "The Patriot Act Is at War with the Constitution":

The Patriot Act was misnamed. Thomas Paine lectured: "It is the duty of the patriot to protect his country from its government." Accordingly, the true patriots of the Constitution and the Republic are the “band of brothers” who stood or are standing in opposition. They understand that the secret of happiness is freedom. And the secret of freedom is the courage to accept risk as inherent to an enlightened and civilized existence.

The Traitor Act of 2001 brought back to legislative life the principles and beliefs that should have died with Fascism and Communism. Millions of men went to war in World War II on the knowledge that they were going to destroy Fascism once and for all. But they were betrayed. The forces of fascism regrouped, and hijacked the West’s secret intelligence agencies.

America and the West is now dying from the same disease that inflicted Germany in the 1930s and other countries in history: Blind State Worship. In the minds of the 9/11 truth deniers the State can do no wrong. They say, “But the government wouldn’t do anything horrific like that. You’re just a crazy conspiracy theorist. Go away, go to a mental hospital.”

The people who defend the government story of 9/11 are children. The dream weavers of terror and the 9/11 attacks are the Machiavellian neocons, barbaric Zionists, and greedy scum who control the Shadow National Security State in the United States. They are guilty of murder, theft, deceit, betrayal, and high treason.

Dean Inge warned the people of the West against the blind worship of any totalitarian State that abandons morality and honesty:

When the ethics of violence become the publicly acknowledged philosophy of the whole society, it is inevitable that other groups, which have as good a right to recognition as the State, will adapt the theory to their own ends. If moral considerations do not apply to group action, any rebellion may justify itself. The disintegrating effects of the dissolution of ethical principles and traditions were proved in ancient Greece and mediaeval Italy. They will certainly be proved again. (2).

Speaking the truth is our only defence against totalitarian state terrorism and world tyranny. This is not the time to be afraid, to look away, and to keep silent. Freedom is under attack from within our own governments. There is no future if we don’t speak up and demand heads to roll.

Sources:
1. Inge, William Ralph. 1948. The End Of An Age And Other Essays. London: Putnam & Co. Ltd. Pg. 186.
2. Ibid. Pg. 197.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Nearly 3,000 victims of 9/11 don’t show up as dead

Title: Nearly 3,000 victims of 9/11 don’t show up as dead
Description: in Social Security records

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:41 AM (GMT)

Nearly 3,000 victims of 9/11 don’t show up as dead in Social Security records

By Thomas Hargrove of Scripps Howard News Service
Posted July 9, 2011
http://www.naplesnews.com/news/2011/jul/09...e-mistakes-911/

WASHINGTON — A New York congresswoman who represents Manhattan wants answers to why nearly 3,000 victims of the 9/11 terrorists attacks weren’t reported in the Social Security Administration’s official list of deceased Americans.

Rep. Carolyn Maloney, D-N.Y., said her staff started making inquiries after the errors in the federal Death Master File (DMF) were detected by Scripps Howard News Service. The file is a public record intended to protect families of the deceased from identity theft and other types of fraud.

“While nearly 3,000 individuals were killed on Sept. 11th, the list does not show an increase in numbers from the typical DMF daily average,” Maloney said. “A sampling of those names did not yield any matches in the DMF and confirms their apparent absence.”

She said her staff has contacted the Social Security Administration, the New York State Department of Health and the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, only to receive “conflicting answers as to why there is a lack of reporting on this matter.”

So Maloney is asking Social Security Commissioner Michael Astrue and the public health commissioners for the state of New York and New York City, jointly, to account for the reporting error.

"Would you explain why individuals killed on 9/11 would be missing from the DMF?" Maloney asked in her letters.

__ Contact reporter Thomas Hargrove at hargrovet@shns.com.

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

The reason being is they knew a depression was coming so they've left these sitting collecting more currency based on the bonds tied to each Social Security account held in the Federal Reserve of New York. They'll cash them out at some point. I believe this happens a lot with homeless people when they're dead.

trk - July 13, 2011 03:58 AM (GMT)

Because they never existed?

http://www.septemberclues.info/vicsims_photo-analyses.htm

Just a possiblity

Phazon - July 13, 2011 05:12 AM (GMT)

Correct trk.

There were no victims just as there were no planes.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Llx5BN5IMjA

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KNwAxJ92vlE

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 04:39 PM (GMT)

I'm sorry but I don't believe there were no planes especially when we understand the KU band antenna system tied to the Boeing uninterruptible autopilot using the BEI Holding QRS-11 chip used usually for stabilizing and precision navigation of supersonic flight. May I also remind you that the QRS-11 is now owned by Systron Donner Inertial. Even if you don't believe planes were involved in the Tower attacks you have to be crazy to not believe there were victims. Its this kind of mentality I do not like on my board. You're simply damaging the truth movement by thinking like this. I suggest you sit with the poor families who are missing members who perished on 9/11 and there are many. Lets not forget all the first responders including the dogs who've perished from radiation poisoning.

Phazon - July 14, 2011 02:02 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE (TheUnhivedMind @ Jul 14 2011, 03:39 AM)
>
> I'm sorry but I don't believe there were no planes especially when we understand the KU band antenna system tied to the Boeing uninterruptible autopilot using the BEI Holding QRS-11 chip used usually for stabilizing and precision navigation of supersonic flight. May I also remind you that the QRS-11 is now owned by Systron Donner Inertial. Even if you don't believe planes were involved in the Tower attacks you have to be crazy to not believe there were victims. Its this kind of mentality I do not like on my board. You're simply damaging the truth movement by thinking like this. I suggest you sit with the poor families who are missing members who perished on 9/11 and there are many. Lets not forget all the first responders including the dogs who've perished from radiation poisoning.

I believe people have died from the radiation of the nukes, but I'm not convinced that there was anyone in the towers.

Have you watched the 2 videos I posted above?

I don't know how anyone can watch those and not see that these photos of the supposed victims are fakes.

The Elizabeth Wainio photos are blatantly fake, but a website continues to accept fund-raising for her supposed death even though she doesn't show up in the death registry.

How about the case of Richard L. Allen, who on one memorial is listed as Richard L. Allen and then on another memorial he's listed as Richard D. Allen and then on yet another memorial Richard L. Allen is a black guy.

Where are all the family members of these supposed victims?

Please also watch these 2 videos. These people paraded as family members are clearly actors.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=o9VnZ-BMR3s

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6aPvJSQtmoE

Have you seen the film Wag the Dog where they just create a mock-up video in a TV studio in order to sell a war to the public? That's what I believe the evidence points to with 9/11.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The NIST WTC 7 Report is False [Vd]

Title: The NIST WTC 7 Report is False [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 01:15 AM (GMT)

The NIST WTC 7 Report is False

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ArnYryJqCwU

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ArnYryJqCwU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ArnYryJqCwU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Mumbai: Explosions shake India's financial hub

Title: Mumbai: Explosions shake India's financial hub
Description: [MI5 READY TO DO THIS IN WEST MIDLANDS]

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:16 PM (GMT)

Mumbai: Explosions shake India's financial hub

The BBC's Rajini Vaidyanathan says the explosions happened in the middle of rush hour

13 July 2011 Last updated at 17:38
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-14141454

Three near-simultaneous explosions have shaken India's commercial capital Mumbai (Bombay), police say.

Seventeen people were killed and 81 injured, said Maharashtra state's chief minister Prithviraj Chavan.

He called the explosions, during Mumbai's busy evening rush-hour, "a co-ordinated attack by terrorists".

One explosion was reported in the Zaveri Bazaar, another in the Opera House business district and a third in Dadar district in the city centre.

Police sources were reported as saying the explosions were caused by home-made bombs.

The attacks are the worst in Mumbai since November 2008 when 10 gunmen launched a three-day co-ordinated raid in which 166 people were killed.

The BBC's Soutik Biswas, in Delhi, says there is no evidence so far to suggest that Mumbai is under attack in the same way.

High alert

The latest explosions hit the city around 1900 (1330 GMT) as workers were making their way home.

Mumbai has been put on a state of high alert and a commando team is standing by, said Home Minister P Chidambaram.

Delhi, the capital, Calcutta and several other cities have also been put on alert. Mr Chidambaram urged people across the country to stay calm.

Forensics teams have been sent from Delhi and Hyderabad to examine the explosion sites.

The authorities have not yet said who they believe might be behind the explosions and no group has said it carried them out.

The blast in Zaveri Bazaar, a famous jewellery market in the south of Mumbai, was reported to have gone off in a shop, says the BBC's Rajini Vaidyanathan in Mumbai.

One witness, photographer Rutavi Mehta, told the BBC he was shopping nearby and heard the explosion. He grabbed his camera and ran to the scene.

"I took a couple of photographs. I think they might be too graphic for broadcast," he told the BBC.

"Bodies and limbs were strewn everywhere. People were crying and screaming. The area was packed with shoppers at the time of the blast. A few offered assistance to the blood-soaked victims, while others looked on in a state of shock," he said.

"It was totally chaos. There were pools of blood everywhere."

Another explosion hit the nearby Opera House district, at a time when it would have been crowded with workers and commuters.

The third blast in Dadar district, in the city centre, went off in a taxi next to a bus stop, reports say.

One eyewitness from the scene there told our correspondent he saw the bus stop and a car torn apart by the explosion.

According to some reports, the blasts came on the birthday of Mohammad Ajmal Amir Qasab, the sole surviving gunman from the 2008 attacks.

But BBC correspondents say court records show his birthday to be in September.

Those attacks, which targeted two high-end hotels, a busy train station, a Jewish centre and other sites frequented by foreigners, were blamed on the Pakistan-based Lashkar-e-Taiba militant group.

Pakistan was quick to condemn the latest explosions, in a statement issued by the foreign ministry.

Peace talks between Pakistan and India have only recently resumed since they were broken off after the 2008 attacks.

Mumbai has been targeted many times in recent years.

As well as the 2008 attacks, co-ordinated blasts on seven of the city's trains on 11 July 2006 caused massive loss of life. More than 180 people were killed and hundreds wounded in those bombings, which were blamed on Islamist militants.

The city suffered four bomb attacks during 2003, including twin blasts on 25 August 2003 which killed 52 people.

In 1993, 257 people were killed and 700 injured in a series of 12 bomb blasts across the city. The attacks were allegedly ordered by the Muslim-dominated underworld in retaliation for Hindu-Muslim riots.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Inside Job: More Proof of 9/11 Duplicity

Title: Inside Job: More Proof of 9/11 Duplicity

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:46 AM (GMT)

Inside Job: More Proof of 9/11 Duplicity

By Fetzer
http://www.bobtuskin.com/2011/07/12/inside...-911-duplicity/

My 4th of July article, “Inside Job: Seven Questions about 9/11”, raised questions about the events of 9/11 and whether more may have been involved than the official account of nineteen Islamic fundamentalists hijacking four commercial carriers, outfoxing the most sophisticated air defense system in the world, and perpetrating these atrocities under the control of a guy in a cave in Afghanistan.

These are the first plane crashes in its history that have not been investigated by the NTSB. An FBI official, when asked why not, replied, “It wasn’t necessary because we saw them on television.” But we did not see what happened at the Pentagon or in Shanksville “on television”—and what we have seen on TV does not look right.

We have no videos of the crash of Flight 93 in Shanksville and only the five frames from the Pentagon of Flight 77. We have familiar footage of Flight 175 hitting the South Tower and less familiar footage of Flight 11 impacting with the North Tower. Since it was not broadcast that day, that footage raises interesting questions about George W. Bush’s public remarks that, when he watched the plane hit the North Tower, he thought to himself, “There’s one terrible pilot!”

His comment, after all, only makes sense assuming it occurred before the second hit, after which anyone should have realized this was no accident but a deliberate occurrence. Bush added that “the TV was obviously on”, but since the public broadcasts did not show it at that time, the thought has crossed my mind that he may have actually seen it “live” on a closed Secret Service channel, which would be stunning evidence that 9/11 was indeed an inside job.

Since I’ve made several observations about the Pentagon, I want to discuss some troubling aspects of the other crash sites. For those who want more on the Pentagon, I recommend “Pandora’s Black Box”, from Pilots for 9/11 Truth, as well as “National Security Alter” from Citizens Investigation Team, both of which support the existence of a large plane—presumably, a Boeing 757—that flew toward the Pentagon but did not crash into it, consistent with my earlier study.

(1) Flight 11 hitting the North Tower

(a) Remarkably Jules Naudet, a French filmmaker, just happened to be in the vicinity doing a modest documentary about New York Firemen out looking for a “gas leak”. As Leslie Raphael has explained, that a cameraman should have been in precisely the right position to film this event depended upon a rather large number of conditions—either as a matter of coincidence, as the government would have us believe, or by design. If this occurred by chance, it’s improbability is astonishingly small. An odd flash occurs just as the flying objectmakes contact with the building:

(B) While the image is too blurry and indistinct to be identifiable as a 767, a time-sequence of the image in motion as it approaches the tower—prepared by Rosalee Grable—does not bear even a faint resemblance:

© And when you compare the pattern at the time of impact with what we see subsequently, there does not seem to be lot of room for doubt that they do not appear to be the same. So the question arises, why not?

(2) Flight 175 hitting the South Tower

The footage of the South Tower hit exemplifies several anomalies, including a Boeing 767 flying at an impossible speed, an impossible entry into the building (in violation of Newton's laws), and even passes through its own length into the building in the same number of frames it passes through its own length in air—which is impossible, unless this 500,000 ton, steel and concrete building posed no more resistance to its trajectory in flight than air. The structure of the building, moreover, meant that it actually intersected with eight different floors as follows:

Figure 6–8. Orientation and trajectory of UAL 175 that matches the impact pattern (vertical approach angle = 6°, lateral approach angle = 13°).

Each of those floors consisted of steel trusses connected at one end to the core columns and at the other to the steel support columns. They were filled with 4-8" of concrete (deeper in the v-shaped grooves) and posed enormous horizontal resistance. (Imagine what would happen to a plane encountering one of them suspended in space!) The windows were 18" wide and the support columns one meter apart, while there were no windows between floors, which means far less than 50% if the plane should have entered via them. But as Jack White shows here, that is not what the videos display:

Several other videos show the same event seen above, with the jetliner melting into the steel walls. One video even shows the nose of the aluminum plane emerge on the other side (left), unscathed after plunging through two steel walls and the building's interior core. An aluminum plane cannot penetrate a steel building undamaged. Unless you're a magician.

Notice that the plane completely enters the building before its jet fuel explodes, when one would have thought that, since its fuel is stored in its wings, they should have exploded on entry—which is comparable to the failure of the 757 at the Pentagon to have its fuel explode when its wings hit those lampposts. And while some have sought to support the claim that this was a real 767 based upon the engine found at Church & Murray, it did not come from a 767 and, if this FOX News footage is authentic, appears to be a plant, as another of Jack's studies reveals:

Pickup or delivery?

Newsworthy things were happening on 9-11 at Church and Murray, so Fox News was there. An FBI van is parked on Murray at the Church intersection, door open. An FBI agent stands guard over something not seen in other photos at this location. Blue-clad FBI agents appear beside the van and seem to struggle with something heavy. There appear to be six FBI agents and a photographer in the video frames. Another image taken at the deserted corner, right, shows a dolly used for moving something. What does the complete video show...a pickup or delivery?

So how can a Boeing 767 travel at am impossible speed (as Pilots for 9/11 Truth has confirmed), enter a steel and concrete building in violation of Newton's laws, pass through its own length into the building in the same number of frames that it passes through its own length in air, and not have its fuel explode as it makes contact with that massive edifice? Even the frames from the Pentagon show a huge fireball upon impact. If that was true of the 757 there, why is it not also true of the 767 here? It looks as though, in this respect, Flight 77 fakery was just a bit better than Flight 175 fakery.

(3) Flight 93 crash site in Shanksville

(a) A Boeing 757 weighs about 100 tons with a wingspan of about 125′ and a tail that stands 44′ above the ground. It would have been overwhelmingly larger than the trucks in this photograph, where the alleged crater from the crash was situated. Compare this crash site with those from bona fide crash sites to begin to appreciate the enormity of the deception involved. "This is the most errie thing", the coroner observed at the scene. "I have not, to this day, seen a single drop of blood. Not a drop."

(B) The reporter for FOX News had similar observations, which I have also verified from the taped interview:

FOX News reporter: It looks like there's nothing there, except for a hole in the ground.

Photographer Chris Konicki: Ah, basically that's right. The only thing you can see from where we where, ah, was a big gouge in the earth and some broken trees. We could see some people working, walking around in the area, but from where we could see it, there wasn't much left.

Reporter: Any large pieces of debris at all?

Konicki: Na, there was nothing, nothing that you could distinguish that a plane had crashed there.

Reporter: Smoke? Fire?

Konicki: Nothing. It was absolutely quite. It was, uh, actually very quiet. Um, nothing going on down there. No smoke. No fire. Just a couple of people walking around. They looked like part of the NTSB crew walking around, looking at the pieces…" – FOX (09/11/01)

© An alleged eyewitness, Val McClatchey, who resides less than two miles from the purported crash site, claims to have taken a photo showing a plume of smoke from the crash site. Like the smoke coming from the series of dumpsters at the Pentagon, alas, there are good reasons to suspect that her photo was faked. The plume resembles those from detonation explosions more than it the the fires from crash sites–and estimates of the location of the plume place it over a pond, which suggests that this is yet another fake photograph in the 9/11 inventory. Indeed, there are many good reasons to suspect that 9/11 was staged with Hollywood-style special effects.

Planes or No-Planes?

Serious students of 9/11 are therefore placed in a dilemma. If they are committed to truth, as the name “9/11 Truth” implies, then they have to confront the evidence that supports the conclusion that all four of the plane crashes–one way or another–appear to have been faked. To put it more precisely, there is no credible evidence of a plane crash in Shanksville nor at the Pentagon, while the evidence for the New York events appears to support video fakery. In a circumstance like this, the best move may be to take a step back and ask yourself if there is any circumstantial evidence that might help to resolve the question in your own mind. Here I would observe that the following considerations be borne in mind, namely:

(i) Elias Davidsson, “There is no evidence that Muslims committed the crime of 9/11″, has shown that the government has never actually proven that the hijackers were aboard any of those planes;

(ii) David Ray Griffin, “Phone Calls from the 9/11 Airliners”, has shown that the evidence shows that all of the alleged phone calls from all four of the airplanes were faked;

(iii) Col. George Nelson, USAF (ret.), has observed that, of the millions of uniquely identifable component parts from those four airplanes, the government has yet to produce even one;

(iv) John Lear, among our nation’s most distinguished pilots, has observed that, before a pilot can pull away from a terminal, he must submit an envelope (with a flight plane, check list, and passenger data), yet none of those envelopes has ever been produced; and,

(v) FAA Registry data shows that, for the four planes allegedly involved in crashed on 9/11, the planes corresponding to Flights 11 and 77 were not deregistered until 01/14/2002 and those for Flights 93 and 175 not until 09/28/2005, which suggests that at least two of those planes were still in the air long after 9/11.

What this suggests to me (and others more expert than I in matters of this kind) is that 9/11 was a staged event designed as a psy-op that was intended to instill fear in the American people to manipulate us to support political policies–including wars of aggression in Afghanistan and Iraq–that we otherwise would never have considered. Since that is the objective of terrorism, the weight of the evidence that students of 9/11 have discovered supports the conclusion that the Bush/Cheney administration has been practicing terrorism on the American people. So take your time and sort this out for yourself. We are talking about the pivotal event of the 21st Century, whose effects–for better or for worse–are enduring to this day.

Jim Fetzer founded Scholars for 9/11 Truth and maintains its web site at http://911scholars.org.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 Truth Isn't Going Away

Title: 9/11 Truth Isn't Going Away

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:37 AM (GMT)

Tuesday, July 12, 2011

9/11 Truth Isn't Going Away

Alissa C. Johnson
Intercept
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...going-away.html

As 9/11's tenth anniversary approaches, the issues surrounding that seminal event are just as relevant today and a lot more urgent. Despite the change of management, we still bomb, still rendition, still torture, still illegally wiretap, still detain indefinitely without habeas corpus and without counsel, among other international crimes. These days we can add a few more items to that list like irradiate children, feel up grandma at the airport, and throw people in jail for not paying their credit card bills. Another thing we still do in America: obstruct the truth when it conflicts with the official 9/11 storyline.

"Hysteria" has been defined as a compulsion in which the actor repeats the same action over and over in the face of a negative outcome. Our politicians and civic leaders, through the mainstream media machine are hysterical on the subject of 9/11, parroting the same tired lies as if by cramming that sandwich in our faces enough of us will eventually swallow it. While we may see the pre-packaged fantasy internalized by dullards, most of us aren't buying the government's heroic tragedy, a fictional catalyst that has propelled the United States into war in Afghanistan, Iraq, now Libya and who knows where next. Syria? Pakistan? Yemen? Iran?

There has been much analysis of the psychological roadblocks thrown up by those who cannot or will not accept the reality of a 9/11 false flag attack on domestic soil. As described by activist Ken Jenkins, such denial may be attributed to the scale and sheer audacity of the act, the paradigm-shifting implications of 9/11, blind nationalist faith, shame on the part of those fooled, PTSD, and simple ignorance of historical precedents.[1] Factor in an embarrassing level of credulity and these elements have contributed to the thumb-sucking compliance of a population dumbed down and infantilized to the point where it believes our government has its best interests at heart.

Of course history does not support the gumdrop and gingerbread view of government to which so many folks subscribe. But the myth of America is powerful. We are the good guys, revolutionaries who threw off the yoke of British imperialism two hundred thirty-five years ago and created the Constitution, a document so powerfully associated with rebellion that the FBI identifies those who reference or defend it as domestic terrorists.[2]

These days even the dullest coach potato is starting to realize that the interests our government seems to hold closest to the chasm in its tin chest are not those of the people, at least not We the People. There is suspicion arising that it serves the interests of those other "people" known as "corporations."

This does not bode well for our masters (whoever they are) who had no doubt hoped to keep a lid on truth of all kinds long enough to establish more complete control over this part of the Western world. We can see the soft fascism of the U.S. rapidly hardening into something scarier. If you disagree with that assessment, you've probably never been Tasered for questioning a public official about his membership in a powerful secret society.[3]

Despite the rumblings of discontent, there are still many people with their heads firmly in the sandbox when it comes to 9/11. It seems incredible that anybody with a rudimentary grasp of physics – those physical laws that can be intuited by a five-year-old playing with blocks – would believe that the World Trade Center buildings crumbled at near freefall speed into their own footprints without blowing out supporting structures in a carefully planned fashion. While such opinions exist in people with a scientific vacuum between their ears, it does not give us the complete picture. Clearly there are powerful psychological forces at play when the best they can throw at the 9/11 Truth movement is name-calling and obfuscation.

Incredulity in the face of horrific government acts is nothing new. The concept of psychic numbing was developed in connection to the victims of the U.S.'s atomic atrocity in Japan. We not only became Death, as Oppenheimer commented after detonation of the first atomic bomb, we became Hell. Survivors of Hiroshima have said that in response to the overwhelming horrors of the atomic bomb they "simply ceased to feel", often within minutes or seconds.[4] From a psychological standpoint, psychic numbing protects the self from shattering. It is a survival mode, but intense psychic numbing can devolve into passivity and confusion. One form of numbing derives from the human mind's inability to take in what it cannot connect to prior experience or imagination. As one journalist who witnessed the liberation of Buchenwald put it: "You can't understand it, even when you've seen it."[5]

The most recent laboratory for psychic numbing of Western peoples took place during World War II as a result of the systematic annihilation of Jews and others in Hitler's Nazi death camps. Even the most politically astute Jews of that time had difficulty accepting the reality of the Holocaust. Maria Syrkin, former editor of the Labor Zionist journal Jewish Frontier, described "how difficult it was as late as 1942 for even the most alert and nationally sensitive sector of American Jewry to make the psychic leap from an awareness of bloody persecution to acknowledgment of the reality of the Final Solution."[6]

For the Jews of that era, as for most people everywhere, the idea that a project so extreme and so murderous could be mounted in the middle of the twentieth century was simply unimaginable.[7] In late 1944, John McCloy, Assistant Secretary of War, turned to A. Leon Kubowitzki, a senior official of the World Jewish Congress, and said, "We are alone. Tell me the truth. Do you really believe that all those horrible things happened?" Kubowitzki later wrote: "His sources of information were better than mine. But he could not grasp the terrible destruction."[8] Even after the American press made public the news of the final solution, most Americans could not accept what was happening in Europe. A poll of Americans in January 1943, when approximately a million Jews had already been killed, indicated that less than half the U.S. population believed that mass murder was occurring. Most thought it was just a rumor.[9]

Examining how the American public reacted to and absorbed the Nazi atrocities is particularly instructive because it took place at a time when media and information were ubiquitous. In the Internet age, news is distributed to us at a breakneck pace, no longer a fountain but an avalanche of data composed of information and disinformation, mainstream mouthpieces, independent journalist-bloggers and everything in between. Today information documenting the discrepancies of the official 9/11 story is available on the Internet for anyone to analyze and consider. Yet many citizens still remain in the dark about 9/11.

9/11 turned out to be a revealing social experiment that precipitated out one group of people and left the other dissolved. Those who precipitated out are citizens not afraid to face the truth of government corruption. We are the people who will not drink the Kool-aid despite personal and professional costs that run the gamut from arguing over the dinner table to losing a job. We remember from grade school physics class that it is impossible for a building to fall at free-fall speed unless supporting structures have been removed. We question the official story.

The other group, still dissolved in solution, is made up of people who will not examine the details of 9/11 because it will lead them down a rabbit hole that will change their lives. Followed to its logical conclusion, 9/11 reveals truths these people find distasteful, negative, horrifying. To find the truth, they would have to read and analyze information. They would have to turn off 'American Idol'. They would have to exhibit courage in the face of public ridicule and private recrimination. It means they would never again be able to just go along with the crowd, because the crowd is wrong.

Many of these people are suspicious of the government's 9/11 story. Most have the feeling something is not quite right, or we are not being told something, but consumed with the in-your-face daily realities of 2011, they do not wish to pursue 9/11 Truth. I've heard: "That stuff happened ten years ago. Move on!" I've heard: "I can't read about that stuff because I'm a cancer survivor and it will stress me out!" I've heard: "It's not good for you to get so involved because it is upsetting and agitating." In the land of the free and the home of the brave, it appears that the courage to face reality is not common. But times are changing.

Staying dissolved in a soup of distraction and ignorance means remaining a child because facing reality requires not just courage, but maturity. America is an adolescent nation with a culture sickened by corporate-imposed values. Changes are taking place in the world that will demand every last ounce of strength and innovation we can muster in the coming years. 9/11 is our opportunity to grow up. We better take it.

It's been ten years since 9/11. In 2011, thanks to the efforts of many including Architects and Engineers for 9/11 Truth and Scholars for 911 Truth and Justice, we now have peer-reviewed scientific proof that the 9/11 attacks did not happen as set forth in the pathetically under-funded and incomplete 911 Commission Report.[10]

Everyone agrees the public awakening will take time. Many Americans are still numbed and traumatized by 9/11. But the Internet has changed the breadth and speed of information transmission. Knowledge about 9/11 is increasing at an exponential rate. More 9/11 Truth organizations are forming every year and momentum is building. We now have Pilots for 9/11 Truth, Firefighters for 9/11 Truth, Professionals for 9/11 Truth, Lawyers for 9/11 Truth, and the list goes on. Facebook followers of AE911Truth and World911Truth have doubled from 40,000 to 80,000 in the past eight months. Cass Sunstein, Obama's information czar, is in such a tizzy over 9/11 Truth that he is conducting cognitive infiltration of many of our groups.[11] Which may explain the sudden rise in no-planers and exotic weapons folks trying to waste our time.

The gradual saturation of truth into the public psyche can be seen as an accretion effect: the steady adding of layer upon layer of evidence over time. It is a long slow awakening as more people are exposed to the truth of what happened on 9/11, whether they are conscious of it or not. TV ad campaigns like 'Remember Building 7' are breaching the public consciousness.[12] This accretion of information forms a pearl of truth in people's minds that is indestructible and growing.

9/11 Truth isn't going away.

[1] The Truth is Not Enough: How to Overcome Emotional Barriers to 9/11 Truth
[2] Do You Support the Constitution? YOU'RE A TERRORIST SUSPECT!
[3] University of Florida student Tasered at Kerry forum

[4] Robert Jay Lifton & Eric Markusen, The Genocidal Mentality: Nazi Holocaust and Nuclear Threat, p. 233.

[5] Id. at 235.
[7] Id. at 234.

[8] The Journalism of the Holocaust, lecture given by Martin Kalb at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum on Feb. 27, 1996.

[9] Jeffery Gurock, America, American Jews, and the Holocaust, Vol. 7, p. 278.

[10] Niels H. Harrit, Jeffrey Farrar, Steven E. Jones, Kevin R. Ryan, Frank M. Legge, Daniel Farnsworth, Gregg Roberts, James R. Gourley and Bradley R. Larsen, Active Thermitic Material Discovered in Dust from the 9/11 World Trade Center Catastrophe, The Open Chemical and Physics Journal, 2009, 2, 7-31.

[11] Cass R. Sunstein, and Adrian Vermeule, Conspiracy Theories (January 15, 2008). Harvard Public Law Working Paper No. 08-03; U of Chicago, Public Law Working Paper No. 199; U of Chicago Law & Economics, Olin Working Paper No. 387.

[12] http://rememberbuilding7.org/

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: USS Liberty Song “Please Can You Tell Me”

Title: USS Liberty Song “Please Can You Tell Me”

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

USS Liberty Song “Please Can You Tell Me”

http://mycatbirdseat.com/2011/07/uss-liber...n-you-tell-me”/

- 13. Jul, 2011 in Activism, Commentary/Analysis, Egypt, Israel, Middle east, News/ Politics, U.S. Foreign Policy, World -
2
This is a Song Dedicated to the 34 Men Killed, and to the Survivors of the USS Liberty, Attacked by the Israeli’s on June 8, 1967.
by Debbie Menon / My Catbird Seat

Yes, I know… Israel, Israel, Israel… it’s becoming tiresome, turning up Israel under every stone. But, there they are! More and more of this stuff, and stuff like this, are appearing everyday.

It is like Grace Halsell says it was, “what we did not know, and were shocked to learn….” But, finding out and telling about it, are horses of different colors, uphill battles, seldom won, which she describes as part of the problem and amongst those things we “did not know.”

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/JJ-IKqu1STo?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/JJ-IKqu1STo?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

[Vocalist - Songwriter : Cathy aka Cat]

NOW LIBERTY WAS A LONE SHIP, SOME CALLED HER A “SPOOK SHIP”

HER MEN SWORN TO SECRECY.

SHE SAILED IN INTERNATIONAL WATERS, OFF THE COAST OF SINAI,

INTO THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA.

WITH MANY HARD DAYS OF FULL SPEED AHEAD,

THERE WAS SOON A MUTUAL FEELING OF DREAD,

AS SHE APPROACHED THE ARAB/ISRAELI WAR ZONE.

AND THOUGH THE MEN WERE ALL TOGETHER, THEY KNEW THEY WERE ALL ALONE.

CHORUS:

OH PLEASE CAN YOU TELL ME WHY SO MANY OF MY BROTHERS DIED.

WAS THIS SOME SORT OF GAME OF TREASON,

OR WAS THIS JUST SOME KIND OF HORRIBLE LIE?

WELL FINALLY BACK IN WASHINGTON, THEY SENT OUT A MESSAGE,

THAT THE SHIP MOVE FARTHER OUT TO SEA.

BUT THERE WERE TOO MANY ERRORS, AND TOO MUCH TIME WASTED;

THE BOMBS WERE COMING DOWN; IT WOULD BE TOO LATE—FOR THE LIBERTY.

CHORUS:

OH PLEASE CAN YOU TELL ME WHY SO MANY OF MY BROTHERS DIED

WAS THIS SOME SORT OF GAME OF TREASON,

OR WAS IT JUST SOME KIND OF HORRIBLE LIE?

(REPEAT CHORUS)

Spattered by Israeli gunfire

The most recent account in the book What I Saw That Day, is indeed a heartfelt account by Phil Tourny a survivor of the attack. Merlin Miller sums it best in her review at Amazon.com

“This heartfelt account, written by a survivor of the USS Liberty, is a page turner. The events that unfolded on June 8th, 1967 altered the course of history, yet are generally unknown to the American public. Israel attacked a defenseless US spy ship, intending to kill all aboard, and her act of betrayal was covered up by our own government and media. This book reveals the reasons behind this incredible conspiracy, as well as a riveting account of the horrors that day and how they have haunted the lives of the survivors and their loved ones. Many have spoken out about this outrageous act of war, but none so eloquently as Phil Tourney. This story should be made into a major motion picture, as the story has incredible drama with international implications. It is full of mystery, action, betrayals, and, most importantly, incredible acts of heroism and sacrifice. This book will keep you on the edge of your seat and should be read by every patriot.”
More on the USS LIBERTY “INCIDENT”

A review of the USS Liberty story here explains a lot of how and why we have arrived at the state and conditions in which we currently find America and its governance!

USS LIBERTY: The Fifth Fleet Sacrifice – Why did it happen?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: ANYONE BELIEVING IN A CONSPIRACY ETC IS LABELLED A

Title: ANYONE BELIEVING IN A CONSPIRACY ETC IS LABELLED A Description: TERRORISM BY DEMOS THINK TANK U.K.

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 11:11 PM (GMT)

https://docs.google.com/viewer?a=v&pid=expl...&hl=en_US&pli=1

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 11:13 PM (GMT)

These people are panicing guys as their control is slipping away so fast they cannot believe it themselves. Now they're gearing up to call all those not brainwashed, terrorists. It will be a thought crime not to believe the bullshit, hype and demonic lies spread by the most wicked social engineering systems around especially the Tell-a-lie-Vision. Demos is one of the biggest terrorists around out to destroy your life, culture, race and everything you've always known and been part of.

Mark - July 12, 2011 01:09 AM (GMT)

Yeah, a terrorist or in need of a psychologist or re-educating by the U.N. soon to be by force in your local city.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Source of terror threat is in UK Government, says

Title: Source of terror threat is in UK Government, says
Description: a Police Principal Intelligence Analyst

TheUnhivedMind - July 11, 2011 04:19 AM (GMT)

Source of terror threat is in UK Government, says a police Principal Intelligence Analyst

July 9, 2011
http://terroronthetube.co.uk/2011/07/09/so...igence-analyst/

Tony Farrell had been employed for twelve years as 'Principle Intelligence Analyst' for South Yorkshire Police, 13th largest of the 44 police forces in the UK. His job involved producing a yearly 'Strategic Threat Assessment Matrix' to determine how the police force had to prioritise its activities. Assessed 'threats' ranged from ASBOs (anti-social behaviour orders) to the terrorist threat allegedly presented by Islamic extremists. Having a statistics degree, it was his job to translate the different 'strategic threats' into a 'matrix' of relative numerical weighted probabilities.

In 2010, one week before the 5th anniversary of 7/7, Tony (who had never previously doubted government versions of events) stumbled across '9/11 Truth' material on the web. Like so many millions before him, he was shocked to the core by this experience. He quickly realised that there was a great mass of evidence relating to 9/11 kept hidden by the mainstream media. As a Christian, Tony consulted his church minister, who suggested that he consider, whether the same might be true for the London 7/7 bombings?

Something he had not suspected 'in his wildest dreams' then started to unfold. After reading much of the available but publicly-unreported witness statements and other evidence relating to 7/7, Tony found that he could only conclude that the official 7/7 narrative was 'a monstrous lie.' Instead of the official 'suicide bombers' narrative, which he and all of his colleagues had believed without question, he realised that the weight of evidence strongly points far more towards 7/7 being an event stage-managed by British intelligence than anything else.

The unthinkable but inescapable question thus intruded: Does there exist an ‘internal tyranny’ worse than any external foe?

All the assumptions he had held about the ‘strategic threat’ from terrorism were shattered and lay in ruins, and he found himself now doubting the size of any threat allegedly coming from Al-Qaeda and home-grown extremists. Within the police service, he felt horribly alone not knowing who to talk to about this matter – a situation made acute because he would have to present his annual threat assessment to the ‘Intelligence Strategic Management Board’ on July 8th - mere days away.

From his Christian perspective 9/11 and 7/7 could only now be perceived as expressions of a Satanic dimension concerning the ascent of what everybody was calling a ‘New World Order’. He saw these deceitful events as false-flag operations perpetrated in order to justify illegal and wicked wars. This was a deep personal crisis – one that would terminate his career.

On July 6th he ‘stuck his head above the parapet’ by alerting his boss – that he was developing a very different conceptual model of the strategic threat.

The terse document he handed over, suggested that the untruth of the 9/11 story implied ‘a huge potential for a total breakdown in trust between the government and the masses’ and it warned of ‘a tipping-point’ that would surely arrive as it slowly dawned upon citizens that their own government had conspired against them and had lied to them and had murdered innocents in the process.

Likewise he warned that, if indeed 7/7 had been ‘deliberately engineered’ to justify British PM Tony Blair standing shoulder to shoulder with Bush in the illegal was in Iraq, ‘There will be total outrage within the masses and a complete breakdown of trust between the Government and the people of the UK.’

In the presence of two intelligence managers, he alerted the Detective Superintendent, the Director of Intelligence for the South Yorkshire Police, explaining that all of his work used open-source material – he was not violating ‘official secrets’. He alluded to secret societies and a Masonic influence as being very central. The Director of Intelligence distanced the other two managers and they held a one-to-one conversation. The biggest single threat to the UK, Tony Farrell explained to him, was now coming from internal tyranny and in his opinion ‘far exceeded’ any threat from Islamic terrorism. ‘Tony, you and I will never get them to tell the truth’, came the philosophical reply, ‘- we are mere foot-soldiers of the government.’

That indeed was sensible advice, from someone who cared for his welfare – but, something more important was stirring within Tony Farrell: the voice of his conscience, and that would not permit him to go along with the ‘monstrous lie’.

His seniors, seemingly concerned for his well-being expressed a wish for Tony to visit Occupational Health. This irked him, as he felt and indeed was in perfectly good health.

On July 7th 2010, his first line manager, a Detective Chief Inspector spent a good part of the day with him trying to steer him into keeping to the original plan and to avoid rocking the boat. Could they not achieve some sort of compromise – then he could take his three weeks' leave? To comply with that, he would have had turn a blind eye to his own assessment and deliberately hand over misleading analysis. His 'strategic' models were looking promising according to his line manager – yet he could not set aside his new views about 'internal tyranny.'

As a seemingly lone voice in his police force, Tony Farrell found himself wrestling in the 'Valley of Decision' at home that evening, a theme he found expressed in the Book of Job, Chapter 3. He also pondered the 9th Commandment, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness.' He experienced an epic struggle going on that seemed to him to resemble that described in the Book of Ephesians, Chapter 6.

So that evening, 5 years to the day from the London bombings, he reached his own momentous personal decision. He resolved to take a stand knowing it would probably lead to him being sacked.

On July 8th he handed over a very short version of the 'Strategic Assessment Matrix,' which averred that the real terrorist 'threat' to society was almost entirely of the state-sponsored kind, and it alluded to both 9/11 and 7/7 in this context. Other threats from other 'domains of criminality' were, his brief report claimed, 'insignificant' by comparison.

This was hardly following the National Intelligence Model guidance, relating to 'Threat and Risk Assessment models' that he was supposed to use. 'Tony we can't do business like this,' his manager pleaded.

He was asked to create a personal report: how had he arrived as such an unheard-of view? His privileges were withdrawn and his computer accessed, but as he had done his investigation at home and with open-source material, nothing untoward was found.

And so he was absent from the board meeting that afternoon, even though it was anticipating the yearly presentation from him. Instead he was sent home to compile a report, explaining his stance. He offered to produce a full report with backup evidence, for his shocking new views, but that wasn't required.

Sacked for his beliefs

His work 'could be helpful to the police service' the DI remarked cryptically. Everything had happened so quickly, much too quickly. Tony Farrell was summoned to a hearing chaired by the Director of Finance a member of the Senior Command Team on 2nd

September 2010. He was told that he held beliefs that were ‘incompatible’ with his position. There was no allegation of any misconduct. In dismissing him, the Director of Finance said this: “It is a very sad occasion as you have done some excellent work for South Yorkshire Police and I have never been involved in a situation like today. Your beliefs are very sincere and you may be right, but it is I’m afraid incompatible at the moment with where we are.”

He took the matter to the South Yorkshire Police Authority Appeal’s Committee but his case was dismissed. He has since put the case into an Employment Tribunal where final hearings are scheduled to be held in early September 2011 in Sheffield. This will be a public event, and it is likely that South Yorkshire Police will feel embarrassed by the repercussions. This case has potentially far-reaching implications.

Tony Farrell gave an interview with Richard Hall on Sky TV released on July 8, 2011 (used as the main source for this article) and also that same day a 10-minute interview was broadcast on a Bristol local radio; synchronously enough, South Yorkshire’s Chief Constable announced his retirement on that same day 8th July – after nine years’ of service. Was this indicating some stress within the Force? The whole story focuses by odd coincidences upon anniversary-dates of the London bombings, over the last couple of years.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Terror tots of the Taliban: Children as young as Title: Terror tots of the Taliban: Children as young as Description: five traing for Al-Qaeda [BLAH BLAH BLAH

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 11:11 PM (GMT)

Terror tots of the Taliban: Children as young as five training to be Al Qaeda 'martyrs' in secret camp

Last updated at 3:19 PM on 10th July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...da-martyrs.html

Baby-faced children aim AK-47 rifles as they train for war on British troops. They are being taught about combat even if they can barely hold the lethal weapons.

Shocking video shows toddlers as young as five being trained as 'martyrs' at a secret al-Qaeda camp. They are learning how to blow up buildings and mount roadside bomb attacks.

British commanders in Afghanistan say Taliban fighters are increasingly using children as suicide bombers and as human shields during battles.

Footage shows children cheering as a toy police car is blown to pieces by a bomb after a youngster presses a button on a mobile phone.

The anxious youngsters - some dressed in camouflage uniform - are made to stand in line before being handed the rifles.

Militants are training hundreds of them to become killers in the camp based in North Waziristan before being sent across the border to face western troops.

The children come from families within the Turkic ethnic group of Uyghur people - Chinese Muslims who have fled and settled in Pakistan Afghanistan and Kazakhstan.

Terrorism expert Neil Doyle told the Sunday Mirror that the video which appears on an underground website, was released as part of a Jihad recruitment drive.

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 11:12 PM (GMT)

Making sure the children don't get out of going in those radiation chambers after the in the body bomb bunkum false flag takes place, removing all pat downs.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 911 - PLANE - MUST - HIT - STEEL!!!

Title: 911 - PLANE - MUST - HIT - STEEL!!!

Maximiliano - July 10, 2011 08:30 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="510" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/AEIpb6agqFg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

THIS WAS A RITUAL!!!

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 03:31 PM (GMT)

Max this is a fraud to hurt the truth movement. The word is 'playing' not plane and the word 'steal' is not steel whilst 'kit' is not hit. Be careful Max as deceivers pray on your instant reactions.

Maximiliano - July 10, 2011 06:25 PM (GMT)

Does not "KIT" means also "COMET"? Althought... you are right.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Sarkozy Allows No Summer Vacations for Ministers

Title: Sarkozy Allows No Summer Vacations for Ministers
Description: [SETTING UP FOR SOMETHING?]

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 03:55 AM (GMT)

Sarkozy Allows No Summer Vacations for Ministers

2011-07-08 00:55:30 Xinhua Web Editor: Zhangxu http://english.cri.cn/6966/2011/07/08/2021s647117.htm

French President Nicolas Sarkozy said Thursday his ministers should stay in Paris during the long summer vacation.

"He (Sarkozy) called that ministers do not take holidays. Ministers are always responsible, 365 days a year. They can have rest but they are not on vacation," Budget Minister and the government spokeswoman Valerie Pecresse said after the weekly cabinet meeting.

Sarkozy made the remarks amid rising criticism over ministers vacations and abuse of public interests.

According to the newly-designated spokeswoman, the next cabinet meeting will be on August 1st.

As for the first couple of France, they would as usual have their holidays in the Correze and La Baule, regions in middle and western France, the spokeswoman said.

In February, former Foreign Minister Michele Alliot-Marie accepted an invitation from one Tunisian tycoon, who was reportedly in President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali's camp, and spent the Christmas holiday in Tunisia right before the violent protests to oust Ben Ali.

She was later forced to resign due to mounting public indignation.

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 04:01 AM (GMT)

Are we about to see a Division Action false flag attack on Paris this Summer? Why is the Holy Roman Emperor, King Juan Carlos's puppet, Nicolas Sarkozy stopping all Summer vacations for ministers? Don't fall for the third truth (bunkum) given in the media for the blind. Will it be conventional or will it most likely be nuclear. The nuclear side or dirty bomb would be the best choice by this Division Action filth which would aid in putting the fear of God in people and the economy covering up the later incompetences showing up now. At the same time it would aid, The Worshipful Company of Fuellers in ridding nuclear energy from the people and enslaving you on their black gold for the next 200 years as planned with controlling false peaks. This will certain aid the body scanner/pat down program especially if they can twist it to the terrorist having explosives in their body. Thus aiding the depopulation program aided by The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries.

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 04:10 AM (GMT)

CONDITIONING

QUOTE

Eiffel Tower evacuated after bomb alert

14 September 2010 Last updated at 23:39
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-11302294

Tourists and guards around the Eiffel Tower after its evacuation

About 2,000 people have been evacuated from the Eiffel Tower in Paris and its surrounding park after a bomb scare, French officials say.

They say the alarm was raised after an anonymous call to the company which manages the famous landmark.

A police cordon was formed and about 1,000 people were moved to the banks of the nearby River Seine. Officers with sniffer dogs searched the area.

But police later said it was a false alarm.

"Nothing was found," a French police officer told AFP news agency.

The 324m (1,063ft) iron lattice tower, built in 1889, is one of the world's most popular tourist attractions.

The evacuation of the tower and the Champ de Mars park took place calmly shortly before 2100 local time (1900 GMT), police said.

Within hours, the Saint-Michel train station - which was the target of a deadly attack in 1995 - was also briefly evacuated following a similar threat.

The French government increased security at certain sites between 2 August and 15 September, in part because of threats from al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb, French TV channel TF1 reported.

QUOTE

Paris: Eiffel Tower evacuated after bomb threat

A suspicious package was found and an anonymous caller warned police that the monument was to be blown up at 5 p.m.

March 23, 2011
http://www.globalpost.com/dispatch/news/re...mb-qaeda-terror

The Eiffel Tower in Paris was evacuated Wednesday when a suspicious package was found and an anonymous caller warned police that the monument was to be blown up at 5 p.m. local time.

An estimated 4,000 tourists were evacuated from the 1,063ft high tower after the package was found underneath the iron rafters, according to reports.

The site was still closed to tourists at 6:40 p.m. as police and bomb specialists investigated. But a police official later said a check of the site found no explosives, and tourists were allowed back on the sandy plaza beneath the tower after a little more than two hours.

Police have evacuated the Eiffel Tower several times in recent months because of bomb threats, according to the BBC. Each scare turned out to be a false alarm.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy was quick to support rebels fighting Muammar Gaddafi in Libya, and French jets began the attacks on the country, increasing fears that France may be the target of attacks from extreme Islamic groups.

Police are mainly concerned about two types of threat, according to the Daily Mail, both from Islamist extremists: an assassination bid on an important figure or an attack on a crowded area like a tourist spot or the Metro subway system.

According to the Mail, intelligence suggested that Al Qaeda's North African branch, Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb, had been planning an imminent attack in France.

The Algerian intelligence agency has passed on warnings about militants heading to French to carry out attacks, and officials say there is also evidence of Jihadi fighters returning from Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Paris is the most popular tourist destination in the world.

QUOTE

French MPs vote to ban Islamic full veil in public

The bill envisages fines of 150 euros for women wearing the full veil

13 July 2010 Last updated at 17:04
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/10611398

France's lower house of parliament has overwhelmingly approved a bill that would ban wearing the Islamic full veil in public.

There were 335 votes for the bill and only one against in the 557-seat National Assembly.

It must now be ratified by the Senate in September to become law.

The ban has strong public support but critics point out that only a tiny minority of French Muslims wear the full veil.

Many of the opposition Socialists, who originally wanted the ban limited only to public buildings, abstained from voting after coming under pressure from feminist supporters of the bill.

President Nicolas Sarkozy has backed the ban as part of a wider debate on French identity but critics say the government is pandering to far-right voters.

Muslim headscarves

The word hijab comes from the Arabic for veil and is used to describe the headscarves worn by Muslim women. These scarves come in myriad styles and colours. The type most commonly worn in the West is a square scarf that covers the head and neck but leaves the face clear.

After the vote, Justice Minister Michele Alliot-Marie said it was a victory for democracy and for French values.

"Values of freedom against all the oppressions which try to humiliate individuals; values of equality between men and women, against those who push for inequality and injustice."

The vote is being closely watched in other countries, the BBC's Christian Fraser reports from the French capital Paris.

Spain and Belgium are debating similar legislation, and with such large-scale immigration in the past 20 or 30 years, identity has become a popular theme across Europe, our correspondent says.
'Open-faced democracy'

The bill would make it illegal to wear garments such as the niqab or burka, which incorporate a full-face veil, anywhere in public.

It envisages fines of 150 euros (£119) for women who break the law and 30,000 euros and a one-year jail term for men who force their wives to wear the burka.

The niqab and burka are widely seen in France as threats to women's rights and the secular nature of the state.

"Democracy thrives when it is open-faced," Ms Alliot-Marie told the National Assembly when she presented the bill last week.

She stressed the bill, which makes no reference to Islam or veils, was not aimed at "stigmatising or singling out a religion".

Berengere Poletti, an MP from Mr Sarkozy's centre-right UMP party, said women in full veils wore "a sign of alienation on their faces" and had to be "liberated".

Andre Gerin of the Communist opposition compared the veil to "a walking coffin, a muzzle".

'Fear of foreigners'

The bill is also seen as a touchstone for the Sarkozy administration's policy of integration. It is grappling with disaffected immigrant communities as it seeks to prevent a repeat of the mass unrest of 2005 on run-down French housing estates.
Continue reading the main story

But critics point to government studies showing that many women do not fit the stereotype of marginalised, oppressed women.

There are estimated to be only about 2,000 women wearing the full veil in France though the bill is opposed by many of France's five million Muslims.

Mohammed Moussaoui, the head of the French Council of the Muslim Faith, a government advisory body, has supported taking steps to discourage women from wearing the full veil but has said a legal ban would stigmatise a vulnerable group.

Jean-François Copé, Leader of the UMP party explains why he thinks the House voted in favour of the ban

Jean Glavany, a Socialist MP, said he opposed the ban on the grounds that it was "nothing more than the fear of those who are different, who come from abroad, who aren't like us, who don't share our values".

The Council of State, France's highest administrative body, warned in March that the law could be found unconstitutional.

If the bill passes the Senate in September, it will be sent immediately to France's Constitutional Council watchdog for a ruling.

Another challenge is possible at the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, where decisions are binding.

In another development, a French businessman, Rachid Nekkaz, said he would set up a 1m-euro fund to help women pay fines imposed under the new law.

A ban in the street would violate constitutional principles, he argued.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: V FOR VENDETTA; MARTIN McDAID; 7/7

Title: V FOR VENDETTA; MARTIN McDAID; 7/7

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 01:32 AM (GMT)

V FOR VENDETTA; MARTIN McDAID; 7/7

Saturday, July 09, 2011
http://aangirfan.blogspot.com/2011/07/v-fo...-mcdaid-77.html

Warner Brothers film 'V for Vendetta' was postponed due to its similarity to the London Tube Bombings 7/7 event.

In the months prior to 7/7, Warner Brothers were filming in the London Underground for their smash hit, "V for Vendetta."

Nick Kollerstrom of terroronthetube.co.uk (TERROR ON THE TUBE - Investigation) hypothesises that the FRR or Force Reconnaissance Regiment were responsible for planting the bombs on the London Underground with the help and assistance of US agents. more›› The British Army's FRR Go Through The Looking-Glass

~~
Martin 'Abdullah' McDaid, at the heart of the 7/7 story? (McDaid Who?)

http://77inquests.blogspot.com/ reports on the 6th Anniversary of 7/7 as follows:

There is strong evidence in the public domain to suggest that at the heart of the story behind 7/7 lay at least three operatives for both the British and American Intelligence services, one of which served an insanely short period in a US prison, for greater crimes than those his testimony put behind bars for far longer terms, before being quietly released.

The bodies of Tanweer and Khan were not included in the 'Life Extinct' body counts carried out on 7th July by Dr Morgan Costello.

The police viewing of the Luton Station CCTV footage was conducted as early as 10th July, despite the official account clearly stating that the men were identified on CCTV at King's Cross Thameslink on 11th July, and that it was this discovery that led the investigation to Luton as a possible site of interest.

There exist no sightings of three of the men, Khan Tanweer and Lindsay, after the footage from King's Cross Thameslink, some way from the Underground tube network. Apparently the temporary CCTV system that was installed at King's Cross underground malfunctioned for the 20 crucial minutes between 8.30 and 8.50.

Additionally, there are no recordings of the three from any other cameras. This means that there is absolutely no CCTV evidence that shows three of the accused anywhere on the London Underground network on the morning of 7 July 2005.

No CCTV from the pre-explosion tube carriages has been released, despite this CCTV apparently existing, and despite it being crucial evidence which could confirm or deny that three of the men boarded the carrriages they are alleged to have boarded. This CCTV should also have been made available to Colonel Mahoney when the expensive modelling of likely injuries sustained by the deceased was conducted to make up for the lack of any internal post mortems on the victims.

No CCTV exists from McDonald's showing whether Hussain actually used the premises to insert a new 9v battery into his apparently malfunctioning bomb, as it was revealed during the inquests that the store manager can be seen on CCTV (oh the irony) turning off the CCTV system before Hussain entered.

No CCTV exists of Hasib Hussain on either of the buses he is alleged to have boarded. There is no footage of Hussain aboard the number 91 bus, nor the number 30 bus he is alleged to have destroyed, nor is there any street or traffic camera footage showing him boarding either bus.

There is a huge discrepancy between the explosives allegedly used, as given in sworn evidence to the Jean Charles de Menezes Inquest, and the evidence that Clifford Todd gave to the 7/7 Inquests.

These questions and many more can be found on the 7/7 Inquests blog.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Panetta in Kabul: Al-Qaeda Defeat 'Within Reach'

Title: Panetta in Kabul: Al-Qaeda Defeat 'Within Reach'
Description: [FLANNEL]

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 12:22 AM (GMT)

Panetta in Kabul: Al-Qaeda Defeat 'Within Reach'

By Viola Gienger - Jul 9, 2011 10:20 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-09/p...hin-reach-.html

U.S. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta, predicting that "strategically defeating" al-Qaeda is within reach, is scheduled to meet with Afghan security officials and American troops on his second day in Afghanistan today.

Panetta is making his first visit as defense secretary with a focus on how to withdraw the 33,000 forces President Barack Obama ordered removed by September 2012 without losing recent gains against the Taliban.

A successful handover of security responsibility to the Afghans hinges on the capability of their own security forces, Panetta said yesterday. He said he told President Hamid Karzai in their meeting last night that the U.S. will continue to help Afghanistan develop the forces and prevent backsliding.

"Our goal here is to ensure Afghanistan is stable in the future and can secure, defend and govern itself so that it can never again become a safe haven for al-Qaeda or its militant allies," Panetta said. In his last job as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Panetta oversaw the Navy SEALs operation in May that killed al-Qaeda chief Osama bin Laden.

The U.S. is negotiating a long-term agreement with Afghanistan to cement strategic ties while planning to withdraw 10,000 troops this year and 23,000 more next year, with the expectation to hand over security control nationwide to the Afghans at the end of 2014.

Continued pressure on al-Qaeda, the Taliban and other affiliates around the Middle East and North Africa would defeat the international terrorist group, Panetta told reporters before landing in Kabul yesterday. He said the goal is “within reach.”

“Now is the moment, following what happened with bin Laden, to put maximum pressure on them,” Panetta said. “If we continue this effort, we can really cripple al-Qaeda as a threat to” the U.S.
Petraeus on Al-Qaeda

Army General David Petraeus, who is stepping down as commander of the 48-nation military coalition in Afghanistan, told reporters traveling with Panetta during a briefing in Kabul yesterday. He will take over Panetta’s old job as CIA director in September and will be succeeded in Afghanistan later this month by Lieutenant General John Allen.

Petraeus said estimates show 50 to 100 members of al-Qaeda remain in Afghanistan, with some also linked to other militant groups. Most are located in the mountains of Kunar and Nuristan provinces in the east, where there are few Afghan security forces, he said.

The coalition has conducted missions recently to disrupt their operations and has longer-term plans to secure the area with local forces, Petraeus said.
‘Strategic Dismantling’

The combination of that pressure and the squeeze on al- Qaeda in Yemen and elsewhere creates “a real prospect” for “strategic dismantling or strategic defeat,” he said.

Panetta said he urged the president in a one-on-one meeting yesterday, followed by dinner, to discuss disagreements privately.

After Karzai recently criticized the U.S. as an occupying force pursuing its own interests, U.S. Ambassador Karl Eikenberry told students in the western city of Herat that “hurtful and inappropriate” comments by “some of your leaders” undermine support in the U.S. for its aid and military role in Afghanistan.

George Washington

When Karzai asked how the U.S. managed to build a professional and apolitical military, Panetta said that began with George Washington “making very clear that that’s the way that we ought to operate.”

“I said it would be well if you would do the same thing as president of this country,” said Panetta, a California Democrat who served in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1977 to 1993.

In a late briefing with reporters after his dinner with Karzai, the new defense chief said the remaining force of about 70,000 would stay in Afghanistan until the end of 2014.

Asked a second time, he reiterated that "We're going to have 70,000 there through 2014 and obviously as we get to 2014, we'll develop a plan as to how we reduce that force at that time."

President Barack Obama, in announcing the beginning of the withdrawal on June 22 said the remaining troops would "continue coming home at a steady pace as Afghan security forces move into the lead."

Panetta's spokesman clarified the defense chief's comments after today's briefing.

"There will be a drawdown between 2012 and 2014 of the 70,000 troops that remain," said Doug Wilson, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, who is traveling with Panetta. "What the secretary wanted to make clear was that a plan is still to be developed as to how we're going to do that."

To contact the reporter on this story: Viola Gienger in Kabul at vgienger@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva in Washington at msilva34@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Lyndon LaRouche: 9/11 Was a Total Inside Job [Vd]

Title: Lyndon LaRouche: 9/11 Was a Total Inside Job [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 01:35 AM (GMT)

Lyndon LaRouche: 9/11 Was a Total Inside Job

July 1, 2011
http://www.infowars.com/lyndon-larouche-91...tal-inside-job/

[dohtml]<iframe width="560" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/LPU572UY0r0" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="560" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/Kg6LSvQYkUo" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="560" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/qj1Il5xPNBE" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="560" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/NNAT83dh9QY" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 kin: Troopers ‘did nothing’

Title: 9/11 kin: Troopers ‘did nothing’

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 01:19 AM (GMT)

9/11 kin: Troopers ‘did nothing’

Say Logan tips ignored by cops

By Joe Dwinell
Saturday, July 2, 2011 - Updated 3 days ago http://www.bostonherald.com/news/regional/...e&position=also Months before the horrific 9/11 attacks, lackadaisical state troopers specially assigned to protect Logan International Airport failed to act on tips that Middle Eastern men were casing security checkpoints armed with cameras, explosive new court documents allege.

One of the suspected terrorists whom troopers could have cornered was later identified as al- Qaeda 9/11 leader Mohammed Atta, according to lawyers for a Boston woman who is suing over the loss of her son. The lawyers took depositions from an airline employee and other witnesses.

Troopers were told the Middle Eastern men were “acting suspiciously” and videotaping airport security in May 2001, according to the filing in a New York court.

“When Mohammad Atta went through the security checkpoint after being reported to F Troop that he was photographing, videotaping and surveilling the checkpoints, Massport F Troop did nothing,” the documents state.

The explosive allegations of state police incompetency are part of the nation’s last wrongful-death lawsuit linked to the 9/11 attacks.

Roslindale mom Mary Bavis is suing Massport, the airlines and a security company for not thwarting the 9/11 hijackers at Logan.

She blames the airport and airlines for the death of her son Mark Bavis, 31, a former Boston University hockey player who was working as a National Hockey League scout at the time of his death. His jet, United Airlines Flight 175, slammed into the World Trade Center in New York with Atta at the helm.

Nearly 3,000 people were murdered in the 9/11 terrorist attacks. All other victims’ families have settled their cases. Bavis family members have told the Herald they want their day in court to expose what went terribly wrong on 9/11.

This week, Mary Bavis appealed to a federal judge in Manhattan to reject Massport’s attempt to be removed from the case. The appeal claims state troopers were slow to move on tips — even though they had been warned terrorist groups were targeting Logan.

“While September 11, 2001, is the saddest day in aviation security history, May 11, 2001, is a close second,” the family’s attorneys wrote. The family argues that troopers missed the opportunity that day to possibly intercept the men or at least capture Atta on surveillance camera footage.

“Atta’s picture and name could have been known and posted at every checkpoint. He could have been placed on no-fly lists and watchlists. He could have been stopped from flying by Massport,” the documents state.

Massport and state police spokesmen declined to comment yesterday, citing pending litigation.

Massport has argued there is “no evidence to show that Massport breached any duty owed by the airport operator to Mark Bavis.”

Brian Sullivan, a retired Federal Aviations Administration special agent, said yesterday Massport does share blame for sloppy security on 9/11.

“What a zoo,” Sullivan said of Massport. “It’s incredible. Rampant cronyism just doesn’t get the job done.

“We had a chance to intercept Atta if F Troop had responded to reports. Their failure to react to information borders on criminal negligence.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 9/11 Zadroga Health Care Law Goes Into Effect

Title: 9/11 Zadroga Health Care Law Goes Into Effect

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 01:18 AM (GMT)

9/11 Zadroga Health Care Law Goes Into Effect

BY ALEX KATZ
July 1, 2011 3:23 PM
http://www.nydailynews.com/blogs/dailypoli...oes-into-effect

It took years of lobbying and partisan bickering, but the 9/11 Zadroga Act to help ailing Ground Zero responders finally took effect today.

The law provides $4.3 billion in guaranteed federal funding to cover health costs and financial compensation for emergency responders, recovery workers, volunteers, and residents who were affected by the attacks almost 10 years ago.

Advocates celebrated with a ceremonial ribbon-cutting against a backdrop of Star Spangled Banners at Mount Sinai's 9/11 health clinic this morning.

National and city pols were also on hand, including Mayor Bloomberg, U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius, and U.S. Reps. Jerrold Nadler, Charlie Rangel, and Carolyn Maloney.

"This is an historic milestone, not only for the more than 36,000 Americans who lost their health as a result of 9/11 and are in the program, but also for our moral obligation to care for those who rise to the defense of our nation in a time of war," Maloney said.

The Manhattan Democrat – who was introduced at the event as the "bulldog of the Upper East Side" – helped write the landmark legislation along with Nadler and Rep. Peter King (R-L.I.), spearheading the fight for its approval in the House and ultimately the Senate.

The original bill's price tag was scaled back from $7.4 billion as part of a compromise with conservatives in both parties, which allowed the legislation to pass through Congress and get President Obama's signature in early January.

"As you all know, nothing gets done in Washington easily," Bloomberg told the crowd.

"There's no way to think that we can ever fully repay the thousands of first responders who fearlessly charged into the towers as others rushed out," he added. "But we can give them the care they need and the care that they deserve."

Rhonda Villamia, 56, of Sunnyside, volunteered at Ground Zero for nine months immediately following the attacks. Working with both the Red Cross and Salvation Army, she helped support the first responders by cooking meals and lending a hand wherever it was needed.

But all the time she spent down there caused her to develop respiratory and thyroid problems.

"I was down there to do what I thought was right," Villamia said after the ceremony in between tears. "I didn't think about any of the possible consequences after the dust literally settled."

The Zadroga law – named for NYPD detective James Zadroga, who died of 9/11-related illnesses – will cover Villamia and tens of thousands of other responders. But with the funding set to expire in five years, she insists the fight isn't over.

"We now need to prove that we've needed this coverage all along, and we'll continue to need it moving forward," she said. "The proof will be in the pudding."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ted Gunderson Former FBI Chief - Most Terror

Title: Ted Gunderson Former FBI Chief - Most Terror
Description: Attacks Are Committed By CIA/FBI [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 5, 2011 01:27 AM (GMT)

Ted Gunderson Former FBI Chief - Most Terror Attacks Are Committed By Our CIA And FBI

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/YZ2VpfUqRoo?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/YZ2VpfUqRoo?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US strategy to narrow focus on home threat

Title: US strategy to narrow focus on home threat
Description: [DHS BULLSHIT]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 05:39 PM (GMT)

US strategy to narrow focus on home threat

Carl Ungerer and Anthony Bergin From:The Australian July 05, 2011 12:00AM http://www.theaustralian.com.au/news/world...x-1226087448752

THE death of Osama bin Laden is not the end of global jihadist terrorism. But the US is not going to fight every terrorist organisation with a religious motive.

Rather, it will focus on the networks that pose the most direct and significant threats to the US homeland: al-Qa'ida, its affiliates and its adherents. These are the key judgments from the latest national strategy for counter-terrorism released by the administration last week.

Against the narrower target of al-Qa'ida itself, counter-terrorism efforts are producing results. Al-Qa'ida's leadership ranks have been decimated, with more key leaders killed in rapid succession than at any time since 9/11. Armed drones have been deployed in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Yemen, Libya, Iraq and, most recently, Somalia.

Al-Qa'ida hasn't mounted a successful terrorist attack in the West since the 2005 bombings in London. It's doubtful that it now has the operational capacity to undertake a spectacular mass-casualty attack such as 9/11.
But there's no evidence that "al-Qa'idaism" as a motivating ideology is going to dissolve any time soon. This is evident in the efforts of the Indonesian-based Jemaah Islamiah in recent years to reach out to al-Qa'ida central for operational support, funding and training.

The arrest of a senior JI leader, Umar Patek, in Abbottabad - the Pakistani city in which bin Laden was living - was yet further evidence of the transnational networks that link both groups. The emerging strategy among jihadist groups appears to involve diversification (creating new organisational structures, promoting the "individualisation" of jihad) and consolidation (strengthening existing linkages).

If al-Qa'ida fails, other groups will emerge to take its place. Already, the Pakistan-based Lashkar-e-Toiba has branched out to conduct international operations, most famously in the military siege on the Indian port city of Mumbai in December 2008. It has moved beyond its original objective of fighting for independence against Indian government forces in Jammu and Kashmir.

Similarly, the Tahrik-e Taliban Pakistan is seeking to venture beyond its traditional battlefields in the tribal areas along the Afghanistan border. It claimed responsibility for Faizal Shazad's failed New York Times Square car bomb attack in May last year.

As the global terrorist threat evolves, new operational patterns will emerge. We've seen increasing numbers of attacks by unaffiliated "lone-wolf" terrorists. Self-radicalisation over the internet is another growing problem.

And homegrown terrorism is on the rise. The new US counter-terrorism strategy is the first that designates the US homeland as a primary area of emphasis for US counter-terrorism efforts. The number of jihadist terrorism cases involving US citizens or residents has spiked markedly in the past two years. In 2009 and last year, there were 76 arrests, almost half of the total since 9/11.

A recent academic survey of the 183 individuals indicted or convicted in Islamist terrorism cases in the US since the 9/11 attacks found, however, that only four of the homegrown plots progressed to an actual attack. These attacks resulted in a total of 17 deaths.

The US strategy says little about other forms of terrorism. But radical republican groups, mostly dissident members of the old Irish Republican Army, have returned to terrorist violence in Northern Ireland. Attacks have increased in each of the past three years. Members of several extreme right-wing terrorist groups, often associated with Christian militia, have been arrested in the US. Communist terrorist groups are still active in India and The Philippines.

None of these groups can match the organisational and operational reach of al-Qa'ida. But it should be recognised that the al-Qa'ida brand is in serious trouble. Bin Laden's message isn't resonating in the Muslim world: the vast majority of al-Qa'ida's victims have been innocent Muslims.

The Arab Spring, the most profound change in the modern history of the Arab world, shows a rejection of al-Qa'ida's ideology. Al-Qa'ida has played no role in the recent revolutions in the Middle East. It's unlikely that bin Laden's successor, the uncharismatic Ayman al Zawahiri, will be able to turn things around so that extremist groups grab the reins of Middle East power.

John Brennan, US President Barack Obama's top terrorism adviser, recently highlighted the final image of Osama bin Laden seen around the world: "An old terrorist, alone, hunched over in a blanket, flipping through old videos of a man and a movement that history is leaving behind."

Brennan also noted that: "If we hit al-Qa'ida hard enough and often enough there will come a time when they can no longer replenish their ranks with the skilled leaders they need to sustain their operations".

But this won't mean the destruction of the al-Qa'ida network. It's not final victory. That's the real message from the new US strategy for counter-terrorism.

Carl Ungerer is director of the national security program and Anthony Bergin is the director of research at the Australian Strategic Policy Institute

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Reply to James Fetzer Over No Plane Nonsense

Title: Reply to James Fetzer Over No Plane Nonsense

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 01:12 AM (GMT)

Reply to James Fetzer Over No Plane Nonsense

Saturday, July 2, 2011
http://weeklyintercept.blogspot.com/2011/0...e-nonsense.html

First, the initial article containing my initial response was mixing Pilots for 9/11 Truth references in with the no plane holographic imagery references. That's like mixing cheap ketchup with crawfish etouffee! I don't take issue with information posted on http://pilotsfor911truth.org, but I am also not familiar with any member of Pilots for 9/11 Truth that subscribes to the "no plane theory".

In the paragraph underneath the heading "Pilots for 9/11 Truth", you ask "If there were no planes, what happened?" I see Pilots for 9/11 Truth refuting airspeeds, flight data, pilot skill, flight lists and cell technology.but I haven't found Pilots for 9/11 Truth taking planes completely out of the equation. Through Operation Home Run, the planes did not need to be modified to be flown remotely and I suspect Dov Zakheim had a hand in this technology, although a real investigation may confirm or deny this. Concerning the Pentagon, there is a lot of suspicion and strong circumstantial evidence refuting the official story. In addition, Pilots for 9/11 Truth's analysis of the flight data recorder goes further and indeed places the plane well above the Pentagon with two independent altitude readings (both Doppler and barometric). Jeffrey Latas, an ex Gulf war fighter pilot, commercial pilot and a member of Pilots for 9/11 Truth, confirms the flight data analysis, but is not entirely convinced himself about the idea that no jet hit the Pentagon. I do not believe Latas is compromised over the issue of 9/11. Obviously, there needs to be a thorough investigation of this theater of 9/11, but it's close to impossible to avoid speculation. This potential pitfall seems to be exacerbated by the FBI's confiscation of 80 or more odd recordings from different security cameras around the area.

I view the Pentagon as a potential honeypot propaganda tactic that attracts as many bees to the hive as possible before destroying the nest. Here, the Pentagon can simply pull or modify evidence they are in control of and use it to discredit (justified or not) the whole movement dealing with all theaters of 9/11. Thankfully, we have New York. As you state in your lectures, it seems like the establishment is asking us not to believe "our own lying eyes".

The following three conditions cannot be explained without explosives:

1. Molten iron in the basements of all three buildings.

2. The complete annihilation of all three buildings.

3. The rate of which all three buildings collapse while they are being destroyed.

It has been demonstrated time and again that the establishment has nowhere to go with this. Presenting these three basic items is the equivalent of placing your hands onto the neck of the establishment and squeezing. They are stuck. The more they dispute it, the worse it gets for them. Instead, trade groups are reduced to committing libel and slander by accusing folks like Richard Gage of anti-Semitism. That means Architects and Engineers for 9/11 Truth are winning - and not the "Charlie Sheen" kind of winning.

All that is left for the establishment shills is deflection. Occupy peoples' time and attention with something like the "no plane theory". Perfect Cass Sunstein material.

In Portland, all of this no plane hologram speculation seems to center around a movie called "September Clues", which is the strongest influence among the no planers. This 90 minute film suggesting holographic imagery, "September Clues", places a great deal of emphasis on issues of timing, pixellation, audio discrepancies, camera angles, building perspectives, lower thirds station I.D.'s, silhouettes, auto-focus, reflections and protruding nose cones.

I already want my time back.

"September Clues" insists that news correspondents on the ground in New York needed to have seen the planes' impacts in order for us all to believe the planes hit the buildings. To be fair, I should mention that it looks like no on-site correspondent witnessed the actual impact of the planes. Every time reporters refer to an explosion, "Clues" cuts to giddy text over pastel colors declaring a moment of deception.

The maker of this film did not like seeing the nose cone popping out of the other side of the building. As the plane explodes with impact, you see all or part of the nose cone of the jet protrude through the other side of the building before it is consumed by the explosion. Apparently, the idea that the cone made it through the building to the other side is "monstrous video trickery". Everyone is supposed to assume that this is impossible. Like there is no way a vertical portion of the cone could make it past the 48 steel beams before exploding from the impact.

What does the editor of this movie do with this image of the emerging nose cone? Smooth out its pixels. Every frame of video footage only has so much information. There are only so many pixels. Bitmap software like photoshop is often tapped to remove the "video look" of a still video frame by smoothing out the pixels. They grab an earlier frame of an unmolested jet nose cone and superimpose it over the part of the nose cone that may have made it through the building. The protruding nose cone is slightly wider, a lot smoother, but matching! It's the fact that they match that we are supposed to realize the video-trickery of it all.

Next in the movie, from a helicopter, a videographer is supposed to have seen the cone's protrusion that brief momentary split second it exists before being consumed by an explosion. (Of course, the footage is in slow motion and there's not a lot of attention devoted to how much you're likely to see in real time). Now, all original footage of this moment has 15 frames of black to help facilitate such trickery. Forget about the idea that you haven't seen this 15 frames of black in rebroadcasts -- that's just 'the man' with doctored footage. According to "September Clues", that blackout is an attempt by videographers or switchers to prevent the audience from seeing the protruding nose cone rear it's ugly head for that one fraction (much less than half) of a second, because, if they did, it would have the same devastating impact on the impressionable audience as WTC7's free fall collapse.

Switchboard operators place a lower thirds title over a live broadcast and it may remain as a live composite even when older footage is played back. One lower thirds design was a little too big and covered up the point of impact of on older footage played back. Another "September Clue"! They were hiding the nose cone! There's no way they forgot that the point of impact may be obscured by the lower thirds I.D. The editor superimposes text: "are we to believe this was "just an accident?". See where this is going?

My question is "should I waste my time any further with this?"

If you are a masochist, you could jump into the pudding and watch "September Clues".

http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-6407548186293238834

See the vastly different camera angles on huge buildings have a slightly different perspective!

Watch how the text definitively proclaims that the angles don't look right and therefore must be the result of sloppy, doctored footage!

Watch how the average reaction to impact by pundits is 17 seconds and how that could only mean that the announcers are patiently waiting their cue while the video generated holographic imagery is fooling the television public!

See how people in the background seem to disappear! Disappear, of course, when you don't account for the fact there are two fields per every frame of video. If you freeze a frame with two fields, sometimes the edge of a moving image seems to fade into the background.

Hear the discrepancies in the sounds of impact from one angle to another and attribute them to sloppy false flag work instead of basic acoustics!

Assume that oscillating sounds like sirens can never match up in a straight cut, despite the fact your signal hits the same pitch every couple seconds!

Deny there could ever be different contrast ratios from different camera angles, depending upon where you are in relation to the sun!

Refuse to believe that the plane in question could have traveled across the horizon because, when the camera was zoomed out, the plane is not yet in view!

You too will want your time back after watching "September Clues"!

One redeeming quality about "September Clues" is that it helps to find out who is pushing this theory in the first place. Take a good look at this movie and you soon realize that those pushing the "no planes hit the building theory" are compromised. They are simply trying to distract the 9/11 Truth movement and diminish our credibility. It's become the "elephant in the room". I can't help but mourn the loss of my 9/11 activist hoe-downs from past days in Tucson, basking in the spittle of people's beet red conspiracy-baiting temper tantrums of the past. Boo hoo.

If a movement is going to make it on its own, however, it must be able to overcome these incohesive side shows to become stronger and more focused in its message. You can tell that's happening once you're labelled "anti-Semitic" for your views on 9/11 instead of being labelled "kooky".

Thanks to James Fetzer for allowing me to share my take on this matter.

J.T. Waldron

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Dead in the Water - The Attack on the USS Liberty

Title: Dead in the Water - The Attack on the USS Liberty

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 12:52 AM (GMT)

Dead in the Water - The Attack on the USS Liberty

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/BBmJyF9A4wc&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/BBmJyF9A4wc&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 4, 2011 12:59 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/TP_l2FyMKuk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/TP_l2FyMKuk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

23fca

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->WORLD CONTROL->Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

Pages: (3) [1] 2 3

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF INTEL DRUGS	TheUnhivedMind	0	1,157	13th September 2008 - 11:42 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MI6 Are The Lords Of The Global Drug Trade	TheUnhivedMind	0	1,066	13th September 2008 - 04:13 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics
		Ten Years After Decriminalization, Drug Abuse Down by half in Portugal	TheUnhivedMind	0	63	18th July 2011 - 12:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		All charges dropped in massive cocaine smuggling case	TheUnhivedMind	0	53	14th July 2011 - 03:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Marijuana: DEA proposal, new Colorado law could lead to Big Pharma boom, attorney says	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	14th July 2011 - 01:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghan president's brother, Ahmad Wali Karzai, killed	TheUnhivedMind	0	34	12th July 2011 - 06:39 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The “War On Drugs” Is A $2.5 Trillion Racket: How Big Banks, Private Military Companies An	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	12th July 2011 - 01:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Warning over legal Russian drug phenazepam	TheUnhivedMind	0	49	8th July 2011 - 06:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		"Journalist" Blames Drug War Failure On Corrupt Mexican Police [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	41	6th July 2011 - 12:57 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		July 5/11 Saskatoon StarPhoenix’s Cover-Up for Terror Squad, Cocaine & Police Involveme	TheUnhivedMind	0	43	5th July 2011 - 10:26 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Super-strength ecstasy warning after Ayrshire deat [MOSSAD'S PROFITS WILL DROP HAHA]	TheUnhivedMind	0	81	3rd July 2011 - 06:19 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		YES ELIZABETH MARY II PUSHES DOPE [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	80	3rd July 2011 - 02:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Flesh Eating Disease In Cocaine Found In NY, LA Cocaine Supply Of Entire Nation May be	TheUnhivedMind	0	171	26th June 2011 - 03:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ron Paul, Barney Frank Introduce Bill That Would End Pot Prohibition [FRANK IS A CRETIN!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	42	26th June 2011 - 02:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DEA head: A thousand dead children means we're winning war on drugs [KING CARLOS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	55	25th June 2011 - 03:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bolivia to withdraw from drugs convention over coca classification	TheUnhivedMind	0	33	25th June 2011 - 02:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Scotland tops world cocaine use	TheUnhivedMind	0	71	24th June 2011 - 03:34 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Krokodil: The drug that eats junkies [POST INDUSTRIAL ZERO GROWTH SOCIETY]	TheUnhivedMind	0	94	23rd June 2011 - 02:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Drug addicts get methadone on the NHS... why can't I have the cannabis spray that eases ag	TheUnhivedMind	0	58	20th June 2011 - 02:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CONGRESSMAN CALLS FOR END TO WAR ON DRUGS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	50	18th June 2011 - 10:56 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Underground Website Where You Can Buy Any Drug Imaginable	TheUnhivedMind	3	211	9th June 2011 - 02:08 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		When Cocaine and Monsanto's Roundup Collide, War on Drugs Becomes a Genetically-Modified	TheUnhivedMind	0	82	8th June 2011 - 02:09 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Taliban grow rich from misery of opium farmers and addicts	TheUnhivedMind	0	44	7th June 2011 - 11:23 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		"Business is Booming"; Wall Street's Role in Narco trafficking	TheUnhivedMind	0	113	5th June 2011 - 12:55 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Branson backs drugs policy change [KNIGHT OF MALTA]	TheUnhivedMind	0	72	2nd June 2011 - 11:55 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		World Leaders Urge Paradigm Shift on Drugs Policy The Drug Problem Will Become Worse	emergingtruth	0	77	2nd June 2011 - 06:06 AM Last Post by: emergingtruth
		Oxi: Twice as powerful as crack cocaine at just a fraction of the price [GOD HELP US ALL!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	112	2nd June 2011 - 03:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ultralight aircraft now ferrying drugs across U.S. Mexico border	TheUnhivedMind	0	131	19th May 2011 - 09:52 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Middle Tennessee Police Profiting Off Drug Trade?	TheUnhivedMind	0	90	19th May 2011 - 02:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Volunteers to take ecstasy pills live on Channel 4	TheUnhivedMind	0	135	11th May 2011 - 05:35 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Baby is treated in hospital for being drunk - while 6 yr old is high on drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	146	2nd May 2011 - 11:17 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Met chief: Stop keeping prisoners on drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	144	21st April 2011 - 11:00 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ecstasy use 'damages the brain' [MOSSAD THRIVES OFF BRAIN DAMAGE]	TheUnhivedMind	0	147	19th April 2011 - 05:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HOUSE OF KESWICK'S ARE LARGE SCALE DRUG DEALERS	TheUnhivedMind	1	310	16th April 2011 - 04:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dope Inc turning the West into drug addicts [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	7	331	11th April 2011 - 02:55 AM Last Post by: Douglas Willinger
		World banks run on cocaine cash [Vd]	Phazon	0	149	8th April 2011 - 11:11 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		Ron Paul accuses Bush of smuggling CIA drugs [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	148	6th April 2011 - 06:28 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GARY WEBB WHO EXPOSED CIA DRUG RUNNING MURDERED [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	171	6th April 2011 - 06:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How a big US bank laundered billions from Mexico's murderous drug gangs	TheUnhivedMind	0	151	3rd April 2011 - 12:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Schoolboys, 8, caught showing off 'bags of cannabus' to classmates	TheUnhivedMind	0	147	31st March 2011 - 01:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Heroin dealers to escape jail: New sentencing proposals mean pushers would go free	TheUnhivedMind	0	130	29th March 2011 - 01:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		War on drugs has failed, say former heads of MI5 CPS and BBC [BIGGEST DOPE DEALERS!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	153	21st March 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		It's time to decriminalise drug use, say peers	TheUnhivedMind	0	115	21st March 2011 - 03:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Onion Router Encryption Devices	TheUnhivedMind	0	345	13th March 2011 - 05:54 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lockerbie Diary: Gadhaffi, Fall Guy For CIA Drug Running	TheUnhivedMind	0	243	7th March 2011 - 01:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Holy Rollers	TheUnhivedMind	0	172	6th March 2011 - 11:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CIA chief nailed for sex crimes and cocaine	TheUnhivedMind	0	171	6th March 2011 - 07:19 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Britain now at heart of Europe's cocaine smuggling warns UN	TheUnhivedMind	0	168	2nd March 2011 - 04:55 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DEA to legalize marijuana only for 'Big Pharma,' NORML claims	TheUnhivedMind	0	206	26th February 2011 - 03:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DRUGS & UNDECLARED WEAPONS SEIZED IN ARGENTINA ON A U.S. MILITARY AIRCRAFT	TheUnhivedMind	7	301	20th February 2011 - 02:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Inquiry into stolen drugs hits dead end	TheUnhivedMind	0	140	20th February 2011 - 01:47 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		2 U.S citizens in Taliban plot for weapons, drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	150	16th February 2011 - 03:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Colombia navy seize drugs submarine	TheUnhivedMind	0	144	14th February 2011 - 11:48 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Smoking weed? It's no big deal, says Chloe Madelev [U.K. YOUTH CONDITIONING!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	217	13th February 2011 - 03:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		adhaniya Takeover of India / China Opium Trade	TheUnhivedMind	0	212	10th February 2011 - 04:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Why can't the US legalize drugs? There's 'too much money in it,' Clinton says	TheUnhivedMind	0	142	10th February 2011 - 03:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		'Cocaine gives you confidence': BBC slammed for (Pages 1 2) How Drugs Work Shows [COMMON PURPOSE]	TheUnhivedMind	18	758	5th February 2011 - 03:02 PM Last Post by: Wolveshater
		Spain backs Bolivia in coca leaf campaign	TheUnhivedMind	0	172	26th January 2011 - 01:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Quest Diagnostics's New Heroin Test Catches More Users in U.S. Workforce	TheUnhivedMind	0	132	26th January 2011 - 12:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Mexican Drug Lord Officially Thanks American Lawmakers for Keeping Drugs Illegal	TheUnhivedMind	0	167	25th January 2011 - 11:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		PRINCE WILLIAM'S GIRLFRIEND EMBARRASSED BY DRUG DEALING UNCLE [FITS IN WELL WITH WELFS]	TheUnhivedMind	1	348	25th January 2011 - 08:05 PM Last Post by: Douglas Willinger

		'Bush, Reagan let drugs flow free to US from Nicaragua' – ex-dealer [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	248	25th January 2011 - 02:26 AM Last Post by: map
		Boy, 11, treated for cocaine overdose in A&E	TheUnhivedMind	0	175	22nd January 2011 - 12:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		"Medical Marijuana" Contributing to Social Breakdo in California [AS WELL AS PHARMA DRUGS]	TheUnhivedMind	4	465	16th January 2011 - 04:05 AM Last Post by: Douglas Willinger
		New California pot laws start today	TheUnhivedMind	0	314	1st January 2011 - 07:56 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Russia: NATO can't fight Afghan drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	225	27th December 2010 - 02:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Holy smoke! US right-wing star says legalise pot [KNIGHT OF MALTA PAT ROBERTSON]	TheUnhivedMind	0	199	26th December 2010 - 10:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DEA transformed into Global Intelligence Organizat	TheUnhivedMind	0	167	26th December 2010 - 09:36 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		All Drugs Should Be Legalized, Says Former U.K. Drug Czar	TheUnhivedMind	0	237	20th December 2010 - 03:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CIA Introduced Crack Cocaine To America's Inner Cities In The 1980s [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	252	19th December 2010 - 01:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Retired British colonel was spy who could have bee	TheUnhivedMind	0	245	15th December 2010 - 05:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		'Jailed Afghan drug lord CIA informant'	TheUnhivedMind	0	203	15th December 2010 - 02:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Our students are not caught in 'tide of drugs' say university	TheUnhivedMind	0	203	15th December 2010 - 12:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Miley Cyrus helping to push the drug culture [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	2	367	13th December 2010 - 09:04 PM Last Post by: nonecumenical
		Anti-Drug Chief Ivanov: Russia Faces Dope "Apocaly	TheUnhivedMind	0	245	7th December 2010 - 02:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Teens Smoking Pot Before 16 Show Brain Changes Scientists Say	TheUnhivedMind	2	403	18th November 2010 - 03:55 AM Last Post by: Douglas Willinger
		High Society – exhibition of drug taking throughou the ages [COMMITTEE OF 300]	TheUnhivedMind	0	336	5th November 2010 - 06:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		California Voters Reject Legalization of Marijuana for Recreational Use	TheUnhivedMind	0	258	3rd November 2010 - 07:30 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Former surgeon general calls for marijuana legaliz	TheUnhivedMind	0	236	31st October 2010 - 06:53 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The CIA & Karzai pull off a smokescreen to their real drug pushing activities	TheUnhivedMind	0	209	31st October 2010 - 06:10 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		George Soros Gives $1 Million To Help Legalize Marijuana	TheUnhivedMind	0	240	31st October 2010 - 12:45 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		California Proposition 19: A giant leap towards ending the fraudulent war on drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	274	31st October 2010 - 12:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghan heroin kills 10X more than Taliban	TheUnhivedMind	0	191	31st October 2010 - 12:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AFGHAN DRUG RAID JUST TO INCREASE HEROIN PRICES [JUAN RUBS HIM HANDS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	296	29th October 2010 - 04:36 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Putin's drug czar gets heated over California pot and Afghan poppies	TheUnhivedMind	0	262	24th October 2010 - 11:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Taming the Darien Gap: British Narco-Terrorists, Operating in British Protected Areas, T	TheUnhivedMind	0	218	23rd October 2010 - 02:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ivanov Speaks Out Again on Afghan Heroin	TheUnhivedMind	0	173	23rd October 2010 - 02:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Opium crop grows near Aussie troop base in Afghani [WHAT A SHOCK, NOT!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	241	18th October 2010 - 02:31 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Facebook founder donates to California marijuana vote [FACEBOOK = C.I.A]	TheUnhivedMind	0	288	9th October 2010 - 02:12 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.K.'s 9 year old drug dealers	TheUnhivedMind	0	212	9th October 2010 - 02:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Mexico Upset By California Efforts To Legalize Pot	TheUnhivedMind	3	260	8th October 2010 - 07:24 PM Last Post by: Ken Ardel
		Can Legalizing Marijuana Save California, Our Republic? [EXCUSE FOR DRUG SOCIETY!]	TheUnhivedMind	1	292	8th October 2010 - 07:09 PM Last Post by: Douglas Willinger
		Cops Held In FBI's Puerto Rico Drugs Bust [DIDN'T WANT TO BOW TO JUAN CARLOS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	244	7th October 2010 - 06:30 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vulnerable tenants targeted by drug gang 'cuckoos'	TheUnhivedMind	0	240	6th October 2010 - 05:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Boys aged nine suspended over drugs	TheUnhivedMind	0	216	6th October 2010 - 12:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Poppy Virus increases heroin prices [Vd] [AS PLANNED!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	278	3rd October 2010 - 02:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. Customs Service and Heroin	TheUnhivedMind	0	251	30th September 2010 - 05:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Police chief issues call to decriminalise cannabis and redirect resources	TheUnhivedMind	0	263	20th September 2010 - 06:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		BRITISH TROOPS INVESTIGATED FOR HEROIN SMUGGLING [BRITISH SIS/CIA/DVD KARZAI CLAN]	TheUnhivedMind	3	342	19th September 2010 - 09:32 PM Last Post by: Douglas Brehm

		License cannabis sales, expert says	TheUnhivedMind	0	272	14th September 2010 - 02:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

Showing 100 of 255 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (3) [1] 2 3

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0501 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

51. Inquiry into stolen drugs hits dead end
52. 2 U.S citizens in Taliban plot for weapons, drugs
53. Colombia navy seize drugs submarine
54. Smoking weed? It's no big deal, says Chloe Madelev
55. adhaniya Takeover of India / China Opium Trade
56. Why can't the US legalize drugs? There's 'too much
57. 'Cocaine gives you confidence': BBC slammed for
58. Spain backs Bolivia in coca leaf campaign
59. Quest Diagnostics's New Heroin Test Catches More
60. Mexican Drug Lord Officially Thanks American
61. PRINCE WILLIAM'S GIRLFRIEND EMBARRASSED BY DRUG
62. 'Bush, Reagan let drugs flow free to US from
63. Boy, 11, treated for cocaine overdose in A&E
64. "Medical Marijuana" Contributing to Social Breakdo
65. New California pot laws start today
66. Russia: NATO can't fight Afghan drugs
67. Holy smoke! US right-wing star says legalise pot
68. DEA transformed into Global Intelligence Organizat
69. All Drugs Should Be Legalized, Says Former U.K.
70. CIA Introduced Crack Cocaine To America's Inner
71. Retired British colonel was spy who could have bee
72. 'Jailed Afghan drug lord CIA informant'
73. Our students are not caught in 'tide of drugs' say
74. Miley Cyrus helping to push the drug culture [Vd]
75. Anti-Drug Chief Ivanov: Russia Faces Dope "Apocaly
76. Teens Smoking Pot Before 16 Show Brain Changes
77. High Society – exhibition of drug taking throughou
78. California Voters Reject Legalization of Marijuana
79. Former surgeon general calls for marijuana legaliz
80. The CIA & Karzai pull off a smokescreen to their

81. George Soros Gives $1 Million To Help Legalize
82. California Proposition 19: A giant leap towards
83. Afghan heroin kills 10X more than Taliban
84. AFGHAN DRUG RAID JUST TO INCREASE HEROIN PRICES
85. Putin's drug czar gets heated over California pot
86. Taming the Darien Gap: British Narco-Terrorists,
87. Ivanov Speaks Out Again on Afghan Heroin
88. Opium crop grows near Aussie troop base in Afghani
89. Facebook founder donates to California marijuana
90. U.K.'s 9 year old drug dealers
91. Mexico Upset By California Efforts To Legalize Pot
92. Can Legalizing Marijuana Save California, Our
93. Cops Held In FBI's Puerto Rico Drugs Bust
94. Vulnerable tenants targeted by drug gang 'cuckoos'
95. Boys aged nine suspended over drugs
96. Poppy Virus increases heroin prices [Vd]
97. U.S. Customs Service and Heroin
98. Police chief issues call to decriminalise cannabis
99. BRITISH TROOPS INVESTIGATED FOR HEROIN SMUGGLING
100. License cannabis sales, expert says

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

101. Huge cocaine stash found on ranch in Venezuela
102. Venezuela National Guard Helicopter Crashes During
103. Karzai Aide in Corruption Inquiry Is Tied to C.I.A
104. Government Admits they Deal Heroin, Terrorize
105. Shocking School Drug And Gang Survey
106. Top doctor Sir Ian Gilmore calls for drugs law
107. Marijuana may cause Canada's economic comedown
108. Boy, 13, on cannabis factory charge in Northampton
109. Common Purpose BBC push Crack in Eastenders TV
110. Maxine Waters Fought To Investigate Crack Cocaine,
111. Juan costs U.K £110mln a year on convict heroins
112. Eurozone kept alive by Juan Carlo's drugs & crime
113. War on drugs: why the US and Latin America could
114. Mexico looks to legalisation as drug war murders
115. Juan Carlos about to increase the price of his
116. Revealed: London children aged 8 use crack cocain
117. Mexican Drug Cartel Leader “Nacho Coronel” Linked
118. Banks Financing Mexico Gangs Admitted in Wells
119. Wall Street Is Laundering Drug Money And Getting
120. Mexican Drug Mafia Invades Texas
121. California city approves marijuana farming
122. US apologizes to Russia in mysterious drug case
123. Pilot in DC9 5.5 ton cocaine bust escaped custody
124. Banks Financing Mexico Drug Gangs Admitted in
125. Mexico gunmen 'kill 19' in rehab centre
126. Contaminated Cocaine Can Cause Flesh to Rot
127. Drugs for Europe: Protected by Powerful Western
128. Afghan Warlords Gain U.S. Funding by Rebranding as
129. California Collects $100 Million In Marijuana Sale
130. DynCorp Running “Counter-Narcotics” Missions Along

131. British SIS Fox News Makes Excuse for CIA's Afghan
132. Illegal drug money saved banks during global
133. Is The CIA Behind Mexico's Bloody Drug War?
134. Coca Cultivation Rises In Colombia, U.N. Says
135. Afghan MP Unveils Western Forces' Involvement in
136. Give heroin on the NHS, says nursing leader
137. Afghan MP Says British Troops Trained Opium
138. Another Drug Record for Afghanistan
139. Inter-Alpha Group
140. LaRouche Fields Question on Opium War
141. THE QUEEN DOES PUSH DOPE!
142. CIA PUT ROZA INTO POWER? OIL, HEROIN, AIR BASES
143. Can the US Triumph in the Drug-Addicted War in
144. Boy, 8, hands out heroin at school
145. Crashed Gitmo torture jet
146. American Terror Suspect Worked for D.E.A.
147. U.S. Turns a Blind Eye to Opium in Afghan Town
148. Oil? We're Here for the Heroin! (at $19,923,200
149. Meet the New Boss; [Same as the Old Boss]
150. Confessions of a Drug Smuggling CIA hitman

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

151. The War For Control of Venice Airport
152. New American DrugLords Preview VII [Vd]
153. Mexican drug cartels step up efforts to corrupt
154. Russia criticizes U.S., NATO over Afghan drug
155. A new multi-part series highlighting current event
156. 3 RI cops charged in cocaine-dealing operation
157. Rise in cocaine use alarms UK government drug
158. President of a West Australian bike gang busted
159. Webcam captures smugglers on border
160. U.S. ‘oblivious’ to al-Qaida’s ‘aviation network’
161. California Assembly Panel Votes To Legalize
162. JOBLESS YOUTHS 'AT RISK FROM DRUGS'
163. Al-Qaeda members accused of Africa drug ring: US
164. Markets saved by CIA-DRUGS Max Keiser #5 [Vd]
165. Mexican navy kills top cartel kingpin in shootout
166. Drug money saved banks in global crisis, claims UN
167. CIA Funding Afghanistan Number One Drug Lord [Vd]
168. Taliban trying to turn US troops into heroin addic
169. I was offered cocaine on my first day at the BBC
170. Cocaine addiction among the young doubles in 3yrs
171. US Targets Anti Pharmacratic Inquisition Activist?
172. Suspects in the dock after epic drug bust
173. Miami’s Ex-DEA Chief Charged with Shredding
174. The War On Drugs Is Immoral Idiocy
175. Female drug deaths 'rise by 17%'
176. Mexico Decriminalizes Small Amounts Of Drugs
177. Much Of Afghan Drug Money Going To 'Our Friends'
178. It’s Time to Legalize Drugs
179. 9 of 10 US dollar notes show cocaine trace
180. Thanks to the LYM, Soros Drug Fest in Argentina

181. Opium takes over entire Afghan families, villages
182. British Dope Soros Ratchets Up Attacks on Mexican 183. Antonio Mario Costa Says It Is Iran Who Fights the
184. Soros Out to Impose Drug Legalization on Argentina
185. Class A drug use on the rise among young people
186. £1 for a line of cocaine - so much for the war on
187. Cocaine abuse soars to record levels as ONE mln
188. Dope, Inc. and Soros Racing to Take Over Argentina
189. U.K Cocaine A&E cases hit record high
190. Nate Oldham, Kiplyn Davis, Murder and Narcotics in
191. The C.I.A., Wally Hilliard, AirGyro and the Utah
192. Karzai pardons five Afghan heroin traffickers
193. Soros's Drug Pushers Target Population for Dope
194. Obama is Warned: If Your Man Zelaya Is Tied to
195. Uproar in British-Controlled EU Over Iran's
196. Soros, At Center of Mexican Daycare Tragedy, Helps
197. Afghan drug trade thrives with help, and neglect,
198. Flood of Afghan heroin fuels drug plague in Russia
199. 5 Years After: Portugal’s Drug Decriminalization
200. Charges That Ousted Honduran President Has Drug

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

201. U.S.-built bridge is windfall for illegal Afghan
202. UN Backs Drug Decriminalization In World Drug Repo
203. CIA Topples Honduran President To Protect Drugs
204. US gives up on eradicating Afghanistan's opium
205. UN shows scale of UK cocaine use
206. Nate Oldham, Kiplyn Davis, Murder and Narcotics in
207. Suppressed report raises questions about drug poli
208. U.S. drug czar calls for end to "war on drugs"
209. US to ramp up intel efforts in drug war
210. Two elderly Israelis arrested in 12.5 ton marijuan
211. German parliament OKs heroin prescription
212. UN wants 'flood of drugs' in Afghanistan to
213. Satellites to Streamline U.S. Intelligence Agency
214. Anti-drug effort in Afghanistan a failure: US admi
215. Labour has fought 'phoney war on drugs', think
216. 40-fold drug surge in Afghanistan: report Sun, 10
217. Arnold Schwarzenegger: it's high time to review
218. Sinaloa cartel may resort to deadly force in U.S.
219. THE TRUTH & LIES OF 9/11
220. 'US hostages were CIA agents'
221. UK Government helpline cannabis is safer than
222. Cocaine Highways: Post-NAFTA, Most Drugs Cross U.S
223. EU Officials: Investigate CIA Plane Used In
224. Suitcase-Gate, CIA Drug Plane Scandals Meet
225. 9/11 Heroin Pilot Indicted in New Jersey
226. Art Nadel 'Ponzi Pal' Link to 5.5-tom Coke Bust
227. Harvard Economist: Legalize All Drugs To Stop
228. Drug War Rages on in Vancouver, Canada
229. Cartel may be using bogus federal bulletproof vest
230. Colombia Drug Kingpin Extradited To U.S.

231. Ecuador says expelled US official was CIA operativ
232. Sanho Tree about the war on drugs
233. Marijuana Arrests For Year 2007: 872,721 Tops
234. Crackdown on drug gangs in Juarez, Mexico
235. Was Former Serbian Intelligence Boss A CIA Man?
236. US ready to aid Mexico drug fight
237. Colombia to Allow More U.S. Planes to Land on Air
238. Council advises ecstasy downgrade
239. NATO Generals refuse to obey anti drug orders
240. DEA Presence Ends in Bolivia
241. Colombian drug lord shot in Spain
242. Obama's Marijuana Poilcy
243. FEDS, INFORMANTS FINGER U.S. GOVERNMENT
244. AMAN Asian Ecstasy/Heroin drug trade
245. IDF soldiers drug trafficking
246. CIA, Heroin Still Rule Day in Afghanistan
247. Arrest of Interpol official sparks security breach
248. Colombia's coca cultivation increases despite $5bn
249. UK THE CIA'S BEST CUSTOMER!
250. Police against ecstasy downgrade

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

The Unhived Mind Ii > Knights of Malta Intelligence network dope trade

Pages: 1 … 4 5 [6]

251. Afghan drug dealers funding terrorism in Pakistan
252. The mystery of the missing opium
253. Hamid Karzai's brother to Afghan heroin trade
254. NATO accused of sheltering Afghan heroin trade
255. Deep Events and the CIA's Global Drug Connection

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF INTEL DRUGS

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF INTEL DRUGS

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:42 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=4

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MI6 Are The Lords Of The Global Drug Trade

Title: MI6 Are The Lords Of The Global Drug Trade

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 04:13 PM (GMT)

I would like to say something very important indeed. As time went on we noticed something wrong about this James Casbolt. My conclusions right now is that he's been put in place to discredit truth. I believe all he's done is utilised the work of Mike Ruppert etc in the below. This was to give him a name and get him off the starting blocks. As time went on, he spoke of utter nonsense and utilised fraudulent pictures. Simply someone to discredit the truth. Please remember the power of the Archbishop of Palermo over the Heroin trade with Sicily being the headquarters of the Heroin trade! - Craig

MI6 Are The Lords Of The Global Drug Trade

Commentary By James Casbolt Former MI6 Agent c. 2006 James Casbolt

All Rights Reserved May not be reproduced without written permission
5-20-6

It may be a revelation to many people that the global drug trade is controlled and run by the intelligence agencies. In this global drug trade British intelligence reigns supreme.

As intelligence insiders know MI5 and MI6 control many of the other intelligence agencies in the world (CIA, MOSSAD etc) in a vast web of intrigue and corruption that has its global power base in the city of London, the square mile.

My name is James Casbolt and I worked for MI6 in 'black ops' cocaine trafficking with the IRA and MOSSAD in London and Brighton between 1995 and 1999. My father Peter Casbolt was also MI6 and worked with the CIA and mafia in Rome, trafficking cocaine into Britain.

My experience was that the distinctions of all these groups became blurred until in the end we were all one international group working together for the same goals. We were puppets who had our strings pulled by global puppet masters based in the city of London.

Most levels of the intelligence agencies are not loyal to the people of the country they are based in and see themselves as 'super national'. It had been proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that the CIA has been bringing in most of the drugs into America for the last fifty years (see ex LAPD officer Michael Rupert's 'From the wilderness' website for proof).

The CIA operates under orders from British intelligence and was created by British intelligence in 1947. The CIA today is still loyal to the international bankers based in the city of London and the global elite aristocratic families like the Rothchilds and the Windsor's.

Since it was first started, MI6 has always brought drugs into Britain. They do not bring 'some' of the drugs into Britain but I would estimate MI6 bring in around ninety percent of the drugs in. They do this by pulling the strings of many organised crime and terrorist groups and these groups like the IRA are full of MI6 agents.

MI6 bring in heroin from the middle east, cocaine from south America and cannabis from morocco as well as other places. British intelligence also designed and created the drug LSD in the 1950's through places like the Tavistock Institute in London. By the 1960's MI5, MI6 and the CIA were using LSD as a weapon against the angry protestors of the sixties and turned them into 'flower children' who were too tripped out to organise a revolution.

Dr Timothy Leary the LSD guru of the sixties was a CIA puppet. Funds and drugs for Leary's research came from the CIA and Leary says that Cord Meyer, the CIA agent in charge of funding the sixties LSD counter culture has"helped me to understand my political cultural role more clearly".

In 1998, I was sent 3000 LSD doses on blotting paper by MI5 with pictures of the European union flag on them. The MI5 man who sent them told my father this was a government 'signature' and this LSD was called 'Europa'.

This global drugs trade controlled by British intelligence is worth at least Â£500 billion a year. This is more than the global oil trade and the economy in Britain and America is totally dependent on this drug money.

Mafia crime boss John Gotti exposed the situation when asked in court if he was involved in drug trafficking. He replied"No we can't compete with the government". I believe this was only a half truth because the mafia and the CIA are the same group at the upper levels.

In Britain, the MI6 drug money is laundered through the Bank of England, Barclays Bank and other household name companies. The drug money is passed from account to account until its origins are lost in a huge web of transactions. The drug money comes out 'cleaner' but not totally clean.

Diamonds are then bought with this money from the corrupt diamond business families like the Oppenheimers. These diamonds are then sold and the drug money is clean. MI6 and the CIA are also responsible for the crack cocaine epidemic in Britain and America.

In 1978, MI6 and the CIA were in south America researching the effects of the natives smoking 'basuco' cocaine paste. This has the same effect as crack cocaine. They saw that the strength and addiction potential was far greater than ordinary cocaine and created crack cocaine from the basuco formula. MI6 and the CIA then flooded Britain and America with crack. Two years later, in 1980, Britain and America were starting to see the first signs of the crack cocaine epidemic on the streets.

On august 23, 1987, in a rural community south of Little Rock in America, two teenage boys named Kevin Ives and Don Henry were murdered and dismembered after witnessing a CIA cocaine drop that was part of a CIA drug trafficking operation based at a small airport in Mena, Arkansas. Bill Clinton was the governor of Arkansas at the time.

Bill Clinton was involved with the CIA at this time and $100 million worth of cocaine was coming through the Mena, Arkansas airport each month. For proof see the books 'Compromise' and 'Dope Inc'.

On my father's international MI6 drug runs, whatever fell off the back of the lorry so to speak he would keep and we would sell it in Britain. As long as my father was meeting the speedboats from Morocco in the Costa del Sol and then moving the lorry loads of cannabis through their MI6, IRA lorry business into Britain every month, British intelligence were happy. As long as my father was moving shipments of cocaine out of Rome every month, MI5 and MI6 were happy. If my father kept a bit to sell himself no one cared because there was enough drugs and money to go round in this Â£500 billion a year global drugs trade.

The ones who were really paying were the people addicted. Who were paying with suffering. But karma always catches up and both myself and my father became addicted to heroin in later years and my father died addicted, and poor in prison under very strange circumstances. Today, I am clean and drug-free and wish to help stop the untold suffering this global drugs trade causes.

The intelligence agencies have always used addictive drugs as a weapon against the masses to bring in their long term plan for a one world government, a one world police force designed to be NATO and a micro chipped population known as the New World Order. As the population is in a drug or alcohol-induced trance watching 'Coronation Street', the new world order is being crept in behind them.

To properly expose this global intelligence run drugs trade we need to expose the key players in this area

1- Tibor Rosenbaum, a MOSSAD agent and head of the Geneva based Banque du Credit international. This bank was the forerunner to the notorious Bank of Credit and Commerce international (BCCI) which is a major intelligence drug money laundering bank.

'Life' magazine exposed Rosenbaum's bank as a money launderer for the Meyer Lanksky American organised crime family and Tibor Rosenbaum funded and supported 'Permindex' the MI6 assassination unit which was at the heart of the John F. Kennedy assassination.

2- Robert Vesco, sponsored by the Swiss branch of the Rothchilds and part of the American connection to the Medellin drug cartel in Columbia.

3- Sir Francis de Guingand, former head of British intelligence, now living in south Africa (and every head of MI5 and MI6 has been involved in the drug world before and after him).

4- Henry Keswick, chairman of Jardine Matheson which is one of the biggest drug trafficking operations in the world. His brother John Keswick is chairman of the bank of England.

5- Sir Martin Wakefield Jacomb, Bank of England director from 1987 to 1995, Barclays Bank Deputy Chairman in 1985, Telegraph newspapers director in 1986 (This is the reason why this can of worms doesn't get out in the mainstream media. The people who are perpetrating these crimes control most of the mainstream media. In America former director of the CIA William Casey is head of the council of the media network ABC. Many insiders refer to ABC as 'The CIA network.)

6- George Bush, Snr, former President and former head of the CIA and America's leading drug baron who has fronted more wars on drugs than any other president. Which in reality is just a method to eliminate competition. A whole book could be written on George Bush's involvement in the global drug trade but it is well-covered in the book 'Dark Alliance' by investigative journalist Gary Webb. Gary Webb was found dead with two gunshot wounds to the back of his head with a revolver. The case was declared a 'suicide'. You figure that out.

Gary Webb as well as myself and other investigators, found that much of this 'black ops' drug money is being used to fund projects classified above top secret. These projects include the building and maintaining of deep level underground bases in Dulce in New Mexico, Pine gap in Australia, Snowy mountains in Australia, The Nyala range in Africa, west of Kindu in Africa, next to the Libyan border in Egypt, Mount Blanc in Switzerland, Narvik in Scandinavia, Gottland island in Sweden and many other places around the world (more about these underground bases in my next issue).

The information on this global drugs trade run by the intelligence agencies desperately needs to get out on a large scale. Any information, comments or feedback to help me with my work would be greatly welcomed.

James Casbolt- St Ives, Cornwall-19/5/06

E-mail-jamescasbolt@hotmail.co.uk

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ten Years After Decriminalization, Drug Abuse Down

Title: Ten Years After Decriminalization, Drug Abuse Down
Description: by half in Portugal

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 12:01 AM (GMT)

Ten Years After Decriminalization, Drug Abuse Down by Half in Portugal

Jul. 5 2011 - 3:09 pm | 4,968 views | 0 recommendations | 5 comments
http://blogs.forbes.com/erikkain/2011/07/0...lf-in-portugal/

Drug warriors often contend that drug use would skyrocket if we were to legalize or decriminalize drugs in the United States. Fortunately, we have a real-world example of the actual effects of ending the violent, expensive War on Drugs and replacing it with a system of treatment for problem users and addicts.

Ten years ago, Portugal decriminalized all drugs. One decade after this unprecedented experiment, drug abuse is down by half:

Health experts in Portugal said Friday that Portugal's decision 10 years ago to decriminalise drug use and treat addicts rather than punishing them is an experiment that has worked.

"There is no doubt that the phenomenon of addiction is in decline in Portugal," said Joao Goulao, President of the Institute of Drugs and Drugs Addiction, a press conference to mark the 10th anniversary of the law.

The number of addicts considered "problematic" — those who repeatedly use "hard" drugs and intravenous users — had fallen by half since the early 1990s, when the figure was estimated at around 100,000 people, Goulao said.

Other factors had also played their part however, Goulao, a medical doctor added.

"This development can not only be attributed to decriminalisation but to a confluence of treatment and risk reduction policies."

Many of these innovative treatment procedures would not have emerged if addicts had continued to be arrested and locked up rather than treated by medical experts and psychologists. Currently 40,000 people in Portugal are being treated for drug abuse. This is a far cheaper, far more humane way to tackle the problem. Rather than locking up 100,000 criminals, the Portuguese are working to cure 40,000 patients and fine-tuning a whole new canon of drug treatment knowledge at the same time.

None of this is possible when waging a war.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: All charges dropped in massive cocaine smuggling

Title: All charges dropped in massive cocaine smuggling Description: case

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:07 AM (GMT)

All charges dropped in massive cocaine smuggling case

By KIM BOLAN, Vancouver Sun July 12, 2011
http://12160.info/profiles/blogs/all-charg...source=activity

Federal prosecutors have dropped all charges laid last fall in a high-profile international drug case in which more than $9 million worth of cocaine was smuggled from Mexico.

The Canada Border Services Agency and the RCMP's Federal Drug Enforcement Branch showed off their massive cocaine and methamphetamine seizure at a news conference in October, announcing charges against two Vancouver men and a Mexican.

They claimed Vancouver businessman Francisco Javier Gomez, local resident Jason Quinn Lawrence and Eduardo Gonzalez, of Mexico, smuggled 275 kilos of drugs, packed in limestone flooring and garden fountains, in seven shipping containers through Port Metro Vancouver.

But late last month, all charges against all three were stayed.

The Vancouver Sun obtained a copy of the letter sent by associate chief federal prosecutor Martha Devlin to lawyers for the former suspects June 20, saying she had sent a letter to the "Criminal Registry directing a stay of proceedings on all counts on information 202377-C2 with respect to your clients."

There is no explanation provided as to why the charges were stayed.

Devlin declined to comment on the stays when contacted by The Sun.

RCMP Chief Supt. Brian Cantera said it was the decision of the Crown, in consultation with police, to stay the charges.

“It takes a high degree of evidence to convict beyond a reasonable doubt. If the evidence doesn’t support that bar that needs to be reached, the Public Prosecution Service of Canada makes the decision to enter a stay as they did in this case,” Cantera said.

Lawyer Danny Markovitz, who represents Gomez, said his client was a respected broker who simply facilitated an international shipment and had no contact with the goods – nor knowledge of the cocaine — when it got to Canada.

And Gomez, 52, said he is relieved the ordeal is over.

“Actually they ruined my life,” he said of police. “It was terrible. I am just a broker doing my job. I don’t know why they were so harsh against me in the beginning.”

As a broker, Gomez said he facilitated imports by arranging shipments and doing all paperwork for the companies on either end of the transaction.

Who packed the drugs in the shipment at the Mexican end remains a mystery to him, Gomez said.

“Every single day there are thousands of transactions and thousands of people like me making the paperwork and you don’t know nothing about what’s inside. You never touch the container. You never have the possession of nothing. It is just the paper you receive,” he said.

Gomez said the 35 days he spent in pre-trial jail was traumatic.

“I never even had a speeding ticket and then you are inside with criminals and killers and that is scary,” he said. “All the stress and all the damage that this kind of thing makes to your family and you is terrible, just terrible.”

When he got out, he closed his company as police had seized his computer and other equipment and he worried that no one would want to work with him anyway because of the charges.

He is now working for another firm promoting Canadian products abroad, but still has not received his passport back, so can’t travel.

Through it all, he said he never lost hope he would be cleared.

“I am a proud Canadian and I trust in the Canadian law and in the institutions,” Gomez said. “I was 100-per-cent sure everything would become clear.”

kbolan@vancouversun.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Marijuana: DEA proposal, new Colorado law could

Title: Marijuana: DEA proposal, new Colorado law could Description: lead to Big Pharma boom, attorney says

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 01:00 AM (GMT)

Marijuana: DEA proposal, new Colorado law could lead to Big Pharma boom, attorney says

By Michael Roberts Tue., Jul. 12 2011 at 11:49 AM http://blogs.westword.com/latestword/2011/...pharma_boom.php

•Last month, we told you about a loophole in HB 1043, the medical marijuana cleanup bill, that could let Big Pharma firms get involved in the Colorado MMJ industry. Now, the Drug Enforcement Administration has made a new proposal involving marijuana extracts, and attorney Warren Edson sees it as further fueling a possible boom in the manufacture of such products here.

HB 1043 states that "a medical marijuana center may provide a sample of its products to a laboratory that has an occupational license from the state licensing authority for testing and research purposes. The laboratory may develop, test, and produce medical marijuana-based products." Because these labs only need an occupational license, not a license specific to the medical marijuana industry, Edson believes the restrictions placed on dispensaries -- including the rule disallowing out-of-state ownership -- wouldn't apply.

Warren Edson.

•The latest development? The DEA has proposed establishing a new code number for what it refers to as "Marihuana Extract." This code would be different from the one pertaining to marijuana itself, allowing the agency to track extract separately.

On the surface, this change seems merely technical. But Edson believes it has greater significance. According to him, "it sure looks like this would create a little niche, a little nook that would allow a pharmaceutical company to make products with marijuana extract in addition to what they usually do, without jeopardizing their big money drugs. And because of that little addition to 1043, the only place in the country where they could do that is right here."

At first blush, opening such a window to the medical industry seems hypocritical. After all, as Edson notes, "you've got the federal government simultaneously issuing this new proposal and, out of the other side of its mouth, saying marijuana has no medicinal value" by registering it as a Schedule 1 narcotic. But such contradictions aren't unknown in the medical biz. "The coca plant supposedly has no medical value, either," he points out, "but its extract gives us pharmaceutical cocaine, which helps people with narcolepsy. So the extract does have medical value."

He can envision a similar development with marijuana -- one in which the feds would continue to deem the plant to be valueless from a medical standpoint, but not its extract.

The timing of this proposal so soon after HB 1043 was signed into law by Governor John Hickenlooper strikes Edson as more than coincidental.

"If you want to be a conspiracy-theory person, well, somebody had to lobby to have that clause put into 1043," he allows. "And whoever did that had to know this was coming or was in the works. We heard all this discussion about how the clause would allow Big Pharma to come and play, but they had very little economic incentive, because DEA rules might cause them to lose the right to make their other drugs. But now they wouldn't have to."

Granted, there's no guarantee major U.S. drug companies will rush to launch marijuana-extract-based products like Sativex, manufactured by a British firm, if the proposal is adopted. As Edson acknowledges, "we'll know in six to nine months. By then, either they'll be here or they won't." But if the extract code change goes through, he believes, there'll be nothing stopping them.

More from our Marijuana archive: "Medical marijuana: State fees for MMJ business licensing too high, says attorney Warren Edson."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Afghan president's brother, Ahmad Wali Karzai,

Title: Afghan president's brother, Ahmad Wali Karzai, Description: killed

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 06:39 PM (GMT)

Afghan president's brother, Ahmad Wali Karzai, killed

Ahmad Wali Karzai in April talking about death threats against him in the BBC documentary

12 July 2011 Last updated at 17:00
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-14118884

The half-brother of Afghan President Hamid Karzai has been assassinated in Kandahar.

Ahmad Wali Karzai, a leading power broker in the country's south, was shot dead at his home in a blow to Nato's battle against the Taliban in the area.

He was shot twice by his long-time head of security Sardar Mohammed, who was himself killed almost immediately.

The Taliban said they carried out the attack, calling it one of their top achievements in 10 years of war.

Khaled Pashtun, a Kandahar province politician, was sceptical about the Taliban claims, saying the Islamist group had claimed responsibility for many attacks in the past without much evidence of their involvement.

Sardar Mohammed's motives remain unclear, but the killing will raise questions about securing Afghanistan's top officials.
Previous assassination attempts

Kandahar police chief Abdul Razeq told reporters that Mr Mohammed had travelled to Mr Karzai's home early on Tuesday, saying he needed to show documents to his boss.

"The man carried his pistol through the security checks to Wali Karzai's room. As soon as Wali Karzai came out of the bathroom, he opened fire and shot him in the head and chest," Mr Razeq said.

The killing is the latest and most high-profile in a series of assassinations of senior politicians and security commanders across the country.

The Afghan president, who is expected to leave Kabul shortly to attend his half-brother's funeral, said the assassination reflected the suffering of all Afghan people.

"This is the way of life for the people of Afghanistan," said Mr Karzai.

"The homes of all Afghans feel this pain. Our hope is this will come to an end, and peace and happiness will come to our homes and will come to rule in our country."

Critics said Ahmad Wali Karzai was a warlord mired in corruption who was openly involved in the drugs trade and had a personal militia at his disposal.

His supporters saw him as a defender of Pashtun rights. The president repeatedly defended him, denouncing accusations that his brother was involved in criminal activities.

Security was intensified in Kandahar following Tuesday morning's shooting, as the body of Ahmad Wali Karzai was taken to a nearby hospital.

The BBC's Quentin Sommerville in Kabul says it is hard to overstate how important Ahmad Wali Karzai was in the south of Afghanistan and in Nato's efforts to combat the Taliban in their stronghold there.

Our correspondent adds that as head of the Kandahar Provincial Council, he was a staunch ally of US and allied forces in Afghanistan - to the extent that they turned a blind eye to accusations he was involved in drug-trafficking.

"[Ahmad Wali Karzai] had his unsavoury side, but he was someone we could work with and he kept a lid on things in Kandahar," a US official told the BBC.

The commander of the International Security Assistance Force (Isaf), US General David Petraeus, condemned the assassination and said Isaf would work with the Afghan government to bring anyone involved to justice.

"President Karzai is working to create a stronger, more secure Afghanistan, and for such a tragic event to happen to someone within his own family is unfathomable," said Gen Petraeus.

Ahmad Wali Karzai had survived attempts on his life before, most recently in a rocket and machine-gun attack in 2009 as his convoy was travelling towards Kabul.

The previous year, he was chairing a meeting in a government building when a bomb-filled fuel tanker exploded close by.

Although Mr Karzai escaped unhurt, six people were killed and 40 wounded in the blast.

He and other officials blamed Taliban militants for the bombing

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The “War On Drugs” Is A $2.5 Trillion Racket: How

Title: The “War On Drugs” Is A $2.5 Trillion Racket: How Description: Big Banks, Private Military Companies An

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 01:52 AM (GMT)

The “War On Drugs” Is A $2.5 Trillion Racket: How Big Banks, Private Military Companies And The Prison Industry Cash In

July 9th, 2011 | Filed under Drugs, Feature, Hot List, News, War . Follow comments through RSS http://ampedstatus.org/the-war-on-drugs-is...stry-cashes-in/

Editor’s Note: After detailing the “War on Terror” racket, many readers emailed asking us to cover the profiteering that is occurring within the “War on Drugs.” As we work hard to dig up dirt on all the major problems confronting us, we have compiled a database of thousands of the most hard-hitting and informative news reports. So ask and you shall receive. Here you go.

By David DeGraw, AmpedStatus Report

Anyone who researches the “War on Drugs” already knows that it has been a very costly disaster. As the Global Commission on Drug Policy recently reported:

“The global war on drugs has failed, with devastating consequences for individuals and societies around the world….

Vast expenditures on criminalization and repressive measures directed at producers, traffickers and consumers of illegal drugs have clearly failed to effectively curtail supply or consumption….

Government expenditures on futile supply reduction strategies and incarceration displace more cost-effective and evidence-based investments in demand and harm reduction.”

The War on Drugs has cost US taxpayers over $2.5 trillion dollars. From 1998 – 2008, a UN study estimates that the use of opiates has increased 35 percent and cocaine use has increased 27 percent. Due to nonviolent drug offenses, the US prison population has increased “more than twelvefold since 1980.”

The War on Drugs has also fueled organized crime and drug related violence has dramatically increased over the past few years. Due to drug war violence, since December of 2006, a stunning 45,000 people have been killed in Mexico alone.

Despite numerous reports and a mountain of evidence proving the utter failure of the War on Drugs, the Obama Administration has defended the effort and escalated the war. What many reports criticizing the War on Drugs fail to discuss is how successful the war has been at enriching the global financial elite. The War on Drugs, just like the War on Terror, is another criminal racket set up to benefit profiteering banks, military companies and the prison industrial complex at our tragic expense.

Here’s a concise summation of how the global bankers cash in:

How Drug Profits Saved Capitalism

“Drug profits, in the most basic sense, are secured through the ability of the cartels to launder and transfer billions of dollars through the US banking system. The scale and scope of the US banking-drug cartel alliance surpasses any other economic activity of the US private banking system. According to US Justice Department records, one bank alone laundered $378.3 billion dollars between May 1, 2004 and May 31, 2007. Every major bank in the US has served as an active financial partner of the murderous drug cartels….

If the major US banks are the financial engines which allow the billion dollar drug empires to operate, the White House, the US Congress and the law enforcement agencies are the basic protectors of these banks…. Laundering drug money is one of the most lucrative sources of profit for Wall Street; the banks charge hefty commissions on the transfer of drug profits, which they then lend to borrowing institutions at interest rates far above what – if any – they pay to drug trafficker depositors. Awash in sanitized drug profits, these US titans of the finance world can easily buy their own elected officials to perpetuate the system.”

Here’s an example of how private military companies are profiteering:

Private Contractors Making a Killing off the Drug War

“As tens of thousands of corpses continue to pile up as a result of the US-led ‘War on Drugs’ in Latin America, private contractors are benefiting from lucrative federal counternarcotics contracts amounting to billions of dollars, without worry of oversight or accountability.

U.S. contractors in Latin America are paid by the Defense and State Departments to supply countries with services that include intelligence, surveillance, reconnaissance, training, and equipment.

‘It’s becoming increasingly clear that our efforts to rein in the narcotics trade in Latin America, especially as it relates to the government’s use of contractors, have largely failed,’ said U.S. Senator Claire McCaskill, chair of the Subcommittee on Contracting Oversight which released a report on counternarcotics contracts in Latin America this month. ‘Without adequate oversight and management we are wasting tax dollars and throwing money at a problem without even knowing what we’re getting in return.’”

For a further understanding of how the War on Drugs is deeply intertwined with the War on Terror, the invasion and occupation of Afghanistan has led to an explosive increase in drug trade profits:

Afghanistan as a Drug War

“From a modest 185 tons at the start of American intervention in 2001, Afghanistan now produced 8,200 tons of opium, a remarkable 53 percent of the country’s GDP and 93 percent of global heroin supply.

In this way, Afghanistan became the world’s first true ‘narco-state.’ If a cocaine traffic that provided just 3 percent of Colombia’s GDP could bring in its wake endless violence and powerful cartels capable of corrupting that country’s government, then we can only imagine the consequences of Afghanistan’s dependence on opium for more than 50 percent of its entire economy.

At a drug conference in Kabul this month, the head of Russia’s Federal Narcotics Service estimated the value of Afghanistan’s current opium crop at $65 billion. Only $500 million of that vast sum goes to Afghanistan’s farmers, $300 million to the Taliban guerrillas, and the $64 billion balance ‘to the drug mafia,’ leaving ample funds to corrupt the Karzai government in a nation whose total GDP is only $10 billion.”

Another major beneficiary of the drug war racket is the booming US private prison industry. With a stunning 2.3 million citizens imprisoned, the US incarcerates more people than any other country in the world. Most of these people are in jail as a result of draconian drug laws. Even former President Jimmy Carter recently spoke out against the mass incarceration resulting from the War on Drugs:

Call Off the Global Drug War

“Drug policies here are more punitive and counterproductive than in other democracies, and have brought about an explosion in prison populations. At the end of 1980, just before I left office, 500,000 people were incarcerated in America; at the end of 2009 the number was nearly 2.3 million. There are 743 people in prison for every 100,000 Americans, a higher portion than in any other country and seven times as great as in Europe. Some 7.2 million people are either in prison or on probation or parole — more than 3 percent of all American adults!

Some of this increase has been caused by mandatory minimum sentencing and “three strikes you’re out” laws. But about three-quarters of new admissions to state prisons are for nonviolent crimes. And the single greatest cause of prison population growth has been the war on drugs, with the number of people incarcerated for nonviolent drug offenses increasing more than twelvefold since 1980.

Not only has this excessive punishment destroyed the lives of millions of young people and their families (disproportionately minorities), but it is wreaking havoc on state and local budgets.”

To capture the absurdity that is the War on Drugs, here’s the Daily Show’s coverage of the ATF’s deliberate arming of Mexican drug cartels:

“The ATF plan to prevent American guns from being used in Mexican gun violence is to provide Mexican gangs with American guns.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Warning over legal Russian drug phenazepam

Title: Warning over legal Russian drug phenazepam

TheUnhivedMind - July 8, 2011 06:15 PM (GMT)

Warning over legal Russian drug phenazepam

People who take phenazepam are often regular users of other drugs, the scientists say

7 July 2011 Last updated at 13:36
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-scotland-tays...entral-14064996

Russian epilepsy medication is being increasingly used in the UK as a substitute for illegal drugs, scientists have warned.

Phenazepam is a psychoactive also used to treat conditions like insomnia and alcohol withdrawal syndrome.

But researchers at Dundee University said they had detected a "trend of misuse".

The drug is not controlled in the UK, most of Europe or the US - so can be purchased legally over the internet.

Phenazepam is available on prescription in Russia and many other CIS states. Reports from Sweden, Finland, and the US suggest it is being used illicitly in place of similar drugs like diazepam.

The Dundee team said they had found nine cases since January 2011 where postmortem blood samples had contained phenazepam.
Addictive

Dr Peter Maskell, a lecturer in forensic toxicology at Dundee, said the discovery suggested use of the drug was on the increase in the UK, but stressed that it could not be directly identified as the cause of death in any of the circumstances.

He said: "It would seem it is increasingly being used as a replacement for other drugs, most notably diazepam, because we are seeing more instances of its use.

"Whether that is actually a deliberate switch on the part of users or because it is what dealers are selling is unclear at this stage.

"Like other benzodiazepines, phenazepam can be addictive and mixing with other drugs such as heroin or alcohol increases the risk of drug interaction."

Concern over illicit use of the drug in the UK was raised in 2010, when three people in the East Midlands and six people in Scotland were admitted to hospital after phenazepam overdoses.

These cases and increased seizures of the drug by police led the Scottish government to issue warnings about phenazepam.

The Dundee team began screening postmortem blood samples for phenazepam from the end of January 2011. In each of the nine cases detected, the victims had a history of drug use.

Dr Maskell added, "Although we have detected use in nine cases, phenazepam cannot be directly identified as a cause of death in any of them. There is a key difference between this drug and other legally available substances which have hit the headlines in recent years.

"This is not a party drug likely to be consumed by casual users but is more likely to be seen in persons with a history of misuse, often with harder drugs such as heroin, methadone and other opiates."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "Journalist" Blames Drug War Failure On Corrupt

Title: "Journalist" Blames Drug War Failure On Corrupt
Description: Mexican Police [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 12:57 AM (GMT)

"Journalist" Blames Drug War Failure On Corrupt Mexican Police

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15580

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: July 5/11 Saskatoon StarPhoenix’s Cover-Up for Title: July 5/11 Saskatoon StarPhoenix’s Cover-Up for Description: Terror Squad, Cocaine & Police Involveme

TheUnhivedMind - July 5, 2011 10:26 PM (GMT)

July 5/11 Saskatoon StarPhoenix’s Cover-Up for Terror Squad, Cocaine & Police Involvement

July 05, 2011
http://threedeadwords.com/2011/07/05/july-...ce-involvement/

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Super-strength ecstasy warning after Ayrshire deat

Title: Super-strength ecstasy warning after Ayrshire deat
Description: [MOSSAD'S PROFITS WILL DROP HAHA]

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 06:19 PM (GMT)

Super-strength ecstasy warning after Ayrshire deaths

The deaths of two men may be linked to the tablets

3 July 2011 Last updated at 17:14
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-scotland-glasgow-west-14006489

Ecstasy tablets six times stronger than normal have been sold in the west of Scotland, according to police.

Detectives issued the warning after the deaths of two men in Ayrshire, which they believe are linked to the drug.

The dead men have been named as Lee Dunnachie, 22, and 19-year-old Steven Kelly.

No direct connection has been established between them and police are looking into how widely the tablets have been distributed.

The deaths are believed to have occurred several miles apart, in Prestwick and in the village of Patna.

Det Insp Craig McArthur, of Strathclyde Police, who is leading the investigation, said: "Our inquiries have revealed that they are extra strong.

"If that is the case then somebody could be popping a tablet and it could have the effect of taking six tablets.

"So in effect it is a lot, lot, stronger."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: YES ELIZABETH MARY II PUSHES DOPE [Vd]

Title: YES ELIZABETH MARY II PUSHES DOPE [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 02:16 AM (GMT)

[DOHTML]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/L4L68nFrKDU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/L4L68nFrKDU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/DOHTML]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Flesh Eating Disease In Cocaine Found In NY, LA

Title: Flesh Eating Disease In Cocaine Found In NY, LA Description: Cocaine Supply Of Entire Nation May be

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 03:25 AM (GMT)

By the way there is NO HIV IT DOESN'T EXIST AND NEVER DID ITS A COMPLETE PSYOP HOAX GO STUDY. They love to throw it around legit problems to make it look real you see and keep the BULLSHIT alive.

QUOTE

Flesh Eating Disease In Cocaine Found In New York, Los Angeles – Cocaine Supply Of Entire Nation May Be Affected

Posted by Alexander Higgins - June 25, 2011 http://blog.alexanderhiggins.com/2011/06/2...affected-30871/

By KATIE MOISSE
June 23, 2011
http://abcnews.go.com/Health/Wellness/fles...ory?id=13902353

Cocaine cut with the veterinary drug levamisole could be the culprit in a flurry of flesh-eating disease in New York and Los Angeles.

The drug, used to deworm cattle, pigs and sheep, can rot the skin off noses, ears and cheeks. And over 80 percent of the country's coke supply contains it.

"It's probably quite a big problem, and we just don't know yet how big a problem it really is," said Dr. Noah Craft, a dermatologist with Los Angeles Biomedical Research Institute.

In a case study in the Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology, Craft describes six cocaine users recently plagued by the dark purple patches of dying flesh. And while they happened to hail from the country's coastlines, the problem is national.

"It's important for people to know it's not just in New York and L.A. It's in the cocaine supply of the entire U.S.," Craft said.

Craft is one of several doctors across the country who have linked the rotting skin to tainted coke. The gruesome wounds surface days after a hit because of an immune reaction that attacks the blood vessels supplying the skin. Without blood, the skin starves and suffocates.

Eighty-two percent of seized cocaine contains levamisole, according to an April 2011 report by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration. Why dealers would stretch their stash with levamisole instead of the more traditional fillers, like baking soda, is unclear, although studies in rats suggest the drug acts on the same brain receptors as cocaine. So it might be added to enhance or extend the cocaine's euphoric effects on the cheap.

Despite the widespread contamination, not all of the country's cocaine users experience the flesh-rotting reaction. It appears that some are more vulnerable to the tainted cocaine's effects.

"We don't know who this is going to happen to," said Dr. Lindy Fox, the University of California, San Francisco, dermatologist who first connected the gruesome lesions on cocaine users to levamisole. Similarly, some patients have more extreme reactions than others. Fox said she once saw a photo of a man whose entire body, face included, was black with dying flesh.

Once the drug is cleared from the body, the wounds do heal, leaving behind a shiny scar.

Although some people might be more vulnerable to the effects of levamisole, the drug doesn't discriminate based on race or socioeconomic status.

"Rich or poor, black or white," anyone who uses cocaine is at risk, Craft said.

As if rotting skin wasn't enough, levamisole also prevents the bone marrow from producing infection-fighting white blood cells.

"It's a little bit like having HIV," said Craft, adding that without medical attention, the condition can be fatal. "About 10 percent of those patients will die from severe infections. They may be walking around like a time bomb."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ron Paul, Barney Frank Introduce Bill That Would

Title: Ron Paul, Barney Frank Introduce Bill That Would Description: End Pot Prohibition [FRANK IS A CRETIN!]

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

Ron Paul, Barney Frank Introduce Bill That Would End Pot Prohibition

by Eyder Peralta
http://www.npr.org/blogs/thetwo-way/2011/0...pot-prohibition

Reps. Ron Paul (R-TX) and Barney Frank (D-MA) introduced a bipartisan bill today that would remove the federal prohibition on marijuana. The bill would instead let states legalize, regulate and tax marijuana.

USA Today reports the bill is being championed by a legalization advocacy group: The Marijuana Policy Project highlights that 46.5% of Californians voted for Proposition 19. It also cites a report released this month by the Global Commission on Drug Policy that slammed the decades-old war on drugs and called on governments to take a look at decriminalizing marijuana and other drugs.

The bill by Frank and Paul would "end state/federal conflicts over marijuana policy, re-prioritize federal resources and provide more room for states to do what is best for their own citizens," the group says.

Politico says the legislation is modeled after the 21st Amendment to the Constitution, which repealed the federal prohibition on alcohol and handed that responsibility to the states. Quoting the Marijuana Policy Project, Politico reports it's "the first bill ever introduced in Congress to end federal marijuana prohibition."

But, as CNN money puts it, the bill is a long shot. But part of the point, adds CNN, is to start a conversation.

The bill is co-sponsored by Reps. John Conyers (D-MI), Steve Cohen (D-TN), Jared Polis (D-CO), and Barbara Lee (D-CA).

Update at 5:49 p.m. ET. The Bill Is Introduced:

We've updated our lede and headline to reflect that Frank and Paul have introduced the bill in the House. The AP reports that Frank said "he's not advocating marijuana use, but believes that criminal prosecution is a waste of resources and an intrusion on personal freedom."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: DEA head: A thousand dead children means we're

Title: DEA head: A thousand dead children means we're Description: winning war on drugs [KING CARLOS]

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

DEA head: A thousand dead children means we're winning war on drugs

Michele Leonhart, our top drug cop, has a funny definition of victory
By Alex Pareene
Friday, Apr 15, 2011 14:16 ET http://www.salon.com/news/politics/war_roo...15/dea_children

Producing and distributing illegal drugs is a profitable business, because there will always be a lot of demand and because illegality allows you to charge a great deal of money. That illegality also means that the people who produce and distribute the drugs are generally not responsible corporate citizens. So thanks to our expensive, terribly ineffective and endless war on drugs, lots of people are dying.

The Washington Post recently reported that the victims of Mexican drug cartel violence increasingly include children, who are being specifically targeted in order to terrorize people and intimidate potential business rivals:

The children's rights group estimates that 994 people younger than 18 were killed in drug-related violence between late 2006 and late 2010, based on media accounts, which are incomplete because newspapers are often too intimidated to report drug-related crimes.
[...]
Government figures include all homicides of people younger than 17, capturing victims whose murders might not have been related to drugs or organized crime. In 2009, the last year for which there is data, 1,180 children were killed, half in shootings.

This article is actually almost a week old, but I did not notice, until it was highlighted by Jonathan Blanks, this astounding quote from America's top drug warrior:

U.S. and Mexican officials say the grotesque violence is a symptom the cartels have been wounded by police and soldiers. “It may seem contradictory, but the unfortunate level of violence is a sign of success in the fight against drugs,” said Michele Leonhart, head of the Drug Enforcement Administration. The cartels “are like caged animals, attacking one another,” she added.

It seems "contradictory" because that is absolutely appalling spin. For one thing, these "caged animals" are actually attacking civilians and children. And they are doing so because the drug war has made their chosen industry both profitable and dangerous enough to make murder and brutality effective means of winning competitive advantages. If this is a sign of success, maybe we should reconsider waging this war.

Leonhart, a DEA lifer, is actually a Bush appointee, reappointed by President Obama. She is, obviously, an inflexible zealot when it comes to drug prohibition. This is easily the worst and most offensive thing she's said that I've read, but she does have a history of asinine remarks. This is the sort of quote -- dead children are a sign that we're winning! -- that should lead to a resignation. But it probably won't.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bolivia to withdraw from drugs convention over

Title: Bolivia to withdraw from drugs convention over Description: coca classification

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 02:01 AM (GMT)

Bolivia to withdraw from drugs convention over coca classification

President Evo Morales says chewing coca leaves is a cultural heritage and ancestral practice

Mattia Cabitza in La Paz guardian.co.uk, Thursday 23 June 2011 15.52 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...ion-coca-leaves

Bolivia is set to withdraw from an international narcotics convention in protest at its classification of coca leaves as an illegal drug.

President Evo Morales, who is also the leader of one of the country's main coca producers' unions, has asked Congress to pass a law that would take Bolivia out of the 1961 United Nations Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs.

The government says that the convention contravenes the Bolivian constitution, which states that the country is obliged to preserve and protect the chewing of coca leaves as a cultural heritage and ancestral practice.

Bolivia has long argued that coca in its natural state is not an illicit drug. The plant is legally grown in the country for medicinal and traditional purposes. An international attempt to remove its chewing from the UN list failed in January, so the government now wants to withdraw from the convention altogether.

Under the draft law, which has already passed the lower chamber of Congress and is likely to pass in the Senate, where Morales's party has a two-thirds majority, Bolivia would keep its international obligations in the fight against drug trafficking. Foreign minister David Choquehuanca said the country could rejoin the convention next year, but with a reservation: that it be allowed to consume coca legally.

"[This] is an attempt to keep the cultural and inoffensive practice of coca chewing and to respect human rights, but not just of indigenous people, because this is an ancient practice of all Bolivian people," Choquehuanca said.

Opposition politicians argue that the government is surrendering to traffickers. "Internationally, we're giving a bad impression as a country," said opposition congressman Mauricio Muñoz. "There will be disastrous and irreversible consequences for Bolivia. And we think this is the wrong path the president is taking, not to fight drug trafficking head on."

Bolivia is the third largest coca producer in the world, much of which is diverted for making cocaine for Brazilian and European markets. But while recently admitting that coca cultivation has grown in the country, Bolivia maintains that it cannot defeat drug traffickers without a reduction in the consumption of cocaine in the west.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Scotland tops world cocaine use

Title: Scotland tops world cocaine use

TheUnhivedMind - June 24, 2011 03:34 AM (GMT)

Knight of Malta, Thabo Mbeki rubs his hands with Hugo Chavez and the CIA clan all whilst Juan Carlos of Spain throws another currency converted physical Gold bullion bar on the pile laughing whilst his mafiosi flood the World with his wares of death. The leopards never change their spots ask the House of Keswick vermin who control HSBC and 20% of Rothschild Bank. Don't worry the Exchange Stablization Fund will make good use of that cocaine drug currency in carrying on their wars and death control.

QUOTE

Scotland tops world cocaine use

23 June 2011 Last updated at 22:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-scotland-13898046

Scotland has again been placed at the top of the world league for cocaine consumption.

Figures published by the United Nations show that 3.9% of Scottish residents aged between 16 and 64 used the drug in the past year.

That was a higher proportion than in any other country and compares to 2.5% for England and Wales.

The figures also showed Scotland with a rate of heroin use twice that of the rest of the United Kingdom.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Krokodil: The drug that eats junkies

Title: Krokodil: The drug that eats junkies
Description: [POST INDUSTRIAL ZERO GROWTH SOCIETY]

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:51 AM (GMT)

Krokodil: The drug that eats junkies

A home-made heroin substitute is having a horrific effect on thousands of Russia's drug addicts

By Shaun Walker
Wednesday, 22 June 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/eu...es-2300787.html

Oleg glances furtively around him and, confident that nobody is watching, slips inside the entrance to a decaying Soviet-era block of flats, where Sasha is waiting for him. Ensconced in the dingy kitchen of one of the apartments, they empty the contents of a blue carrier bag that Oleg has brought with him – painkillers, iodine, lighter fluid, industrial cleaning oil, and an array of vials, syringes, and cooking implements.

Half an hour later, after much boiling, distilling, mixing and shaking, what remains is a caramel-coloured gunge held in the end of a syringe, and the acrid smell of burnt iodine in the air. Sasha fixes a dirty needle to the syringe and looks for a vein in his bruised forearm. After some time, he finds a suitable place, and hands the syringe to Oleg, telling him to inject the fluid. He closes his eyes, and takes the hit.

Russia has more heroin users than any other country in the world – up to two million, according to unofficial estimates. For most, their lot is a life of crime, stints in prison, probable contraction of HIV and hepatitis C, and an early death. As efforts to stem the flow of Afghan heroin into Russia bring some limited success, and the street price of the drug goes up, for those addicts who can't afford their next hit, an even more terrifying spectre has raised its head.
Related articles

More Health Articles
Search the news archive for more stories

The home-made drug that Oleg and Sasha inject is known as krokodil, or "crocodile". It is desomorphine, a synthetic opiate many times more powerful than heroin that is created from a complex chain of mixing and chemical reactions, which the addicts perform from memory several times a day. While heroin costs from £20 to £60 per dose, desomorphine can be "cooked" from codeine-based headache pills that cost £2 per pack, and other household ingredients available cheaply from the markets.

It is a drug for the poor, and its effects are horrific. It was given its reptilian name because its poisonous ingredients quickly turn the skin scaly. Worse follows. Oleg and Sasha have not been using for long, but Oleg has rotting sores on the back of his neck.

"If you miss the vein, that's an abscess straight away," says Sasha. Essentially, they are injecting poison directly into their flesh. One of their friends, in a neighbouring apartment block, is further down the line.

"She won't go to hospital, she just keeps injecting. Her flesh is falling off and she can hardly move anymore," says Sasha. Photographs of late-stage krokodil addicts are disturbing in the extreme. Flesh goes grey and peels away to leave bones exposed. People literally rot to death.

Russian heroin addicts first discovered how to make krokodil around four years ago, and there has been a steady rise in consumption, with a sudden peak in recent months. "Over the past five years, sales of codeine-based tablets have grown by dozens of times," says Viktor Ivanov, the head of Russia's Drug Control Agency. "It's pretty obvious that it's not because everyone has suddenly developed headaches."

Heroin addiction kills 30,000 people per year in Russia – a third of global deaths from the drug – but now there is the added problem of krokodil. Mr Ivanov recalled a recent visit to a drug-treatment centre in Western Siberia. "They told me that two years ago almost all their drug users used heroin," said the drugs tsar. "Now, more than half of them are on desomorphine."

He estimates that overall, around 5 per cent of Russian drug users are on krokodil and other home-made drugs, which works out at about 100,000 people. It's a huge, hidden epidemic – worse in the really isolated parts of Russia where supplies of heroin are patchy – but palpable even in cities such as Tver.

It has a population of half a million, and is a couple of hours by train from Moscow, en route to St Petersburg. Its city centre, sat on the River Volga, is lined with pretty, Tsarist-era buildings, but the suburbs are miserable. People sit on cracked wooden benches in a weed-infested "park", gulping cans of Jaguar, an alcoholic energy drink. In the background, there are rows of crumbling apartment blocks. The shops and restaurants of Moscow are a world away; for a treat, people take the bus to the McDonald's by the train station.

In the city's main drug treatment centre, Artyom Yegorov talks of the devastation that krokodil is causing. "Desomorphine causes the strongest levels of addiction, and is the hardest to cure," says the young doctor, sitting in a treatment room in the scruffy clinic, below a picture of Hugh Laurie as Dr House.

"With heroin withdrawal, the main symptoms last for five to 10 days. After that there is still a big danger of relapse but the physical pain will be gone. With krokodil, the pain can last up to a month, and it's unbearable. They have to be injected with extremely strong tranquilisers just to keep them from passing out from the pain."

Dr Yegorov says krokodil users are instantly identifiable because of their smell. "It's that smell of iodine that infuses all their clothes," he says. "There's no way to wash it out, all you can do is burn the clothes. Any flat that has been used as a krokodil cooking house is best forgotten about as a place to live. You'll never get that smell out of the flat."

Addicts in Tver say they never have any problems buying the key ingredient for krokodil – codeine pills, which are sold without prescription. "Once I was trying to buy four packs, and the woman told me they could only sell two to any one person," recalls one, with a laugh. "So I bought two packs, then came back five minutes later and bought another two. Other than that, they never refuse to sell it to us, even though they know what we're going to do with it." The solution, to many, is obvious: ban the sale of codeine tablets, or at least make them prescription-only. But despite the authorities being aware of the problem for well over a year, nothing has been done.

President Dmitry Medvedev has called for websites which explain how to make krokodil to be closed down, but he has not ordered the banning of the pills. Last month, a spokesman for the ministry of health said that there were plans to make codeine-based tablets available only on prescription, but that it was impossible to introduce the measure quickly. Opponents claim lobbying by pharmaceutical companies has caused the inaction.

"A year ago we said that we need to introduce prescriptions," says Mr Ivanov. "These tablets don't cost much but the profit margins are high. Some pharmacies make up to 25 per cent of their profits from the sale of these tablets. It's not in the interests of pharmaceutical companies or pharmacies themselves to stop this, so the government needs to use its power to regulate their sale."

In addition to krokodil, there are reports of drug users injecting other artificial mixes, and the latest street drug is tropicamide. Used as eye drops by ophthalmologists to dilate the pupils during eye examinations, Dr Yegorov says patients have no trouble getting hold of capsules of it for about £2 per vial. Injected, the drug has severe psychiatric effects and brings on suicidal feelings.

"Addicts are being sold drugs by normal Russian women working in pharmacies, who know exactly what they'll be used for," said Yevgeny Roizman, an anti-drugs activist who was one of the first to talk publicly about the krokodil issue earlier this year. "Selling them to boys the same age as their own sons. Russians are killing Russians."

Zhenya, quietly spoken and wearing dark glasses, agrees to tell his story while I sit in the back of his car in a lay-by on the outskirts of Tver. He managed to kick the habit, after spending weeks at a detox clinic ,experiencing horrendous withdrawal symptoms that included seizures, a 40-degree temperature and vomiting. He lost 14 teeth after his gums rotted away, and contracted hepatitis C.

But his fate is essentially a miraculous escape – after all, he's still alive. Zhenya is from a small town outside Tver, and was a heroin addict for a decade before he moved onto krokodil a year ago. Of the ten friends he started injecting heroin with a decade ago, seven are dead.

Unlike heroin, where the hit can last for several hours, a krokodil high only lasts between 90 minutes and two hours, says Zhenya. Given that the "cooking" process takes at least half an hour, being a krokodil addict is basically a full-time job.

"I remember one day, we cooked for three days straight," says one of Zhenya's friends. "You don't sleep much when you're on krokodil, as you need to wake up every couple of hours for another hit. At the time we were cooking it at our place, and loads of people came round and pitched in. For three days we just kept on making it. By the end, we all staggered out yellow, exhausted and stinking of iodine."

In Tver, most krokodil users inject the drug only when they run out of money for heroin. As soon as they earn or steal enough, they go back to heroin. In other more isolated regions of Russia, where heroin is more expensive and people are poorer, the problem is worse. People become full-time krokodil addicts, giving them a life expectancy of less than a year.

Zhenya says every single addict he knows in his town has moved from heroin to krokodil, because it's cheaper and easier to get hold of. "You can feel how disgusting it is when you're doing it," he recalls. "You're dreaming of heroin, of something that feels clean and not like poison. But you can't afford it, so you keep doing the krokodil. Until you die."

Some of the names in this story have been changed

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Drug addicts get methadone on the NHS... why can't Title: Drug addicts get methadone on the NHS... why can't Description: I have the cannabis spray that eases ag

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 02:13 AM (GMT)

Drug addicts get methadone on the NHS... why can't I have the cannabis spray that eases agonies of MS?

By Hilary Freeman
Last updated at 10:29 PM on 18th June 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/health/article-...agonies-MS.html

Susan Costello was diagnosed with a progressive form of the neurological disease multiple sclerosis in 2003, soon after getting married.

Her condition has slowly deteriorated.

‘I can’t feel anything in my right foot – it’s like a piece of dead meat,’ says the 49-year-old mother of one from Prestwich, Manchester.

‘When I walk, I often need to lean against a wall or ask for a friend to help support me.

Every day I get painful spasms in my right leg, which make it stiffen and stop me sleeping.’

But there is a drug that can help MS sufferers like Susan.

Sativex is the first cannabis-derived medicine to be licensed in the UK. It is applied under the tongue by an oral spray and absorbed into the bloodstream.

The drug works by stimulating the cannabis receptors in the brain and nervous system, dampening overactive nerve cells and relieving spasticity by targeting the area of the brain that controls muscle tension.

Sativex does contain THC, the chemical that gives recreational users of cannabis a ‘high’.

But patients using Sativex don’t get high because the dose is much lower and it is a controlled form of the substance.

Sativex comes with more than ten years of clinical trials proving its effectiveness in treating the symptoms of MS and is proven to help reduce pain and spasticity, improve sleep and causes few side effects.

Indeed, Susan was on one of the trials for Sativex and found it incredibly effective.

But, despite numerous requests from her neurologist saying she needs it and is eligible for it, her local Primary Care Trust, NHS Salford, refuses to prescribe her the drug.

Almost a year after Sativex was licensed by the UK Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), the majority of those with MS in the UK who need it remain unable to obtain it.

MS affects about 100,000 men and women in the UK.

It is a neurological condition that damages the nerves and affects the transfer of messages from the central nervous system to the rest of the body.

It affects everybody differently but common symptoms include blurred or double vision, numbness, limb weakness, spasticity and pain.

At later stages there can be loss of co-ordination and speech impairment.

The MS Society says it has been contacted by hundreds of sufferers unable to access Sativex despite their doctors’ requests, and thousands more have made enquiries about how to get it.

Many PCTs are issuing blanket refusals to all patients on grounds of ‘cost effectiveness’ and ‘no proof of efficacy’.

Susan says that when she took Sativex, her symptoms improved immediately.

‘An hour after the first spray I had sensation back in my right foot for the first time in years,’ she recalls.

‘It helped my balance, stopped the spasms and allowed me to move around much more easily.

I could co-ordinate my limbs again. My fatigue wasn’t so bad either.’

For 18 months after the trial ended, Susan paid for private prescriptions of Sativex, until she was no longer able to afford it.

When the drug was licensed last year – for people who, like Susan, do not respond adequately to other anti-spasticity medication and who demonstrate a clinically significant improvement in an initial trial of the therapy – she assumed she would automatically receive it on the NHS.

But her application was declined.

A spokesman for NHS Salford said: ‘We follow guidance produced by the Greater Manchester Medicines Management Group, in July 2010, regarding Sativex.

The guidance is as follows: “The group does not recommend the use of Sativex for the treatment of moderate to severe spasticity due to multiple sclerosis (MS) who have not responded to other anti-spasticity medication and who demonstrate a clinical improvement during a trial of therapy.

Although Sativex showed some benefits against placebo, as the data is not yet fully published the clinical significance of this is unclear.

The main trial was 12 weeks; so longer-term safety data for Sativex are currently unknown.

Sativex was deemed to be a low priority for funding.
Why refuse to prescribe Sativex?

Some NHS Trusts have refused to prescribe Sativex owing to its cost – about £11 a day, per patient, based on a dosage of eight sprays a day.

Other trusts claim they have better ways of treating severe spasticity and claims the effects of Sativex have not been proven.

Since she has been unable to get Sativex, Susan has been taking a drug called Baclofen for her spasticity.

Not only is it less effective but it has unwelcome and unpleasant side effects, such as making her unable to control her bladder or bowels. Sativex had no side effects for her.

Dr William Notcutt of the James Paget Hospital at Great Yarmouth says: ‘Imagine having continuous, severe cramps and pain and not being able to sleep.

Knowing that there’s something that can help, but you can’t get it, seems very unjust.

‘Sativex is actually no more expensive than other drugs I prescribe for MS and rheumatoid arthritis.'

Susan says: 'It doesn't seem fair that I can't get a drug I need and that works. Drug abusers are prescribed methadone on the NHS. Their condition is self-inflicted. Mine isn't.'

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CONGRESSMAN CALLS FOR END TO WAR ON DRUGS

Title: CONGRESSMAN CALLS FOR END TO WAR ON DRUGS
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 10:56 PM (GMT)

CONGRESSMAN CALLS FOR END TO WAR ON DRUGS

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3U53V-egLkw

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/3U53V-egLkw?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/3U53V-egLkw?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Underground Website Where You Can Buy Any Drug

Title: The Underground Website Where You Can Buy Any Drug Description: Imaginable

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 02:04 AM (GMT)

The Underground Website Where You Can Buy Any Drug Imaginable

http://gawker.com/5805928/the-underground-...drug-imaginable

Adrian Chen —Making small talk with your pot dealer sucks. Buying cocaine can get you shot. What if you could buy and sell drugs online like books or light bulbs? Now you can: Welcome to Silk Road.

About three weeks ago, the U.S. Postal Service delivered an ordinary envelope to Mark's door. Inside was a tiny plastic bag containing 10 tabs of LSD. "If you had opened it, unless you were looking for it, you wouldn't have even noticed," Mark told us in a phone interview.

Full size
Mark, a software developer, had ordered the 100 micrograms of acid through a listing on the online marketplace Silk Road. He found a seller with lots of good feedback who seemed to know what they were talking about, added the acid to his digital shopping cart and hit "check out." He entered his address and paid the seller 50 Bitcoins—untraceable digital currency—worth around $150. Four days later the drugs, sent from Canada, arrived at his house.

"It kind of felt like I was in the future," Mark said.
View the gallery

Silk Road, a digital black market that sits just below most internet users' purview, does resemble something from a cyberpunk novel. Through a combination of anonymity technology and a sophisticated user-feedback system, Silk Road makes buying and selling illegal drugs as easy as buying used electronics—and seemingly as safe. It's Amazon—if Amazon sold mind-altering chemicals.

Here is just a small selection of the 340 items available for purchase on Silk Road by anyone, right now: a gram of Afghani hash; 1/8th ounce of "sour 13" weed; 14 grams of ecstasy; .1 grams tar heroin. A listing for "Avatar" LSD includes a picture of blotter paper with big blue faces from the James Cameron movie on it. The sellers are located all over the world, a large portion from the U.S. and Canada.

But even Silk Road has limits: You won't find any weapons-grade plutonium, for example. Its terms of service ban the sale of "anything who's purpose is to harm or defraud, such as stolen credit cards, assassinations, and weapons of mass destruction."

Getting to Silk Road is tricky. The URL seems made to be forgotten. But don't point your browser there yet. It's only accessible through the anonymizing network TOR, which requires a bit of technical skill to configure.

Once you're there, it's hard to believe that Silk Road isn't simply a scam. Such brazenness is usually displayed only by those fake "online pharmacies" that dupe the dumb and flaccid. There's no sly, Craigslist-style code names here. But while scammers do use the site, most of the listings are legit. Mark's acid worked as advertised. "It was quite enjoyable, to be honest," he said. We spoke to one Connecticut engineer who enjoyed sampling some "silver haze" pot purchased off Silk Road. "It was legit," he said. "It was better than anything I've seen."

Silk Road cuts down on scams with a reputation-based trading system familiar to anyone who's used Amazon or eBay. The user Bloomingcolor appears to be an especially trusted vendor, specializing in psychedelics. One happy customer wrote on his profile: "Excellent quality. Packing, and communication. Arrived exactly as described." They gave the transaction five points out of five.

"Our community is amazing," Silk Road's anonymous administrator, known on forums as "Silk Road," told us in an email. "They are generally bright, honest and fair people, very understanding, and willing to cooperate with each other."

Sellers feel comfortable openly trading hardcore drugs because the real identities of those involved in Silk Road transactions are utterly obscured. If the authorities wanted to ID Silk Road's users with computer forensics, they'd have nowhere to look. TOR masks a user's tracks on the site. The site urges sellers to "creatively disguise" their shipments and vacuum seal any drugs that could be detected through smell. As for transactions, Silk Road doesn't accept credit cards, PayPal , or any other form of payment that can be traced or blocked. The only money good here is Bitcoins.

Bitcoins have been called a "crypto-currency," the online equivalent of a brown paper bag of cash. Bitcoins are a peer-to-peer currency, not issued by banks or governments, but created and regulated by a network of other bitcoin holders' computers. (The name "Bitcoin" is derived from the pioneering file-sharing technology Bittorrent.) They are purportedly untraceable and have been championed by cyberpunks, libertarians and anarchists who dream of a distributed digital economy outside the law, one where money flows across borders as free as bits.

To purchase something on Silk Road, you need first to buy some Bitcoins using a service like Mt. Gox Bitcoin Exchange. Then, create an account on Silk Road, deposit some bitcoins, and start buying drugs. One bitcoin is worth about $8.67, though the exchange rate fluctuates wildly every day. Right now you can buy an 1/8th of pot on Silk Road for 7.63 Bitcoins. That's probably more than you would pay on the street, but most Silk Road users seem happy to pay a premium for convenience.

Since it launched this February, Silk Road has represented the most complete implementation of the Bitcoin vision. Many of its users come from Bitcoin's utopian geek community and see Silk Road as more than just a place to buy drugs. Silk Road's administrator cites the anarcho-libertarian philosophy of Agorism. "The state is the primary source of violence, oppression, theft and all forms of coercion," Silk Road wrote to us. "Stop funding the state with your tax dollars and direct your productive energies into the black market."

Mark, the LSD buyer, had similar views. "I'm a libertarian anarchist and I believe that anything that's not violent should not be criminalized," he said.

But not all Bitcoin enthusiasts embrace Silk Road. Some think the association with drugs will tarnish the young technology, or might draw the attention of federal authorities. "The real story with Silk Road is the quantity of people anxious to escape a centralized currency and trade," a longtime bitcoin user named Maiya told us in a chat. "Some of us view Bitcoin as a real currency, not drug barter tokens."

Silk Road and Bitcoins could herald a black market eCommerce revolution. But anonymity cuts both ways. How long until a DEA agent sets up a fake Silk Road account and starts sending SWAT teams instead of LSD to the addresses she gets? As Silk Road inevitably spills out of the bitcoin bubble, its drug-swapping utopians will meet a harsh reality no anonymizing network can blur.

Update: Jeff Garzik, a member of the Bitcoin core development team, says in an email that bitcoin is not as anonymous as the denizens of Silk Road would like to believe. He explains that because all Bitcoin transactions are recorded in a public log, though the identities of all the parties are anonymous, law enforcement could use sophisticated network analysis techniques to parse the transaction flow and track down individual Bitcoin users.

"Attempting major illicit transactions with bitcoin, given existing statistical analysis techniques deployed in the field by law enforcement, is pretty damned dumb," he says.

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 02:04 AM (GMT)

And all of a sudden, I smell a big fat election-season rat!

Anyone here really think that illegal drugs can be sent across the border into the US in regular mail without being detected? Packages get X-rayed, scanned, and sniffed. US Customs confiscated a green laser pointer I ordered from China. It just does not make sense that illegal drugs would flow across the borders from this "Silk Road" website without being detected and both sender and receiver arrested ... unless it is a covert operation. Remember, 1/4 of all computer criminals are working as FBI informants! So there is already a 25% chance this website is a government front.

What is the reason for this operation? Obama cannot run on the wars, the economy, Israel, or the Gulf Spill. But a scandal involving digital cash, the Tor anonymous network, an online illegal drugs supplier and one dumb kid dead of on overdose and Obama has an issue he can campaign on in 2012, and more to the point, justify intense government control of the internet, websites, anonymizers, online commerce, and of course the content of websites.

-Michael Rivera

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 02:08 AM (GMT)

Senators seek crackdown on "Bitcoin" currency

Wed Jun 8, 2011 11:17am EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/06/08/...E7573T320110608

ST. LOUIS (Thomson Reuters Accelus) - Two senators are pressing federal authorities to crack down on an online black market and "untraceable" digital currency known as Bitcoins after reports that they are used to buy illegal drugs anonymously.

Democratic Senators Charles Schumer of New York and Joe Manchin of West Virginia wrote to Attorney General Eric Holder and Drug Enforcement Administration head Michele Leonhart in a letter that expressed concerns about the underground website "Silk Road" and the use of Bitcoins to make purchases there.

The letter prompted a discussion among Bitcoin enthusiasts about whether the government was capable of closing related bank accounts and thereby stifling the currency.

The senators released a copy of their letter on Monday. It cites recent media reports that some tech-savvy individuals were using an "anonymizing network" known as Tor to gain clandestine access to Silk Road and buy illegal drugs.

Silk Road buyers pay with Bitcoins and sellers mail the drugs, the Gawker blog reported. The transactions leave no traditional money trail for investigators to follow, and leave it hard to prove a package recipient knew in advance what was in a shipment.

"The only method of payment for these illegal purchases is an untraceable peer-to-peer currency known as Bitcoins. After purchasing Bitcoins through an exchange, a user can create an account on Silk Road and start purchasing illegal drugs from individuals around the world and have them delivered to their homes within days," the senators' letter states. "We urge you to take immediate action and shut down the Silk Road network."

The DEA is "absolutely" concerned about Bitcoins and other anonymous digital currencies, agency spokeswoman Dawn Dearden said when asked for a response to the senators' concerns.

"The DEA is constantly evaluating and analyzing new technologies and schemes perpetrated by drug trafficking networks. While we won't confirm or deny the existence of specific investigations, DEA is well aware of these emerging threats and we will act accordingly," she said.

Silk Road may be hard to close. It could easily move from server to server around the globe and change its Web address and name at will, while remaining accessible through Tor.

However, Bitcoins must be purchased with real money; of late, they have been selling for roughly $10 each.

Therefore, there are exchanges with bank accounts, such as the Mt. Gox Bitcoin Exchange, that the Justice Department and other law enforcement agencies may be able to target. It is this weak link that worries the currency's enthusiasts.

A discussion thread this week on the primary Bitcoin forum was titled "Will Mt. Gox US Bank accounts eventually get frozen?" Some speculated that if the government bans transactions involving Bitcoin exchanges, a layer of shell companies might allow them to continue.

One user described this process as simply "growing pains" and asserted that the government "can't stop a peer-to-peer service."

U.S. law enforcers might have difficulty stopping Bitcoins without help from their peers in other countries.

While little information about Bitcoin exchanges is publicly available, an item posted on a website called Bitcoin Watch states that Mt. Gox's bank account is in Japan, and anecdotal evidence suggests many other exchanges operate outside of the US.

Mt. Gox's website does not list a phone number, representatives could not be reached via email.

(Editing by Randall Mikkelsen)

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 02:08 AM (GMT)

Cash is also untraceable and used to buy drugs, so that is clearly not the issue here. and indeed any alternative currency system, is a direct threat to the enslavement of the American people by the privately-owned Federal Reserve Bank. The Ponzi-scheme bankers know full well that a popularly adopted alternative currency system will draw people and resources away from the central bank, which is already on the verge of collapse and cannot survive a run on deposits.

So these Senators are not really interested in the drug issue but in preserving the financial status-quo.

I really wasn't paying attention to the bitcoin issue, but now that these Senators have come out against it, the "Banned in Boston" effect has kicked in and I will be paying more more attention!

-Michael Rivera

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: When Cocaine and Monsanto's Roundup Collide, War

Title: When Cocaine and Monsanto's Roundup Collide, War
Description: on Drugs Becomes a Genetically-Modified

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 02:09 AM (GMT)

When Cocaine and Monsanto's Roundup Collide, War on Drugs Becomes a Genetically-Modified War on Science

June 7, 2011
By Meg White - BUZZFLASH NEWS ANALYSIS
http://blog.buzzflash.com/analysis/894

At the intersection of cocaine and Roundup in rural South America, Monsanto and the U. S. government are struggling to keep up appearances. That's becoming more and more difficult as the unanticipated hazards of genetic modification become clearer.

Back in April, Argentinean embryologist Andrés Carrasco gave an interview with a Buenos Aires newspaper describing his recent findings suggesting the chemical glyphosate, a chemical herbicide widely used in agriculture as well as in U.S. anti-narcotic efforts, could cause defects in fetuses in much smaller doses than those to which peasants and farmers in his country were already being exposed. Loud calls for a ban on the substance were issued by Argentinean environmental lawyers, and the country's Ministry of Defense banned the planting of glyphosate-resistant soya crops in its fields.

Then came the backlash. An article in an Argentinean paper recently reported that Carrasco was assaulted in a way he described as "violent" by four men associated with agricultural interests:

Two of the men were said to be members of an agrochemical industry body but refused to give their names. The other two claimed to be a lawyer and notary. They apparently interrogated Dr. Carrasco and demanded to see details of the experiments. They left a card Basílico, Andrada & Santurio, attorneys on behalf of Felipe Alejandro Noël.

It's still unclear who these people are. But the interest in keeping such information quiet or discrediting Carrasco and his findings are strongest with Monsanto, the agricultural company who first patented a glyphosate product (sold as Roundup) and also created genetically-modified crops specifically to resist the herbicide.

GRAIN, an international non-profit supporting small-scale farmers and biodiversity in community agriculture, originally reported the story, evidently before the reports of threats against Carrasco were known. GRAIN has also done extensive reporting on Monsanto's genetically-modified soya crops in Argentina (which, according to the group, have increased five-fold since their introduction there, and have taken over more than half of Argentina's farmland) as well as on the use of glyphosate (which has increased fourteen-fold since its introduction, contrary to Monsanto's promises that its crop would decrease pesticide use). The so-called "Roundup Ready" crops have interbred with other plants, creating "superweeds" which in turn necessitate the use of other poisonous herbicides such as atrazine.

The dangers of glyphosate are hotly debated. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency does regulate the allowable amount in drinking water, but the data it has on the dangers of the chemical are all nearly two decades old, and many studies were sponsored by Monsanto. But rural agricultural workers across South America have been protesting the spraying for well over a decade, pointing to increases in local cancer rates and birth defects as proof.

The Transnational Institute (TNI), a nonpartisan international group of scholars, has drawn attention to the inconsistencies and basic errors in studies refuting the dangers of glyphosate. This should come as no surprise, since Monsanto has been involved in several known cases of scientific fraud regarding the same chemical, wherein the EPA found multiple instances in which labs were paid to falsify preferred results for the company. Monsanto has also been charged in multiple jurisdictions for disseminating misleading information about its Roundup products.

Yet, glyphosate is still the top-selling herbicide around the world. And it's not just used to kill weeds, either. The U.S. military sprays glyphosate from airplanes onto drug crops as part of its worldwide anti-narcotic strategy. The best known example of such an effort was named Plan Colombia by the Clinton Administration and persists today.

But punishment is meted out unequally. Because glyphosate is an herbicide and is not specifically targeted to work against drug crops (as is easily deduced by the fact that it's used against coca and poppy plants as well as against household weeds in the U.S.), the spray kills legitimate crops, too.

That is, unless you're growing Monsanto's specially-formulated "Roundup Ready" crops. The you can spray nearly unlimited amounts of the stuff, which is what it seems farmers (as well as the U.S. military) are doing.

It seems that the whole operation may have backfired though, at least from the perspective of the governments that are promoting such a strategy. The effort has lead to coca growers cutting down national forests -- where such spraying is often against the law -- to produce their illicit crops. But Mother Nature may be rebelling against drug policy as well. coca plants appear to be either evolving on their own (or with the help of coca farmers' active selection) -- or they are possibly crossing with Roundup Ready crops already on the ground -- to produce a glyphosate-resistant crop known as Boliviana negra.

One TNI study looked at the political and commercial motives for continuing to spray the chemical on drug crops in South America regardless of findings that the effort is counterproductive at best:

It is true that the United States is behind fumigation, backed by the economic interests of companies such as Monsanto and DynCorp, who share in this lucrative business -– which is one of the reasons it meets with opposition. But it is also true that the disastrous consequences of the current anti-drug policy, of which fumigation is but one component, are a reality that surpasses ideologies, and the nations that suffer its consequences firsthand must find a solution instead of becoming polarised...

Colombia would not fumigate if it weren’t for pressure from the US. It would be implementing other forms of eradication or offering alternative development programmes that provide income to the population.

The group suggested that South American countries band together to refuse U.S. anti-narcotic spraying on environmental and human safety grounds, as has been done in Afghanistan.

In 2004, Joshua Davis had the Boliviana negra plant tested to determine its provenance for Wired Magazine. He concludes that the glyphosate-resistant coca plant he found in Colombia was most likely developed in the fields by farmers grafting on chance genetic mutations.

But the resulting article is perhaps most interesting for the taciturn response on all sides of the issue. Davis suggests that South American authorities don't want to talk about the situation because the revelation might cost countries that receive a large amount of U.S. aid to combat drug traffickers. The U.S. government doesn't want coca farmers who don't already know to find out about the new strain, because it can still eradicate old strains with glyphosate. And drug growers who do have the new strain certainly don't want the status quo to end, because currently the U.S. government is doing their weeding for free.

But on the larger cost-benefit analysis, the biggest winner is Monsanto. The more Roundup Ready crops there are out there, the more Roundup farmers need to get rid of the weeds, as is evidenced by the GRAIN research in Argentina. The real foe of Monsanto is not drug cartels or government entities. It's scientists.

When you put together the studies referenced above, which show that spraying glyphosate is harmful to humans and the environment and that it does not hamper the production of coca or weeds, the answer to almost everyone's problems is eliminating Monsanto.

So while there's no solid proof that the men threatening Andrés Carrasco belong to the same corporation that falsified lab results on the harm caused by glyphosate or the group that told lies about Roundup, there's no doubt in my mind that they belong in the same sick club.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Taliban grow rich from misery of opium farmers and Title: Taliban grow rich from misery of opium farmers and Description: addicts

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 11:23 PM (GMT)

Taliban grow rich from misery of opium farmers and addicts

Robert Fox, Defence Correspondent
7 Jun 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...-and-addicts.do

In Helmand, there are two enemies: the Taliban and the opium poppy. Gains have been slowly made against the insurgents but the fight against drug production has been much tougher.

Latest reports from Britain's Serious Organised Crime Agency and Drug Enforcement Agency of the US suggest that prices of narcotics for export have soared, making huge profits for the top 30 or 40 "fat cat" Afghan traffickers. A kilo of pure Afghan heroin is now traded in Moscow or London for more than £20,000.

After dropping to below £125 a kilo for dried opium last year, farmers are now paid £173. Huge gains have been made in restricting the area of southern Afghanistan producing poppy.

But the trade still accounts for a third of the national income, roughly £380•million involving about 350,000 families. Afghanistan produces more than 90 per cent of the world's opium and heroin - Helmand grows about half of that.

A fifth of all poppy harvested is handed over in "tax" to the narco-dealers and their Taliban protectors. "The Taliban are now very much part of the criminal dealing network," an international counter narcotics official told me in Kabul.

"They are now moving into areas such as human trafficking, charging up to £11,000 each to get illegal migrants into Europe." For most poppy farmers, the opium brings little real gain - and often misery. Most don't own their land, and they pay rent or bribes to landlords, police, traffickers and the Taliban.

There is also a huge rise in opiate addiction across Afghanistan, as well as neighbouring Pakistan and Iran. There are thought to be 70,000 opium addicts out of a population of 800,000 in central Helmand; in Kabul city there are at least 60,000.

Walking past the ancient minarets in Herat last week, a man lay in my path. He got up, staggered, cursed, and fell again. He was barely 30.

On the streets of London, Glasgow or Belfast, addicts share a common destiny and source of misery with that man - their heroin almost certainly comes from Helmand.

"That's why we in the UK will be involved here for a very long time to come, long, long after the Nato troops have left," said a UK drug enforcement experts in Kabul.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: “Business is Booming”; Wall Street’s Role in Narco

Title: “Business is Booming”; Wall Street’s Role in Narco
Description: trafficking

TheUnhivedMind - June 5, 2011 12:55 AM (GMT)

“Business is Booming”; Wall Street’s Role in Narco-trafficking

June 3, 2011
By Mike Whitney - Blacklistednews.com
http://www.blacklistednews.com/

Imagine what your reaction would be if the Mexican government agreed to pay Barack Obama $1.4 billion to deploy US troops and armored vehicles to New York, Los Angeles and Chicago to conduct military operations, set up check points, and engage in fire-fights that end up killing 35,000 US civilians on the streets of American cities.

If the Mexican government treated the United States like this, would you consider them a friend or an enemy?

But–the thing is–this is exactly how the US is treating Mexico, and it’s been going on since 2006.

America’s Mexican policy–The Merida Initiative–is a real nightmare. It’s undermined Mexican sovereignty, corrupted the political system, and militarized the country. It’s also resulted in the violent deaths of thousands of mostly poor civilians. But Washington doesn’t give a hoot about “collateral damage” as long as it can sell more weaponry, strengthen its free-trade regime, and sluice more drug profits into its big banks. Then everything is just Jim-dandy.

There’s no point in dignifying this butchery by calling it a “War on Drugs”? That’s nonsense. What we’re seeing is a giant powergrab by big business, big finance and the US Intel services. Obama is merely doing their bidding, which is why–not surprisingly–things have gotten a lot worse under his administration. Obama has not only stepped up the funding for Plan Mexico (aka–Merida) but also deployed more US agents to work undercover while US drones carry out surveillance duty. Get the picture? This isn’t some little drug bust; it’s another chapter in America’s War on Civilization.

Here’s an excerpt from an article in Counterpunch by Laura Carlsen that gives a little background:

“The drug war has become the major vehicle of militarization in Latin America. It’s a vehicle funded and driven by the U.S. government and fueled by a combination of false morals, hypocrisy and a lot of cold, hard fear. The so called “war on drugs” is really a war on people, especially youth, women, indigenous peoples and dissidents. The drug war has become the main way for the Pentagon to occupy and control countries at the expense of whole societies and many, many lives.

Militarization in the name of the drug war is happening more quickly and more thoroughly than most of us probably anticipated under the Obama administration. The agreement to establish bases in Colombia, later suspended, sent out one of the first signals of the strategy. And we’ve seen the indefinite extension of the Merida Initiative in Mexico and Central America, and even, sadly, war boats sent to Costa Rica, a nation with a history of peace and no army……

The Merida Initiative funds U.S. interests to train security forces, provide intelligence and war technology, give advice on reforming the justice and penal systems and promoting human rights–all in Mexico. (The Drug War Can’t Be Improved, It Can Only be Ended, Laura Carlsen, Counterpunch)

If it looks like Obama is doing his best to turn Mexico into a military dictatorship, it’s because he is. Plan Mexico is a sham that conceals the administration’s real motives, which is to make sure that the lavish profits from the drug trade end up in the right people’s pockets. That’s what this is all about, big money. And that’s why the death toll has soared while the Mexican government’s credibility has hit it’s lowest ebb in decades. US policy has turned large swaths of the country into killing fields and it’s only getting worse.

Check out this interview with Charles Bowden who describes what life is like for the people who live at Ground Zero in the drug war; Juarez, Mexico:

“This is in a city where people live in cardboard boxes sometimes. Ten thousand businesses have given up and closed in the last year. Thirty to sixty thousand people from Juárez, mainly the rich, have moved across the river to El Paso for safety, including the mayor of Juárez, who likes to bunk in El Paso. And the publisher of the newspaper there lives in El Paso. Somewhere between 100,000 and 400,000 people simply left the city. A lot of the problem is economic, not simply violence. At least 100,000 jobs in the border factories have vanished during this recession because of the competition from Asia. There’s 500 to 900 gangs there, estimates vary.

So what you have is about 10,000 federal troops and federal police agents all marauding. You have a city where no one goes out at night; where small businesses all pay extortion; where 20,000 cars were officially stolen last year; where 2,600-plus people were officially murdered last year; where nobody keeps track of the people who have been kidnapped and never come back; where nobody counts the people buried in secret burying grounds, and they, in an unseemly way, claw out of the earth from time to time. You’ve got a disaster. And you have a million people, too poor to leave, imprisoned in it. That’s the city.”(Charles Bowden, Democracy Now)

This isn’t about drugs; it’s about a crackpot foreign policy that supports proxy-armies to impose order through police-state repression and militarization. It’s about expanding US power and beefing up profits on Wall Street.

Here’s more background from author Lawrence M. Vance at the The Future of Freedom Foundation:

“An undisclosed number of U.S. law-enforcement agents work in Mexico… The DEA has more than 60 agents in Mexico. There are in addition 40 Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents, 20 Marshal Service deputies, and 18 Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives agents, plus agents from the FBI, Citizen and Immigration Service, Customs and Border Protection, Secret Service, Coast Guard, and Transportation Safety Agency. The State Department also maintains a Narcotics Affairs Section. The United States has also provided helicopters, drug sniffing dogs, and polygraph units to screen law-enforcement applicants.

U.S. drones spy on cartel hideouts, and U.S. tracking beacons pinpoint suspect’s cars and phones. U.S. agents track beacons, trace cell-phone calls, read e-mails, study behavioral patterns of border incursions, follow smuggling routes, and process data about drug dealers, money launderers, and cartel bosses. According to a former Mexican anti-drug prosecutor, U.S. agents are not restricted from eavesdropping on anyone in Mexico by U.S. laws that require judicial authority as long as they are not on U.S. territory and not bugging American citizens. (“Why Is the U.S. Fighting Mexico’s Drug War?” Laurence M. Vance, The Future of Freedom Foundation) http://www.fff.org/comment/com1105q.asp

Good God, the place is crawling with US Intel agents. This isn’t foreign policy; it’s another US occupation. And, guess who’s raking in the big cashola on this sordid little scam?

Wall Street. That’s right, the big banks are getting their cut just like they always do. Take a look at this excerpt from an article by James Petras titled “How Drug Profits saved Capitalism” at Global Research. It’s a great summary of the objectives that are shaping the policy:

“While the Pentagon arms the Mexican government and the US Drug Enforcement Agency enforces the “military solution”, the biggest US banks receive, launder and transfer hundreds of billions of dollars to the drug lords’ accounts, who then buy modern arms, pay private armies of assassins and corrupt untold numbers of political and law enforcement officials on both sides of the border….

Drug profits, in the most basic sense, are secured through the ability of the cartels to launder and transfer billions of dollars through the US banking system. The scale and scope of the US banking-drug cartel alliance surpasses any other economic activity of the US private banking system. According to US Justice Department records, one bank alone, Wachovia Bank (now owned by Wells Fargo), laundered $378.3 billion dollars between May 1, 2004 and May 31, 2007 (The Guardian, May 11, 2011). Every major bank in the US has served as an active financial partner of the murderous drug cartels…

The Drug Traffickers, the Banks and the White House

If the major US banks are the financial engines which allow the billion dollar drug empires to operate, the White House, the US Congress and the law enforcement agencies are the basic protectors of these banks…..Laundering drug money is one of the most lucrative sources of profit for Wall Street; the banks charge hefty commissions on the transfer of drug profits, which they then lend to borrowing institutions at interest rates far above what – if any – they pay to drug trafficker depositors. Awash in sanitized drug profits, these US titans of the finance world can easily buy their own elected officials to perpetuate the system.
(“How Drug Profits saved Capitalism” , James Petras, Global Research)

Repeat: “Every major bank in the US has served as an active financial partner of the murderous drug cartels…”

The War on Drugs is a fraud. This isn’t about interdiction; it’s about control. Washington provides the muscle so the banks can rake in the big doe. One hand washes the other, just like the Mafia.

Updated June 02, 2011

Criminal proceedings were brought against Wachovia, though not against any individual, but the case never came to court. In March 2010, Wachovia settled the biggest action brought under the US bank secrecy act, through the US district court in Miami. Now that the year’s “deferred prosecution” has expired, the bank is in effect in the clear. It paid federal authorities $110m in forfeiture, for allowing transactions later proved to be connected to drug smuggling, and incurred a $50m fine for failing to monitor cash used to ship 22 tons of cocaine.

More shocking, and more important, the bank was sanctioned for failing to apply the proper anti-laundering strictures to the transfer of $378.4bn – a sum equivalent to one-third of Mexico’s gross national product – into dollar accounts from so-called casas de cambio (CDCs) in Mexico, currency exchange houses with which the bank did business.

“Wachovia’s blatant disregard for our banking laws gave international cocaine cartels a virtual carte blanche to finance their operations,” said Jeffrey Sloman, the federal prosecutor. Yet the total fine was less than 2% of the bank’s $12.3bn profit for 2009. On 24 March 2010, Wells Fargo stock traded at $30.86 – up 1% on the week of the court settlement.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Branson backs drugs policy change

Title: Branson backs drugs policy change
Description: [KNIGHT OF MALTA]

TheUnhivedMind - June 2, 2011 11:55 PM (GMT)

Branson backs drugs policy change

Press Association – Thu, Jun 2, 2011
http://uk.news.yahoo.com/branson-backs-dru...-230530832.html

Sir Richard Branson and Dame Judi Dench have called for the Government to consider decriminalising drugs as its current policy was condemned as a failure.

The Global Commission on Drug Policy, whose members include former United Nations secretary general Kofi Annan, warned that major policy reforms were needed to help reduce the prison population and stop wasting millions of pounds.

Dame Judi backed calls for the "immediate decriminalisation of drug possession" should a policy review show it has failed while Sir Richard said a new approach was needed.

"One that takes the power out of the hands of organised crime and treats people with addiction problems like patients, not criminals," he said.

Dame Judi urged David Cameron to carry out "a swift and transparent review of the effectiveness of current drug policies".

The Oscar-winning actress was one of more than 30 high-profile figures, including Sir Richard, who signed an open letter to the Prime Minister, saying: "Should such a review of the evidence demonstrate the failure of the current position we would call for the immediate decriminalisation of drug possession."

Nearly 80,000 people in the UK were convicted or cautioned for possessing an illegal drug in the last year alone and "most were young, black or poor", the letter published by campaign group Release said.

The intervention of high-profile public figures, backed by many others including Sting, actor Julie Christie and former defence minister Bob Ainsworth, comes as a report by the Global Commission on Drug Policy said action was needed "urgently" and "policies need to change now".

"There are signs of inertia in the drug policy debate in some parts of the world as policymakers understand that current policies and strategies are failing but do not know what to do instead," the report said.

The commission called for UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon to help create "a truly co-ordinated and coherent global drug strategy that balances the need to stifle drug supply and fight organised crime with the need to provide health services, social care, and economic development to affected individuals and communities".

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: World Leaders Urge Paradigm Shift on Drugs Policy

Title: World Leaders Urge Paradigm Shift on Drugs Policy
Description: The Drug Problem Will Become Worse

emergingtruth - June 2, 2011 06:06 AM (GMT)

http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/2...ugs-trade-drugs

Leading world politicians urge 'paradigm shift' on drugs policy

Kofi Annan, George Shultz and Richard Branson among those urging public health

The Observer, Sunday 29 May 2011

Former presidents, prime ministers, eminent economists and leading members of the business community will unite behind a call for a shift in global drug policy. The Global Commission on Drug Policy will host a press conference at the Waldorf Astoria hotel in New York to launch a report that describes the drug war as a failure and calls for a "paradigm shift" in approaching the issue.

Those backing the call include Ernesto Zedillo, former president of Mexico; George Papandreou, former prime minister of Greece; César Gaviria, former president of Colombia; Kofi Annan, former UN secretary general; Fernando Henrique Cardoso, former president of Brazil; George Shultz, former US secretary of state; Javier Solana, former EU high representative; Virgin tycoon Richard Branson; and Paul Volcker, former chairman of the US Federal Reserve.

The commission will call for drug policy to move from being focused on criminal justice towards a public health approach. The global advocacy organisation Avaaz, which has nine million members, will present a petition in support of the commission's recommendations to UN secretary general Ban Ki-moon.

The commission is the most distinguished group to call for such far-reaching changes in the way society deals with illicit drugs. Danny Kushlick, head of external affairs at Transform, the drug policy foundation that has consultative status with the UN, said current events, such as the cartel-related violence in Mexico, President Barack Obama's comments that it was "perfectly legitimate" to question whether the war on drugs was working, and the wider global economic crisis, had given calls for a comprehensive overhaul of the world's drugs policy a fresh impetus.

Kushlick described this week's conference as hugely significant. "What we have here is the greatest collection thus far of ex-presidents and prime ministers calling very clearly for decriminalisation and experiments with legal regulation," he said. "It will be a watershed moment."

Transform believes the case for overhauling the prohibition approach to drugs is now overwhelming. It quotes Nicholas Green, chairman of the Bar Council, who observed that drug-related crime costs the UK economy around £13bn a year. "Decriminalising personal use can have positive consequences; it can free up huge amounts of police resources, reduce crime and recidivism and improve public health," he said.

But while politicians no longer in office are vocal in calling for a change, incumbents appear less likely to back the idea of any radical shift in policy. In its 2002 review of UK drug policy, the parliamentary home affairs select committee, which included the prime minister, David Cameron, called for the government to "initiate a discussion" into the possibility of legalising and regulating drugs.

Despite the calls successive ministers have declined to endorse them.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Oxi: Twice as powerful as crack cocaine at just a

Title: Oxi: Twice as powerful as crack cocaine at just a Description: fraction of the price [GOD HELP US ALL!]

TheUnhivedMind - June 2, 2011 03:46 AM (GMT)

Oxi: Twice as powerful as crack cocaine at just a fraction of the price

A highly addictive hallucinogenic has exploded on to South America's drug scene, with devastating consequences

Tom Phillips in Rio Branco guardian.co.uk, Monday 30 May 2011 20.42 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/society/2011/may...e-south-america

The snakes come at night, darting out of the shadows and into Marcelo's subconscious. "You start thinking, 'There are people coming! The police are coming! A snake is coming! Everything is coming!' You panic. But there is no snake. No police. There's nobody there. There's nothing. You're just tripping out."

Marcelo is an illiterate 24-year-old drug addict whose home is a sliver of cardboard on the streets of Rio Branco, a riverside city in the Brazilian Amazon. His drug of choice is oxi, a highly addictive and hallucinogenic blend of cocaine paste, gasoline, kerosene and quicklime (calcium oxide) that is wreaking havoc across the Amazon region.

Oxi, or oxidado – "rust" – is the latest drug to surface in the Amazon. It is reputedly twice as powerful as crack cocaine and just a fifth of the price.

"It is terrifying," said Alvaro Mendes, an outreach worker in Rio Branco from the state of Acre's Harm Reduction Association, the NGO that first detected the drug. "The majority of first-time users become addicted on their first contact with the drug. Most of them go seven to 10 days without sleeping, without eating. They start to go into a process of degeneration. After months of use … they go into a state where they look like zombies, wandering … in search of pleasure."

Described as a cheaper and deadlier successor to crack, oxi sells for about R$2 (75p) a rock and is smoked in pipes improvised from cans, pieces of piping and metal taps. According to Mendes, whose support group works with slum-dwellers, prostitutes, transvestites and homeless people who are hooked on the drug, oxi can kill within a year.

"The difference between cocaine and oxi is like the difference between drinking beer and pure alcohol," said a federal police operative on the Peru-Brazil border, who refused to be named.

Oxi surfaced in the Amazonian border region between Brazil, Bolivia and Peru in the 1980s, and is said to have been originally used by a small number of hippies who came to the region to experiment with ayahuasca, a hallucinogenic plant native to the Amazon rainforest.

In the past five years, however, its use has exploded, particularly in the slums and rural communities of Acre state in the western Amazon, where it is peddled in street-corner drug dens known as bocadas. Mendes estimates there are at least 8,000 oxi users in Acre's capital, Rio Branco, a city of 320,000 inhabitants.

But oxi is no longer just an Amazonian drug. A series of recent suspected seizures in cities such as Sao Paulo, Brasilia and Rio de Janeiro have propelled it into the national headlines. Health workers and politicians warn of a catastrophe if its spread is confirmed.

"The Brazilian state is unprepared to face this threat and to help its victims," José Serra, a leading opposition politician and former governor of Sao Paulo, wrote in a recent column in the national daily Estado de Sao Paulo, describing oxi on his Twitter account as a "weapon of mass destruction".

Despite growing concern, authorities admit the exact nature of oxi is a mystery. "Oxi's existence has only come to our attention very recently," said Elenice Frez, the police chief in Assis Brasil, a tiny town on the border between Brazil and Peru that is a notorious route for traffickers. "It is a new thing and we don't yet have all the technical details of what oxi really is and the damage it can cause to someone who becomes addicted and uses it constantly."

Mendes says users often suffer from paranoia, vomiting and uncontrollable bouts of diarrhoea. Tooth loss can happen within months. "I've never seen such violent scenes of drug use," he said. "It is very depressing."

Oxi's route into Brazil begins in small border towns such as Epitaciolândia, next to the dust-clogged settlement of Cobija, in Bolivia, a country that is one of the world's biggest cocaine producers.

On condition of anonymity, an addict agreed to escort the Guardian to his oxi den, hidden in the jungle that encircles the town.

Crouching, he picked his way through a mesh of thorns that cut into his legs. After a five-minute trek he arrived at a clearing. A carpet of torn aluminium cans littered the forest floor and empty cigarette lighters had been tossed under the trees.

Scraping the remains of his last hit from the inside of a drinks can, the addict painted a bleak picture of the drug's powers.

"I cry," he said. "I cry because I want to give this shit up. My family say: 'Get out of it son.' I tell her: 'Mum, in the name of Jesus I will.'"

A short drive away, Epitaciolândia's police chief, Sergio Lopes de Souza, pulled two R $70 rocks of oxi, seized the previous day, from an evidence bag.

"The effects of oxi are so devastating," he said. "When a person starts using oxi they spend days just using, without eating properly. They start to become very thin, almost skeletons, and they want to use more and more. If you do not stop you are a candidate to either die of an overdose or of other consequences of the oxi."

In a shantytown on the outskirts of Rio Branco, dirt-caked fingernails fumbled with a red pipe as another of the city's users prepared yet another hit. Sitting next to a dirty metal spoon and a packet of Paraguayan cigarettes, the 21-year-old user reflected on his lot.

"This is a dog's life. This is the kind of drug that makes you sell your own clothes," he muttered. "My whole family ignores me. I used to be a worker. I liked to have my things. Today they look at me and call me a punk.

"I have lost it all," he concluded as cars raced past on a nearby highway. "I had it all, and in the same moment I lost it. All because of oxi"

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ultralight aircraft now ferrying drugs across U.S.

Title: Ultralight aircraft now ferrying drugs across U.S.
Description: Mexico border

TheUnhivedMind - May 19, 2011 09:52 PM (GMT)

Ultralight aircraft now ferrying drugs across U.S.-Mexico border

Mexican organized crime groups are using ultralight aircraft to drop marijuana bundles in agricultural fields and desert scrub across the U.S. border. The incursions are hard to detect and are on the upswing.

http://www.latimes.com/news/local/la-me-bo...0,7315999.story
By Richard Marosi, Los Angeles Times
May 19, 2011

They fly low and slow over the border, their wings painted black and motors humming faintly under moonlit skies. The pilots, some armed in the open cockpits, steer the horizontal control bar with one hand and pull a latch with the other, releasing 250-pound payloads that land with a thud, leaving only craters as evidence of another successful smuggling run.

Mexican organized crime groups, increasingly stymied by stepped-up enforcement on land, have dug tunnels and captained boats to get drugs across the U.S.-Mexico border. Now they are taking to the skies, using ultralight aircraft that resemble motorized hang gliders to drop marijuana bundles in agricultural fields and desert scrub across the Southwest border.

What began with a few flights in Arizona in 2008 is now common from Texas to California's Imperial Valley and, mostly recently, San Diego, where at least two ultralights suspected of carrying drugs have been detected flying over Interstate 8, according to U.S. border authorities.

The number of incursions by ultralights reached 228 in the last federal fiscal year ending Sept. 30, almost double from the previous year. Seventy-one have been detected in this fiscal year through April, according to border authorities.

Flying at night with lights out, and zipping back across the border in minutes, ultralight aircraft sightings are rare, but often dramatic. At least two have been chased out of Arizona skies by Black Hawk Customs and Border Protection helicopters and F-16 jet fighters. Last month, a pair of visiting British helicopter pilots almost crashed into an ultralight during training exercises over the Imperial Valley.

The smuggling work is fraught with danger. High winds can flip the light aircraft. Moonlight provides illumination, but some pilots wear night-vision goggles. Others fly over major roads to orient themselves. Drop zones are illuminated by ground crews using strobe lights or glow sticks. There is little room for error.

At least one pilot has been paralyzed; another died in a crash.

In Calexico, Det. Mario Salinas was walking to his car one morning last year when he heard something buzzing over the Police Department on 5th Street. "I hear this weird noise, like a lawn mower. I look up and I see this small plane," said Salinas, who pursued the aircraft before it eluded him as it flew over the desert.

The ultralight activity is seen as strong evidence that smugglers are having an increasingly difficult time getting marijuana over land crossings. Authorities noticed a surge in flights in Imperial County after newly erected fencing along California's southeast corner blocked smugglers from crossing desert dunes in all-terrain vehicles.

U.S. Border Patrol agents, accustomed to scouring for footprints and tracks in the sand, have had to adapt. They are now instructed to turn off their engines and roll down their windows so they can listen for incursions by air.

"We're trained to look down and at the fence. Now we have to look up for tell-tale signs of ultralight traffic," said Roy D. Villarreal, deputy chief patrol agent of the El Centro sector in the Imperial Valley.

Although the new trend poses serious challenges, authorities point out that ultralights are a decidedly inefficient way of getting drugs across the border. Traffickers who once moved thousands of pounds of drugs across the border now appear to be packing their loads by the pound, not the ton, authorities say.

The ultralights — lightweight planes typically used as recreational aircraft — are customized for smuggling purposes. All-terrain wheels are added for bumpy landings. Second seats are ripped out to add fuel capacity. Drugs are loaded onto metal baskets affixed to the bottom of the framing. From 150 to 250 pounds of marijuana are generally carried, depending on the weight of the pilot. Some ultralights are shrouded in black paint, with even the plastic tarp covers for the marijuana blackened for stealth entries.

Radar operators at Riverside County's Air and Marine Operations Center, where general aviation air traffic across the country is monitored, have trouble detecting the aircraft.

Flying as low as 500 feet, their small frames are hard to distinguish from trucks. Many appear, then disappear from radar screens. Others never appear at all, and the ultralight trend has prompted border authorities to develop new radar technologies specifically designed to detect the aircraft.

"There are indications of larger amounts of activity," said Tony Crowder, director of the Air and Marine Operations Center, which is housed at March Air Reserve Base.

The close cooperation among radar operators, helicopter pilots and agents on the ground has resulted in some successes.

Ultralight pilots no longer land on U.S. soil after authorities began responding quickly to offloading sites. The Mexican Army has seized four ultralights around Baja California in recent weeks after being tipped off by U.S. authorities.

In Arizona, where the vast majority of the flights occur, authorities have arrested 36 people in connection with ultralight smuggling, most of them ground crew members who load the dropped marijuana into cars.

The trend has grown so rapidly in sparsely populated areas of Arizona that Rep. Gabrielle Giffords (D-Ariz.) introduced a bill last year to stiffen prison terms for ultralight smugglers.

Recruiting pilots is more difficult than finding truck operators, drivers or backpackers to ferry drugs across the border. Some of the pilots are believed to come from Mexican coastal resorts where they work day jobs taking tourists on lessons or adventure flights.

A pilot who was paralyzed in 2008 after he clipped power lines near Tucson and crashed ended up being deported to Mexico in a wheelchair. Another pilot died after only one side of his load released, causing the plane to destabilize and spiral into a lettuce field near Yuma, Ariz. In June, another trafficker encountered a hovering Black Hawk helicopter that raced to intercept him over the Tohono O'odom Indian reservation in Arizona.

The pilot, Jose Alberto Figueroa Valenzuela, 37, got a 4 1/2-year prison term after making a rough landing, said Rodney Irby, assistant special agent in charge of Immigration and Customs Enforcement in Arizona.

"He took all these risks, got chased by a Black Hawk helicopter and ended up crashing for 2,000 bucks that he never got," Irby said.

richard.marosi@latimes.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Middle Tennessee Police Profiting Off Drug Trade?

Title: Middle Tennessee Police Profiting Off Drug Trade?

TheUnhivedMind - May 19, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

Middle Tennessee Police Profiting Off Drug Trade?

Updated: May 18, 2011 7:51 PM http://www.newschannel5.com/story/14643085...-off-drug-trade

By Phil Williams
Chief Investigative Reporter

NASHVILLE, Tenn. -- A major NewsChannel 5 investigation has uncovered serious questions about Tennessee's war on drugs. Among the questions: are some police agencies more concerned about making money off the drugs, than stopping them?

At the center of this months-long investigation are laws that let officers pull driver over looking for cash. Those officers do not even have to file criminal charges against a person to take his/her money.

It turns out, those kind of stops are now happening almost every day in Middle Tennessee.

Case in point: a 2009 stop where a tractor trailer was stopped for a traffic violation, leading to a search and the discovery of large blocks containing almost $200,000 cash -- cash that officers keep on the suspicion that it's drug money.

"What's wrong with having a large amount of cash?" asked Karen Petrosyan, a California businessman who owned the truck.

Petrosyan refuses to admit there's anything suspicious about the stash that police discovered. Officers later released his father, who was driving the truck, without filing a single charge -- and authorities cut a deal that let Petrosyan come to Tennessee to get his big rig back.

Read officers' narrative about why money seized

"If I am a criminal, if they allege me to be a criminal," Petrosyan told NewsChannel 5 Investigates, "why would they settle? They do not just let criminals go."

District Attorney General Kim Helper said that "in general, it was seized because -- based upon our evidence and probable cause -- it's illegal drug proceeds."

Still, Helper admitted that what makes the Petrosyan case a bit unusual is the location. The traffic stop occurred in Smith County, near the Carthage exit. But the officers work for Helper's 21st Judicial District Drug Task Force out of Franklin -- more than an hour away.

Her officers patrol that area under a deal where they give a third of any cash they seize to the agency that owns that stretch of road.
Read the agreement between the 21st and 15th judicial districts

"It's a way to make money ... for your task force?" NewsChannel 5 Investigates asked Helper.

The DA paused.

"Honestly?" we asked, prompting a smile from Helper.

"Well, you know, when you say 'make money,' I guess it is a way for us to continue to fund our operations so that we can put an end to drug trafficking and the drug trade within this district," she responded.

In fact, Interstate 40 has become a major profit center for Tennessee law enforcement -- with officers stopping and often searching out-of-state vehicles. It's because of a state law that lets them seize money simply based on the suspicion that it's linked to drug trafficking.

If an owner does not take legal action to get the money back, the agency gets to keep it all.

"This is really highway shakedowns coming to the U.S.," said Scott Bullock, senior attorney with the Washington-based Institute for Justice.

Last year, the conservative-leaning group issued a report -- "Policing for Profit" -- that gave Tennessee a D-minus for civil forfeiture laws that make that it all possible.
Read the "Policing for Profit" report here

"Under civil forfeiture," Bullock said, "you give law enforcement a direct and perverse incentive to go out and try to take as much property from citizens as possible."

Dickson Police Chief Ricky Chandler said, "What we are doing, we're taking advantage of how the laws are, to use the money to be able to put back to fight the drugs."

Chandler heads the board for the 23rd Judicial District Drug Task Force, which has made millions off seizures in its counties -- Humphreys, Dickson and Cheatham. The town of Fairview also provides officers to the Task Force in exchange for a cut of the cash.

Then, three years ago, Chandler and the Dickson County sheriff helped create a second team -- known as Dickson Interdiction Criminal Enforcement, or DICE -- to work the exact same stretches of interstate.

Humphreys County and the town of Kingston Springs provide officers -- and Cheatham County allows DICE to work in its jurisdiction -- in exchange for a share of the money.
Read the agreement for the creation of DICE

"Everything's paid through seizures and fines," Chandler said.

NewsChannel 5 Investigates asked, "So if these officers out on the interstate don't come up with cash, then they might lose their jobs?"

"Well, it's a possibility, yes," Chandler answered.

Out on I-40, interdiction officers have a choice: Conventional wisdom is that the drugs come in from Mexico on the eastbound side. But the money goes back on the west.

While both agencies have made some big drug cases, we spotted both the 23rd and DICE staging time and time again with their backs to the drug side.

In fact, a review of daily activity sheets kept by the 23rd discovered that, when officers noted the location of their traffic stops, there were 10 times as many stops on the money side.
Review activity sheets for 23rd DTF, Oct-Dec 2010
Review summary of 23rd DTF cases, 2009-2010

Both DICE and the 21st Judicial District say they do not keep such daily activity reports.

UPDATE: A review of case summaries supplied by DICE shows that the entire team made one drug seizure -- 602 grams of heroin -- from Interstate 40 in all of 2010. Those officers arrested six people during stops on I-40 during that same 12-month period -- four of them on fugitive warrants, not for drug possession. Most DICE cases were seizures of money in the westbound lanes.
Review summaries of DICE cases, 2010

"We want both sides of the road worked," Chandler insisted.

NewsChannel 5 Investigates noted, "It looks like that they are not concerned about stopping the drugs, they just want the money."

"That's what it looks like," the chief admitted.

Is that the case?

"That shouldn't be the case, but that's what it looks like."

Scott Bullock with the Institute for Justice said that "it shows that the police are really focusing, not on trying to get the drugs, not on trying to enforce the drug laws and stop that flow throughout the country. They're focused on getting the money."

And it can lead to turf wars.

After DICE got a $1 million seizure last fall, police video shows that a DICE officer suddenly found himself being blocked by a unit from the 23rd while watching the westbound lanes. Within minutes, five units from the 23rd were lined up in a show of force.

As a result, the two agencies had to work out a "letter of agreement," specifying who would have priority on the westbound lanes on which days.
Read the letter of agreement between the 23rd and DICE

Then, there's a 2008 video where a unit from the 23rd cuts in front of a DICE unit on a stop, prompting this heated exchange:

23rd DTF Officer: "Leave me the fk alone!"
DICE Officer: "Let me tell you something..."
23rd DTF Officer: "Punk!"
DICE Officer: "You ever come up [on] me and try to wreck me out again, it will be your last time. You understand?"

Chandler called those disputes "ridiculous."

NewsChannel 5 Investigates noted, "You've got two agencies fighting to stop the same cars."

"Competition can be a good thing," the chief said, "as long as you don't violate any person's rights."

But they're competing for the money that they can take off of drivers.

"Well, they are competing to do their jobs is what they are competing for," he insisted.

It's a job that, Bullock said, has lost its way. "Law enforcement is supposed to be about getting the bad guys. It's not supposed to be about making money."

Law enforcement authorities say their goal is to hit the drug traffickers in the pocketbook.

But some people have hired lawyers after their cash was taken and, sometimes after months and months of litigation, judges have ruled that the money that was taken from them really had nothing to do with drug dealing at all.

E-mail: pwilliams@newschannel5.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Volunteers to take ecstasy pills live on Channel 4

Title: Volunteers to take ecstasy pills live on Channel 4

TheUnhivedMind - May 11, 2011 05:35 PM (GMT)

Volunteers to take ecstasy pills live on Channel 4

People will take Class A drugs live on television in a new programme to be broadcast by Channel 4.

2:06PM BST 11 May 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/culture/tvandra...-Channel-4.html

Drugs Live, a four-part science series, will look at the effect of illegal drugs and alcohol on the body.

Announcing a raft of new programmes, Jay Hunt, Channel 4's chief creative officer, said the future for the broadcaster lay in taking "real risks".

She said: "When you look across the broadcast landscape, when other broadcasters are more conservative, it's never been more important for Channel 4 to stimulate debate, to challenge the status quo, and above all to be brave."

Introducing the Drugs Live project, she said: "The Government's drugs tsar Professor (David) Nutt was sacked for claiming that LSD and ecstasy were less harmful than alcohol.

"In an incredibly bold experiment we are going to be putting that to the test live, looking at the impact all of those substances have on the human body in a clinical environment."

She said this was an "incredibly important area of social policy" and Channel 4 could put itself on "the front foot to provide some interesting and useful data".

She added that the experiments would take place in a supervised clinical environment.

Ms Hunt announced the acquisition of the US version of Danish crime series The Killing, saying: "This intense, atmospheric crime thriller redefines the genre."

And she said the broadcaster had commissioned its first original animation, Happy Families, an edgy comedy made by Rough Draft, the team behind the Simpsons Movie.

She said the cartoon was about a quintessentially British suburban family and will include "cameos from celebrities as you've never seen them before".

Ms Hunt also announced Black Mirror, a darkly comic drama series written by Charlie Brooker, looking at "our unease about the way in which technology is changing our world".

She said: "The writing is audacious and suspenseful and really taps into that unease we all fear about the way in which computers are changing how we interact."

A new political thriller, Coup, written by Robert Jones, will look at the relationship between global industry and government.

Ms Hunt said: "It's a very invigorating time to be at 4. Millions of pounds are going into new content, we're doubling the amount of drama, and we've got huge additional investment in comedy and entertainment."

Ms Hunt described Fern Britton as a "fantastic daytime talent" but said her teatime show, Fern, would not be coming back.

She said: "At the end of the day it didn't really cut through with viewers and we have to learn from that.

"I wouldn't hesitate to work with her again but that particular show didn't work."

She also said the channel was in an "ongoing conversation" with controversial comedian Frankie Boyle.

She said: "Frankie Boyle is talented and we are in ongoing conversations with him.

"I would be perfectly happy to put him on screen again if we thought we had something we were excited about."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Baby is treated in hospital for being drunk -

Title: Baby is treated in hospital for being drunk - Description: while 6 yr old is high on drugs

TheUnhivedMind - May 2, 2011 11:17 PM (GMT)

Baby is treated in hospital for being drunk - while six-year-old is admitted high on illegal drugs

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 7:36 PM on 2nd May 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/health/article-...l#ixzz1LEE4sWIJ

A one-year-old child ended up in hospital for being drunk and a six-year-old was admitted while high on illegal drugs.

The cases are among hundreds of children, including babies and toddlers, being treated at the Royal Bolton Hospital because of drug and alcohol abuse.

Nine children aged 12 and under, as well as hundreds of teenagers, have been seen for some form of alcohol poisoning.

Nine babies younger than a year old and more than 100 one and two-year-olds needed medical help after drugs poisoning.

More than 70 three to ten-year-olds and hundreds of teenagers have ended up in A&E as a result of drugs, including a three-year-old and a six-year-old who took controlled drugs, a one-year-old with solvent poisoning and teenagers as young as 13 taking deliberate overdoses.

Health chiefs said they were worried about the figures as drugs and alcohol can cause 'significant harm' to the developing brains of children.

The figures, obtained by The Bolton News under a Freedom of Information Act request, show that children as young as a few months old have been taken to the Royal Bolton Hospital because of substance abuse.

The information covers everything from alcohol abuse to poisoning, including overdoses, of medicines, controlled drugs, illegal drugs and solvents over the past three years.

The Royal Bolton Hospital said that many of the incidents involving young children were thought to be accidents - for example with parents giving sick children too much medicine, or toddlers helping themselves to drinks.

Heather Edwards, the hospital's head of communications, said: 'Alcohol and drugs cause a lot of difficulties for individuals, families and society and are a burden on the NHS.

'It is not good news that young people are coming into contact with substances that could harm their health, whether accidentally or knowingly.'

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Met chief: Stop keeping prisoners on drugs

Title: Met chief: Stop keeping prisoners on drugs

TheUnhivedMind - April 21, 2011 11:00 PM (GMT)

Met chief: Stop keeping prisoners on drugs

Martin Bentham, Home Affairs Editor
21 Apr 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...ers-on-drugs.do

Britain's drugs strategy is fuelling crime in London by failing to do enough to get addicts to kick their habit, a senior Met officer warned today.

Deputy Commissioner Tim Godwin said too many prolific offenders were being "maintained" on class A substances after being convicted, and most returned to crime as a result.

Mr Godwin called for a new approach to drug treatment, saying: "All I know is we haven't got it right at the moment. Current treatment programmes are about maintenance, as opposed to stopping offenders using class A drugs.

"Until we actually tackle that misuse of class A drugs among these prolific offenders, their chaotic lifestyle and the expense of drugs means that they will revert back to crime."

The Government has already pledged to address the issue of addicted inmates being offered the heroin substitute methadone, rather than being helped to kick their habit permanently.

Mr Godwin's comments were prompted by analysis of the Met's Diamond scheme under which serial offenders who had been released from prison were given extra help with housing, debt, employment and other problems to steer them away from crime.

An official report into the £11million project concluded that it had "no impact" on reoffending, with nearly half of participants committing new crimes within a year. Mr Godwin said the main reason for the lack of success was continued drug abuse by many of the offenders, one third of whom had a history of using class A substances.

He urged ministers to look overseas for better ways of tackling addiction and the crime that it caused. "There's the US, Australia, places like that. We need to go and explore more. This is a really serious challenge," he said.

Another problem with the existing approach was that offenders could only receive help with mental health problems if they had come off drugs. That meant problems often went untreated, increasing the risk of reoffending.

Mr Godwin said discussions were under way with the Ministry of Justice to see whether it and other parts of government, such as the Department of Health, could find a better way of treating addicts. "The alternative is that we lock them up because we do have to protect the public from them. But that is just a revolving door."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ecstasy use 'damages the brain'

Title: Ecstasy use 'damages the brain'
Description: [MOSSAD THRIVES OFF BRAIN DAMAGE]

TheUnhivedMind - April 19, 2011 05:34 PM (GMT)

Ecstasy use 'damages the brain'

19 April 2011 Last updated at 11:27
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-12985136

Long term ecstasy use could damage the brain, according to a small study in the Netherlands.

The researchers showed an area of the brain associated with memory, the hippocampus, was 10% smaller in people who took the drug.

Scientists, writing in the Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery and Psychiatry, said the study showed preliminary evidence of brain damage.

A UK expert said the study was unable to provide definitive proof.
Memory loss

Earlier studies have shown a link between ecstasy use and memory loss.

The researchers at the Academic Medical Centre in Amsterdam compared the brains of a group of 10 male ecstasy users with seven men who did not take ecstasy, but consumed similar levels of other drugs and alcohol.

The ecstasy users had taken an average of 281 tablets in the six and a half years before the study.

Both groups took no drugs in the two months before the brain scans.

The study showed the size of the hippocampus was 10.5% smaller in ecstasy users and they had 4.6% less grey matter.

"These data provide preliminary evidence suggesting that ecstasy users may be prone to incurring hippocampal damage, following chronic use of this drug," the researchers concluded.

Professor of neuropsychopharmacology at Imperial College London, David Nutt, said: "This is an interesting pilot study that is underpowered to provide definitive evidence of an effect of ecstasy, especially as there was more use of other stimulants in the ecstasy group.

"However there is evidence that many drugs especially alcohol can affect the hippocampus and thus memory function. Though the effects of ecstasy on memory are slight, longer follow up studies will be necessary to determine if there might be enduring effects."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HOUSE OF KESWICK'S ARE LARGE SCALE DRUG DEALERS

Title: HOUSE OF KESWICK'S ARE LARGE SCALE DRUG DEALERS

TheUnhivedMind - April 16, 2011 03:06 AM (GMT)

It seems after a little research that I've come across a very powerful Scottish family called the House of Keswick who're a controller of HSBC. Therefore they're not only drug dealers but pedophile and snuff movie blackmailers and extortionists at the highest levels. We all know about the background of the British East India Company and the Opium trade but check out a company called Jardine Matheson Holdings and check out its connection to the British East India Company and how its based in Honk Kong but run by the Keswick's. You should note the connection of David Cameron to the Keswick's, Rothschild's and Astor's. Hope this aids you along in your research folks and it all goes back to The Worshipful Company of International Bankers along with The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries and of course The Worshipful Company of Spectacle Makers. Check out the connection of ownership over Rothschild's Continuation Holdings by Jardine Matheson Holdings. If you remember I spoke about how David Cameron comes from the Crooked Nose Clan of Scotland. Can we see the Scottish Templar connection? Take a look at the logo for Jardines and you'll see its the Scottish Thistle in good old Blue and Red. Reminds me of the Conservative and Labour parties of England! These Knights of Malta must be exposed.

[dohtml]<img src="http://www.annandaleobserver.co.uk/showimagethumb.php?size=335&id=597" width=335 height=370>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - April 16, 2011 04:10 AM (GMT)

Please remember that both Sir William Keswick and Sir John Keswick have been Governors of the Bank of England and both a members of the Pilgrims Society. The Family behing closely connected with the later and also the 1001 Club which King Juan Carlos of Spain, the Protector of the Holy Sites of Jerusalem is a member of, just like he's in the Order of the Garter.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Dope Inc turning the West into drug addicts [Vd]

Title: Dope Inc turning the West into drug addicts [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - April 10, 2011 01:59 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/9BgbFMgF5nk&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/tT4Z__1ANwU&feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/tT4Z__1ANwU&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/BlV7BXpW6qE&feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/BlV7BXpW6qE&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/1VMeehqHIHI&feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/1VMeehqHIHI&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/LTHNNVtziEg"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/LTHNNVtziEg" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/RmPfj_4uqHQ"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/RmPfj_4uqHQ" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/YYxkp62veWE&playnext=1&list=PL622B74194C763CF0"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.

youtube.com/v/YYxkp62veWE&playnext=1&list=PL622B74194C763CF0" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/2MoV7Hnxgv0& feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/2MoV7Hnxgv0&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/XFo-TNCQ-Sk&feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www. youtube.com/v/XFo-TNCQ-Sk&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed> </ object>

<object width="425" height="350"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/2P3CrxyuD2g&feature=related"> </param> <param name="wmode" value="transparent"> </param> <embed src="http://www. youtube.com/v/2P3CrxyuD2g&feature=related" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent" width="425" height="350"> </embed>[/dohtml]

map - April 10, 2011 04:56 AM (GMT)

We can thank the whore of revelation 17 and her papal knights for flooding salvia (among one of the many drugs out there) down our throats...

... for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries (pharmakeia) were all nations deceived. Revelation 18:23 KJV

φαρ•ακε•• pharmakeia 5331 the use of medicine, drugs or spells from pharmakeuó (to administer drugs)

http://strongsnumbers.com/greek/5331.htm

map - April 10, 2011 05:08 AM (GMT)

1 of the 7 principalities we wrestle against governs DIRECTLY over pharmakeia...

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Ephesians 6:12 KJV

Douglas Willinger - April 10, 2011 06:16 AM (GMT)

Then no antibiotics even?
'
That interpretation likens to Pope Innocent VIII 1484's definition of using herbs as MJ as witchcraft, while disregarding the book of genesis and revelations the leaves of the trees for the healing of the nations.

Wolveshater - April 10, 2011 02:00 PM (GMT)

Whatever that crap is, it don't look like much fun at all. Stupid Kids.

TheUnhivedMind - April 10, 2011 04:21 PM (GMT)

Remember that the Knights of Malta control the dope trade via The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries.

map - April 10, 2011 09:44 PM (GMT) got this to add via facebook friend daniel at: http://www.facebook.com/profile.php?id=100000054094414

Daniel Bennett April 10 at 12:12am Report
Hey marco, its not often I disagree and have things to say about stuff you post, its usually good stuff and I learn, all glory to God of course(thats something I notice about you that makes me smile that you always give credit to God when met with praise), but this is my testimony that Our Heavenly Father has given to me and I hope you'll take a few mins to read it as its not often I get to share the true story as people make fun of me, sorry if its long but its from the heart(seriously)...I know that as a discerning Christian you will at least read what I have to say and get back to me, keeping in mind I am also trying to learn but this is just how I feel at the moment...

Sorry to be so emotional on your posts but...I just feel like the words addiction and drug abuse are so misleading when talking about saliva or dimethyltriptamine(dmt)(there is an element of dmt in shrooms and its what is in your brain that makes you dream)...as they are both pretty closely related and cause some of the same effects although I hope you will research dmt more...your soul/spirit being ripped away from your physical body...I know you can appreciate the gravity of that situation and what harm it could cause...but please trust that I know the difference between a "trip" and having my literal spirit ripped away from my physical being, its not child's play...dmt and salvia are two things ive actually been afraid to do since I tried them....

You can tell people somethings bad and hope they dont do it, but I find its good to at least educate people on whats going on when they do encounter things like this, thats why im writing you...

Most of what people buy in those stores as far as salvia goes is degraded nonsense from uncaring suppliers that do not care about what people experience, most of it is degraded and will send you into a dark sinister world, they do not understand that some things can separate a soul or spirit from the physical being...this is VERY important when trying to warn people about salvia or dmt, I feel like calling it regular drug abuse could cause confusion...its spirit abuse when you get down to it...regular drug abuse would be abusing cocaine or even cigarettes/alcohol while those are bad its not quite the same...

Years back I looked into salvia and found it was more than a drug as with dmt(dmt is what makes you dream), the experience with dmt and salvia was more than a drug and it was very confusing and I could see people being lead astray by it without council, lots of other dimensions and beings...God doesnt want us communicating with spirits...I get it, I understand, there is bad stuff in the other dimensions, which is where dmt and salvia take you...its not good stuff to be messing with, now I know this, despite my amazing revelation by dmt, I still dont encourage people to try it...there is EVIL stuff out there man...its not cool...God protected me and showed me things through my mistakes but to repeat them or encourage others to do the same seems wrong...

But there is a difference between drug addiction and salvia/dmt...the elite DONT want people doing dmt and salvia and cannabis, saying they are shoving it down their throats is not true, ive seen nothing but attempts at keeping things like cannabis , salvia and dmt down...things our brains are MADE to receive(your brain's pineal gland produces thc and dmt)...our brains have specific thc receivers and actually prevent disease(like cancer and herpes, also blocks brain rot when presented with difficulties from toxins) by the accumulation of thc, NOT ONLY THAT but something flouride is supposed to calcify and inhibit is the pineal gland, which also produces melatonin, thc produces this in large amounts, all studies that showed this were shut down...dmt is what makes us dream and all studies about this were shut down, so what reason do the elite have to keep these things illegal and actually made to seem WAY more dangerous than alcohol and cocaine...its because that some of use might see the truth in Christ, remember what he says, God can use all things to a believers good, not that im trying to twist scripture to allow us to do ungodly things, but just keep in mind God has a plan...

When I was really getting to know Christ I found out about extra-dimensional drugs and I had read that those who seek God with an earnest heart will find him...so not knowing enough to stay out of places I shouldn't be but still searching in love, I traveled beyond time, space, and reality and I was shown things, and I know marco this is making me sound absurd and you're probably already done with this but wait...

I learned chemistry and made some dmt out of bark in the hopes I could transcend reality and I smoked it because I was so confused and lost I thought for sure if Jesus existed that he would show me what was up and I prayed to him, and in that experience other gods of buddha and shiva and krishna were shown to me and had nothing to offer, blank parchment if you will, but as I called out to Christ in my confusion he came to me, though my friend, this is what I want you to know, he not only showed me what is eternity(serious business), but he showed my heart his everlasting love...

Marco...let me tell you, it is the most amazing love, I promise you everything you are doing for him is worth it, with all my heart I pour my soul into this letter to tell you how GREAT and AMAZING his love is...the throne was before me, with with its eyes and rings but then, my face was forced down as he approached but with my heart I saw a vesture with his name and just knew a being was there, it was him...the one who saved me...the one who took my punishment...the love was infinite and beyond anything I had previously experienced through drug or other...Jesus Christ our Lord and savior...

I hope you dont discount this because I know its crazy, but I just feel like he gave me the revelation that he is there and he is real for a reason, but yes abuse of such things as salvia and dmt are wrong...im not arguing that, but I feel people need to know WHY they aren't toys...

I feel like abuse of oxycodone, alcohol and other things is worse...also AND THIS IS IMPORTANT...doctors are SHOVING SSRI MEDICATION DOWN PEOPLES THROATS, as well as other supposedly "safe" meds...please do more info on that and what harm that is causing...(http://www.naturalnews.com/SSRIs.html) they almost killed me but Jesus saved me, maybe to give my testimony or whatever reason he had...

However the part about pharmakeia, ALL medicines arent bad, I believe there are prudent natural medicines and I believe cannabis to be one of them and thats why its kept down while other toxic medications are lead to the public...http://www.ukapologetics.net/pharmakeia.html (i liked what this site had to say about it even though I dont ascribe to apologetics)

Sorry if this was a crazy message, I just feel people have been mislead into thinking the wrong things about our health and medications, whatever those thoughts may be, our doctors are not our friends and there are more important things about medications than salvia even though people need to know why thats bad too...

when you just say pharmakeia, people get the wrong idea and think either that all medication is bad, or that illicit drugs are bad, when in fact they have been lied to about most of those things as all of them are grouped together to confuse the people...

Im not telling people to run out and start smoking pot, but the medications doctors are prescribing are toxic when they could be prescribing something better and non toxic and dont becuase its illegal...then instead of educating people they just have a policy of lying to them about stuff...

again sorry if this is long and rambling but its late over here...

much love
-dan

Douglas Willinger - April 11, 2011 02:55 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE (TheUnhivedMind @ Apr 10 2011, 04:21 PM)
>
> Remember that the Knights of Malta control the dope trade via The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries.

Cigarette market protection "drug war" criminal-immorral mercantilism- the sales upturns come with the 1906 US Pure Foods and Drugs Act, the 1914 Harrison 'Narcotics' Tax Act, and the 1937 MJ ban:

http://freedomofmedicineanddiet.blogspot.c...ricultural.html

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: World banks run on cocaine cash [Vd]

Title: World banks run on cocaine cash [Vd]

Phazon - April 8, 2011 11:11 AM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hDG3mdBguiI

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/hDG3mdBguiI" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ron Paul accuses Bush of smuggling CIA drugs [Vd]

Title: Ron Paul accuses Bush of smuggling CIA drugs [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 06:28 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/embed/ogdzc1Kgmno

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ogdzc1Kgmno?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ogdzc1Kgmno?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GARY WEBB WHO EXPOSED CIA DRUG RUNNING MURDERED

Title: GARY WEBB WHO EXPOSED CIA DRUG RUNNING MURDERED
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 06:20 PM (GMT)

GARY WEBB WHO EXPOSED CIA DRUG RUNNING MURDERED

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/V2lVddzMpT8?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/V2lVddzMpT8?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 06:21 PM (GMT)

Please make sure you're aware of The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries who'll be behind this hit using of course a proxy intelligence agency assassin probably foreign to the U.S. to do the hit on behalf of the KNIGHTS OF MALTA.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: How a big US bank laundered billions from Mexico's Title: How a big US bank laundered billions from Mexico's Description: murderous drug gangs

TheUnhivedMind - April 3, 2011 12:37 AM (GMT)

How a big US bank laundered billions from Mexico's murderous drug gangs

As the violence spread, billions of dollars of cartel cash began to seep into the global financial system. But a special investigation by the Observer reveals how the increasingly frantic warnings of one London whistleblower were ignored

Ed Vulliamy
The Observer, Sunday 3 April 2011
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/0...xico-drug-gangs

On 10 April 2006, a DC-9 jet landed in the port city of Ciudad del Carmen, on the Gulf of Mexico, as the sun was setting. Mexican soldiers, waiting to intercept it, found 128 cases packed with 5.7 tons of cocaine, valued at $100m. But something else – more important and far-reaching – was discovered in the paper trail behind the purchase of the plane by the Sinaloa narco-trafficking cartel.

During a 22-month investigation by agents from the US Drug Enforcement Administration, the Internal Revenue Service and others, it emerged that the cocaine smugglers had bought the plane with money they had laundered through one of the biggest banks in the United States: Wachovia, now part of the giant Wells Fargo.

The authorities uncovered billions of dollars in wire transfers, traveller's cheques and cash shipments through Mexican exchanges into Wachovia accounts. Wachovia was put under immediate investigation for failing to maintain an effective anti-money laundering programme. Of special significance was that the period concerned began in 2004, which coincided with the first escalation of violence along the US-Mexico border that ignited the current drugs war.

Criminal proceedings were brought against Wachovia, though not against any individual, but the case never came to court. In March 2010, Wachovia settled the biggest action brought under the US bank secrecy act, through the US district court in Miami. Now that the year's "deferred prosecution" has expired, the bank is in effect in the clear. It paid federal authorities $110m in forfeiture, for allowing transactions later proved to be connected to drug smuggling, and incurred a $50m fine for failing to monitor cash used to ship 22 tons of cocaine.

More shocking, and more important, the bank was sanctioned for failing to apply the proper anti-laundering strictures to the transfer of $378.4bn – a sum equivalent to one-third of Mexico's gross national product – into dollar accounts from so-called casas de cambio (CDCs) in Mexico, currency exchange houses with which the bank did business.

"Wachovia's blatant disregard for our banking laws gave international cocaine cartels a virtual carte blanche to finance their operations," said Jeffrey Sloman, the federal prosecutor. Yet the total fine was less than 2% of the bank's $12.3bn profit for 2009. On 24 March 2010, Wells Fargo stock traded at $30.86 – up 1% on the week of the court settlement.

The conclusion to the case was only the tip of an iceberg, demonstrating the role of the "legal" banking sector in swilling hundreds of billions of dollars – the blood money from the murderous drug trade in Mexico and other places in the world – around their global operations, now bailed out by the taxpayer.

At the height of the 2008 banking crisis, Antonio Maria Costa, then head of the United Nations office on drugs and crime, said he had evidence to suggest the proceeds from drugs and crime were "the only liquid investment capital" available to banks on the brink of collapse. "Inter-bank loans were funded by money that originated from the drugs trade," he said. "There were signs that some banks were rescued that way."

Wachovia was acquired by Wells Fargo during the 2008 crash, just as Wells Fargo became a beneficiary of $25bn in taxpayers' money. Wachovia's prosecutors were clear, however, that there was no suggestion Wells Fargo had behaved improperly; it had co-operated fully with the investigation. Mexico is the US's third largest international trading partner and Wachovia was understandably interested in this volume of legitimate trade.

José Luis Marmolejo, who prosecuted those running one of the casas de cambio at the Mexican end, said: "Wachovia handled all the transfers. They never reported any as suspicious."

"As early as 2004, Wachovia understood the risk," the bank admitted in the statement of settlement with the federal government, but, "despite these warnings, Wachovia remained in the business". There is, of course, the legitimate use of CDCs as a way into the Hispanic market. In 2005 the World Bank said that Mexico was receiving $8.1bn in remittances.

During research into the Wachovia Mexican case, the Observer obtained documents previously provided to financial regulators. It emerged that the alarm that was ignored came from, among other places, London, as a result of the diligence of one of the most important whistleblowers of our time. A man who, in a series of interviews with the Observer, adds detail to the documents, laying bare the story of how Wachovia was at the centre of one of the world's biggest money-laundering operations.

Martin Woods, a Liverpudlian in his mid-40s, joined the London office of Wachovia Bank in February 2005 as a senior anti-money laundering officer. He had previously served with the Metropolitan police drug squad. As a detective he joined the money-laundering investigation team of the National Crime Squad, where he worked on the British end of the Bank of New York money-laundering scandal in the late 1990s.

Woods talks like a police officer – in the best sense of the word: punctilious, exact, with a roguish humour, but moral at the core. He was an ideal appointment for any bank eager to operate a diligent and effective risk management policy against the lucrative scourge of high finance: laundering, knowing or otherwise, the vast proceeds of criminality, tax-evasion, and dealing in arms and drugs.

Woods had a police officer's eye and a police officer's instincts – not those of a banker. And this influenced not only his methods, but his mentality. "I think that a lot of things matter more than money – and that marks you out in a culture which appears to prevail in many of the banks in the world," he says.

Woods was set apart by his modus operandi. His speciality, he explains, was his application of a "know your client", or KYC, policing strategy to identifying dirty money. "KYC is a fundamental approach to anti-money laundering, going after tax evasion or counter-terrorist financing. Who are your clients? Is the documentation right? Good, responsible banking involved always knowing your customer and it still does."

When he looked at Wachovia, the first thing Woods noticed was a deficiency in KYC information. And among his first reports to his superiors at the bank's headquarters in Charlotte, North Carolina, were observations on a shortfall in KYC at Wachovia's operation in London, which he set about correcting, while at the same time implementing what was known as an enhanced transaction monitoring programme, gathering more information on clients whose money came through the bank's offices in the City, in sterling or euros. By August 2006, Woods had identified a number of suspicious transactions relating to casas de cambio customers in Mexico.

Primarily, these involved deposits of traveller's cheques in euros. They had sequential numbers and deposited larger amounts of money than any innocent travelling person would need, with inadequate or no KYC information on them and what seemed to a trained eye to be dubious signatures. "It was basic work," he says. "They didn't answer the obvious questions: 'Is the transaction real, or does it look synthetic? Does the traveller's cheque meet the protocols? Is it all there, and if not, why not?'"

Woods discussed the matter with Wachovia's global head of anti-money laundering for correspondent banking, who believed the cheques could signify tax evasion. He then undertook what banks call a "look back" at previous transactions and saw fit to submit a series of SARs, or suspicious activity reports, to the authorities in the UK and his superiors in Charlotte, urging the blocking of named parties and large series of sequentially numbered traveller's cheques from Mexico. He issued a number of SARs in 2006, of which 50 related to the casas de cambio in Mexico. To his amazement, the response from Wachovia's Miami office, the centre for Latin American business, was anything but supportive – he felt it was quite the reverse.

As it turned out, however, Woods was on the right track. Wachovia's business in Mexico was coming under closer and closer scrutiny by US federal law enforcement. Wachovia was issued with a number of subpoenas for information on its Mexican operation. Woods has subsequently been informed that Wachovia had six or seven thousand subpoenas. He says this was "An absurd number. So at what point does someone at the highest level not get the feeling that something is very, very wrong?"

In April and May 2007, Wachovia – as a result of increasing interest and pressure from the US attorney's office – began to close its relationship with some of the casas de cambio. But rather than launch an internal investigation into Woods's alerts over Mexico, Woods claims Wachovia hung its own money-laundering expert out to dry. The records show that during 2007 Woods "continued to submit more SARs related to the casas de cambio".

In July 2007, all of Wachovia's remaining 10 Mexican casa de cambio clients operating through London suddenly stopped doing so. Later in 2007, after the investigation of Wachovia was reported in the US financial media, the bank decided to end its remaining relationships with the Mexican casas de cambio globally. By this time, Woods says, he found his personal situation within the bank untenable; while the bank acted on one level to protect itself from the federal investigation into its shortcomings, on another, it rounded on the man who had been among the first to spot them.

On 16 June Woods was told by Wachovia's head of compliance that his latest SAR need not have been filed, that he had no legal requirement to investigate an overseas case and no right of access to documents held overseas from Britain, even if they were held by Wachovia.

Woods's life went into freefall. He went to hospital with a prolapsed disc, reported sick and was told by the bank that he not done so in the appropriate manner, as directed by the employees' handbook. He was off work for three weeks, returning in August 2007 to find a letter from the bank's compliance managing director, which was unrelenting in its tone and words of warning.

The letter addressed itself to what the manager called "specific examples of your failure to perform at an acceptable standard". Woods, on the edge of a breakdown, was put on sick leave by his GP; he was later given psychiatric treatment, enrolled on a stress management course and put on medication.

Late in 2007, Woods attended a function at Scotland Yard where colleagues from the US were being entertained. There, he sought out a representative of the Drug Enforcement Administration and told him about the casas de cambio, the SARs and his employer's reaction. The Federal Reserve and officials of the office of comptroller of currency in Washington DC then "spent a lot of time examining the SARs" that had been sent by Woods to Charlotte from London.

"They got back in touch with me a while afterwards and we began to put the pieces of the jigsaw together," says Woods. What they found was – as Costa says – the tip of the iceberg of what was happening to drug money in the banking industry, but at least it was visible and it had a name: Wachovia.

In June 2005, the DEA, the criminal division of the Internal Revenue Service and the US attorney's office in southern Florida began investigating wire transfers from Mexico to the US. They were traced back to correspondent bank accounts held by casas de cambio at Wachovia. The CDC accounts were supervised and managed by a business unit of Wachovia in the bank's Miami offices.

"Through CDCs," said the court document, "persons in Mexico can use hard currency and … wire transfer the value of that currency to US bank accounts to purchase items in the United States or other countries. The nature of the CDC business allows money launderers the opportunity to move drug dollars that are in Mexico into CDCs and ultimately into the US banking system.

"On numerous occasions," say the court papers, "monies were deposited into a CDC by a drug-trafficking organisation. Using false identities, the CDC then wired that money through its Wachovia correspondent bank accounts for the purchase of airplanes for drug-trafficking organisations." The court settlement of 2010 would detail that "nearly $13m went through correspondent bank accounts at Wachovia for the purchase of aircraft to be used in the illegal narcotics trade. From these aircraft, more than 20,000kg of cocaine were seized."

All this occurred despite the fact that Wachovia's office was in Miami, designated by the US government as a "high-intensity money laundering and related financial crime area", and a "high-intensity drug trafficking area". Since the drug cartel war began in 2005, Mexico had been designated a high-risk source of money laundering.

"As early as 2004," the court settlement would read, "Wachovia understood the risk that was associated with doing business with the Mexican CDCs. Wachovia was aware of the general industry warnings. As early as July 2005, Wachovia was aware that other large US banks were exiting the CDC business based on [anti-money laundering] concerns … despite these warnings, Wachovia remained in business."

On 16 March 2010, Douglas Edwards, senior vice-president of Wachovia Bank, put his signature to page 10 of a 25-page settlement, in which the bank admitted its role as outlined by the prosecutors. On page 11, he signed again, as senior vice-president of Wells Fargo. The documents show Wachovia providing three services to 22 CDCs in Mexico: wire transfers, a "bulk cash service" and a "pouch deposit service", to accept "deposit items drawn on US banks, eg cheques and traveller's cheques", as spotted by Woods.

"For the time period of 1 May 2004 through 31 May 2007, Wachovia processed at least $$373.6bn in CDCs, $4.7bn in bulk cash" – a total of more than $378.3bn, a sum that dwarfs the budgets debated by US state and UK local authorities to provide services to citizens.

The document gives a fascinating insight into how the laundering of drug money works. It details how investigators "found readily identifiable evidence of red flags of large-scale money laundering". There were "structured wire transfers" whereby "it was commonplace in the CDC accounts for round-number wire transfers to be made on the same day or in close succession, by the same wire senders, for the … same account".

Over two days, 10 wire transfers by four individuals "went though Wachovia for deposit into an aircraft broker's account. All of the transfers were in round numbers. None of the individuals of business that wired money had any connection to the aircraft or the entity that allegedly owned the aircraft. The investigation has further revealed that the identities of the individuals who sent the money were false and that the business was a shell entity. That plane was subsequently seized with approximately 2,000kg of cocaine on board."

Many of the sequentially numbered traveller's cheques, of the kind dealt with by Woods, contained "unusual markings" or "lacked any legible signature". Also, "many of the CDCs that used Wachovia's bulk cash service sent significantly more cash to Wachovia than what Wachovia had expected. More specifically, many of the CDCs exceeded their monthly activity by at least 50%."

Recognising these "red flags", the US attorney's office in Miami, the IRS and the DEA began investigating Wachovia, later joined by FinCEN, one of the US Treasury's agencies to fight money laundering, while the office of the comptroller of the currency carried out a parallel investigation. The violations they found were, says the document, "serious and systemic and allowed certain Wachovia customers to launder millions of dollars of proceeds from the sale of illegal narcotics through Wachovia accounts over an extended time period. The investigation has identified that at least $110m in drug proceeds were funnelled through the CDC accounts held at Wachovia."

The settlement concludes by discussing Wachovia's "considerable co-operation and remedial actions" since the prosecution was initiated, after the bank was bought by Wells Fargo. "In consideration of Wachovia's remedial actions," concludes the prosecutor, "the United States shall recommend to the court … that prosecution of Wachovia on the information filed … be deferred for a period of 12 months."

But while the federal prosecution proceeded, Woods had remained out in the cold. On Christmas Eve 2008, his lawyers filed tribunal proceedings against Wachovia for bullying and detrimental treatment of a whistleblower. The case was settled in May 2009, by which time Woods felt as though he was "the most toxic person in the bank". Wachovia agreed to pay an undisclosed amount, in return for which Woods left the bank and said he would not make public the terms of the settlement.

After years of tribulation, Woods was finally formally vindicated, though not by Wachovia: a letter arrived from John Dugan, the comptroller of the currency in Washington DC, dated 19 March 2010 – three days after the settlement in Miami. Dugan said he was "writing to personally recognise and express my appreciation for the role you played in the actions brought against Wachovia Bank for violations of the bank secrecy act … Not only did the information that you provided facilitate our investigation, but you demonstrated great personal courage and integrity by speaking up. Without the efforts of individuals like you, actions such as the one taken against Wachovia would not be possible."

The so-called "deferred prosecution" detailed in the Miami document is a form of probation whereby if the bank abides by the law for a year, charges are dropped. So this March the bank was in the clear. The week that the deferred prosecution expired, a spokeswoman for Wells Fargo said the parent bank had no comment to make on the documentation pertaining to Woods's case, or his allegations. She added that there was no comment on Sloman's remarks to the court; a provision in the settlement stipulated Wachovia was not allowed to issue public statements that contradicted it.

But the settlement leaves a sour taste in many mouths – and certainly in Woods's. The deferred prosecution is part of this "cop-out all round", he says. "The regulatory authorities do not have to spend any more time on it, and they don't have to push it as far as a criminal trial. They just issue criminal proceedings, and settle. The law enforcement people do what they are supposed to do, but what's the point? All those people dealing with all that money from drug-trafficking and murder, and no one goes to jail?"

One of the foremost figures in the training of anti-money laundering officers is Robert Mazur, lead infiltrator for US law enforcement of the Colombian Medellín cartel during the epic prosecution and collapse of the BCCI banking business in 1991 (his story was made famous by his memoir, The Infiltrator, which became a movie).

Mazur, whose firm Chase and Associates works closely with law enforcement agencies and trains officers for bank anti-money laundering, cast a keen eye over the case against Wachovia, and he says now that "the only thing that will make the banks properly vigilant to what is happening is when they hear the rattle of handcuffs in the boardroom".

Mazur said that "a lot of the law enforcement people were disappointed to see a settlement" between the administration and Wachovia. "But I know there were external circumstances that worked to Wachovia's benefit, not least that the US banking system was on the edge of collapse."

What concerns Mazur is that what law enforcement agencies and politicians hope to achieve against the cartels is limited, and falls short of the obvious attack the US could make in its war on drugs: go after the money. "We're thinking way too small," Mazur says. "I train law enforcement officers, thousands of them every year, and they say to me that if they tried to do half of what I did, they'd be arrested. But I tell them: 'You got to think big. The headlines you will be reading in seven years' time will be the result of the work you begin now.' With BCCI, we had to spend two years setting it up, two years doing undercover work, and another two years getting it to trial. If they want to do something big, like go after the money, that's how long it takes."

But Mazur warns: "If you look at the career ladders of law enforcement, there's no incentive to go after the big money. People move every two to three years. The DEA is focused on drug trafficking rather than money laundering. You get a quicker result that way – they want to get the traffickers and seize their assets. But this is like treating a sick plant by cutting off a few branches – it just grows new ones. Going after the big money is cutting down the plant – it's a harder door to knock on, it's a longer haul, and it won't get you the short-term riches."

The office of the comptroller of the currency is still examining whether individuals in Wachovia are criminally liable. Sources at FinCEN say that a so-called "look-back" is in process, as directed by the settlement and agreed to by Wachovia, into the $378.4bn that was not directly associated with the aircraft purchases and cocaine hauls, but neither was it subject to the proper anti-laundering checks. A FinCEN source says that $20bn already examined appears to have "suspicious origins". But this is just the beginning.

Antonio Maria Costa, who was executive director of the UN's office on drugs and crime from May 2002 to August 2010, charts the history of the contamination of the global banking industry by drug and criminal money since his first initiatives to try to curb it from the European commission during the 1990s. "The connection between organised crime and financial institutions started in the late 1970s, early 1980s," he says, "when the mafia became globalised."

Until then, criminal money had circulated largely in cash, with the authorities making the occasional, spectacular "sting" or haul. During Costa's time as director for economics and finance at the EC in Brussels, from 1987, inroads were made against penetration of banks by criminal laundering, and "criminal money started moving back to cash, out of the financial institutions and banks. Then two things happened: the financial crisis in Russia, after the emergence of the Russian mafia, and the crises of 2003 and 2007-08.

"With these crises," says Costa, "the banking sector was short of liquidity, the banks exposed themselves to the criminal syndicates, who had cash in hand."

Costa questions the readiness of governments and their regulatory structures to challenge this large-scale corruption of the global economy: "Government regulators showed what they were capable of when the issue suddenly changed to laundering money for terrorism – on that, they suddenly became serious and changed their attitude."

Hardly surprising, then, that Wachovia does not appear to be the end of the line. In August 2010, it emerged in quarterly disclosures by HSBC that the US justice department was seeking to fine it for anti-money laundering compliance problems reported to include dealings with Mexico.

"Wachovia had my résumé, they knew who I was," says Woods. "But they did not want to know – their attitude was, 'Why are you doing this?' They should have been on my side, because they were compliance people, not commercial people. But really they were commercial people all along. We're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars. This is the biggest money-laundering scandal of our time.

"These are the proceeds of murder and misery in Mexico, and of drugs sold around the world," he says. "All the law enforcement people wanted to see this come to trial. But no one goes to jail. "What does the settlement do to fight the cartels? Nothing – it doesn't make the job of law enforcement easier and it encourages the cartels and anyone who wants to make money by laundering their blood dollars. Where's the risk? There is none.

